Dorothy Louise SWYCAFFER, Respondent,
v.

Joe W. SWYCAFFER, Appellant.
L. A. 22807.

Supreme Court of California.

June 16, 1955.

Action by wife for divorce, the husband filed counterclaim for annulment. The wife filed stipulation that action could proceed to trial on cross-complaint for annulment as a default matter without any further notice to her but subsequently filed petition for modification of child custody provision of the decree. The Superior Court, San Diego County, John A. Hewicker, J., granted an order of modification and the husband appealed. The Supreme Court, Shenk, J., held that where cross-complaint did not raise issue as to child custody, portion of decree awarding custody of child to cross-complainant was void.

Order and modification affirmed.

Opinion, 271 P.2d 585, vacated.

1. Marriage ⇐60(7), 64

Where husband's cross-complaint alleged that for purpose of inducing cross-complainant to consent to marriage cross-defendant fraudulently represented that she was not pregnant by any other man and that she concealed from cross-complainant fact that she was pregnant by some man other than cross-complainant, cross-complaint was sufficient to advise trial court of facts regarding cross-complainant's right to custody of child and finding of fraud was not supported by record. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 420, 426a.

2. Judgment ⇐252(1)

Statute providing that relief granted to plaintiff, if there be no answer, cannot exceed that which he shall have demanded in his complaint is applicable to relief granted on a cross-complaint. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 442, 580.

3. Divorce ⇐292

Where wife's complaint for divorce was withdrawn and wife stipulated that trial could proceed on husband's cross-complaint for annulment as a default matter without notice to her and cross-complaint did not mention question of custody of child, portion of decree awarding custody of child to cross-complainant was void. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 442, 580.

4. Divorce ⇐292

The award of child custody is of such independent importance that a defaulting litigant is entitled to conclude that child custody will not be determined unless specifically included within prayer, especially where pleading on which relief is granted contains an express allegation that there are no children of marriage and that child in question is not in fact child of marriage. Vernon F. Bennett, San Diego, for appellants.

No appearance for respondent.

John R. Sorbo and John T. Holt, San Diego, amici curiae on behalf of respondent.

SHENK, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order modifying an annulment and custody decree.

The plaintiff, Dorothy, had been married to one Kent. She separated from Kent who commenced divorce proceedings against her in Oklahoma. Kent informed Dorothy that he was obtaining his divorce from her on July 1, 1950. Dorothy married Joe, the defendant, on July 7, 1950. At the time of that marriage Dorothy was pregnant. Kent did not secure his divorce from Dorothy until July 28, 1950. Dorothy and Joe separated on July 15, 1952. During the period they lived together a boy was born to Dorothy. Dorothy filed a complaint against Joe in the San Diego Superior Court seeking a divorce, custody of the child, and an order for the child's support. Joe answered and cross-complained. The cross-complaint sought an annulment on the ground that Dorothy was married to Kent at the time the ceremony between Dorothy and Joe was performed, and that at the time of that purported marriage Dorothy was pregnant by another man. On October 7, 1952, Dorothy with the knowledge and consent of her attorney signed a stipulation that her complaint for divorce might be withdrawn and that the action could proceed to trial on the cross-complaint for annulment as a default matter without any further notice to her. The matter was heard as uncontested on October 17, 1952. The trial judge did not read the pleadings in which Joe alleged that Dorothy was pregnant by another man at the time of their purported marriage. There was no allegation or prayer in the cross-complaint concerning the custody of the child born to Dorothy. At the hearing Vernon F. Bennett, Joe's attorney, produced an agreement signed by Dorothy and Joe in which Joe agreed to care for and support the child born to Dorothy and Dorothy agreed to give up all of her rights to the child as against Joe. Joe testified that a child had been born during his marriage to Dorothy and that she had consented to his having permanent custody of the boy. Nothing was mentioned concerning the child's paternity, and the only ground for annulment referred to at the hearing was Dorothy's marital status at the time of her purported marriage to Joe. The court made findings and conclusions in favor of the cross-complainant. It found that at the time of the purported marriage between Dorothy and Joe, Dorothy was married to another man; and that, at that time, Dorothy was pregnant by another man. The trial court signed a decree granting Joe an annulment and also awarding permanent custody of the child to Joe.

In December, 1952, Dorothy, through the attorney who represented her in the annulment action, John T. Holt, filed an application for an order to show cause why the annulment judgment should not be modified by striking therefrom the provision with reference to the custody of the child. The order was issued and a hearing was had before the same judge who granted the annulment decree. At that hearing Dorothy stated that she had dismissed Holt as her attorney. She asked that the action be dismissed. The court refused to dismiss it and appointed Holt as amicus curiae. Testimony was taken in which the above stated facts were established. The court then issued an order in which it reaffirmed its determination that at the time Dorothy purported to marry Joe she was married to Kent and was pregnant by another man, and that Joe was entitled to an annulment. However, the court further found that: " * * * Vernon F. Bennett, attorney for the defendant, Joe W. Swycaffer, knowingly and willfully deceived and defrauded the Court herein into awarding its decree [as to the custody provisions]." The court then ordered the custody provisions stricken from the decree on the ground that the custody issue was not within the pleadings.

Joe contends that the finding that Bennett, his attorney, practiced fraud on the trial court cannot stand as a matter of law. He argues that the cross-complaint stated in several places that Dorothy was pregnant by another man; that the trial judge was charged with knowledge of the contents of the pleadings; that no statement was made in contradiction of the pleadings at the annulment hearing, and that the trial judge improperly found that he was the victim of fraud.

Section 420 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that: "The pleadings are the formal allegations by the parties of their respective claims and defenses, for the judgment of the court."

Dorothy stipulated that Joe might take a default judgment based upon his cross-complaint. That cross-complaint was the only pleading before the court at the time the decree was rendered. Paragraph 3 of the second cause of action of the cross-complaint alleged: "That for the purpose of inducing * * * cross-complainant to consent to said marriage and go through said marriage ceremony * * * cross-defendant falsely and fraudulently represented to * * * cross-complainant * * * that she was not pregnant by any other man and that she was physically competent to marry * * * cross-complainant and that she concealed from * * * cross-complainant her real physical condition, namely: That of pregnancy by some other man than * * * cross-complainant." Paragraph 4 of that cause of action alleged: "That * * * cross-defendant was not at said time physically competent to marry * * * cross-complainant, but was at the time of said marriage to * * * cross-complainant married to another man and was in a state of pregnancy by some other man than * * * cross-complainant." Paragraph 3 of the third cause of action of the cross-complaint alleged: "That the statistical facts required by Section 426a of the Code of Civil Procedure are as follows: * * * 5. That no children were born the issue of this marriage."

[1] Under the circumstances of this case the allegations of the cross-complaint should be a sufficient record at immediate hand to advise the trial court of the facts claimed to have been fraudulently withheld or not disclosed by Bennett. Bennett was entitled to rely on the assumption that the trial court was aware of those facts in refutation of the asserted inference of fraud against him; and there is otherwise no sufficient showing of fraud on his part.

The finding of fraud against him is therefore not supported by the record and should be stricken therefrom.

portion of the decree awarding custody of the child to Joe is void. Section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "The relief granted to the plaintiff, if there be no answer, cannot exceed that which he shall have demanded in his complaint * * *." This section is applicable to relief granted upon a cross-complaint. Code Civ.Proc. § 442. An examination of the cross-complaint discloses that nowhere is the question of child custody mentioned. The decree recites that Joe personally appeared in the action; that Dorothy "filed her appearance"; and that she stipulated that a trial could proceed on the cross-complaint without notice to her. In Burnett v. King, 33 Cal.2d 805, at page 808, 205 P.2d 657, at page 659, 12 A.L.R.2d 333, it was stated: "It is a settled rule, and has been clearly stated in many recent authorities, that a default judgment by the court that exceeds the demand or gives relief where no demand is made therefor is void as in excess of the court's jurisdiction * * *. The essence of the policy underlying section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure, supra, is that in default cases, defendant must be given notice of what judgment may be taken against him—a policy underlying all precepts of jurisprudence and protected by our constitutions. If a judgment other than that which is demanded is taken against him, he has been deprived of his day in court—a right to a hearing on the matter adjudicated."

[4] Joe contends, however, that the matter of custody is so germane to the issue of annulment that a defendant must anticipate that an award for custody would be made. He argues that child custody is analogous to alimony and support orders. See Bowman v. Bowman, 29 Cal.2d 808, 178 P.2d 751, 170 A.L.R. 246; Miller v. Superior Court, 9 Cal.2d 733, 72 P.2d 868; Karlslyst v. Frazier, 213 Cal. 377, 2 P.2d 362; Parker v. Parker, 203 Cal. 787, 266 P. 283; Cohen v. Cohen, 150 Cal. 99, 88 P. 267. These cases are analysed in detail in Burnett v. King, supra, 33 Cal.2d 805, 205 P.2d 657, 12 A.L.R.2d 333, and need not be re-examined here. Suffice it to say that the award of custody is of such independent importance that a defaulting defendant is entitled to conclude that child custody will not be determined unless specifically included within the prayer. Especially is this true where, as in the present case, the complaint or cross-complaint on which the relief is granted contains an express allegation that there are no children of the marriage and that the child in question is not in fact the child of the marriage.

Nor do Civil Code Sections 84 and 138 confer power on the Superior Court to make the award here in question. Section 84 provides: "A judgment of nullity of marriage does not affect the legitimacy of children conceived or born before the judgment, and the court may during the pendency of the action, or at the time the judgment is rendered or at any time thereafter make such order for the custody, care, education, maintenance and support of such children during their minority as may seem necessary or proper. * * *" "Section 138 as amended in 1951 similarly provides: "In actions for divorce or for separate maintenance the court may, during the pendency of the action, or at the final hearing or at any time thereafter during the minority of any of the children of the marriage, make such order for the custody of such minor children as may seem necessary or proper and may at any time modify or vacate the same." These provisions must be deemed to confer jurisdiction generally with regard to the matters to which they relate. They do not affect Code of Civil Procedure Section 580, supra, in such a way as to confer jurisdiction to grant the custody of children where the matter of custody is not included within the pleadings. Moreover, even if Sections 84 and 138 were so construed as to repeal Code of Civil Procedure Section 580 by implication, that construction could not apply to the present case because the child here involved is neither the child of the parties, Section 84, nor the child of the marriage, Section 138.

It is apparent from the facts above set forth that the portion of the annulment decree awarding the custody of the child to Joe was in excess of the relief demanded in the cross-complaint and is void. Dorothy could therefore properly attack that portion of the decree in this proceeding.

The trial court found in this proceeding that: " * * * it had no power or jurisdiction [in the annulment action] to award the child referred to herein to * * * Joe * * * for the further reason that * * * said child was not an issue within the pleadings of the above case * * *." This finding is justified by the record and is sufficient to support the order.

The findings concerning the alleged fraud of the attorney Vernon F. Bennett are stricken from the record. Code Civ. Proc. § 956a. The conclusion of the trial court that the custody portions of the annulment decree are ineffective is correct. The order of modification is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Calvin Jack SIZELOVE and Raymond Howard Hall, Defendants and Appellants.

Cr. 5339.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,

June 24, 1955.

Defendants were convicted of burglary. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Joe Raycraft, J., rendered judgment on the verdict, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that admission of one defendant's testimony that defendants had been engaged together in bad check passing and trial court's failure to instruct jury that to justify conviction, facts must not only be entirely consistent with theory of defendant's guilt, but entirely inconsisent with any other rational conclusion, were not prejudicial errors.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Burglary §41(1)

Evidence was sufficient to sustain convictions of burglary.

2. Criminal Law §369(2)

In criminal prosecution, evidence tending, logically and by reasonable inference, to establish any fact material to People's case or any fact urged as defense, is competent, though it may connect defendant with a crime not included in accusation.

3. Criminal Law §370, 371(1, 12), 372(1)

In criminal prosecution, evidence tending to establish defendant's intent, guilty knowledge, motive, and common scheme, plan or system is admissible, though it may connect defendant with crime not included in accusation.

4. Criminal Law §369(2)

In burglary prosecution, one defendant's testimony, on examination by prosecuting attorney, that defendants had been engaged together in bad check passing, was properly admitted to show that defendants were likely to hatch perfidious schemes and rebut defense that they innocently entered burglarized home by mistake in quest of whiskey while on drinking spree; proof that they had mutual interest in taking what did not belong to them being essential to overcome such defense.

5. Criminal Law §371(6)

In burglary prosecution, one defendant's testimony, on examination by prosecuting attorney, that defendants had been engaged together in bad check passing, was properly admitted after People proved that defendants forcefully entered a residence at night, threw its contents into disorder and fled through shattering glass to escape capture; evidence of their previous joint criminal venture being relevant on question of their continued criminal intentions.

6. Criminal Law §369(2)

To render admissible, in criminal prosecution, evidence of previous criminal act by defendant, such act need not be identical with crime charged.

7. Witnesses §345(1)

A witness may always be impeached by showing his conviction of a felony.

8. Criminal Law §673(3, 5)

In burglary prosecution, admission of one defendant's testimony, on examination by prosecuting attorney, that defendants had been engaged together in bad check passing, was not error prejudicial to defendant, in view of trial court's instruction to jury, limiting application of such testimony to impeachment of witness and purpose of showing fact and nature of defendants' acquaintanceship at time of such check passing.

9. Criminal Law §1144(15)

The jury are presumed to have exercised their reason and obeyed trial court's instruction limiting application of defendant's testimony, on examination by prosecuting attorney, as to criminal act committed by defendant before crime charged.

10. Criminal Law §1134(1)

Where evidence of defendants' guilt of crime charged was so bountiful as to compel belief therein, correctness of trial court's rulings need not be considered on appeal from conviction.

11. Criminal Law §1186(4)

A judgment of conviction should not be set aside on ground of error in admission of evidence or instruction to jury, unless entire record clearly shows that error resulted in miscarriage of justice. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

12. Criminal Law §1186(4)

In burglary prosecution, trial court's failure to give, on its own motion, instruction to jury that to justify conviction, facts must not only be entirely consistent with theory of defendants' guilt, but entirely inconsistent with any other rational conclusion, was not error prejudicial to defendants, in view of instruction given jury, convincing evidence of defendants' guilt and their failure to deny that they broke into burglarized house or to question sufficiency of evidence of their burglarious entry. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

13. Criminal Law §1144(15)

On appeal from judgment on verdict of conviction, jury are presumed to have heeded trial court's instruction to acquit defendants, if jury heard evidence susceptible of any reasonable interpretation pointing to defendants' innocence.

14. Criminal Law §814(17)

In burglary prosecution, instruction of jury as if only circumstantial evidence was introduced was unnecessary in view of evidence that defendants were seen on burglarized premises, admitted their entry thereon, and were apprehended while trying to escape therefrom.

15. Burglary §41(1)

In burglary prosecution plea that defendants forced entrance into burglarized home by mistake for purpose of imbibing owner's liquor imported further proof of defendant's guilt, as jury could have reasonably inferred that such plea was intentionally fabricated for purpose of deceiving court and concluded that defendants had no honest explanation and plea did not jibe with evidence of disheveled and ransacked condition of furniture and cabinets in home and rifling of purse therein by burglars.

Richard A. Haley, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., James C. Maupin, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

[1] From convictions of burglary and from the order denying their motions for a new trial, appellants seek a reversal on the grounds of asserted errors in rulings during the conduct of the trial and in refusing to give an instruction in the language proposed by them. While in their notice to the clerk they included the insufficiency of the evidence as a basis for appeal, it was not mentioned in their brief. Good reason: they were apprehended while attempting to escape and admitted having entered the home of Richard Koon in Lakewood. Defendant

Hall besought his captor for a "break" to escape. Sizelove carried a putty knife with a blade about an inch long, and bore a cut over his shoulder blade which he declared had been caused by the bite of a dog. The Koon window was crashed out, the screen over a front window had been ripped off, the screen on the service porch was pried loose, the window was standing ajar, and the kitchen cupboards were open. The dresser drawers and the closet door were open and purses, combs and feminine accessories were scattered about the rooms. Hall said to Deputy Conway: "I sure pulled a boner this time * * * that caper.¹ I sure pulled a foolish trick going in that house."

The defense at the trial was based upon testimony of both men who maintained that (1) they were drunk and (2) they were under the mistaken impression that they were "returning" to the house next door. But neither man was intoxicated when arrested and the lady next door had no engagement for them to return, and did not expect them.

[2-5] Because prior convictions of felonies were charged against both men, the prosecuting attorney inquired of Sizelove the duration of his acquaintance with Hall and then "as a matter of fact, you and he were engaged together in bad check passing in the latter part of 1953." Objection was interposed on the ground that "this witness' character is not on trial at this time." The objection having been overruled, the witness answered: "That is correct."

Appellants now contend that the ruling was prejudicial; that there is no relationship between the burglary charged and the issuance of the fictitious checks in 1953; that it was an attempt to prove the burglary by evidence of a prior conviction and that such proof has no tendency to prove some material fact about the burglary. Such contention is error. It is the law that evidence which tends logically and by reasonable inference to establish any fact material to the People's case or to any fact urged as a defense is competent although it may connect the defendant with a crime not included in the accusation. People v. Woods, 35 Cal.2d 504, 509, 218 P.2d 981; People v. Morani, 196 Cal. 154, 158, 236 P. 135. Such evidence is admissible when it tends to establish intent, guilty knowledge, motive, a common scheme, plan or system. (Ibidem.) In the case at bar, the evidence showed that appellants were likely to hatch perfidious schemes. It served to rebut the defense that appellants were bent on a drinking spree and for that reason innocently sauntered into the Koon home in quest of whiskey. Proof that the men had mutual interests in taking what did not belong to them was essential to overcome the defense of mistake. After proving that appellants had by force entered a residence at night time, thrown its contents into disorder and fled through shattering glass to escape capture, evidence of their joint criminal venture in 1953 was relevant on the question of their continued, criminal intentions.

[6] The contention that the criminal act involved in the offered evidence must be identical with the crime charged is without support. People v. Schneider, 126 Cal.App. 749, 14 P.2d 1018, 15 P.2d 540, is not authority for appellants' contention on that point. It involved acts which did not constitute violations of the Penal Code. Therefore, they were not proof of criminal intent.

[7-9] But for two other reasons, the ruling was correct. (1) It is always competent to impeach a witness by showing that he has been convicted of a felony. (2) The court's instruction, limiting the application of the evidence to impeachment and to the "limited purpose of showing that these two defendants were acquainted and the nature of this acquaintanceship in 1953, but for no other purpose" avoided prejudice. The jury are presumed to have exercised their reason and to have obeyed the instruction, People v. Rogers, 71 Cal. 565, 568, 12 P. 679; People v. Nakis, 184 Cal. 105, 114, 193 P. 92.

[10-12] Appellants contend further that prejudice was committed by the court's failure to give on its own motion an instruction that to justify a conviction, the facts must not only be entirely consistent with the theory of guilt but must be entirely inconsistent with any other rational conclusion. Appellants cite, in support of such contention, People v. Bender, 27 Cal.2d 164, 163 P. 2d 8. It does not support their thesis. The court in the instant case directed the jury as follows:

"If the evidence in this case is susceptible of two constructions, or interpretations, each of which appears to you to be reasonable, and one of which points to the guilt of a defendant, and the other to his innocence, it is your duty under the law, to adopt that interpretation which will admit of a defendant's innocence and rejects that which points to his guilt.

"You will notice that this rule applies only when both of the two possible opposing conclusions appear to you to be reasonable. If, on the other hand, one of the possible conclusions should appear to you to be reasonable and the other to be unreasonable, it would be your duty to adhere to the reasonable deduction and to reject the unreasonable, bearing in mind, however, that even if the reasonable deduction points to a defendant's guilt, the entire proof must carry the convincing force required by law to support a verdict of guilt."

Thus, the Supreme Court had, in the Bender decision, already announced an even stronger rule, contrary to the contention of appellants. Moreover, the evidence of guilt is so bountiful as to compel the belief in appellants' guilt. Such being true, it is supererogation to argue the correctness of the court's rulings. No judgment shall be set aside on the ground of improper admission of evidence or error in instruction unless it is clearly apparent from the entire record that the error complained of has resulted in the miscarriage of justice. Const. Art. VI, § 4½. Where there is no denial of breaking into the house and appellants do not question the sufficiency of the evidence of their burglarious entry and there is abundant proof of the charge, it must be apparent that the court's ruling did not result in an unjust verdict.

[13, 14] The jury are presumed to have heeded the court's instruction that they were bound to acquit appellants if they heard evidence that was susceptible of any reasonable interpretation pointing to the innocence of appellants. Under the facts proved, it was not necessary to instruct as if only circumstantial evidence had been introduced. People v. Carson, 74 Cal.App.2d 834, 843, 169 P.2d 677. Appellants were seen on the premises, admitted entering the house, and were apprehended trying to escape.

[15] The juvenile plea that appellants forced their entrance into the Koons home by mistake and for the purpose of imbibing their liquor is of such texture as to import further proof of their guilt. It would have been a reasonable inference for the jury that such a plea was intentionally fabricated for the purpose of deceiving the court and to conclude that appellants had no honest explanation. It does not jibe with the disheveled and ransacked condition of the furniture and cabinets of Mr. Koon and the rifling of the purse by the burglars. People v. Wayne, 41 Cal.2d 814, 823, 264 P.2d 547.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

Paul A. PALMER, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Phillip L. WAHLER and Margaret Wahler,
Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 8548.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,

June 20, 1955.

Action to recover fee due under alleged oral contract whereby plaintiff undertook to and procured buyer for standing timber in which defendants had an undivided interest. The Superior Court, Shasta County, Albert F. Ross, J., gave judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Finley, J. pro tem. held that evidence was sufficient to support findings that defendants had entered into oral agreement to pay fee to plaintiff, and to support finding that defendants were owners of one-half interest in timber rights sold.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Brokers $\S$ 86(1)

In action to recover fee under oral agreement whereby plaintiff was to receive fee if he found buyer for standing timber in which defendants owned an undivided interest, evidence was sufficient to support finding that defendants agreed to pay commission for finding of buyer.

2. Appeal and Error $\S$ 1001(1), 1010(1)

An appellate court cannot be placed in the jury box beyond the point of determining that there is sufficient evidence to support the verdict of a jury or the finding of a trial judge.

3. Brokers $\S$ 82(3)

In action to recover commission allegedly due under oral agreement of defendants to pay commission if plaintiff found buyer for standing timber in which defendants had an interest, where defendants admitted in their answer that they were owners of one-half interest in timber, trial court properly denied defendants' motion to amend their answer to show that a third party had acquired a portion of their interest.

4. Pleading $\S$ 258(3)

A motion to amend an answer, which would have effect of depriving a plaintiff of part of his remedy through no fault of his own, is properly denied if it appears that the applicant to amend had knowledge and ample time to correct any inaccuracies in his pleading before trial.

5. Appeal and Error $\S$ 494

In action to recover commission allegedly due under oral agreement of defendants to pay commission if plaintiff found buyer for standing timber in which defendants had an interest, where trial court clearly indicated that defendants' motion to amend answer was denied, and no prejudice was shown to have resulted, fact that record disclosed no formal denial of such motion before end of trial was immaterial.

6. Brokers ⇨42, 43(1)

Oral agreement whereby plaintiff was to receive fee for merely introducing a prospective buyer to owners of standing timber, was a "finders agreement" and did not fall within purview of statute of frauds and the real estate licensing act regardless of whether standing timber be considered as realty or personalty and although plaintiff was not licensed real estate broker, he was entitled as a matter of law to payment of commission for finding buyers. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 5; West's Ann. Bus. & Prof.Code, § 10136.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Finders Agreement".

7. Woods and Forests ⇨1

Where standing timber is purchased separately from the land for the purpose of severance, as to those claiming under or by reason of the contract of sale such timber must thereafter be considered as goods or personal property. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 658, 660.

8. Frauds, Statute of ⇨72(3)

Where owners of standing timber on land had no interest in land upon which it stood, and time in which they could enter to remove timber was limited by terms of grant, the estate which was subject matter of contract for sale of standing timber was one for years, subject to defeasance at expiration of fixed term, and was similar in nature to an interest created by an oil and gas lease for years which is a chattel real and not "real estate" within meaning of statute of frauds. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 5.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Real Estate".

9. Logs and Logging ⇨3(7)

Contract for sale of standing timber made by sellers who had no interest in land upon which timber stood, was a contract of sale within statute providing that where "industrial growing crops and things * * * forming part of the land * * * are agreed to be severed * * * under contract of sale," things sold under such contract, are to be treated as goods under sales act. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 658, 660.

10. Woods and Forests ⇨1

A sale of timber for the purpose of cutting and removing it from the land would amount to a constructive severance rendering timber personal property until such time at least as there should be, if ever, a reuniting or merger of the ownership of the land and the timber again into common ownership. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 658, 660.

FINLEY, Justice pro tem.

In this action, tried before a jury, plaintiff was awarded a money judgment on an alleged oral contract whereby, for a fee, he undertook to and did procure a purchaser of standing timber in which defendants owned an undivided interest. Defendants have appealed from the judgment and urge the following points of reversal:

"I. The evidence produced at the trial of the action by the plaintiff is insufficient either (A) to support the verdict of the jury and the judgment of the court finding that defendants were indebted to plaintiff by reason of an oral agreement entered into between them to pay a commission to plaintiff, or (B) that the defendants were the owners of a one-half interest in and to the timber rights sold and therefore liable to pay a commission based on one-half of the timber rights sold.

"II. The alleged oral agreement between the plaintiff and the defendants, being an agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission, is invalid because there is no note or memorandum thereof in writing and subscribed by the defendants, the parties to be charged, as required by the statute of frauds, Section 1624, subdivision 5 of the Civil Code of the State of California.

"III. Plaintiff failed to state a cause of action for recovery of a commission because of his failure to allege and prove that he was a duly licensed real estate broker at the time the alleged cause of action arose, as required by Section 10136 of the Business and Professions Code of the State of California and the trial court erred in refusing to consider this question at any stage of the proceedings, or to submit it to the jury."

The facts of the case are as follows: After a trial in the superior court for Trinity County in 1949 it was adjudged that one Fred Kohle owned an undivided one-half interest in certain timber in the Mad River and Hetinshaw Valleys in Trinity County, and that Philip L. Wahler and Margaret Wahler, his wife, owned the other undivided one-half interest. Thereafter, in August of 1949, Fred Kohle conveyed one-half of his undivided one-half interest to Alvin M. Cibula, an attorney at law in Shasta County. In December of 1950 Fred Kohle advised plaintiff of his interest in this timber and promised that if plaintiff would find a buyer who would consummate a deal for the purchase of the timber, a commission would be paid to him. Kohle was not authorized to speak for any one but himself, as no partnership existed between the co-owners, and at the time Kohle and his attorney, Cibula, were dealing at arm's length with the Wahlers and their attorney, R. P. Stimmel, whom the Wahlers contend also owned an undivided interest in the timber. It is alleged by plaintiff that defendants subsequently joined in the agreement to pay him a "finders" commission; that he produced a buyer named Dolan who, after some negotiations with the parties, did cause a corporation formed by him to purchase the timber, but that defendants thereupon refused to pay plaintiff the commission agreed upon.

There is no conflict between plaintiff on the one hand and Kohle and Cibula on the other regarding the transaction. They agree that plaintiff was promised as his commission all that a purchaser would pay over and above $6 per thousand for all pine timber and $4 per thousand for all fir timber. They contend that defendants agreed to this arrangement. Defendants argue that they were not parties to any such agreement and, furthermore, that even though in their answer they admitted ownership of an undivided one-half interest in the timber, their attorney, Stimmel, on July 7, 1949, acquired a 15 per cent interest in their one-half interest which in June of 1951 was increased to 20 per cent.

[1,2] The evidence is conflicting as to just what, if any, the arrangement was between plaintiff and defendants. Kohle, Cibula and plaintiff testified regarding several telephone conversations carried on by each of them with defendants, and it is claimed that defendants, as a final arrangement, assented to the payment of a commission to plaintiff of $2 per thousand on all the pine timber sold. Defendants deny any such assent or agreement, but the jury found against them and in favor of plaintiff on the issue, and a review of the record discloses ample testimony of sufficient substantiality to support the finding. We so hold, and beyond this we are not required to go. Trancoso v. Trancoso, 96 Cal.App. 2d 797, 216 P.2d 172. It would serve no useful purpose to set forth here the supporting testimony. Numerous excerpts from the record appear in the briefs of both parties, but an appellate court cannot be placed in the jury box beyond the point of determination that there is sufficient evidence to support the verdict of a jury or the finding of a trial judge. In re Estate of Moramarco, 86 Cal.App.2d 326, 194 P.2d 740; Smythe v. Schacht, 93 Cal.App.2d 315, 209 P.2d 114; Trancoso v. Trancoso, supra; Consolidated Pipe Co. v. Gries, 103 Cal.App.2d 901, 230 P.2d 385.

[3-5] On the point that defendants were not owners of a one-half interest in the timber, the fact that they were such owners was admitted in their answer, and their motion to amend near the end of the trial was properly denied by the trial court. Attorney Stimmel was not made a party to the action, and we can only assume that he was not made so on account of this admission on the part of defendants which was relied upon by plaintiff. The trial court properly took the position that, under the circumstances, this question of ownership was between the Wahlers and their attorney, Mr. Stimmel, and with this we agree. It would, in light of the facts disclosed, have been unfair to plaintiff for the trial court to have granted defendants' motion to amend their answer at the late date it was made. If allowed, such an amendment would, in effect, have unjustifiably amended away a part of plaintiff's remedy through no fault of his own. Such a motion is properly denied if it appears that the applicant had knowledge and ample time to correct any inaccuracies in the pleading before trial. Manha v. Union Fertilizer Co., 151 Cal. 581, 91 P. 393; Hancock v. Hubbell, 71 Cal. 537, 12 P. 618; McGushin v. Arnold, 21 Cal.App.2d 271, 68 P.2d 733. The fact that the record discloses no formal denial of defendants' motion before the trial ended is of no substantial importance. The court clearly indicated that the motion was denied which is sufficient in the absence of a showing that prejudice resulted. Hewel v. Hogen, 3 Cal.App. 248, 84 P. 1002. A formal written ruling was later made and filed.

[6] Referring to appellants' points II and III above, respondent contends that the type of agreement with which we are here concerned is a finders agreement, and that it falls neither within the purview of the statute of frauds nor the real estate licensing laws. There is no substantial evidence that plaintiff was asked or employed to do other than find a buyer, or that he handled or participated in the negotiations for sale after he had found and introduced the buyer, Dolan, to the owners of the timber. The only evidence of plaintiff's participation in the negotiations is in connection with the payment of his commission. There is no evidence that he participated in any other phase of the transaction. There is evidence that during the negotiations the timber owners called him by telephone and secured his consent to a waiver of any commission on the fir timber sold, but that is all. This involved the relationship between the timber owners and plaintiff but not the terms of the contract between the owners and the buyer.

The question of the enforceability of an oral finders agreement by one not holding a real estate license was recently passed upon in the case of Crofoot v. Spivak, 113 Cal.App.2d 146, 248 P.2d 45, which was an action brought to collect money alleged to be due for the procuring and introducing of a buyer for defendant's mill and timber properties. Plaintiff admittedly had no license to sell real estate, and defendant asserted this as a defense to the action. At pages 147-148 of the decision in 113 Cal. App.2d, 248 P.2d 45, we find this language:

"Reduced to its simplest proportions, this appeal has to do with the question of whether or not a license is required before one can collect on a promise to pay compensation for introducing a prospective purchaser to a property owner desiring to sell his properties, nothing more being done than the bare act of introduction. We think it unnecessary in the decision of this case to follow appellant through his discussions of the proper interpretation of the pertinent licensing acts because we think the case is controlled by the decision in Shaffer v. Beinhorn, 190 Cal. 569, 213 P. 960, decided in 1923. Therein defendant, a licensed real estate broker, entered into an agreement with plaintiffs promising that if the latter would find anyone interested in the purchase of the property which the broker had for sale, to whom the broker would be able to negotiate a sale, or would introduce to him anyone to whom he would be able to make a sale, he would pay plaintiffs a certain percentage of his broker's commission. Plaintiffs did introduce such a prospective purchaser to whom the defendant broker negotiated a sale. It was held the complaint stated a cause of action and did not show that the plaintiffs were acting as real estate brokers within the meaning of the Real Estate Brokers Law. * * * The trial court, upon substantial evidence, found particularly that the promise upon which plaintiff sued was a promise to pay for an introduction and required no further act on the part of respondent to raise the liability sued upon. The trial court also found that respondent did no more than was called for, that is, did nothing but introduce the prospective purchasers to the appellant who himself thereafter conducted the negotiations resulting in the sale of his property without any act or aid by respondent. The cited case was decided, as noted, some twenty-nine years ago and in the intervening time successive legislatures have met and have made no amendments to the pertinent language of the enactment which would change the scope of the legislature's definition of who was a real estate broker as that definition was contained in the act current at the time the Supreme Court made its decision. Under such circumstances we think it clear that the legislature has acquiesced in the interpretation of the statute as given and that no justification could be found for any different interpretation now. As pointedly observed by the trial judge in his memorandum opinion, no license is required for the simple act of introducing one person to another—yet."

The Crofoot case was decided in September of 1952 by this court. In December, 1952, the decision in Hooper v. Mayfield, 114 Cal.App.2d 802, 251 P.2d 330, wherein statements appear indicating a contrary view, came down from Division Two of the First Appellate District. In May of 1954 there appeared on this subject the highly illuminating case of Freeman v. Jergins, 125 Cal.App.2d 536, 271 P.2d 210, wherein Division Three of the Second District was divided, Mr. Justice Vallee rendering a dissenting opinion. In the majority opinion by Mr. Justice Shinn, and in the dissent, the question of the validity of a "finders" agreement was thoroughly and ably discussed. In the majority opinion, Hooper v. Mayfield, supra, was distinguished and the rule, originally announced in Heyn v. Philips, 37 Cal. 529, and followed in Shaffer v. Beinhorn, 190 Cal. 569, 213 P. 960, McKenna v. Edwards, 19 Cal. App.2d 327, 65 P.2d 810, and in Crofoot v. Spivak, supra, was approved and followed. It therefore appears that the law in California as originally announced by our Supreme Court in Heyn v. Philips, supra, and followed by that court in the Shaffer case is that a so-called "finders agreement" falls neither within the purview of the statute of frauds nor the real estate licensing acts. We hold that the agreement with which we are here concerned is such an agreement, and, therefore, regardless of whether the timber be considered as realty or personalty, the plaintiff, although not a licensed real estate broker, and acting under an oral agreement only, was entitled as a matter of law to the payment of his commission.

[7] Going further, it would seem that the enforceability of plaintiff's contract need not rest solely upon the determination of this point. In California, under the provisions of Civil Code, sections 658 and 660, standing timber purchased separately from the land under a contract for severance, thereby becomes personalty for all purposes depending upon the contract of purchase. As pointed out by both parties in their briefs, the legal status of standing timber is not uniform throughout the several states, and in California there are no decisions directly upon the point involved here. However, the language of Civil Code, sections 658 and 660, is in our opinion quite clear and explicit, and regardless of what the rule is elsewhere, we are satisfied that as to those claiming under or by reason of a contract of sale, the California rule is that where standing timber is purchased separately from the land for the purpose of severance, it must thereafter be considered as "goods" or personal property. See also Davis v. McFarlane, 37 Cal. 634.

[8] Here neither the appellants nor their co-owners in the timber had any interest in the land upon which it stood. The time within which they could enter and remove the timber was limited by the terms of the grant to December 31, 1954. Therefore the "estate" which was the subject matter of the contract of sale was but one for years and was subject to defeasance at the expiration of a fixed term. It was similar in nature to an interest created by an oil and gas lease for years which has been held to be a chattel real and not "real estate" within the meaning of section 1624, subd. 5, of the Civil Code. Dabney v. Edwards, 5 Cal.2d 1, 53 P.2d 962, 103 A.L.R. 822.

[9,10] There are several provisions in the contract between the buyer and sellers here dealing with the question of severance of the timber and the mode of payment therefor in the event that the rate of severance exceeded the apparent expectation of the parties when the stipulated periodic payments were fixed. Although the necessity for severance is not dictated or required by actual terms of the contract, it is the unquestionable purpose thereof, and forfeiture in the event of nonseverance is made a specific condition. It would therefore be entirely unrealistic to say that the contract was not one according to the terms of which "industrial growing crops and things attached to or forming part of the land * * * are agreed to be severed * * * under the contract of sale * * *" as provided in Civil Code, sections 658 and 660. Further, it would seem only logical that aside from the provisions of these code sections, a sale of timber for the purpose of cutting and removing it from the land would amount to a constructive severance until such time at least as there should be, if ever, a reuniting or merger of the ownership of the land and the timber again into common ownership. Peterson v. Gibbs, 147 Cal. 1, 7, 81 P. 121; Kingsley v. Holbrook, 45 N.H. 313, 86 Am.Dec. 173 and note; Hoit v. Stratton Mills, 54 N.H. 109, 20 Am.Rep. 119; Purner v. Piercy, 40 Md. 212, 17 Am.Rep. 591 and note.

We recognize the marked difference of opinion in the various jurisdictions with respect to the status of standing timber sold separate from the land. See 7 A.L.R.2d 517. What its status should be in California in the event that it is not sold for severance is not involved here. We therefore expressly limit this decision to rights, or obligations originated by or depending upon the contract of sale in a situation where trees or timber are sold separate from the land and where severance from the land is the express or obvious purpose of the sale.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appellants,

v.

BRIDGEVILLE LUMBER CO., a corporation, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 8666.

Sac. 6505.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Rehearing Denied (Civ. 8666) July 19, 1955.

Action by vendor to obtain specific performance of option to repurchase real property. The Superior Court, Humboldt County, Delos A. Mace, J., entered judgment denying specific performance and vendor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that where option gave vendor right to repurchase at any time from May 7, 1951 to May 7, 1952 for $100, the same timberland he had sold for $7,000 in April 1946, but purchaser had right to remove standing timber until expiration of option period notwithstanding earlier exercise of option, and vendor exercised option in May, 1951 when $25,000 worth of timber was standing on land and demanded immediate conveyance of land, vendor had not exercised his contract rights and was not entitled to specific performance.

Affirmed.

1. Evidence $\S$ 450(8)

Where under 1946 option purchaser agreed to reconvey to vendor "at any time after the 7th day of May, 1951 and before the 7th day of May, 1952," for payment of $100, the same timberland purchaser acquired for $7,000, option was uncertain in its terms as to time purchaser was obligated to reconvey if vendor exercised option and as to right of purchaser to remove timber up to May 1, 1952 notwithstanding an earlier exercise of option, and parol evidence was admissible to explain entire transaction.

2. Evidence $\S$ 429

Where option gave vendor right to repurchase same timberland he had sold for $7,000, for only $100 six years later, parol evidence of the entire transaction was admissible in order that the court might determine whether or not the option agreement was fair and reasonable and therefore a proper subject of an equitable decree of specific performance.

3. Specific Performance $\S$ 121(9)

In action for specific performance of option to repurchase for $100, the same timberland optionee had sold six years earlier for $7,000, evidence sustained finding that optionor was to have full option period to remove timber standing on the land before being required to reconvey, notwithstanding earlier exercise of option.

4. Specific Performance $\S$ 51

Option to repurchase for $100, the same timberland optionee had sold for $7,000, when construed to permit optionor to remove standing timber until expiration of one year option period notwithstanding earlier exercise of option, was equitable and subject to specific performance.

5. Specific Performance $\S$ 97(3)

Where option gave vendor right to repurchase at any time from May 7, 1951 to May 7, 1952 for $100, the same timberland he had sold for $7,000 in April 1946, but purchaser had right to remove standing timber until expiration of option period notwithstanding earlier exercise of option, and vendor tendered $100 in May, 1951 when $25,000 worth of timber was standing on land and demanded immediate conveyance of land, vendor had not exercised his contract rights and was not entitled to specific performance.

Ben Van Tress, Eureka, for appellants.

Huber & Goodwin, Eureka, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiffs and appellants brought this action against defendant and respondent to obtain specific enforcement of a contract to convey real property and incidental relief. Prior to April 20, 1946, appellants were the owners of 680 acres of timber land in Humboldt County. On that day a contract was entered into with respondent, whereunder they agreed to sell the land to respondent for the sum of $7,000 and to convey when the purchase price had been paid. On the 7th of May following another contract was entered into by the parties. This is the contract which the appellants herein seek to have specifically enforced. Stated in substance, that contract was as follows: In consideration of One Dollar the respondent agreed to convey to appellants, by quitclaim deed, "at any time after the 7th day of May, 1951 and before the 7th day of May, 1952", for a payment of $100, the same property which respondent was then purchasing under contract from appellants. The parties refer to this document as an option and we will so refer to it. The writing contains no explanation on its face as to why property costing $7,000 and being currently purchased at that price from appellants might thus be conveyed back to them for $100 some five or six years later. The parties proceeded under the purchase and sale agreement. Respondent paid for the land and received a grant deed therefor from appellants, which deed was absolute in form and contained no reference to the outstanding option contract.

By their complaint the plaintiffs alleged the execution of the foregoing agreements and the execution of the deed to respondent. In an apparent attempt to explain the whole transaction, appellants alleged that, as owners of the subject property, they first entered into an oral contract with respondent wherein it was agreed that they would sell the property to respondent, give it a period of five years to remove the timber therefrom and that after the five year period all rights of respondent in and to the property and timber would revert to appellants; that to carry out the terms of that oral contract the parties executed the purchase and sale agreement whereunder respondent was to obtain title to the property and the later option agreement whereunder appellants for the sum of $100 could re-purchase the subject land. They alleged the fairness of the re-purchase agreement under the circumstances, and that in all respects it was fairly arrived at.

On June 1, 1951 appellants recorded the option agreement, tendered to respondent $100 in money and demanded a deed. Later they began this action. They alleged respondent's refusal to convey; that on January 11, 1949, respondent had made an agreement with one Thomsen, selling the timber on the land to him, with the right to enter and remove the same for a period extending to March 1, 1952; that Thomsen had begun to remove the timber and was at the time the action was filed still cutting and removing the same and making payments therefor to respondent; that as of June 1, 1951 there was still standing on the property and being cut and removed by Thomsen timber worth more than $25,000. They asked that the court compel the respondent to convey the property to them; that respondent be declared to be a trustee for their benefit of all money received from Thomsen after June 1, 1951, and that respondent be required to assign and deliver to them the Thomsen agreement, together with all moneys received thereunder after said date.

The court found that there was no antecedent oral agreement between the parties limiting respondent to five years to remove the timber on the property; that when the option agreement was executed none of the parties intended or expected that appellants would be entitled to any but cut-over land thereunder; that the $100 purchase price provided for in the option was not fair, adequate, reasonable or equitable under the circumstances and that the parties never contemplated that appellants would be "entitled to get back an alleged $25,000.00 worth of timber, or any timber" for such consideration and did not bargain therefor. Further the trial court found that the option agreement, properly construed, gave to respondent a one-year leeway period to insure the removal of the timber on the subject land. The court concluded that appellants were not entitled to specific enforcement of the option agreement and adjudged that they take nothing as against respondent. From that judgment this appeal was taken.

It appears from the record that the main point of dispute between the parties was as to the time at which respondent was to convey the land back to appellants if appellants elected to pay $100 therefor. Appellants insist that they could demand and be entitled to a conveyance at any time during the year period between May 7, 1951 and May 7, 1952; that at any time in that period which they chose to select they could tender the $100, demand a deed and effect an equitable conversion as of that date, entitling them not only to conveyance of the legal title, but to an accounting of any receipts from the property which the respondent thereafter acquired. On the contrary, respondent contended that the parties intended the reconveyance would carry cut-over land only and that if, during the year appellants elected to take the property, respondent would have the balance of the year period to clear it of timber and to reconvey the land when that was done. When on June 1, 1951, and while the land still contained much valuable timber, appellants gave notice of their election to purchase and tendered the purchase price, respondent, acting in accordance with its interpretation of the option agreement, placed a deed in escrow with the title company, quitclaiming the property to appellants, but with instructions that the deed was to be delivered to appellants "on or after May 1, 1952, upon the receipt of the sum of $100.00 for the benefit of" respondent. Respondent alleged that thereby it did "conform with and perform all matters required of defendant under the said option agreement."

[1,2] Over the objection of appellants the trial court took testimony concerning the entire transaction between the parties eventuating in the two written agreements and the deed from appellants to respondent. This it was entitled to do for two reasons: The option was uncertain in its terms relating to the time when respondent was obligated to convey if during the period from May 1, 1951 and May 1, 1952 appellants elected to buy; it was further uncertain as to the right of respondent to take timber up to May 1, 1952 notwithstanding an earlier election to buy. The court was also entitled to examine into these same matters to determine whether or not the option agreement was fair and reasonable and, therefore, the proper subject of an equitable decree of specific performance. Mr. Maurer, president of respondent corporation, testified as follows: That he negotiated the purchase of the timber land from appellants; that respondent paid for the land and obtained a deed; that appellants requested an option to buy the property back some three weeks after the original contract for the sale to respondent had been executed; that appellants asked the land be reconveyed to them after the timber had been all removed; that one of the appellants who had been doing the negotiating pointed out to him and he agreed that since respondent was operating a timber and sawmill enterprise it was only interested in timber and that when the timber was gone the land would be of no use to respondent, whereas it would be of some use to appellants for grazing purposes; that on that basis he at first agreed to an option on the basis of $500 to be paid for the cut-over lands and submitted the proposition to appellants; that appellants objected to that price as being excessive in view of the fact that the land would be of little value with the timber removed; that he then agreed for respondent to accept the sum of $100 and to reconvey the land after the timber had been removed; that when the option was given respondent had scheduled as of that time no immediate logging operations on the land but had intended to log it in the future; that during negotiations for the option there was a general discussion as to the condition the property would be in when it was turned back and it was definitely understood, and that he had so stated to appellants, that the reconveyance would be of the land only without any timber; that it had been stated between the parties that respondent would have one year within which to remove any timber standing after May 1, 1951, and that such was his understanding.

[3] Upon these disputed constructions of the contract the court found that the agreement should be construed as giving to the respondent the full period from May 7, 1951 to May 7, 1952 to remove the timber from the land before being required to reconvey the land to appellants. We think the evidence fully supports the trial court's construction of the ambiguous provisions of the contract as to the time when and the conditions under which the reconveyance to appellants was to be made and that in solving that uncertainty it was made clearly to appear that appellants could not by making a demand for an earlier conveyance effect an equitable conversion so as to charge respondent with the duty to account for and turn over to them all proceeds from the logging of the lands from the date of notice of their election to purchase and demand for a conveyance.

[4,5] The trial court specifically found that the contract was not under the circumstances a fair one and the proper object for equitable remedy of specific performance. If, however, the contract, properly interpreted, did not bind respondent to convey the property until the end of the year's leeway period and permitted it to complete the removal of the timber, then the record will not support a finding that so construed the contract was inequitable. Respondent's own evidence and its conduct belie such a claim, for, when appellants elected to buy, tendered the price and demanded a deed, respondent promptly deposited the required quitclaim deed conditioning delivery only upon the lapse of that period. Appellants have given no intimation that they would accept the conveyance of the land with the timber off. Their demand that the land with $25,000 worth of standing timber be turned over to them for the sum of $100 appears to be unconscionable, but such considerations are beside the mark for, taking the contract as construed by the court, they have never elected to exercise the contract rights given them and were, therefore, entitled to no relief. Treating that contract as an option, their tender and demand did not square with the offer; treating as a conditional contract to convey, their tender and demand did not meet the condition.

Hearing Denied July 27, 1955.

Prosecution for crimes of issuing check without sufficient funds and for conspiracy to commit such offense. The Superior Court, San Diego County, John A. Hewicker, J., entered judgment of conviction and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that trial judge's questioning of defendant and personal comments on evidence during charge to jury exceeded permissible limits and were such as to deprive defendant of fair trial.

Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Buttermore & Lightner, Wesley B. Buttermore, Jr., San Diego, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., Victor Griffith, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Judge.

The defendant was charged with issuing a check without sufficient funds in violation of section 476a of the Penal Code, and in a second count with conspiracy to commit that crime in violation of sections 182 and 476a of that code. He was also charged with a prior conviction, which he admitted. A jury found him guilty on both counts of the information, and judgment was pronounced imposing a prison term. He has appealed from that judgment.

On March 20, 1954, the appellant presented a check to an employee of a department store in Pacific Beach, who refused to cash it. The check was for $120, signed by one James Hall and payable to the appellant. Hall and Huff then went to a paint store where Hall bought paint amounting to about $10. The proprietor refused to accept the $120 check but cashed another $30 check, which was written by Hall. Hall and Huff then went to a dress shop where they were shown some dresses by a Mrs. Brody. They selected a dress, priced at $24.95, and tendered the $120 check saying that Huff worked for Hall and this was his pay for the week. When Mrs. Brody refused to accept the check they left.

Hall and Huff then went across the street to a bar, and secured a blank check from the bartender. In the presence of Huff, Hall wrote a check for $75 payable to Martin Luther Huff and signed "Mrs. James Hall." Huff then went back to the dress shop and purchased the dress for $24.95, giving Mrs. Brody the $75 check and receiving the change. Huff endorsed the check Martin L. Huff. While Huff was in the dress shop Hall kept walking to the entrance of the bar and looking across the street to the dress shop. When Huff returned they left the dress and paint in the bar, and went away together. The dress was later returned to Mrs. Brody. It was stipulated that there was no account in the bank on which the two checks were drawn, either in the name of Mr. Hall or Mrs. Hall. Mrs. Hall testified that she did not sign the $75 check and that she had reimbursed the dress shop and the paint store for their loss on these checks. Mr. Hall was in jail in Oregon at the time of the trial.

The appellant testified that he had worked for Hall selling fruit for two weeks in March, 1953; that he had recently returned from an ocean fishing trip and was not in need of money; that Hall was trying to buy a truck so he told Hall he would wait for his pay; that he went to see Hall on March 20, 1954, about collecting $92 which Hall owed him for his labor; that Hall asked him to buy a dress for Hall's wife and gave him a check for $120, telling him not to pay over $30 for the dress; that when the dress shop refused to accept the check Hall wrote another check for $75 payable to him, which he used to purchase the dress from Mrs. Brody; that he asked Hall about the check being signed "Mrs. James Hall"; that Hall said the money was in her account but he, Hall, had authority to sign her name; that Hall told him to tell Mrs. Brody that he had gotten the check from Mrs. Hall, which he did; and that he was ignorant of the fact that the $75 check was not good. Mrs. Hall testified that Huff worked for her husband for only three days; that Hall did not owe money to Huff; that she kept the books and paid Huff at the end of each day; and that she wore a size 9 dress, which was five sizes smaller than the one purchased by Huff.

It is not contended that the evidence is not sufficient to support the verdict. It is contended, however, that the appellant was deprived of due process of law because the court's cross-examination of the appellant, his interruption of defense counsel's argument to the jury, and his comments to the jury on the evidence amounted to advocacy for the prosecution.

After the appellant testified as above stated, the district attorney cross-examined him at length. Early in that cross-examination the appellant stated that he returned from a fishing trip on a certain day, and that he worked for Hall the last part of March or the first part of April. The court then interrupted and asked questions taking up three pages of the transcript. These questions related largely to why he could not remember the exact dates when he worked for Mr. Hall. Among other things, the court asked "How do you remember this getting off the fishing boat so accurately and you can't tell how late you worked for Mr. Hall?"

At the conclusion of the district attorney's cross-examination the court questioned the appellant, as disclosed by six pages of the transcript. These questions related largely to the $75 check. Among other things, he asked the following questions:

"This $75 check is the second check you had gotten from Hall isn't it?"

"You were sitting at the bar there when this check was written. Did you inquire of him why he didn't sign it 'Mrs. James Hall by James Hall'?"

"You saw your name on the front 'Martin Luther Huff'. Why did you sign it Martin L. Huff on the back?"

"Why didn't you tell him to make it Martin Luther Huff on the front?"

"Were you sort of nervous when you went over and cashed this check?"

"Well, you had been turned down with one check before with that same story, hadn't you?"

"Hall told you to tell them that she signed the check. Did that make you suspicious as to whether or not he had the right to sign her name?

"Why would he tell you that?

"Why didn't you have him give you a check for $120 and then leave?

"Well, that wasn't any concern of yours, was it? (referring to the statement that Hall wanted him to get a dress for Hall's wife)

"You went through all three of these check episodes to get part of your money?"

While appellant's counsel was arguing to the jury, and while he was arguing that the appellant, not being a lawyer, would not know that the check must be signed in a certain way; and that there might have been some agreement with the bank or a power of attorney on file authorizing Hall to sign for his wife, the court interrupted to say, "If you had a power of attorney, Mr. Buttermore, you would still have to sign it 'so and so by so and so'".

After the conclusion of the arguments and immediately prior to giving his regular instructions, the court made some general remarks which take up 5½ pages of the transcript. So far as material here, these remarks are as follows:

"This is the time for me to give you the instructions on the law applicable to this case. I have nothing to do with determining the facts in this case. It's entirely up to you. After listening to the testimony in this case for the last day, it must be apparent to you at this time that somebody in this case isn't telling the truth. Now, it's up to you to determine who is telling the truth in this case. The only actual victim in the case, of course, is Mrs. Hall. She has testified that she made these checks good. * * * I will instruct you in this case to try only one person. The only person you are supposed to try in a criminal case is the defendant. Determine whether or not he is guilty or whether he is innocent, but don't try other people.

"Now, these intended victims, * * * have been reimbursed. * * * what reason would they have to come in here at this time and under oath to tell you a falsehood? Those people having been the original victims, * * * would immediately reconstruct what happened and think back how the thing happened and they would bear that in mind. * * * I venture to say that if you had ever taken the check for $75 or $100 and being victimized, I think the minute you found out from the bank that the check wasn't any good, I think you would immediately be raking your mind to remember everything that happened and why you were taken in, and I don't think you would forget that very soon. * * *

"Mrs. Hall testified that she and her husband never had a bank account. * * * Personally, I think that Mrs. Hall lived out there in the community * * *, and I think that is probably why she made the checks good. One of the checks did have her name on it and * * * to prevent people from pointing the finger at her, why she paid off these checks, and I think it was a noble thing to do. I think it's more than most women would have done if their husband had got in trouble and left town.

"This blue check that we have in evidence, * * * I want you to look at that carefully when you go out, as to how it's endorsed and to whom it's made payable to and the figures on it and the signature, 'Mrs. James Hall'. Now, I asked Mr. Huff when he was on the stand whether it didn't seem peculiar to him that if Mr. Hall had a right to sign his wife's signature to the check, whether it shouldn't have been signed Mrs. James Hall by James Hall in order to clear the bank. That is the way a check is signed. If I have an account and I give somebody power of attorney to sign on that account, they have signed my name by so and so. Of course, what happens, anybody passes one of those checks, so and so by so and so, it always raises in the mind of the person that is about to accept the check, 'Well, does this man have authority to sign that name?' * * * Mr. Huff did say that he went in and told the people that Mrs. Hall had signed this check. He was right there when the check was made out, and I don't think that I would have done that. Does it seem reasonable to you—and this is for you to determine if a relationship existed between Mr. Hall and Mr. Huff as he said it did a year before and he had ninety some dollars coming—would he wait one whole year, or eleven months, whatever it was, in order to collect that money? Would he wait until a Saturday afternoon when all the banks are closed, to collect that money? Would he, in order to get that money, or only a part of it, go to a store and buy a dress, as he says, for the other man's wife? If somebody owed me money and he had owed it to me for a year, I certainly wouldn't run from place to place and tell people that I was buying a dress for somebody else in order to get them to cash a check. * * *

"* * * you are not to throw away the good sense that you came into the courtroom with, just because you go out to the jury room to deliberate. Please take that good common sense along with you. * * * just put yourself in the place of (the victims and the defendant) * * * What would you have done? And, just be reasonable. That's all we ask you to do, and, determine the true facts in this case, and if you arrive at the true facts, why, you will have no regrets when you leave the jury room."

While the questions asked by the court were not objected to, and the court told the jury that it was not to assume from his questions that he held any opinion as to the matters to which the questions related, and repeatedly told the jurors that they were the exclusive judges of all questions of fact, the questions thus asked may well have had a deciding weight against the defendant. People v. Byrd, 88 Cal.App.2d 188, 198 P.2d 561. Moreover, the effect of these questions would naturally be increased by the comments made immediately preceding the giving of the instructions on the law.

[1,2] While a judge may comment on the evidence, including the credibility of witnesses, Art. VI, § 19, Const.; Penal Code, § 1127, this privilege has its inherent limitations and must not be of a nature which would invade the province of the jury. People v. Ottey, 5 Cal.2d 714, 56 P.2d 193. Even an expression of opinion concerning the guilt or innocence of a defendant may not be fatal provided the province of the jury is not invaded. People v. Eudy, 12 Cal.2d 41, 82 P.2d 359. However, such comments should be temperately and fairly made and trial courts should be cautious in exercising this power of comment with a view to protecting the rights of the defendant. People v. Dail, 22 Cal.2d 642, 140 P.2d 828; People v. DeMoss, 4 Cal.2d 469, 50 P.2d 1031. It has been held that it is improper to commend a witness in the presence of the jury because of the undue weight which would thus be given to the testimony of this witness. People v. Frank, 71 Cal.App. 575, 236 P. 189. A judge should be careful not to throw the weight of his judicial position in a case, either for or against the defendant. People v. Mahoney, 201 Cal. 618, 258 P. 607. The rule is well established that such comments on the evidence "must be fair, temperate, judicial, dispassionate, and free from apparent contentiousness, partisanship or advocacy." People v. Hooper, 92 Cal.App.2d 524, 207 P.2d 117, 121. Such comment must be fair and temperate and not argumentative to a degree that makes it characteristically an act of advocacy. People v. Robinson, 73 Cal.App.2d 233, 166 P.2d 17; People v. DeMoss, 4 Cal.2d 469, 50 P.2d 1031. In People v. Byrd, 88 Cal.App.2d 188, 198 P.2d 561, it was held prejudicial to ask a question where, from the form of the question, a jury would necessarily infer that the judge was not only questioning the truth of the defendant's general testimony, but also the truth of his denial of the commission of the crime for which he was on trial as well.

[3] In our opinion, the questioning and comments here exceeded permissible limits, and were such as to deprive the appellant of the fair trial to which he was entitled. They were argumentative to an unusual degree and, in effect, were strong arguments for a conviction. They bore directly upon appellant's sole defense, and amounted to the advocacy which is not permitted.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

Allen L. DUFF, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

A. TEICHERT & SON, Inc., a corporation,
Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 8464.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,

June 23, 1955.

Action against paving contractor for injuries sustained by operator of motorcycle when it skidded on accumulation of loose rock and gravel in gutter at entrance to driveway. The Superior Court, Sacramento County, J. O. Moncur, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that whether contractor was negligent in sweeping loose rock and gravel from newly paved street into gutter for removal by trucks and allowing it to remain there to a depth of one and one-half to three inches at entrance to driveway and whether motorcycle operator was contributorily negligent were questions of fact for trier of facts.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Judges 7

A retired judge of superior court, properly assigned for service on superior court by chairman of judicial council was qualified to act as a judge in such court, try case and render judgment under such assignment.

2. Automobiles 306(2)

In action against paving contractor for injuries sustained by operator of motorcycle when it skidded on accumulation of loose rock and gravel in gutter at entrance to driveway, evidence that after paving had been completed and before job had been accepted by county, contractor's employees had returned twice to remove loose rock and gravel and absence of evidence that paving job had been accepted by county prior to accident warranted inference that the sweeping of loose rock and gravel into gutter on day of accident had been done by contractor's employees.

3. Automobiles 308(9)

In action against paving contractor for injuries sustained by operator of motorcycle when it skidded on accumulation of loose rock and gravel in gutter at entrance to driveway, whether contractor was negligent in sweeping loose rock and gravel from newly paved street into gutter for removal by trucks and permitting it to remain there to a depth of one and one-half to three inches at entrance to driveway was a question of fact for the trier of facts.

4. Negligence 122(1)

Defendant has the burden of proving contributory negligence.

5. Negligence 136(9)

Contributory negligence is not established as a matter of law unless the only reasonable hypothesis is that such negligence exists and reasonable men could have drawn that conclusion and none other, and where different inferences may be drawn, one for and one against, the one against will be followed, and before it can be held as a matter of law that contributory negligence exists, the evidence must point unerringly to that conclusion.

6. Automobiles 306(8), 308(11)

In action against paving contractor for injuries sustained by operator of motorcycle when it skidded on accumulation of loose rock and gravel in gutter at entrance to driveway, whether motorcycle operator was contributorily negligent was a question of fact for trier of facts, and conclusion that he was not contributorily negligent was supported by substantial evidence.

Gerald M. Desmond, Sacramento, for appellant.

Richard J. Lawrence, Sacramento, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Plaintiff above named commenced an action against defendant corporation to recover damages for injuries received when the motorcycle on which he was riding skidded, throwing him to the ground. He alleged that his injuries were caused by the dangerous and defective condition of the street and the negligence of defendant. Defendant in its answer denied any negligence and also pleaded contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff. The action was tried by the court without a jury, and judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $3,895.50.

Defendant has appealed from said judgment and states the questions involved as follows:

"I. Was the Honorable J. O. Moncur qualified under the Constitution of the State of California to act as a judge and render a judgment in this case?

"II. Was there any substantial evidence to support the finding of fact that the accident and plaintiff's injury were caused by the negligence of defendant?

"III. Did the evidence establish as a matter of law that the accident was caused by the contributory negligence of defendant?"

[1] Since this appeal was filed our Supreme Court, in the case of Pickens v. Johnson, 42 Cal.2d 399, 267 P.2d 801 (in which case Judge Moncur was also the trial judge), has decided that a retired judge of the Superior Court, when properly assigned by the Chairman of the Judicial Council, may try a case in the Superior Court under such assignment. This decision disposes of appellant's contention that Judge Moncur was not qualified to act as a judge in the instant case.

Before discussing appellant's remaining contentions, which involve the sufficiency of the evidence, we shall give a brief summary of the evidence as shown by the record.

Defendant corporation performed some paving work and installed gutters and curbs on Wright Street in a subdivision known as Vienna Woods, in Sacramento County, during 1950, under contract with the county, completing the work in June or July, except that it went back twice thereafter to clean up loose rocks, gravel, and sand. This latter procedure was by hand-sweeping the loose materials into the gutters into piles, and then later shoveling them into trucks for removal.

On the 30th of August, 1950, plaintiff operated his motorcycle on said Wright Street to his residence at number 2641, and turned to proceed into his driveway. As the cycle passed over the gutter, it slipped in an accumulation of rock and gravel therein and fell upon plaintiff's right leg, fracturing same.

Plaintiff and his several witnesses testified that in the morning of the day of the accident, there was loose gravel and rock scattered around the street, but that, when plaintiff returned, most of this material had been accumulated into a layer covering the gutter at a depth of "about an inch and a half, two inches or three inches." One witness, plaintiff's wife, testified she saw a street sweeper go by on the street during the day, but she was not able to say whose sweeper it was or who was operating it or to otherwise identify it.

At the time plaintiff's motorcycle passed over the gravel in the gutter he had completed his turn and was headed approximately straight and was going at a slow speed, approximately 5 to 7 miles per hour, and it was then that the cycle slipped and fell upon his leg.

Plaintiff testified he had known of and had complained of the rocky material in the street in front of his residence for a period of several months, and further testified that before he passed over the gutter prior to the accident he was aware of the gravel in the street but not in the gutter. Plaintiff had been operating motorcycles since 1939 and was familiar with their operation.

Other evidence will be referred to in the course of this opinion.

Appellant contends that there is no substantial evidence to support the finding that it was negligent and thereby caused respondent's injuries. Appellant argues that the case was tried upon the theory that the negligent act complained of was the sweeping of gravel into the gutter on the day the accident occurred, but that (1) there is no evidence to show that this act was done by appellant or anyone acting for it, and (2) assuming for sake of argument that appellant did sweep the gravel into the gutter in the manner testified to, such act did not constitute negligence in any respect or create a dangerous condition.

Appellant asserts that there is no evidence to show that appellant was in anywise connected with the sweeping of gravel into a layer in the gutter in front of plaintiff's driveway on the day in question prior to plaintiff's operating the cycle over same, because the sweeper was not identified and because witness Ahlgren, superintendent of defendant's street contract work here involved, testified without contradiction that defendant finished its work on this street prior to the accident. However, the record shows the following testimony by Frank Ahlgren, appellant's superintendent of the Vienna Woods job, upon direct examination by appellant's counsel:

"Q. Can you tell me when the job was completed, the paving job? A. On Wright Street?

"Q. Yes. A. That was completed in June because we oiled it before the first of July. Just a minute, I will look it up.

"Q. I am not concerned with the exact date, I just want your recollection as to when the work was completed and you think it was June or July, is that right? A. Yes.

"Q. Now, so far as the curbs and gutters and the paving of Wright Street or any work on Wright Street, did your company perform any work on that street later than July, 1950? A. We went back twice and cleaned up loose rocks and dust or sand, whatever it was, while we were waiting for the county to accept our job.

"Q. When was it accepted, do you recall? A. No, I don't recall when they accepted the job."

[2] While it does not clearly appear when the job was accepted by the county, it does appear that loose rocks and sand were left in the street after the paving was completed and that appellant went back twice after July, 1950, to clean up loose rocks and dust and sand. It is a reasonable inference from the record that if the paving job had been accepted by the county prior to the accident that fact would have been brought out in the evidence and relied upon by appellant. And it also is a reasonable inference that if the paving job had not yet been accepted by the county the sweeping that was done on the day of the accident was done by appellant's employees.

Appellant next contends that even if the gravel was in the gutter by reason of its acts, no dangerous condition was created by the sweeping of gravel into the gutter to a depth of from 1½ to 3 inches.

Appellant argues that to hold it liable would be to make local governmental units and private construction companies using commonly accepted methods of construction or maintaining commonly used types of highways insurers of any persons who might be injured upon roads in this state which are gravel surfaced or have gravel shoulders or which in the process of construction have loose material upon the surface, provided such persons were injured in slipping or sliding accidents caused by the loose materials. However, it must be borne in mind that appellant could have posted warning signs, could have sooner removed this rock, and could have seen that the rock when swept into piles in the gutter did not block driveways, and that the surface of the portion of the street in question at the time of plaintiff's injuries was not the normal surface. There was testimony that a month or two prior to the accident the street had been paved by oiling, graveling, and sweeping, but the debris was allowed to remain. Furthermore, this excess sand and gravel was not just the normal surface layer which did not imbed itself in the oil layer underneath, but was such excess accumulated in a relatively thick layer in the concrete gutter where it would be expected to give a loose and unstable footing.

[3] The trial judge stated in his memorandum opinion: "I am satisfied that the defendant was negligent in allowing the gravel to be in the driveway as described in the evidence and that the plaintiff was not guilty of any contributory negligence." We believe that the issue of negligence was one of fact for the trier of facts to determine and that we cannot say as a matter of law that the causing of the gravel to be placed or to remain in the gutter during the course of street construction was not negligence and did not create any danger to users of the street. We are satisfied that the record discloses facts from which the court could properly draw the inference of negligence on the part of appellant.

Appellant's final contention is that the evidence established as a matter of law that the accident was caused by the contributory negligence of plaintiff. In support of this contention appellant states: (1) that plaintiff knew of the loose rock and gravel upon the street for a number of months; (2) that plaintiff further knew on the day of the accident of the accumulation of gravel in the gutter in front of his driveway as he approached, but he proceeded across it on the motorcycle; (3) that plaintiff had been driving motorcycles since 1939 and had owned three of them in that period and was familiar with their operation; and (4) that plaintiff went onto the gravel layer while traveling in a straight line and going at a slow rate of speed, five to seven miles per hour.

There appears to be no dispute as to the correctness of their statements except that respondent testified that he was aware of the gravel in the street but that "When I returned at night the whole collection of rocks and gravel was in the gutter rather than scattered across the street, approximately an inch and a half, two, maybe three inches deep."

[4, 5] The rule as to the defense of contributory negligence is well stated in Anthony v. Hobbie, 25 Cal.2d 814, at page 818, 155 P.2d 826, 829, as follows:

"* * * The burden of proving contributory negligence is upon the defendant. 19 Cal.Jur. 697-699. True, contributory negligence may be found by the trier of fact from the plaintiffs' own evidence. But cases in which it can be said that the negligence of plaintiff contributes proximately to the accident as a matter of law are rare. The rule has been stated in various ways in a legion of cases, that contributory negligence is not established as a matter of law unless the only reasonable hypothesis is that such negligence exists; that reasonable or sensible men could have drawn that conclusion and none other; that where there are different inferences that may be drawn, one for and one against, the one against will be followed; and that before it can be held as a matter of law that contributory negligence exists, the evidence must point unerringly to that conclusion. [Citing numerous cases.]"

[6] Bearing in mind this familiar rule, we do not believe that under the facts shown by the record in the instant case it can be held as a matter of law that the trial court erred in concluding, as he did conclude, that the respondent was not guilty of contributory negligence. We are satisfied that the question of contributory negligence was one of fact for the trial court to determine and that there is substantial evidence in the record from which the trier of the facts could conclude that plaintiff used due care even though an accident did happen and even though plaintiff did approach and enter into a situation fraught with some peril.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 8531.

District Court of Appeal. Third District.
California.

June 28, 1955.

Hearing Denied Aug. 17, 1955.

Action arising out of collision between plaintiff's automobile, which was about to make left turn at intersection, first defendant's following automobile and second defendant's oncoming truck. The Superior Court, San Joaquin County, Thomas B. Quinn, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff against first defendant but for second defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held, inter alia, that where evidence presented jury question as to whether plaintiff, who had signaled for left turn, had right of way over second defendant, failure to give requested instruction on statute relating to duties of drivers faced with an automobile signaling for a turn was error.

Judgment reversed.

f. Automobiles ⇐245(14)

In action arising out of collision in intersection between plaintiff's west-bound automobile, first defendant's west-bound automobile, which was following plaintiff's automobile, and second defendant's east-bound truck, question whether position of second defendant's truck on highway was such that, if he had proceeded lawfully into intersection, plaintiff's left-turn maneuver would have interfered with him, was for jury.

2. Automobiles ⇐246(47)

In action for injury sustained in accident which occurred when plaintiff's west-bound automobile, which was about to make left turn at intersection, was struck first by first defendant's following automobile and then by second defendant's east-bound truck, wherein evidence presented jury question as to whether plaintiff, who had signaled for left turn, had right of way over second defendant, failure to give requested instruction on statute relating to duties of drivers faced with an automobile signaling for a turn was error. Vehicle Code, § 551(a, b).

3. Automobiles ⇐246(24)

In action arising out of collision between plaintiff's automobile, which was about to make left turn at intersection, first defendant's following automobile, and second defendant's oncoming truck, failure to give requested instruction to effect that when an automobile has actually entered an intersection before another approaches it, and such other does not constitute an immediate hazard, driver of first automobile has right to assume that he will be given right of way, was error.

4. Negligence ⇐62(3)

An original wrongful act may be so continuous that action of third person precipitating disaster will in law be regarded as not independent, but as joining with original act to produce accident.

5. Automobiles ⇐246(57)

In action arising out of collision between plaintiff's automobile, which was about to make left turn in intersection, first defendant's following automobile, and second defendant's oncoming truck, wherein issue was presented whether second defendant's alleged negligence in failing to yield right of way had been cause of original collision between plaintiff and first defendant, requested instruction that an original wrongful act may be so continuous that action of third person precipitating disaster will be regarded as not independent, but as joining with original act to produce accident, should have been given.

Automobiles 246(9)

In action arising out of collision between plaintiff's automobile, which was about to make left turn in intersection, first defendant's following automobile and second defendant's oncoming truck, failure to give requested instructions on duty of driver faced with an automobile signaling a turn, on right of way in respect to an automobile which has entered intersection, and on potential continuity of an original wrongful act, was error prejudicial to plaintiff in respect to action against second defendant.

Miller, Kroloff & Brown, by Richard Belcher, Stockton, for defendants-respondents.

Honey & Mayall, by John J. Hurley, Stockton, for defendant Ross.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This action was brought by plaintiff, appellant here, against respondents, Robertson Truck-A-Ways, Inc., a corporation, and its employee driver, Yates; and against James A. Ross. The action arose out of a three-car collision at an intersection of two highways. The case was tried to a jury which returned a verdict of $40,000 against Ross and a verdict exonerating Robertson Truck-A-Ways, Inc., and Yates. From the judgment entered in favor of Robertson Truck-A-Ways, Inc., and Yates, plaintiff has appealed. Ross did not appeal.

Appellant contends the trial court erred in refusing to give certain instructions which she requested. Following is a statement of facts sufficient for the resolution of the issues posed by these contentions: Highway 50 intersects Van Sosten Road in San Joaquin County; plaintiff was driving west on Highway 50, intending to turn left at its intersection with Van Sosten Road; at the same time Yates was driving his employer's truck east on Highway 50, intending to cross the intersection and proceed east; Ross was driving on Highway 50 behind appellant's car, intending to cross the intersection and proceed west; as appellant approached the intersection she signaled her intention to turn left. Both Yates and Ross saw the signal. There is a dispute in the testimony as to how fast the cars were going, to what speeds they slowed down and as to their relative distances from the intersection when appellant gave her signal. There was testimony from which the jury could have concluded that when plaintiff gave her signal and drove into the intersection Yates was so far back that she had the right of way and that Yates should have yielded it to her. Her testimony was generally to that effect and she said further that when she had entered the intersection she observed that Yates was still driving toward it without appreciably lessening his speed; that she started her turn and was in position to cross the center line into the south lane when, because Yates was still approaching, she believed he would not stop and she stopped to avoid a collision. She was stationary only a second or so, as she said, when her car was struck by that driven by Ross and shoved into the southbound lane where it was hit by the truck driven by Yates.

Appellant asked of the trial court that it instruct the jury as to the statutory standards governing those involved when a car turns left at an intersection as set forth in Section 551 of the Vehicle Code. That section reads as follows:

"(a) The driver of a vehicle within an intersection intending to turn to the left shall yield the right of way to any vehicle approaching from the opposite direction which is within the intersection or so close thereto as to constitute an immediate hazard.

"(b) Said driver turning left having so yielded and having given a signal when and as required by this code may make such left turn and the drivers of all other vehicles approaching the intersection from said opposite direction shall yield the right of way to the driver making the left turn."

[1, 2] This instruction was refused and the court gave instead an instruction proposed by respondents and which instruction contained subdivision (a) of said Section 551, but omitted subdivision (b). The refusal to give the instruction requested by appellant was error. Chapter 9 of the Vehicle Code contains the provisions as to the right of way. Section 550 sets up the statutory standard of care imposed upon vehicles approaching or entering an intersection. Section 551 sets up the statutory standards governing vehicles involved when a vehicle turns left at an intersection. The remaining four sections govern vehicles entering a through highway, vehicles entering a highway from a private road, the operation of vehicles and street cars on approach of emergency vehicles and the duties of drivers of vehicles and equestrians at equestrian crossings. Section 550, after requiring a driver of a vehicle approaching an intersection to yield the right of way to a vehicle which has entered the intersection from a different highway, and, after requiring that when two vehicles enter an intersection from different highways at the same time the driver of the vehicle on the left shall yield, specifically provides in subdivision (c) thereof that section 550 shall not apply to vehicles approaching each other from opposite directions when the driver of one of such vehicles is intending to or is making a left turn. It declares that "such movements shall be governed by section 551." Section 551, therefore, clearly is the section which sets up the statutory standards of care which were applicable to appellant, to Yates and to Ross. And under the situation presented by the evidence here the whole of the statutory standard should have been given to the jury. The evidence was somewhat in conflict, as we have said, as to the relative positions of the vehicles of Yates and appellant, but there is no dispute that she signaled her intention to turn and that her signal was observed and understood by Yates and Ross. From the evidence the jury could have concluded that when she, pursuing her intention to turn left, had entered the intersection, Yates was so close in his opposite approach thereto that his vehicle constituted an immediate hazard if she should make the turn and that, therefore, it was her duty to yield to Yates. Also there was ample evidence from which the jury could conclude that at that moment of time Yates was so far back from the intersection that his vehicle did not constitute such an immediate hazard and that, therefore, it was the duty of Yates to yield to appellant. Subdivision (a) of the section was, of course, applicable. But subdivision (a) of Section 551 expressly states the duty of the driver of a vehicle intending to turn and says nothing about the duties of drivers approaching the intersection from the opposite direction. That subject is covered fully by subdivision (b). Subdivision (b) says in effect that if a driver intending to make or making a left turn has yielded the right of way to vehicles, if any there be, which were so close to the intersection as to constitute an immediate hazard to such turning such driver may then proceed to make the turn and cross into the opposite lane without yielding to other vehicles, even though during the interval occupied by the yielding, and which may have approached the intersection so closely that if they continue and the turning maneuver is executed there is danger of a collision. But the subdivision does more than that. It says further, in effect, that a driver, not under necessity of yielding because there is no immediate hazard, may make the left turn, and that the drivers of all other vehicles approaching the intersection from the opposite direction must yield the right of way to the driver making the turn. Instructing on subdivision (b), even in the language of the statute, would have told the jury that if Yates was far enough back when appellant began her turn so that she could have proceeded to make it in safety he was required to yield the right of way to her. Whether or not the position of Yates on the highway was such that if he proceeded lawfully into the intersection the appellant's turning maneuver would have interfered with him was in this case clearly a question of fact for the jury to determine. Under the evidence they could have determined it either way. They were given the statutory standard as to appellant's duty, but they were not given the statutory standard applicable to Yates and prescribing his duty if Yates was far enough back so that his vehicle did not constitute an immediate hazard to appellant's intended maneuver.

Appellant requested and the court refused to give the following instruction:

"Where a car has actually entered an intersection before the other approaches it, and when the other car does not constitute an immediate hazard, the driver of the first car has the right to assume that he will be given the right of way and be permitted to pass through the intersection without danger of collision. He has the right to assume, until the contrary appears, that the driver of the other car will obey the law, slow down, and yield the right of way, if slowing down be necessary to prevent a collision."

[3] This instruction should have been given. It has frequently received the approval of appellate courts. Morehead v. Roehm, 118 Cal.App. 312, 316, 4 P.2d 995; Cowan v. Market Street Railway, 8 Cal.App. 2d 642, 647, 47 P.2d 752; Page v. Mazzei, 213 Cal. 644, 3 P.2d 11. It would have accomplished two legitimate purposes. It would have supplied the lack created by the court's failing to instruct on subdivision (b) of Section 551 of the Vehicle Code. But it would have done more. Bearing in mind that the jury from the evidence could have determined that appellant had the right of way over Yates, then appellant, rightfully assuming that Yates would yield, would have signaled only her intention to turn and might well have had no opportunity to signal a stop and thus avoid a collision with Ross, since the failure of Yates to yield might well have created a situation compelling her to make an emergency stop without opportunity to signal. Appellant's testimony is generally to the effect that such was the factual situation. These same considerations were material in the trial of the cause as bearing on the proximate cause of the accident, for Ross, facing the situation when appellant signaled a turn, might have been justified in concluding that

Yates would yield, appellant would continue her turning maneuver, and his rate of slow-down need only be such as to permit her, so continuing, to leave the lane on which Ross was traveling and not such as to accommodate a stopping of her vehicle in that lane.

Appellant requested and the court refused the following instruction:

"You are hereby instructed that it is well established law that an original wrongful act may be so continuous that the action of a third person precipitating the disaster will in law be regarded as not independent, but as joining with the original act to produce the accident."

[4, 5] This instruction stated a well-settled rule of negligence law and in this case should have been given, for it was applicable to the issue of proximate cause for the reason we have just hereinabove stated. It would have guided the jury in determining whether or not Yates' conduct was a proximate cause of the accident if from the facts the jury should first have determined that Yates ought to have yielded the right of way to appellant.

[6] Appellant advances other contentions, but we think the refusal of the court to give the foregoing instructions was prejudicial error necessitating a reversal of the judgment in favor of Robertson Truck-A-Ways, Inc., and Yates.

Appellant, taking the position that Yates' actionable negligence was made out as a matter of law, asks us to reverse the judgment given and to direct the entry of judgment for the amount of damages which the jury awarded in its verdict against Ross. We think it apparent from what has been said that this cannot be done. The question of Yates' actionable negligence was for the jury to determine, both on the issue of negligent conduct and on the issue of proximate cause.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

Civ. 16496.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

June 20, 1955.

As Corrected on Denial of Rehearing

July 20, 1955.

Hearing Granted Aug. 17, 1955.*

Action by the State Compensation Insurance Fund and seven domestic insurance companies against the State Insurance Commissioner for declaratory relief, injunction and mandamus to prevent an order of the Commissioner, changing the State Compensation Insurance Fund premium ratings system from becoming effective. From a judgment of the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, William T. Sweigert, J., sustaining the validity of the order, plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that the Commissioner had power to issue the order, that there was no irregularity or abuse of discretion in procedure of its issuance, and that it did not violate constitutional and statutory policies respecting Workmen's Compensation system and State Compensation Insurance Fund.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Workmen's Compensation §1063

The Insurance Code sections, requiring State Insurance Commissioner to approve or issue, as adequate for all admitted workmen's compensation insurers, a uniform classification of risk and premium rates, did not restrict Commissioner to mere grouping of hazards in each with corresponding rate for each such classification as rate-making involves consideration of losses and expense, as well as particular hazards of various occupations, especially as rate, under statute, must be adequate. Insurance Code, §§ 11732, 11734.

2. Workmen's Compensation §1063

The statute respecting supervision of State Workmen's Compensation Insurance premium rates does not expressly or impliedly restrict Insurance Commissioner to consideration and reflection of expense factor in such rates by means of flat percentage loading as he has always done in past. Insurance Code, §§ 11730-11742.

3. Workmen's Compensation §1063

The State Insurance Commissioner's modification of his previous flat percentage expense loading system in computing minimum workmen's compensation insurance premium rates, regardless of size of risks, by providing in premium discount plan, promulgated by him, for graduated discounts from premiums produced by manual rates, was not invalid as fixing a premium, rather than premium rate; discount from manual rate being in effect a modifying factor in rate-making process. Insurance Code, §§ 11730-11742.

4. Workmen's Compensation §1063

The statute authorizing Insurance Commissioner to approve or issue a system of workmen's compensation insurance premiums "merit rating," defined as including schedule rating and experience rating, wherein particular insured's experience is used as factor in raising or lowering his rate, does not limit Commissioner to use of insured's past experience and preclude use of current experience during policy year, as provided in Retrospective Rating Plan promulgated by him, so that such plan, applying principle of expense gradation by size of risk as part of merit rating plan, is a form of experience rating within Commissioner's power to issue. Insurance Code, §§ 11730, 11732, 11734.

* Opinion vacated 294 P.2d 440.

5. Workmen's Compensation ⌚1063

The statute requiring Insurance Commissioner to approve or issue "classification of risks and premium rates" relating to workmen's compensation insurance did not freeze into statute insurers' previous method of classifying such risks and rates through risk groupings by occupations, businesses and industries according to degree of hazard, with corresponding rate for each classification, in view of express statutory provision that Commissioner may change any such classification or system and administrative officer's power to make changes reasonably necessary to effectuate purpose of statute governing him. Insurance Code, §§ 11732, 11734.

6. Statutes ⌚234½

Generally, a statute expressed in general terms and words of present or future tense will be applied, not only to situations existing and known at time of its enactment, but also prospectively to things and conditions coming into existence thereafter.

7. Statutes ⌚219

Interpretation of a statute by officer administering it as a specialist is entitled to great weight, though not determinative.

8. Workmen's Compensation ⌚1063

The Insurance Code sections, authorizing Insurance Commissioner to approve or issue classifications of workmen's compensation insurance risks and premium rates and a system of merit rating, did not limit Commissioner to consideration only of expense reflected in premiums paid in State as expense factor in computing premium discounts, so that his ruling, contemplating ratings based on premiums paid by state employers in other states under Retrospective Rating Plan for other types of liability insurance, as well as workmen's compensation, in other plans for workmen's compensation insurance only, was not invalid for want of power in Commissioner to authorize such "interstate rating". Insurance Code, §§ 11732-11734.

9. Workmen's Compensation ⌚1063

The State Insurance Commissioner's ruling, modifying existing minimum workmen's compensation insurance premium rates by putting in effect retrospective and premium discount rating plans, did not violate Insurance Code sections prohibiting rebate of premium payable on insurance contract or not specified in policy, nor section providing that refund because of participating provision in compensation policy may only be made from surplus as such rating plans are parts of each policy and provide for discounts, which are not rebates or refunds but method of computing rates, and word "participating" refers to right to share in earnings, not to price paid for insurance. Insurance Code, §§ 750, 751, 11738.

10. Workmen's Compensation ⌚1063

The State Insurance Commissioner's consideration of exhibit containing arithmetical calculations increasing excess loss premium factor in retrospective workmen's compensation insurance premium rating plans, promulgated by Commissioner, to reflect information obtained after hearing before him from other files and records in his office, without presence of insurance companies objecting to such plans, did not constitute an irregularity, invalidating Commissioner's ruling putting plans in effect, as denying such companies hearing contemplated by statute nor prejudice them. Insurance Code, §§ 11732, 11734.

11. Workmen's Compensation ⌚1063

The State Insurance Commissioner's delegation to Inspection Rating Bureau, licensed by State, of functions of revising and constructing tabular workmen's compensation insurance premium rating plans, was proper, in view of such Bureau's functions and relationship to Commissioner, as recognized by Insurance Code, especially as such rating values must be ultimately embodied in a policy or endorsement approved by Commissioner. Insurance Code, §§ 11658, 11750.1-11758.

12. Workmen's Compensation ⌚1063

The State Insurance Commissioner's authorization of Inspection Rating Bureau, licensed by State, to accept verification of certain data from workmen's compensation premium rating organizations in other states or, in lieu thereof, from individual insurance carriers, in conformity with Commissioner's long and necessary practice in similar and related matters, did not constitute improper delegation of Commissioner's statutory rate-making powers. Insurance Code, §§ 731, 11732, 11734, 12921.5.

because of possibility of differing interpretations thereof. Insurance Code, §§ 11732, 11734.

13. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1063

Workmen's compensation insurance premium discount and retrospective premium rating plans, promulgated by Insurance Commissioner, were regulations fixing and establishing insurance premium rates within statutory exception of regulations establishing or fixing rates, prices or tariffs from statutory requirement that certain administrative regulations be filed with Secretary of State. Government Code, §§ 11371(b), 11380; Insurance Code, §§ 11732, 11734.

14. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1063

The State Insurance Commissioner's fixing of effective date of his ruling, establishing elective workmen's compensation insurance premium discount and retrospective premium rating plans, at approximately eleven days after promulgation of ruling, was not abuse of Commissioner's discretion as violating statute providing that certain administrative regulation shall be filed with Secretary of State and become effective 30 days after such filing, in view of Insurance Code section providing that effective dates of rates issued by Commissioner shall be dates fixed by him. Government Code, §§ 11380, 11422; Insurance Code, §§ 11732, 11734, 11736.

15. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1063

The State Insurance Commissioner's ruling, modifying existing minimum workmen's compensation insurance premium rates by establishing premium discount and retrospective rating plans, was sufficiently clear and intelligible, though subject-matter was technical and complicated; material in question being designed for guidance of insurance specialists, not laymen. Insurance Code, §§ 11732, 11734.

16. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1063

The State Insurance Commissioner's orders establishing workmen's compensation insurance premium rate plans should be upheld by court, if susceptible of reasonable interpretation and use in insurance industry, and should not be invalidated merely because their construction may be difficult or

The State Insurance Commissioner's ruling, establishing premium discount and retrospective workmen's compensation insurance rating plans, was not invalid as incomplete when issued because of Commissioner's directions therein to Inspection Rating Bureau for revision of certain tabular plans and construction of various such plans as related to retrospective rating plan without need of further specific approval by Commissioner, as Bureau's future revision of such plans would not make ruling any less complete as it stood when issued. Insurance Code, §§ 11732, 11734.

18. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1063

The statute authorizing State Insurance Commissioner to prescribe fair and equitable minimum workmen's compensation insurance premium rates, based on cost of furnishing insurance, did not prohibit him from recognizing existing gradations of expense by size of risk, without allowing excessive premiums to enable certain insurers to pay high dividends, by ruling establishing elective premium discount and retrospective rating plans. Insurance Code, §§ 11732, 11734.

19. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1063

The State Insurance Commissioner had power to issue ruling modifying existing minimum workmen's compensation insurance premium rates by establishing elective premium discount and retrospective rating plans. Insurance Code, §§ 11732, 11734.

20. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1063

The State Insurance Commissioner has no power to adopt workmen's compensation premium rating system which would violate constitutional and legislative policy, expressed in statute creating State Compensation Insurance Fund, that such fund be fairly competitive with other insurers and neither more nor less than self-supporting. Insurance Code, §§ 11732, 11734, 11775; West's Ann.Const. art. 20, § 21.

The State Insurance Commissioner's ruling, modifying existing minimum workmen's compensation insurance premium rates by establishing elective premium discount and retrospective rating plans, is not invalid as violating constitutional and legislative policy, expressed in Insurance Code, that State Compensation Insurance Fund shall be fairly competitive with other insurers and be neither more nor less than self-supporting, or preventing such Fund from adequately performing its functions. Insurance Code, §§ 11732, 11734, 11775; West's Ann.Const. art. 20, § 21.

22. Workmen's Compensation — 1063

The fact that act setting up rating mechanism for liability insurance expressly authorized many features of premium discount and retrospective workmen's compensation insurance rating plans established by ruling of State Insurance Commissioner, but expressly excluded workmen's compensation insurance from provisions of act, did not show legislative intent that such features could not be used by Commissioner in workmen's compensation insurance rating system, but merely meant that Legislature was continuing historic procedure of completely separating control and operation of workmen's compensation insurance from that of all other types of insurance. Insurance Code, §§ 1850 et seq., 11732, 11734.

BRAY, Justice.

The State Compensation Insurance Fund and the above-named six California insurance companies, plaintiffs, filed a superior court action against the California Insurance Commissioner for declaratory relief, injunction and mandamus, to prevent a certain order changing the present system of rating workmen's compensation insurance premiums from becoming effective. Another California insurance company, Industrial Indemnity Company, intervened as plaintiff. From a judgment sustaining the validity of the order all plaintiffs appeal.

Questions Presented.¹

1. Did the Insurance Commissioner have the power to promulgate and adopt Ruling 67 changing the method of rating premiums for workmen's compensation insurance?

2. Did he violate procedural requirements?

Preliminary Statement.

In 1950 seven of the amici curiae doing about 5 per cent of the compensation insurance business in this state organized into "the California Workmen's Compensation Committee." They filed a proposal with the Commissioner requesting approval of two rating plans, changing the present system for classifying risks and premium rates, and the present system of merit rating.² After

2. The rating system now in use is called the "Flat percentage expense loading system." In general, this system has been in effect from the inception of compulsory workmen's compensation in 1913, to date. Simply stated, the rates are based upon the risk or hazard within particular occupation groups in California, only (i. e., carpenters, mechanics, etc.). The same premium rate is imposed upon all risks within the same occupation groups. The same rates are public hearings the Commissioner approved these plans and ordered the Administrative Code amended by adoption of Ruling 67.

Ruling 67.

Reduced to its bare rudiments, Ruling 67 provides for two new rating systems: (1) the "Retrospective" plans, and (2) a "Premium Discount Plan." Within the general retrospective scheme there are three separate plans, "D", "A", and "B". Thus, we have four plans to consider.

1. The Retrospective Plans.

All three retrospective plans have this in common: Final determination of premium cost is delayed, being computed retrospectively after the expiration of the insurance and on the basis of paid and actual loss experience during the insurance period. Each insured's premium is determined on an individual basis, without reference to other employers or to particular fields or occupations. (However, in each retrospective plan, a sort of "tentative" premium is paid initially, and then adjusted at the end of the insurance period to the actual premium.)

Plan D: Plan D provides for retrospective determination of premium for employers who produce $5,000 or more in annual premium from operations in all states. Determination may be on an annual or three year basis. The unique feature of Plan D is that the employer may combine premiums from other lines of liability insurance with his workmen's compensation premium in order to become eligible for this plan. — This multiline provision is not in either Plan A or B.) In brief, Plan D may be chosen if annual premium is over $5,000, charged to the large insured as to the small insured. For example, even though X Corporation has 1,000 carpenters and small contractor Doaks has only three, their respective cost per carpenter would remain substantially the same. In many cases large surpluses result, due to the smaller expense of processing the premium of the large insured. Thus, today nearly 90 per cent of workmen's compensation business in California is written by "participating" companies; that is, carriers who, at their own discretion, make periodic refunds to their insured.

based on premiums from all states, including other types of liability insurance. (Test: $5,000 total, multistate, multiline.)

Plan A: Plan A provides for retrospective determination of premium for employers who produce $1,000 or more in workmen's compensation premium in all states. (Workmen's compensation only; not a multiline plan.) The standard (or tentative) premium in Plan A is always the maximum premium, and the minimum premium is higher than in Plan B. (Test: $1,000 total, multistate, workmen's compensation only.)

Plan B: Plan B provides for retrospective determination of premium for employers who produce $1,000 or more in workmen's compensation premium in all states. (Workmen's compensation only; not a multiline plan.) In this plan, the standard (tentative) premium is lower than the maximum, and the minimum premium is lower, correspondingly, than the minimum premium in Plan A. These maximum-minimum levels are the chief differences between Plans A and B. (Test: $1,000 total, multistate, workmen's compensation only.)

How retrospective plans work: Retrospective rating is defined in Appendix B to Ruling 67 as "a plan or method which permits adjustment of the final premium for a Risk on the basis of its own loss experience subject to Maximum and Minimum limits." In tabular plans A and B, the maximum and minimum premiums are fixed in relation to the standard (tentative) premium, which in Plan A is the maximum and in Plan B is much lower. In Plan D, the selection of maximum and minimum limits is left (within limits) to agreement between the buyer and seller. Within the limits of the maximum and minimum, Ruling 67 provides formulae reflecting loss experience and costs used in determining the final cost of the insurance. The appropriate formula is applied at the end of the insurance period, and the result is an adjustment of the standard premium to reflect the actual loss and cost experience during the insurance period. This adjustment results in the retrospective rate.

All plaintiffs are participating companies (except the Fund, which is nonprofit, and is legally required to make refunds). The original plaintiffs transact about 50 per cent of the business in this state, while the plaintiff in intervention is the largest single compensation carrier in the state, accounting for an additional 18 per cent of the business.

The amici curiae are 47 out-of-state carriers, licensed to do business in California. Apparently, 42 are nonparticipating companies and five are participating carriers.

2. Premium Discount Plan: This plan provides for graduated expense loading determined through a scale of discounts graduated according to the annual amount of the employer's premium. To qualify for this plan, the employer must have premiums from workmen's compensation in excess of $1,000. This total may include premiums paid in all states to one insurer, but may not include other lines of liability insurance. (Multistate, but not multiline.) Then, the discount is applied to the California portion of the premium. This discount is received no matter how small the California portion may be; that is, the California portion need not be over $1,000. Furthermore, the discount is granted irrespective of loss experience.

"The California portion of the total workmen's compensation standard premium of the policy or group of policies combined in accordance with this Rule

3. Important here are the following:

§ 11730: "The term 'merit rating,' as used in this article, includes 'schedule rating,' in which the rate is varied according to physical conditions, and also includes 'experience rating,' in which the experience of the particular insured is used as a factor in raising or lowering his rate."

§ 11732: "The commissioner shall approve or issue, as adequate for all admitted workmen's compensation insurers, a classification of risks and premium rates relating to workmen's compensation insurance. He may also approve or issue a system of merit rating. Such classification and system shall be uniform as to all insurers affected."

§ 11734: "The commissioner may change any such classification or system previously approved or issued if he first shall be subject to the following discounts:

Total Workmen's Compensation Standard Premium	Discounts Applicable To California Portion
First $1,000	None
Next 4,000	7.1%
Next 95,000	12.2%
Over 100,000	13.7%

The foregoing premium discounts shall not be applicable to any standard premium subject to retrospective rating."

In Stats.1913, chap. 176, a compulsory workmen's compensation system and the State Compensation Insurance Fund were established by the Legislature, without any express constitutional authority therefor. To give legality to an already accomplished fact, article XX, section 21, California Constitution, authorizing the Legislature to "create, and enforce a complete system of workmen's compensation," was adopted in 1918. Pursuant thereto, we now have Insurance Code sections 11730 to 11742 covering "State Rate Supervision." ³

1. Power.

The trial judge, Hon. William T. Sweigert, wrote an excellent opinion considering in detail most of the points raised on appeal. We adopt it in part.

"By Ruling 67, the Commissioner seeks to modify existing minimum workmen's com-holds a hearing to determine the effect of the proposed change upon the adequacy or inadequacy of rates. Such changes shall also be uniform as to all insurers affected."

§ 11737: "If the commissioner approves or issues such a system of merit rating, insurers may apply it to any risks subject thereto, but shall show basis rates no less than the rates under the classification approved or issued by the commissioner. Any reductions from the basis rates on account of the application of such system of merit rating shall be clearly set forth in the insurance contracts or policies or indorsements attached thereto."

Section 11738 gives statutory backing to the participating companies, permitting refunds "from surplus accumulated from premiums * * *."

pensation premium rates by putting into effect two new rating plans, one of them called the 'Premium Discount Plan' and the other, the 'Retrospective Rating Plan.'

"The purpose of both rating plans, as stated by the Commissioner in Ruling 67, is to introduce into the California workmen's compensation insurance minimum rate structure the principle of 'expense graduation by size of risk' as a means of reflecting in premium rates his finding that an insurance company's expense involved in handling individual risks represents a smaller percentage of the premium in the case of larger risks than in the case of smaller risks.

"Pointing out that the present system, under which minimum premium rates are loaded by the Commissioner for expense on a flat percentage basis without reference to possible variation of expense by size of risk, involves a redundancy of the expense item in the case of the larger risks, the Commissioner has concluded that the proposed modifications of the rating structure will maintain adequate minimum rates and at the same time reduce existing expense redundancy, and, further, that their effect will be to promote competition between all types of workmen's compensation insurance carriers and to reduce rates charged to the public.

"The two plans, although similar in purpose, seek to accomplish the purpose in different ways and may be considered separately.

"In the case of the Premium Discount Plan, the Commissioner seeks to accomplish the purpose by providing that all workmen's compensation policies involving premiums in excess of $1,000, computed at the regular manual rates, shall be subject to a graduated discount in favor of the insured upon the California portion of the premium.

"Plaintiffs contend that this Premium Discount Plan exceeds the powers granted to the Commissioner by the California Workmen's Compensation Insurance Minimum Rating Law.

[1] "Insurance Code Sections 11732 and 11734 provide that the Commissioner shall approve or issue as adequate for all admitted insurers a classification of risks and premium rates, uniform as to all insurers affected. In the opinion of the Court, the Commissioner is not restricted by these sections (as contended by plaintiffs), to a mere grouping of hazard in each with a corresponding rate for each such classification. Rate-making involves a consideration, not only of the particular hazards of various occupations, but also of losses (pure premium) and of expense (expense loading). This is especially true where, as under our statute, the rate must be adequate. Expense is, therefore, not only a relevant, but an essential factor to be considered.

[2] "It is true that the Commissioner in the past has always reflected this expense factor in the rate by means of a flat percentage loading. But, there is nothing in the statute which, expressly or impliedly, restricts him to that mode of considering and reflecting the expense factor.

[3] "If, as the Commissioner concluded in making up the Premium Discount Plan, a flat percentage expense loading produces redundancy in rates beyond the requirements of adequacy, he may make such modification of the flat percentage loading as to him seems necessary to correct the redundancy.

"In the Premium Discount Plan, the Commissioner has seen fit to do this by the device of providing for a graduated discount from the premium produced by the manual rate. Plaintiffs' argument to the effect that in so doing the Commissioner fixes a premium, rather than a premium rate, is based upon form rather than substance.

"The discount from the Manual rate becomes in effect a modifying factor in the rate-making process. * * *

[4] "Turning now to the Retrospective Rating Plan, we see that this plan involves different features. Although it applies the principle of expense graduation by size of risk, it does so as part of a plan of merit rating issued under the merit rating provisions of the Insurance Code.

"Sections 11732 and 11734 provide that the Commissioner may approve or issue a system of merit rating. Insurance Code Section 11730 defines merit rating as including schedule rating 'in which the rate is varied according to physical conditions,' and experience rating 'in which the experience of the particular insured is used as a factor in raising or lowering his rate.'

"The Retrospective Rating Plan has been issued as a form of experience rating. Plaintiffs contend, however, that it is not experience rating within the meaning of Insurance Code Sec. 11730, because under that section, the experience of the particular insured which may be used as a factor in raising or lowering the rate means, according to plaintiffs' interpretation, the past experience of the insured, and does not permit use of current experience during the policy year as provided in the Retrospective Rating Plan.

"On this point, however, the Court has concluded that the statute, which expressly defines the term 'experience rating' without any such restriction, should not be so narrowly construed and that the Retrospective Rating Plan is, therefore, a form of experience rating within the power of the Commissioner to issue. In this connection it is significant that in 1938, a former Commissioner issued a Retrospective Rating Plan based upon the same principle and still in effect except as modified by the present plan which embodies additional features."

[5] There was testimony to the effect that the uniform interpretation prior to and since 1914 of "classification of risks and premium rates" by persons in the business has been risk groupings by occupation, businesses and industries by degree of hazard with a corresponding rate for each classification. It is then claimed that what the Legislature intended by the use of those words was to freeze that method into the act. We fail to find any such intention in the act. It is obvious that the Legislature had no intention to freeze any particular method of classification because in section 11734 it expressly provided he "may change any such classification or system * * *." See First Industrial Loan Co. of California v. Daugherty, 26 Cal.2d 545, 550, 159 P.2d 921, as to powers of an administrative officer to make changes reasonably necessary to effectuate the purpose of the statute governing him.

[6] " * * * it is a general rule of statutory construction that a statute, expressed in general terms and words of present or future tense, will be applied, not only to situations existing and known at the time of the enactment, but also prospectively to things and conditions that come into existence thereafter. Legislation must be given elastic operation if it is to cope with changing economic and social conditions." (2 Sutherland, Statutory Construction, 3rd ed., § 5102, pp. 509-510.)

[7] Moreover, the evidence showed that over the years of the existence of the Fund, with the knowledge of the insurance trade, the hazard of the particular employment has not been the sole basis of classifying risks and rates, that size limits as to eligibility based on the cost of administering plans, and size of the organization have also been considered. For example, minimum payrolls of packing houses and department stores and others have been considered. In 1946 the Insurance Commissioner approved the principle of graduation of expense by size of risk as applied to premium discount and retrospective rating plans. In 1951 he applied an additional charge on risks earning a premium under a certain amount. This is called "expense constant." While not determinative, the interpretation of a statute by an officer administering it as a specialist is entitled to "great weight." See Whitcomb Hotel, Inc., v. California Emp. Comm., 24 Cal.2d 753, 756, 151 P.2d 233, 155 A.L.R. 405.

Combination of Premiums.

[8] As pointed out before, the plans set up by Ruling 67 contemplate rating of premiums for workmen's compensation based upon premiums paid by the California employers in other states, under Plan D for other types of liability insurance as well as workmen's compensation, in the other plans for the latter type insurance only. It is contended that the commissioner had no power to authorize this "interstate rating." We adopt Judge Sweigert's opinion concerning this subject:

"Under Insurance Code Sections 11732-4, the Commissioner is not limited in his process of reflecting the expense factor to the consideration of only expense as reflected in California premiums. Even under the flat percentage loading system, the Commissioner has always based his findings as to the proper expense loading of a premium upon all available statistical evidence, statewide, nationwide, or both. There is nothing in our statute to prevent similar consideration in working out a premium discount which is merely a modification of the flat percentage loading."

Rebates.

[9] It is contended that Ruling 67 violates Insurance Code sections 750, 11738 and related statutes which prohibit rebates. Sections 750 and 751 prohibit rebate of the premium "payable on an insurance contract" or "not * * * specified * * * in the policy * * *." Here the rating plans, if used, would be specified in each policy and provide for discounts, not rebates. A discount is not a rebate or refund but a method of computing rate. See Associated Indemnity Corp. v. Oil Well Drilling Co., Tex.Civ.App., 258 S.W.2d 523, 532; Id., Tex., 264 S.W.2d 697. Section 11738 provides that "A refund by reason of a participating provision in a compensation policy" may only be made from surplus. "Participating" refers to the right to share in earnings and does not refer to the price paid for insurance. Refunds to participants should only come from surplus, although there are other types of refunds which obviously do not have to come from surplus, thus, refund of unearned premium on cancellation. Premium discount and retrospective rating do not refund anything. They are merely formulae for determining amount of price of insurance ultimately to be paid. The various opinions of the Attorney General and counsel for the Commissioner dealt with attempts, by guaranteeing dividends, to contract for rates lower than the minimum prescribed by the Commissioner. Here the rating plans as applied (including the discounts) constitute the minimum rates.

2. Procedural Questions.

(a) Outside Evidence.

[10] It is contended that exhibit 42 relating to retrospective rating only, and containing arithmetical calculations increasing the excess loss premium factor in the rating plans to reflect certain information obtained after the hearing from other files and records in the commissioner's office, was considered by the Commissioner without the presence of plaintiffs, and that thereby the hearing contemplated by section 11734 was denied.

Concerning this contention we adopt the following portion of Judge Sweigert's opinion:

"The plans included in Ruling 67 are the result of studies that have been made since 1946, at which time a former California Commissioner had rejected similar proposals, not upon the ground of any lack of legal power, but solely for the stated reason that there was insufficient statistical data at the time. (See Ex. EE, p. 56.)

"Since then, studies were made under the sponsorship of the National Association of Insurance Commissioners to accumulate further statistical data relative to the principle of graduation of expense by size of risk. The results of these studies were the subject of the hearings held by the defendant, California Insurance Commissioner, prior to the issuance of the present Ruling 67.

"Among other things there was evidence before the Commissioner to the effect that similar plans were in operation and working satisfactorily in other states. He points out that 35 states have a premium discount plan and 45 states have a retrospective rating plan similar to Plan D herein involved.

"Plaintiffs further contend that Exhibit 42, which consists of some arithmetical calculations made by the Commissioner concerning excess loss premium for purposes of the Retrospective Rating Plan, was not properly a part of the record. However, the nature and purpose of these calculations were such that their consideration by the Commissioner did not constitute an irregularity. Nor could their consideration possibly have prejudiced plaintiffs."

Particularly is this so, because all interested parties were given every opportunity to introduce material for the consideration of the Commissioner and the effect of the material in exhibit 42 was to increase the permissible minimum rates. Plaintiffs being in no way prejudiced by the Commissioner's action, may not complain. See Eastern-Columbia, Inc., v. County of Los Angeles, 61 Cal.App.2d 734, 143 P.2d 992.

(b) Delegation of Authority.

(c) Promulgation of Ruling 67.

(d) Effective date.

(e) Ruling Sufficient, Clear and Complete.

[11] We adopt Judge Sweigert's opinion on these subjects:

"* * * the functions of revising and constructing tabular plans which the Commissioner delegated to the Inspection Rating Bureau (a rating organization licensed by the state) were proper in view of the Bureau's functions and relationship to the Commissioner as recognized by Insurance Code Sections 11750.1-11758, especially where such rating values would have to be ultimately embodied in a policy or endorsement approved by the Commissioner. (Ins. Code Sec. 11658.)

[12] "It is further contended that the Commissioner improperly delegated authority to the Inspection Rating Bureau by authorizing it to accept verification of certain data from rating organizations in other states or, in lieu thereof, from individual insurance carriers. (See Ruling 67, Appendix B. Plan D. Rule D-2.)

"This is in conformance with long and necessary practice in similar and related matters. See also: Ins.Code Sec. 731; Ins. Code Sec. 12921.5) and does not constitute an improper delegation of the Commissioner's statutory powers.

[13] "It is contended that Ruling 67 was never validly promulgated by the Commissioner. Government Code Sec. 11371(b) and 11380, requiring certain administrative regulations to be filed with the Secretary of State, expressly except regulations establishing or fixing rates, prices or tariffs. Both the Premium Discount Plan and the Retrospective Rating Plan are regulations fixing and establishing insurance premium rates within the meaning of this exception. They were promulgated reasonably and in conformity with long established practice in the insurance industry."

[14] It is contended that the Commissioner abused his discretion in making the effective date of Ruling 67 approximately eleven days after promulgation, in view of the fact that the ruling had to be filed with the Secretary of State, Gov.Code § 11380, and section 11422, Government Code, provides that a regulation required to be filed with the Secretary of State becomes effective 30 days after such filing. Section 11736, Insurance Code, states that the effective date of rates issued by the Commissioner shall be the date fixed by him. It is not too important which of these sections control here for the reason that the plans established by Ruling 67 are not compulsory. They are elective and become applicable if the insured and insurer so agree by appropriate provision in the policy contract. No insurer was required to adopt any of these plans on or after either effective date. If an insurer makes no election under Ruling 67, its rates continue on under the existing system.

Continuing with Judge Sweigert's opinion:

[15,16] "Plaintiffs make the further claim that Ruling 67, particularly Appendix B, is not sufficiently clear and intelligible. The Court has concluded that, although the subject matter is admittedly technical and complicated, it is legally sufficient. It must be borne in mind that the material in question is designed, not for laymen, but for the guidance of insurance specialists. Such orders should be upheld if they are susceptible of reasonable interpretation and use in the industry and should not be invalidated by a court merely because their construction may be difficult or because of the possibility of differing interpretations.

[17] "It is further argued that Ruling 67 was incomplete when issued because in it the Commissioner gave certain directions to the California Inspection Rating Bureau for the revision of Tabular Plans A and B and for the construction of various tabular plans, all as related to the Retrospective Rating Plan, without need of further specific approval by him. (See Rule 67, Findings and Conclusions, pp. 8, 9.) However, such future revision of the Commissioner's Tabular Plans A and B would not make Appendix B any less complete as it stood at the time of issuance."

[18] There is substantial evidence to the effect that the use of the flat percentage expense loading has produced rates that are excessive in the larger premium brackets, a portion of which has been returned by way of dividends. The statute requires adequate minimum rates. There is nothing in the statute requiring the freezing into the rate structure particular factors merely because they have been used in the past. The rating law which authorizes the Commissioner within the limits herein discussed in prescribing fair and equitable minimum rates based on the cost to insurers of furnishing the insurance in no wise prohibits him from recognizing the existing gradation of expense by size of risk without allowing excessive premiums to enable certain insurers to pay high dividends.

[19] The Commissioner generally had the power to issue Ruling 67, and we find no irregularity or abuse of discretion in the procedure of its issuance.

This brings us to the questions of whether Ruling 67 violates the constitutional and statutory policies pertaining to the workmen's compensation system and particularly, the State Compensation Insurance Fund.

In 1911 the Legislature enacted the Roseberry Act which was an elective rather than a compulsory compensation act. Stats.1911, chap. 399. Section 21, article XX, California Constitution, adopted the same year, expressing a basic policy concerning workmen's compensation, did not expressly provide for state compensation insurance.⁴

[20] Following receipt of the message and the report mentioned in the footnote, the Legislature passed the Boynton Act, Stats.1913, chap. 176, making workmen's compensation compulsory and creating the State Compensation Insurance Fund. In 1918 the present section 21 of article XX was adopted expressly providing authority for the creation of such fund, which had already been operating since 1913. Section 11775, Insurance Code, provides: "The fund shall, after a reasonable time during which it may establish a business, be fairly competitive with other insurers, and it is the intent of the Legislature that the fund shall ultimately become neither more nor less than self-supporting. For that purpose loss experience and expense shall be ascertained and dividends or credits may be made as provided in this article." In view of this constitutional and legislative policy, the Commissioner would have no power to adopt a rating system which would violate this policy or prevent the fund from adequately performing its functions. Whether Ruling 67 does so, is our next problem.

[21] It is true that the fund may not be able to participate in the interstate and multiline features of the plan because it has no authority to write insurance outside of the state or in other lines. Theoretically, it can join with multiline and multistate companies. However, as a practical matter it will not be able to do so. It must be remembered that during its entire existence

4. In Governor Hiram W. Johnson's First Biennial Message to the Legislature, January 6, 1913, he called attention to "the rapacity of insurance companies" concerning insurance for industrial accidents, and recommended that a state insurance fund be provided. In the First Report of the Industrial Accident Board (created by the Roseberry Act) to Governor Johnson, in recommending that a state compensation fund be provided, it was pointed out that employers were not "electing" the compensation provisions of that act, mainly because of the "adverse rates made against compensation by the liability insurance companies." To make compensation compulsory on all employers and leave them "at the mercy of a combination of insurance companies" whose rates for California were made in New York City, would be an injustice to the employers. Nor, it was felt, would a state monopoly of insurance meet the situation. What was needed was for the state to "invade the sphere of private enterprise only to the extent that is needful in order to obtain justice for its people." It then stated that to be self-supporting a state fund would have to do about 12 per cent of the business, "after which the opportunity of private enterprise to do a prosperous business in that field will be dependent upon its ability to do business more efficiently than the State can do it."

it has not been able to write insurance on an interstate basis, as do many carriers, yet it has never been claimed that the rate structures existing heretofore applying to both the Fund and to intrastate and interstate carriers, were invalid, and during all this period the Legislature has not concerned itself with this difference between the power of the Fund and of interstate companies. The competitive advantage of multistate companies, if any such advantage exists, has not injured the Fund to date. While there has been no experience with the competition of multiline companies, the evidence as to whether such competition would seriously affect the Fund is conflicting. The trial court resolved that conflict.

It is contended that Ruling 67 will result in the Fund getting only the business of policyholders having less than $1,000 of annual premium, the expense ratio of which business is higher than where the premiums are large, and that this small business, combined with the state agency business,⁵ would not be sufficient to permit it to compete with the other carriers. Sixty-eight per cent of all workmen's compensation business in California has been written by the California companies (including the Fund, which writes 24.78 per cent of the business) in competition with companies doing an interstate business. It would appear that the Fund has held its own with both local and multistate companies.

The general expense level recognized by the Commissioner in Ruling 67 was in excess of 40 per cent (36.55 per cent expense loading plus $10 expense constant for small risks). The expense level of the Fund is less than 14 per cent. This leaves the Fund an average margin of 24 per cent with which to meet the competitive effect of a discount plan which permits discounts ranging from 7.1 per cent to 13.7 per cent as to a portion only of business. State Fund dividends have averaged around 25 per cent of premium in recent years and in the case of some risks dividends up to 70 per cent have been paid. At least four states⁶ having

State Funds have approved these rating plans.

The Commissioner determined that the effect of the use of the plans provided by Ruling 67 on "participating" insurance carriers, including the fund, will be, not any injurious interference with their ability to compete for workmen's compensation insurance business, but merely the correction of an accidental competitive advantage enjoyed by them up to this time as a result of the continued use in California of the flat percentage loading formula with its inherent rate redundancy. The trial court, in effect, came to the same conclusion. Whether, as claimed by plaintiffs, the plans will result in loss by the Fund of most of its business where the annual premiums exceed $1,000 and practically all of its business where the annual premiums exceed $5,000, or will not, as claimed by defendant, and in effect as found by the court, is a matter that can be determined definitely only by application of the plans.

[22] The fact that the McBride-Grunsky Act, Stats.1947, chap. 805 Insurance Code, § 1850 et seq., in setting up a rating mechanism for liability insurance expressly authorized many of the features of the plans included in Ruling 67, but expressly excluded workmen's compensation insurance from the provisions of the act, can in no way be construed to mean that the Legislature intended that those features could not be used by the Commissioner in a system of workmen's compensation insurance rating. It merely meant that the Legislature was continuing the historic procedure of completely separating the control and operation of workmen's compensation insurance from that of all other types of insurance.

It apparently is contended that in order to be "fairly competitive with other insurers" the Fund must be in all respects in the same situation as its competitors and that because the Fund, by law, is restricted to California workmen's compensation insurance only, it cannot be in the same situation as multistate and multiline insurers. We have pointed out that historically the Fund has more than held its own with the competition of the multistate insurers, and that that competition from the beginning has been considered not to interfere with the Fund being fairly competitive. For the same reason competition with multiline insurers does not in itself interfere therewith either.

5. About 10 per cent of the Fund's business is from state, municipal and district agencies which are required by law to insure with the Fund.

The judgment is affirmed.

MOORE, Presiding Judge.

The question here presented is whether a board of education is required to advertise for competitive bids before it may contract with an architect for his professional services to prepare plans for the city's school extension program.

By his complaint, appellant sought an injunction to prevent respondent from disbursing public funds as architect's fees for services rendered and to be performed in connection with the proposed Pasadena school extension program. A general demurrer was sustained. After appellant's failure to file a valid pleading following successive attempts, the court entered judgment dismissing the action.

Appellant urges upon this court that his cause is governed by sections 18051 and 18052* of the Education Code which restrict shall let any contracts involving an expenditure of more than five hundred

* Section 18051, Education Code.

"The governing board of any school disquire (1) respondent to advertise for bids from architects and (2) to award any contract to the lowest bidder. Because such procedure was not followed, appellant contends that the judgment should be reversed and that respondent should be enjoined from expending any public funds on a void contract.

[1, 2] The contention here made has long since been denied judicially and legislatively. It has been held that because an architect is an artist, that his work requires taste, skill and technical learning and ability of a rare kind, it would be bad judgment to advertise and get many bids when the lowest bidder might be also the least capable and most inexperienced and his bid absolutely unacceptable and therefore "the employment of a person who is highly and technically skilled in his science or profession is one which may properly be made without competitive bidding." City & County of San Francisco 1044; Miller v. Boyle, 43 Cal.App. 39, 44, 184 P. 421. Because all contracts for the construction of improvements must be subject to competitive bidding, and because such contracts must conform with the procedure prescribed in sections 18051 and 18052, supra, it does not follow that in the employment of an architect to prepare plans for a public building a board must comply with those sections. Kennedy v. Ross, 28 Cal.2d 569, 581, 170 P.2d 904. Where competitive proposals do not produce an advantage, a statute requiring competitive bidding does not apply. Ibid.

But after the above-cited decisions, the Legislature in 1951 added section 53060 to the Government Code as follows:

dollars ($500) for work to be done or for materials or supplies to be furnished, sold, or leased to the district, to the lowest responsible bidder who shall give such security as the board requires, or else reject all bids. This section applies to all materials and supplies whether patented or otherwise."

Section 18052, Education Code.

"For the purpose of securing bids the

"The legislative body of any public or municipal corporation or district may contract with and employ any persons for the furnishing to the corporation or district special services and advice in financial, economic, accounting, engineering, legal, or administrative matters if such persons are specially trained and experienced and competent to perform the special services required.

"The legislative body of the corporation or district may pay from any available funds such compensation to such persons as it deems proper for the services rendered."

That statute removes all question of the necessity of advertising for bids for "special services" by a person specially trained and experienced and competent to perform the special services required. Now, a board may pay from any available funds a fair compensation to capable and worthy persons for special services.

[3, 4] The contention that respondent improperly employed architects who neither reside in Pasadena nor do business there is based on no authority. Neither section 53060 nor any other statute restricts employment by a school district of architects to those who reside in any particular city or district. Such employment, therefore, lies within the discretion of the board, with which courts will not interfere in the absence of fraud or abuse of discretion in the exercise of its legislative powers. Ransom v. Los Angeles City High School District, 129 Cal.App.2d 500, 277 P.2d 455; Nickerson v. San Bernardino County, 179 Cal. 518, 523, 177 P. 465.

Rehearing Granted July 25, 1955.*

Two petitions for a writ of review to review action of Board of Supervisors of Los Angeles County, in granting a zone exception to permit a public dump upon land in immediate vicinity of that of petitioners. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Arnold Praeger, J., entered judgment denying certiorari in each case, and the petitioners appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J. pro tem., held that the petitions were insufficient.

Order affirmed in each case.

Opinion vacated 286 P.2d 395.

1. Certiorari ⇨70(5)

On appeal from order denying petition for writ of review, where respondent board of supervisors stood upon a memorandum of law filed in opposition to the application, the ruling was required to be tested by allegations of the petition.

2. Administrative Law and Procedure ⇨454 Process ⇨152

Generally, one who has been notified to attend a certain proceeding, and does so, cannot be heard to complain of alleged insufficiency of the notice, and such rule applies to one who appears in administrative proceeding without the notice to which he is entitled by law.

3. Municipal Corporations ⇨621.40

The rule that one who has been notified to attend a certain proceeding and does so, cannot be heard to complain of alleged insufficiency of the notice, applies to a hearing upon a zoning application.

4. Certiorari ⇨42(3)

It is incumbent on petitioner seeking a writ of review to review action of county board of supervisors to aver facts which show an absence or excess of jurisdiction.

5. Certiorari ⇨42(4)

Evidence ⇨83(4)

There is a presumption of regularity and legality of official action of county board of supervisors, and, hence, allegations of a petition for writ of review to review supervisors' action must be sufficient to overthrow the presumption. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 15.

Statutes ⇨61

Where regulation is within scope of authority legally delegated, the presumption of existence of facts justifying its specific exercise attaches alike to statutes, to municipal ordinances, and to orders of administrative bodies.

7. Counties ⇨21½

Where petition seeking writ of review to review action of county board of supervisors in granting zoning exception to permit a public dump upon land in immediate vicinity of that of petitioner alleged an excess of jurisdiction on board's part in that the required notice of hearing on the application was misleading and was in fact no notice at all, but did not allege the petitioner had been misled in any substantial way by the notice or that he had not been present at the hearing, petition was properly denied as insufficient.

ASHBURN, Justice pro tem.

[1] These cases involve the same facts and identical law points, with one exception which needs no comment. Each is an appeal from an order denying petition for writ of review. Counsel for the respondent Board of Supervisors stood upon a memorandum of law filed in opposition to the application and the ruling must be tested by the allegations of the petition. That of DeLuca will be reviewed; the Bartholomae Corporation petition contains the same allegations.

Petitioner says he is the owner of certain real property upon which he has a residence; it is located within zones A-1 and M-3 under the county zoning ordinance, No. 1494, and the maintenance of a public dump in those zones is prohibited; respondent Valley Land Development Company filed an application with the Regional Planning Commission of the County requesting that a zone exception be granted "to permit a public dump" upon its land which is in the immediate vicinity of that of petitioner; petitioner's property is within 500 feet of the exterior boundaries of that of Valley Land Development Company; the zoning ordinance requires ten days notice of hearing of such an application, i. e., by publication in a newspaper, and by post card mailed to all persons whose names and addresses appear on the assessment roll as owning property within a distance of 500 feet from the exterior boundaries of the area to be occupied by the use for which the variance is sought; notice was published and mailed; each gave notice of a hearing of a request for an exception to the A-1 zone "in order to establish, operate and maintain, a land reclamation project" on the subject property. Each petition also says that there are only two land owners in the vicinity of applicant's property which are within 500 feet of its exterior boundaries, and that one of those owners is said Valley Land Development Company. The petition says the notice was published as required and was mailed to the persons required by the ordinance, but does not show whether petitioner received the same or whether he ever saw or knew its contents. It is alleged that a public hearing was held by the Zoning Board, which made findings favorable to the application and recommended that the exception applied for be granted; that thereafter the Regional Planning Commission approved and adopted said finding and recommendation. Also that, within the time prescribed by the ordinance, an appeal was taken by Bartholomae Corporation to the Board of Supervisors and the decision of the Regional Planning Commission was affirmed. It was alleged further that the establishment of a dump as contemplated would constitute a nuisance and depreciate the value of petitioner's property.

The petition and the briefs on appeal assert an excess of jurisdiction in that the published and mailed notices "contain no adequate intimation of the true subject matter of the application, namely, permission to establish a public dump on the property described"; that they "are not real notice, or in truth and in fact any notice at all." The gist of the argument is that a public dump is not "a land reclamation project" and that the notice is essentially misleading; that the object of a notice is an opportunity to interested persons to be heard and hence it must adequately inform as to the true nature and subject matter of the hearing. Also, that "when the method for the exercise of the power is prescribed by the statute such method is the measure of the power to act. * * * When the statute requires notice and hearing as to the possible effect of a zoning law upon property rights the action of the legislative body becomes quasi judicial in character, and the statutory notice and hearing then becomes necessary in order to satisfy the requirements of due process and may not be dispensed with." Hurst v. City of Burlingame, 207 Cal. 134, 141, 277 P. 308, 311. Appellant relies upon Kane v. Board of Appeals of City of Medford, 273 Mass. 97, 173 N.E. 1, which holds in effect that such a notice must be a real and not a misleading one.

Counsel for respondent Board of Supervisors argue "As a practical matter there is no distinction between a land reclamation project and a dump, when the reclamation is carried on by means of a sanitary fill operation. * * * In view of the modern practices of land reclamation the terms 'land reclamation project' and 'public dump' are sufficiently synonymous so that notice of one constitutes notice of the other," and they say that the zoning ordinance provides: "'Section 224. Land Reclamation Projects Defined. The disposal of rubbish and unwanted material in such a manner so as to fill up holes and other depressions or in other ways make the property more usable shall be known as a land reclamation project.'"

We find it unnecessary to resolve these questions propounded by counsel for the petitioner to aver any facts showing injury to petitioner as a result of the alleged inadequacy of the notice. The point is raised by respondent and is meritorious.

Not only does the petitioner fail to disclose whether the notice mailed to him was received, or whether he was misled thereby into staying away from the hearing, but he does not tell the court whether he did attend and participate in the meeting, with or without protest as to the form of the notice.

[2, 3] The general rule is that one who has been notified to attend a certain proceeding and does so, cannot be heard to complain of alleged insufficiency of the notice; it has in such instance served its purpose. This rule applies to one who appears in a lawsuit after defective service of process upon him, 21 Cal.Jur. § 4, p. 477, to one who responds to a notice of motion without adequate notice. 18 Cal. Jur. § 7, p. 652. Also to one who appears in an administrative proceeding without the notice to which he is entitled by law. 2 Cal.Jur.2d § 108, p. 202; Howe v. State Bar, 212 Cal. 222, 231, 298 P. 25; Light v. State Bar, 14 Cal.2d 328, 331-332, 94 P.2d 35; Farmers' & Merchants Bank v. Board, 97 Cal. 318, 325, 32 P. 312. And, as there is a presumption of regularity and legality of official action, Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 15, the allegations must be sufficient to overthrow the same. In Pacific States Box & Basket Co. v. White, 296 U.S. 176, 56 S.Ct. 159, 80 L.Ed. 138, the court affirmed an order dismissing a suit to enjoin enforcement of an order of the Oregon Department of Agriculture prescribing use of a certain type of container for berries. Concerning the sufficiency of the allegations, the court said in 296 U.S. at page 185, 56 S.Ct. at page 163:

"It is urged that this rebuttable presumption of the existence of a state of facts sufficient to justify the exertion of the police power attaches only to acts of legislature; and that where the regulation is the act of an administrative body, no such presumption exists, so that the burden of proving the justifying facts is upon him who seeks to sustain the validity of the regulation. The contention is without support in authority or reason, and rests upon misconception. * * *

"But where the regulation is within the scope of authority legally delegated, the presumption of the existence of facts justifying its specific exercise attaches alike to statutes, to municipal ordinances, and to orders of administrative bodies. Compare Aetna Ins.

Beverly Oil Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 40 Cal.2d 552, 254 P.2d 865, was an attack upon the application of a zoning ordinance to plaintiff's nonconforming use. At page 559 of 40 Cal.2d, at page 869 of 254 P.2d the court said: "The burden rests upon the plaintiff to establish the invalidity of the ordinance in its application to the property involved. The plaintiff's failure to sustain this burden raises a presumption of the existence of such facts as are sufficient to sustain the ordinance. Pacific States Box & Basket Co. v. White, 296 U.S. 176, 56 S.Ct. 159, 80 L.Ed. 138 [101 A.L.R. 853]."

[7] If petitioner was misled in any substantial way by the notice in question or if he was not present at the hearing, it was necessary for him to show the fact in his petition; as he has not done this the presumption of lawful action is not overthrown and his petition was properly denied.

The order denying certiorari is affirmed in each case.

The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Indicted for having sold a preparation of heroin in violation of the Health and Safety Code, section 11500, appellant was convicted by a jury of such crime, and also the court found that he had suffered two prior felony convictions. The judgment decreed that he be imprisoned for the term prescribed by law. He demands a reversal on the sole ground that the indictment failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

He specifies that the pleading does not allege the name of the vendee who purchased the narcotic and that such omission is a fatal defect. "A sale" he asserts "must be a transaction between two or more parties." He argues that (1) the true test of the sufficiency of an indictment is whether the record shows with accuracy to what extent he may plead a former adjudication of the facts alleged in the indictment; (2) because the indictment is thus fatally defective, the judgment is void and in violation of both the applicable statutory provisions and of the Fourteenth Amendment; (3) the Indeterminate Sentence Law, Penal Code, secs. 1168, 3020, 3041, provides that the final determination of appellant's sentence shall be determined by the Board of Prison Terms and Paroles, i. e., the Adult Authority; (4) because the cited code sections divest the superior courts of their power and confer it upon the Adult Authority in violation of Article

VI, section 1, of the state's constitution which confers the judicial power upon designated courts, they deprive a convict of his right of due process of law.

He supports his theses with quotations from numerous decisions and text writers and concludes that the judgment of his conviction is void. Notwithstanding the skill and learning displayed in the brief, filed in propria persona, appellant thereafter requested this court to appoint counsel to prosecute his appeal. An attorney¹ was appointed. He made an investigation of the proceedings prior to the trial, the evidence admitted, the verdict and judgment, and advised the court that the appeal is without merit. That such advice must be approved will presently appear. The facts are simple; the judgment is valid.

For a year prior to appellant's arrest, the police department of Los Angeles had assigned officer Manuel Gutierrez to the narcotics division. He operated as an undercover agent, wore old clothes, long hair and a mustache. Accompanied by a friend on January 26, 1954, he drove on West Temple Street and parked his car. He was promptly approached by appellant who was familiarly hailed by Gutierrez' companion. Thereupon appellant inquired: "Are you guys trying to pick up?" Gutierrez replied: "Yes, we want three for ten dollars if it is good stuff." Appellant assured the officer that he would not "burn you guys; it is good." He then entered the automobile and directed the disguised officer to drive to First Street and he would get what they desired. They readily appeared at an apartment house on West First Street. Appellant alone entered the place and promptly returned. He entered the car and directed Gutierrez to drive around the corner and park. At that point appellant asked who had the money. He gave the officer three capsules of powder wrapped in paper and received in return two five-dollar bills. He was then returned to the street where he was first encountered.

At the trial, Gutierrez proved the meaning of all the phrases used by appellant when he inquired as to the purpose of the officer, which established the occupation of appellant. By other men of the police department, it was established that the three capsules contained heroin; that appellant claimed the capsules belonged to another person, a woman, but refused to divulge the name of the owner; that he had just got out of jail ten days prior to his arrest. A tape recording of the six minutes Leiva was questioned by Officers Logue and Gutierrez after his arrest was played for the court and jury.

Appellant denied the facts proved by the prosecution; testified that he had never sold narcotics in his life; that on the day of the alleged sale he was at home with his wife and children, had been in jail for a year and a half; that the recording played did not have his voice. His wife testified that at the hour of the alleged sale by appellant, he was at home with her.

Despite the denials and proof by appellant, the jury convicted him and the court adjudged him guilty and he was sentenced to the State Prison for the term prescribed by law.

Indictment Valid.

[1-4] An indictment for selling narcotics is not defective because it fails to name the vendee. While an attack on the pleading could have been made only by special demurrer, even that attack is impotent. People v. Gelardi, 77 Cal.App.2d 467, 472, 175 P.2d 855; People v. Faust, 113 Cal. 172, 175, 45 P. 261; People v. Malone, 68 Cal.App. 615, 618, 229 P. 1000. It is the law that even a defective information or indictment will not result in a reversal unless a substantial right of the accused on the merits is adversely affected. People v. Howes, 99 Cal.App.2d 808, 816, 222 P.2d 969. In the case at bar, the prosecution proved the sale by appellant and also the name of his purchaser. Such proof will enable appellant to establish former jeopardy in the event of subsequent accusations. Furthermore, the indictment of appellant followed the form prescribed by section 951 of the Penal Code.

1. Arthur C. Baker, Esquire, of the Los Angeles Bar.

The Statutes Involved

[5-12] It is not essential to a judgment that it specify the exact term a convict must serve. The superior court, by a judgment sentencing a person to the maximum period prescribed, is not divested of its power. The statutes dealing with the Indeterminate Sentence Law, Penal Code, secs. 1168, 3020, 3022, do not infringe the right of due process of law. A judgment pursuant to those statutes is in legal effect a sentence for the maximum term and therefore it is definite and certain. In re Lee, 177 Cal. 690, 693, 171 P. 958. So construed, such judgment does not lack certainty. The superior court has the function of determining the guilt of the defendant and of imposing the sentence provided by law for the offense involved. The execution of its judgment and the application of merciful measures are administrative and were properly vested in the executive branch of the government. "It is a part of the philosophy of the indeterminate sentence law and our whole penological system that, within prescribed limits, the length of terms of imprisonment and rights of parole shall be subject to redetermination from time to time." In re McVickers, 29 Cal.2d 264, 271, 176 P.2d 40, 45. Such measures were wisely designed for the welfare of society as well as for the prisoner.

[13] In a belated supplemental brief, appellant asserts that he was not tried within 60 days as required by the Penal Code, section 1382. The record shows that the indictment was filed February 10, 1954, and that trial was commenced April 7, or within 60 days.

[14] His statement that his two prior convictions were brought to the attention of the jury by the assistant district attorney in violation of the Penal Code is without support. The transcript of the proceedings discloses neither the reading of the indictment nor any other document referring to the former penal judgments against appellant. The reference to a prior conviction was made for the purpose of impeachment.

[15] His statement that the assistant district attorney "used a tape recorder to present evidence to the jury" could refer only to the record made after his arrest when the officers were interrogating him at narcotics division headquarters. This corresponds to a stenographic record which is the usual proceeding when officers are questioning a suspect.

The reporter's transcript does not disclose any act of the trial judge indicating a prejudice against appellant.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

No. 16334.

June 15, 1955.

Interpleader action wherein United States sought to impose tax lien for internal revenue taxes assessed against seller of liquor license on funds in escrow deposited in connection with purchase of liquor license and held for benefit of general creditors who filed claims with escrow holder. The Superior Court, County of Alameda, Chris B. Fox, J., entered judgment for United States and general creditors appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B.

Wood, J., held that on-sale general liquor license is property within meaning of statute providing that United States shall have lien on any property of taxpayer who is liable to pay any tax and who neglects or refuses to pay after demand, and proceeds from sale became subject to government lien for taxes.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

On March 14, 1949, Henry Fleck agreed to sell his restaurant and bar business including his on-sale liquor license. In accordance with the provisions of section 7.2 of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, Deering's Gen.Laws, Act No. 3796, now sections 24073-24075 of the Business and Professions Code, notice of the intended sale was recorded in the official records of the county; an escrow holder was designated; the purchase price, $7,700, was deposited with him; and the appellants herein, general creditors of the seller, filed their claims with the escrow holder within the prescribed period of seven days after the recording of the notice.

It happened that the seller was also indebted to the government of the United States for internal revenue taxes which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue had assessed against the seller in varying amounts, from time to time, between May 7, 1948, and March 3, 1949. The collector of Internal Revenue received the assessment lists at various times between May 18, 1948, and March 3, 1949. Notices of lien were filed in the office of the Recorder of the county on various dates between June 7, 1948, and March 3, 1949, except that as to an assessment in the amount of $143.51 made March 3, 1949, and list received by the collector the same day, the notice of lien was filed with the County Recorder on June 22, 1949.

The government filed no claim with the escrow holder during the seven-day period, March 18-25, 1949. It did, on the first of April following, serve on him a notice of levy in the amount of $14,274.87.

The trial court found that the government acquired tax liens on all of the "property and rights to property of the seller * * *, including the proceeds from the sale of on-sale general liquor license * * * on the dates that the Commissioner's respective assessment lists were received by the Collector of Internal Revenue * * *; such liens were then valid as to all persons except purchasers, mortgagees, pledgees and judgment creditors; as to such persons said liens became valid on the dates when notices of said tax liens were recorded in the office of the County Recorder * * *"; and that the claims of the appellants are "subordinate and inferior to the claims and liens" of the government.

The trial court concluded therefrom and decreed that the government be paid the sum of $7,035.75, the unexpended balance of the $7,700 purchase price remaining after payment to the escrow holder for his services and expenses.

Appellants contend that the government acquired no interest in or lien upon the liquor license or the proceeds of its sale, and no right to payment from the proceeds until after payment in full of the claims of the appellants.

(1) The United States acquired a lien upon the license if the license was "property" or a "right to property" within the meaning of those terms as used in section 3670 of title 26 of the U. S. Code. Section 3670 declares that "if any person liable to pay any tax neglects or refuses to pay * * * after demand, the amount * * * [including interest, penalty, additional amount, addition to the tax, and costs] * * * shall be a lien in favor of the United States upon all property and rights to property, whether real or personal, belonging to such person."¹

[1] "Property" was there used by Congress in a broad, not narrow, sense; designed to include all concepts of the term. See Citizens State Bank of Barstow, Tex., v. Vidal, 10 Cir., 114 F.2d 380, 383; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. United States, 6 Cir., 107 F.2d 311, 313; and cases collected in 174 A.L.R. 1373, § 6, 1378-1384. "Although 'in the interpretation and application of federal statutes, federal not local law applies' [citations], it is necessary to examine the rights which flow under state law from ownership of an on-sale liquor license in determining whether it possesses the characteristics of 'property' within the Bankruptcy Act. [Citations.]" In re Quaker Room, D.C.S.D., Cal. 1950, 90 F.Supp. 758, 760-761.

"Property" has been defined as "the thing of which there may be ownership". Cal. Civil Code, § 654. "There may be ownership of all inanimate things which are capable of appropriation or of manual delivery; of all domestic animals; of all obligations; of such products of labor or skill as the composition of an author, the good will of a business, trademarks and signs, and of rights created or granted by statute." Civil Code, § 655.

[2, 3] The general on-sale liquor license in California would seem to meet these tests. It is issued to a specific person. Although issued upon an annual basis, it is renewable under the conditions expressed in the statute. Act 3796, § 8.² A renewal is deemed a continuation of the original license. Saso v. Furtado, 104 Cal.App.2d 759, 762, 232 P.2d 583. It is transferable from one person to another upon approval by the state agency which administers the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act and upon payment of a transfer fee. Deering Act, No. 3796, § 7, Stats. 1947, ch. 1566, pp. 3219, 3221.³

The limitation of the number of on-sale general licenses, Act No. 3796, § 38f, Stats. 1945, ch. 1401, p. 2615 at p. 2642,⁴ coupled with the factor of transferability, tends to create for each license a substantial value; evidenced in the instant case by the sum of $7,700 which the purchaser paid into escrow, the license being the principal item of value in the transfer.

[4] A contract to transfer a license, subject of course to approval by the state licensing agency and the other conditions and restrictions imposed by law, is valid. A refusal to perform such a contract is remediable; e. g., specific performance, Campbell v. Bauer, 104 Cal.App.2d 740, 232 P.2d 590; Saso v. Furtado, supra, 104 Cal. impairment. The prohibition against pledging the transfer of a license as security for a loan or for the fulfillment of an agreement, expressed in section 7.3 added to the Act in 1949, Stats.1949, ch. 1348, pp. 2349, 2360,⁵ could not and did not operate retroactively. Pehau v. Stewart, 112 Cal.App.2d 90, 96, 245 P.2d 692, and cases cited. We observe, also, that section 7.3 merely narrows the scope of the uses and purposes of an agreement for transfer. It constitutes express recognition of the right to contract for transfer of a license.

We have found no California Supreme or Appellate Court decision directly in point on the question whether the license here involved is "property" within the meaning of 26 U.S.C. § 3670. It was held non-taxable in Roehm v. County of Orange, 32 Cal.2d 280, 196 P.2d 550, because under our statutes a tax simply is not imposed upon this kind of property, not because a liquor license is not property, a question not decided. Hevren v. Reed, 126 Cal. 219, 58 P. 536, and State Board of Equalization v. Superior Court, 5 Cal.App.2d 374, 42 P.2d 1076, dealt merely with such questions as the revocability of a liquor license and the notice and hearing requirements, if any, applicable thereto.

The federal district court, southern district of California, has held, in a well considered opinion, that the California liquor license is "property" as that term is used in the Bankruptcy Act. In re Quaker Room, supra, 90 F.Supp. 758. The court of appeal for the District of Columbia has held that a transferable liquor license is a "property right" which is subject to execution to satisfy a judgment, declaring that the "rule of the common law which forbids a levy upon licenses, was confined, and should be confined to non-transferable licenses" and that "the reason for the rule fails in the case of a license which, by express statutory provision, is made subject to transfer * * *" even though subject to limitations and restrictions. Rowe v. Colpoys, 78 U.S.App.D.C. 75, 137 F.2d 249, 251, 148 A.L.R. 488, certiorari denied 320 U.S. 783, 64 S.Ct. 190, 88 L.Ed. 470.

Similarly, in Montana a liquor license which is transferable with the consent of a state agency is property which is subject to attachment. Stallinger v. Goss, 121 Mont. 437, 193 P.2d 810. In Washington it is property which passes to a receiver when appointed to conserve the assets of a business. Deggender v. Seattle Brewing & Malting Co., 41 Wash. 385, 83 P. 898, 4 L.R.A.,N.S., 626. By way of comment upon decisions of this character, including some that we have cited, our Supreme Court recently said: "These decisions recognize the principle that since such a license has a transferable value to the debtor it is property that in fairness ought to be within the reach of his creditors. Since by statute a liquor license in this state has in effect been given a transferable value, it has assumed the characteristics of property." Roehm v. County of Orange, supra, 32 Cal.2d 280, 283, 196 P.2d 550, 552.

[8] We conclude that the liquor license in question was "property" within the meaning of section 3670 and became subject to the government's lien for taxes.

(2) Did the United States acquire a lien against the proceeds, the money in escrow?

Appellants seem to concede that if the tax lien attached to the license it attached immediately to the proceeds of the sale of the license. While no case precisely so holding has been brought to our attention it seems sound upon principle. Although not strictly analogous, it is in harmony with the holding that a federal tax lien on real estate which is subject to a prior mortgage attaches to the proceeds of sale upon foreclosure of the mortgage, subject to satisfaction of the mortgage and other prior liens, if any. United States v. City of New Britain, 347 U.S. 81, 74 S.Ct. 367, 98 L.Ed. 520. Similarly, upon distraint and sale of a taxpayer's personal property for payment of rent accruing, the government by reason of its tax lien under section 3670 had a prior right to the proceeds of sale in Jones v. Mustard, Del.Super.1954, 109 A.2d 789.

[9] Even if the government had acquired no lien on the liquor license, there is considerable authority tending to support the view that the tax lien nevertheless attached to the proceeds of the sale when those proceeds came into existence. Sections 3670, 3671 and 3678 of title 26 of the U.S. Code provide for a continuing lien on all property of the taxpayer, thus including property presently owned and that which is later acquired. Glass City Bank v. United States, 326 U.S. 265, 66 S.Ct. 108, 90 L.Ed. 56; In re Salsbury Motors, D.C. S.D.Cal.1951, 104 F.Supp. 482, affirmed in 9 Cir., 210 F.2d 171, certiorari denied in 347 U.S. 953, 75 S.Ct. 679, 98 L.Ed. 1099. Thus, it has been held that grapes grown on the taxpayer's land after the government's notice of lien has been filed are subject to that lien, Nelson v. United States, 9 Cir., 1944, 139 F.2d 162, certiorari denied 322 U.S. 764, 64 S.Ct. 1287, 88 L.Ed. 1591.

[10] At the very moment the taxpayer and his purchaser entered into the contract for the sale of the liquor license the taxpayer acquired a chose in action for the stipulated purchase price, to which "property" or "right to property" the government's pre-existing tax lien immediately attached. Then when the purchase price money was paid into escrow the tax lien at once attached and later followed the fund when paid into court in this interpleader action.

[11,12] In this process there was no opportunity for the claims of the appellants (general creditors, not lienholders) to acquire precedence over the government tax lien. The federal statute certainly gave those claims no priority. We do not believe the state statute, § 7.2, Act 3796, was intended to give them precedence over the prior government tax lien, nor do we believe it competent for the state in any such manner to impinge upon and thwart the operation of the Congressional Statute. "The government has plenary power over the property of taxpayers to collect taxes and is in no wise subject to state laws." Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. United States, supra, 107 F.2d 311, 313. See also United States v. City of New Britain, supra, 347 U.S. 81, 84, 74 S.Ct. 367, 98 L.Ed. 520; United States v. Division of Labor Law Enforcement, 9 Cir., 201 F.2d 857, 36 A.L.R. 2d 1197; United States v. E. Regensburg

& Sons, D.C., 124 F.Supp. 687, 690; Jones v. Mustard, supra, Del.Super., 109 A.2d 789, 791-792; United States v. Standard Brass & Manufacturing Co., Tex.Civ.App., 266 S.W.2d 407, 409. State exemption laws do not prevent the federal tax lien from attaching. 174 A.L.R. 1373, § 7, 1384.

Consonant with these views is the very recent case of United States v. Blackett, 9 Cir., 220 F.2d 21. After liens under 26 U.S.C. §§ 3670-3673 had been perfected, creditors of the taxpayer obtained the sale of his on-sale liquor license in proceedings to enforce their judgment against him. The proceeds were paid to the marshal of the municipal court, as receiver, for proper distribution. The government sued in the district court, which ordered the proceeds paid to the judgment creditor, saying: " * * * ; the said on-sale liquor license not being subject to any lien whatever, either in favor of the United States of America or any other person, firm or entity, and the said proceeds from the sale thereof being the result only of an in personam proceeding supplementary to judgment against John R. Blackett in accordance with the laws of the State of California relative thereto." At page 22. In reversing that judgment the court of appeals said: "The United States at no time attempted to impose its lien against the liquor license, but upon the sale taking place and money having been received therefor, it claims that it has the right to enforce its lien against the money as 'property and right to property' of the delinquent taxpayer. It is true that the sale was precipitated by the judgment creditor, but whatever was received through the sale became the property of the vendor-owner, subject, as any other property belonging to him, to valid liens thereon in the order of their priority, in this case, first the tax lien, second the judgment creditor's lien. [Citations.]" At page 23.

Appellants argue that in view of the provisions of section 7.2 of the state statute the taxpayer had a right to that portion only of the escrowed purchase price money as might be left after payment of creditors' claims that were filed within the prescribed seven day period and that the government's tax lien could apply only to that portion.

That is specious reasoning. It would permit a person to sell a valuable property and apportion the proceeds among his creditors in utter disregard of the prior tax lien which the federal statute unequivocally declares. Appellants' cases do not support their contention. Thus, Steineck v. Haas-Baruch Co., 106 Cal.App. 228, 288 P. 1104, appropriately held that a certain creditor sued and attached too late. He did so after the debtor-vendor had assigned his interest in the purchase price money by instructing the escrow holder to pay certain other creditors of his. New York Casualty Co. v. Zwerner, D.C., 58 F.Supp. 473, was a case in which the government claimed a lien upon the moneys accruing to a contractor under a construction contract. But the contractor's surety had become entitled to that balance. The surety had paid claims for labor and material under the obligation of its performance and payment bonds; hence, it had an equitable lien on any and all funds remaining unpaid to the contractor (the taxpayer), a lien that related back to the time of execution of the suretyship contract, which in turn antedated the tax lien.

(3) Did the United States take the necessary procedural steps to perfect its lien and collect the tax? Yes.

[13] Appellants suggest that the government should have filed notice of its claim with the escrow holder within the seven day period prescribed by section 7.2 of the state statute, Act 3796. We find no such requirement in the federal statute, which as we have noted is not dependent upon state law for its implementation. The only "filing" pursuant to state law which the federal statute, 26 U.S.C. § 3672, prescribes is filing in an "office" (not with a mere escrow holder) when authorized by the law of the state in which the property is situated, the county recorder, Cal.Gov.Code, § 27330, and then only to give the lien validity as against a "mortgagee, pledgee, purchaser, or judgment creditor", none of whom is present in this case.

Accordingly, in the instant case the tax lien arose against the property of the taxpayer when the assessment list was received by the collector and attached to the taxpayer's after-acquired property as soon as the latter came into existence. 26 U.S.C. § 3671.

Appellants in their closing brief further suggest that the United States could enforce the lien only by bringing an independent action therefor under section 3678 of 26 U.S.Code. They cite only Maryland Casualty Co. v. Charleston Lead Works, D.C., 24 F.2d 836. The court in that case did refer to the procedure under former Rev.St. § 3207 (now 26 U.S.C. §§ 3678, 3679) as exclusive but it was dealing with the right of a private owner of a real estate lien to file a petition in the federal district court for a determination of all claims to or liens upon the real estate.

That the filing of an action in the federal district court is not the exclusive mode for collection of the tax by the government is demonstrated by the very existence of the separate and independent remedy of distraint. §§ 3690-3717 of title 26, U.S.C.

[14] Where, as here, the United States, at the request of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and by the direction of the attorney general, has with approval of the court intervened in this interpleader action, and the parties have joined issue and have tried the case upon the merits, it is too late now to question the capacity of the intervenor to appear and participate in the action. Code Civ.Proc., §§ 430-434.

The judgment is affirmed.

No. 16337.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

June 15, 1955.

Action to set aside a deed and a deed of trust and to recover rental values of premises conveyed. The Superior Court, Alameda County, A. T. Shine, J., set aside instruments. Grantee under deed and beneficiary under her trust deed appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that evidence was sufficient to support finding of mental incompetency on part of grantor at the time she made deed.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Cancellation of Instruments ⇨50

In action to set aside deed, on ground of mental incompetency of grantor, resolving of conflicts in evidence was matter for trial court.

2. Deeds ⇨211(1)

In action to set aside deed, there was substantial evidence to support finding that grantor was mentally incompetent at time she made deed.

3. Cancellation of Instruments ⇨50

In action to set aside deed on ground of mental incompetency of grantor, trial court had right to believe grantee's statement that grantor's condition was same on day she made deed as it was on day doctor visited her, but had right to disbelieve her statement as to what her condition was on those dates.

4. Deeds ⇨211(1)

Fact that grantor was in a semi-comatose slumber at time she signed deed and character of her signature were circumstances to be weighed by trial court along with other circumstances in case in determining mental condition of grantor at time she made deed.

5. Deeds ⇨196(1)

In action to set aside deed on ground that grantor was mentally incompetent at time she made deed, grantee had benefit of presumption of sanity, but such presumption was rebuttable, and was overcome when trial court believed plaintiff's witnesses.

6. Mortgages ⇨11

Grantee of deed which was void for mental incapacity of grantor had no title to convey to person who loaned $2,000 to grantee and who was named beneficiary of trust deed executed by grantee, notwithstanding that such beneficiary had no knowledge of circumstances of making of deed to grantee. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 38.

7. Deeds ⇨211(4)

In action to set aside deed on ground of mental incompetency, and undue influence in confidential relationship, evidence was insufficient to support finding of confidential relationship between grantee and grantor and undue influence on the part of the grantee.

8. Deeds ⇨76

Where a deed has been made by a person without understanding, a finding of lack of consideration from the grantee is not required to set aside the deed.

9. Cancellation of Instruments ⇨53

Finding of mental incompetency was sufficient to support judgment setting aside deed, even though finding of confidential relationship between grantor and grantee and of undue influence of the latter was unsupported.

10. Judgment ⇨5

One clear, sustained and sufficient finding which supports a judgment is all that is required, even though there be other unsupported, inconclusive findings.

11. Cancellation of Instruments ⇨53

In action to set aside deed on ground of mental incompetency of grantor, and abuse of confidential relationship by grantee, there was no inconsistency between finding of mental incompetency and one of confidential relationship and undue influence, as latter finding did not imply mental alertness in the person influenced, notwithstanding that latter finding was not supported by evidence.

Duggan, Smith & Lawlor, Oakland, for appellants.

Raymond A. Ferrario, Young & Whitton, Oakland, for respondents.

BRAY, Justice.

In an action to set aside a deed, a deed of trust, and to recover rental value of premises described therein, plaintiff recovered judgment setting aside said instruments and awarding her $2,030. Defendants Kirby and de Mello appeal.

Questions Presented.

1. Insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings (a) that the deed's grantor was mentally incapable of understanding the transaction; (b) that a confidential relationship existed between the grantor and the grantee,* and (c) that there was no consideration for the deed.

2. That the court's findings are inconsistent.

Evidence.

At the time of the execution of the deed, Mrs. Fabiano, a woman 83 years of age, had lived alone for many years in her Emeryville home. Other than a small pension, her sole income was $35 per month rental from a downstairs apartment. From June or July, 1951, to about October 1st, Mrs. Ustice, a practical nurse, cared for her. Late in September, defendant Kirby, who had known Mrs. Fabiano since about 1935, commenced visiting the latter. About October 1st, defendant moved into the house, discharged Mrs. Ustice, and assumed care of Mrs. Fabiano, which she continued until Mrs. Fabiano's death October 15th. October 2nd the deed was executed.

Concerning deceased's mental condition and the execution of the deed the testimony was as follows: Mrs. Ustice testified that when she first came to the home deceased was in bed and hardly able to move. She did not leave the bed to attend to her wants. A Mrs. Earl came to see deceased each morning. Deceased made salary arrangements with the witness, although Mrs. Earl also offered to pay her. Deceased's mental condition got worse. She could not carry on a rational conversation. Although her brother had been dead a year or two, deceased would tell the witness that he had been in to see her that day. Deceased was not of sound mind. She did not know where anything was. Defendant discharged the witness. Deceased said nothing.

Mrs. Trestler, deceased's great niece, visited her periodically, the last time being approximately six weeks or a month prior to her death. Deceased would only recognize her when the witness told deceased who she was. Deceased would not remember that the witness had been there before. On one occasion the witness left deceased for about 15 minutes. On returning deceased did not know the witness had been there. The witness showed deceased pictures of the witness' grandfather, grandmother, uncle and several friends of deceased. Deceased said she never knew them. Deceased imagined there were two people in the house who were going to take her property away. About a year before she died, deceased offered to give the witness her property if the witness would live with her. Her mental condition got worse. Deceased was not of sound mind. Deceased was very feeble and never sat up. In the witness's opinion deceased could not write her name. Deceased made the wit-

* The action arises out of the execution of a deed from plaintiff's intestate, Mrs. Fabiano, to defendant Mima Kirby. Defendants Oakland Title Insurance & Guaranty Co., a corporation, and Alex de Mello, are joined because of the later execution of a deed of trust by defendant Kirby in which the title company is trustee and de Mello is beneficiary, to secure a loan from de Mello to Kirby. Defendant de Mello was found to have no knowledge of the Fabiano-Kirby transaction, but because the deed, Fabiano to Kirby, was void, Kirby had no title to convey by the deed of trust.

Defendant Kirby testified that she was an old and trusted friend of deceased. The latter was of sound mind at the time of making the deed and at all times. On October 12th, when Dr. Hart came, deceased's mental and physical condition were the same as when she signed the deed. Deceased recognized him when he came in. Defendant went to the court house and got a description of deceased's property, took it to a realtor with whom she had done business before and had him draw the deed. She brought the deed to the house. Deceased signed it. Later the realtor put revenue stamps on the deed. The witness did not discharge Mrs. Ustice. Deceased did. Deceased told defendant that whoever stayed with her when she had her last days in the home was the one who would get her property. She had burial money in the safe deposit box to which Mrs. Earl had the key.

Dr. Hart treated deceased off and on from 1946 until he last saw her October 12, 1951. She was suffering from lung tuberculosis, and was then in a terminal condition. He saw that she was going to die. She was very weak and fragile. She was semi-comatose to the point he did not arouse her. She was mentally involved. He tried to carry on a conversation with her but he could not because she was semi-comatose. She made no reply to anything he stated to her. Her condition had been developing over a period of some time. She was not of sound mind on the 12th and most likely was in the same mental condition ten days before. She was mentally involved, disturbed and semi-conscious. While he could not state whether deceased on October 2nd was sane or insane (he had never determined any trace of insanity) he would say that in all probability she was mentally involved. On October 12th she was not mentally competent.

Mrs. Di Rienzo, called by defendants, testified that she was employed by the realtor who drew the deed. Defendant drove her to deceased's home. Defendant told deceased that this was the "little girl" who was to notarize the deed. The witness asked deceased if she knew what the paper was. Deceased said, "Yes, I am going to give Fifty my house." (Fifty was defendant's nickname.) Deceased was conscious, mentally alert, talked coherently and answered all questions. The witness showed deceased where to sign the deed and she signed it. Afterward they talked for about half an hour. Deceased spoke with a strong voice. Deceased's hand was not held during the signing.

Mrs. Brady, the tenant in the downstairs apartment, visited with deceased in late September and early October. Deceased was conscious, mentally sane and alert. The witness saw her on three or four days before her death and she seemed to be all right then. On that last visit, deceased spoke about the witness's children and their visits in earlier days.

1. Sufficiency of Evidence.

(a) Mental Incapacity.

[1-3] While there is a conflict in the evidence upon this subject, the resolving of that conflict is a matter for the trial court. There is substantial evidence to support the court's finding. Mrs. Ustice and Mrs. Trestler testified positively that in their opinion deceased was of unsound mind. Additionally, Mrs. Ustice testified that deceased could not carry on a rational conversation, spoke of a brother who was dead visiting her. Mrs. Trestler testified that deceased was unable to recognize her or pictures of the immediate family; that deceased imagined someone was in the house trying to take her property from her. Dr. Hart, who had treated deceased for some time, stated that on October 12th (ten days after the execution of the deed) she was not of sound mind and most likely was in that condition on October 2nd. Defendant testified that at the time of the execution of the deed deceased was in the same mental and physical condition as when Dr. Hart saw her October 12th. If so, then if Dr. Hart is to be believed (and the trial court believed him) deceased could not have been of sound mind when she signed the deed. True, defendant meant by her testimony that deceased was of sound mind on both dates, but the court did not have to believe all of her testimony. It had the right to believe her statement that deceased's condition was the same on both dates, but disbelieve her statement as to what that condition was. Defendant testified that on October 12th deceased recognized Dr. Hart and carried on a conversation with him. Dr. Hart's testimony was to the contrary.

[4] It does not necessarily follow, as contended by defendants, that a signature cannot be obtained from a person in a semicomatose slumber. The character of the signature here was a circumstance to be weighed by the trial court along with the other circumstances in the case.

[5] Defendants, in addition to the testimony of their witnesses, have the benefit of the presumption of sanity. See Estate of Perkins, 195 Cal. 699, 235 P. 45. However, the presumption is a rebuttable one, and like the testimony of defendants' witnesses, was overcome when the trial court believed plaintiff's witnesses.

This case differs from Estate of Dunne, 130 Cal.App.2d 216, 278 P.2d 733, where it was held that the evidence of incompetency was insufficient primarily in that there all that was proved was that the testator had delusions which did not bear upon his testamentary capacity. In our case the tests of mental incompetency stated in the Dunne case, 130 Cal.App.2d at page 220, 278 P.2d 733, at page 734, were met. Here there was evidence that because of her mental condition deceased did not have mental capacity "(1) to understand the nature of his act; (2) to understand and recollect the nature and situation of his property * * *." Coupling Dr. Hart's testimony with defendant Kirby's, it would appear that Mrs. Fabiano was in a condition in which she could not understand what she was signing or the nature and situation of her property. "(3) to remember and understand his relations to the persons having claims upon his bounty, and whose interests would be affected * * *." Mrs. Fabiano could not remember who her relatives were.

stances of the making of the deed and parted with $2,000 for his deed of trust, defendant Kirby had no title to convey to him, as the deed to her, being made by a person entirely without understanding, was void. See Civil Code, § 38; Maionchi v. Nicholini, 1 Cal.App. 690, 82 P. 1052; Trout v. Taylor, 220 Cal. 652, 32 P.2d 968; Jacks v. Estee, 139 Cal. 507, 73 P. 247.

(b) Confidential Relationship.

[7] Plaintiff practically concedes that the finding of a confidential relationship between the deceased and defendant and of undue influence of the latter is unsupported.

(c) Consideration.

[8] The court found that defendant Kirby gave no consideration for the deed. She testified that it was given in exchange for her promise to take care of the grantor for the balance of her life. She did take care of Mrs. Fabiano for the thirteen days elapsing between the making of the deed and her death. A finding of lack of consideration is not necessary where a deed is made by a person without understanding.

[9, 10] As the supported finding of mental incompetency is sufficient to support the judgment, we deem it unnecessary to discuss the findings further. One clear, sustained and sufficient finding which supports a judgment is all that is needed, even though there be other unsupported, inconclusive findings. Kreisa v. Stoddard, 127 Cal.App.2d 627, 633, 274 P.2d 164.

2. Inconsistency.

[11] We can see no inconsistency between a finding of mental incompetency and one of confidential relationship and undue influence. The latter finding does not imply mental alertness in the person influenced. Actually it is easier to influence a mentally incompetent person than a competent one. While the court erred in making the latter finding, there is no inconsistency involved.

The judgment is affirmed.

Action by race track spectator against operator of track for injuries sustained when another spectator ran into plaintiff so violently as to knock her down. The Superior Court, County of San Mateo, Murray Draper, J., entered judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that in absence of evidence of any facts which would reasonably put defendant on notice that one spectator would run violently into another so as to put the duty upon defendant to take steps to guard against such contingency, evidence did not present a question as to operator's negligence.

Judgment affirmed.

DOOLING, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of nonsuit. She was injured while a spectator at the race track operated by defendant when another spectator ran into her so violently as to knock her down.

Appellant testified that she attended the track on Monday, October 13, 1952, a day celebrated as a holiday since Columbus Day fell on a Sunday that year. Between the second and third races she left the place where she was sitting so that she might place a bet. Returning she proceeded down a stairway in order to get back to her seat. At this point she stated that she saw a man running up the same stairway and that he "touched" her on the side and she "went to the bottom of the steps."

Appellant further testified that she observed a crowd of people sitting down and standing up on the stairway; that there was a banister or handrail on the stairway but that it was so crowded that it was impossible for her to get next to the banister in order to hold on to it; that she saw no policeman or usher on the stairway; and that she was about to take the third step down the stairway when she noticed the man running up the stairs who caused her fall.

The operations manager of the track testified that on the day of the accident 9,436 people were present at the track as opposed to an ordinary day when anywhere from seven to eight thousand usually attended; that on a normal day 15 ushers were employed and that on the day in question this number was not increased because no additional reserved sections were added; that the number of police at the track on this day was 17 as against 13 on the preceding week.

day. There was further testimony that spectators were in the habit of crowding onto the stairways just before the start of each race, and that spectators were in the habit of running to the betting windows just before each race started.

[1] In passing upon the motion for non-suit the trial judge asked: "should the track assume not only that a man is going to run but that he is going to run right into a person standing in the space that he must occupy, and guard against that?" This question pointed up the weakness of plaintiff's case. It was established that spectators were in the habit of congregating on the stairways at the start of each race and that bettors were in the habit of running to place bets at the last moment; but there was no evidence of any prior negligent conduct on the part of even one spectator. The liability of the landowner to provide against injury to an invitee from the act of another is based upon the fact that the landowner has notice of prior conduct from which he could reasonably anticipate that such injury might occur. Edwards v. Hollywood Canteen, 27 Cal.2d 802, 810, 167 P.2d 729; Terrill v. Key System, 69 Cal.App.2d 682, 159 P.2d 704; Stockwell v. Board of Trustees, 64 Cal.App.2d 197, 148 P.2d 405; Rest. Torts, sec. 348.

[2, 3] An injury of the sort which occurred to appellant could only happen if the conduct of the spectator who ran into her so violently as to knock her down was either negligent or wilful. It is axiomatic that in the absence of conduct to put him on notice to the contrary a person is entitled to assume that others will not act negligently or unlawfully. Leo v. Dunham, 41 Cal.2d 712, 715, 264 P.2d 1. We are satisfied that there was no evidence of any facts in this case which would reasonably put respondent on notice that one spectator would run violently into another so as to put the duty upon it to take steps to guard against such contingency. Such cases as have considered a like question in other jurisdictions support this conclusion. Futterer v. Saratoga Ass'n, etc., 262 App.Div. 675, 31 N.Y.S. 2d 108; Carr v. Mile High Kennel Club, 125 Colo. 251, 242 P.2d 238; Dahna v. Clay

BROADWAY FEDERAL SAVINGS and LOAN ASSOCIATION OF LOS AN-GELES, a Federal Savings and Loan Association, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

H. A. HOWARD et al., Defendants,

H. A. Howard, Appellant.

Civ. 20428.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

June 3, 1955.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing
June 15, 1955.

Hearing Denied July 27, 1955.

Action by savings and loan association to recover secret profits made by its president and general manager by use of the association's assets. From a judgment of Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clarence M. Hanson, J., in favor of the association, and from order denying motion for new trial, the former officer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that the officer had owed a fiduciary duty to the association and was liable to it for secret profits which he had concealed and which he had made in various transactions by use of the association, its facilities and assets.

Judgment affirmed and appeal from order denying motion for new trial dismissed.

I. Evidence 47

Rules and regulations for federal savings and loan system, issued pursuant to Home Owners' Loan Act, have force and effect of law and are judicially noticed. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1875, subds. 2, 3; Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, § 5(a, b), 12 U.S.C.A. § 1464(a, b); Federal Register Act, §§ 1-14, 44 U.S.C.A. §§ 301-314.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨931(1)

Evidence must be viewed on appeal in light most favorable to party successful in trial court.

3. Corporations ⇨307

One who is director or officer of corporation acts in fiduciary capacity and law does not allow him to secure any personal advantage against corporation.

4. Building and Loan Associations ⇨23(1)

Where defendant was director, general manager and president of savings and loan association, he owed fiduciary duty to it and was liable to it for secret profits which he concealed and which he had made in various transactions by use of the association, its facilities and assets.

5. Appeal and Error ⇨994(3), 1010(1)

In action by savings and loan association to recover secret profits made by its president and general manager by use of association's assets, it was exclusive province of trial judge to determine credibility of witnesses and weight to be given to their testimony.

6. Evidence ⇨317(2)

Where question, posed by judge, sought only witness' personal knowledge whether other members of board were aware of president's interest in certain transactions involving assets of association, witness' statement relevant to lack of knowledge on part of other directors as to president's interest in transactions was not hearsay.

7. Limitation of Actions ⇨197(2)

In action by savings and loan association to recover secret profits made by its president and general manager by use of association's assets, evidence supported finding that president and general manager was estopped to assert time limitation by his concealment of secret profits and of his interest in transactions whereby such profits were made.

8. Building and Loan Associations ⇨23(8)

In action by savings and loan association to recover secret profits made by its president and general manager by use of association's assets, evidence sustained judgment against him in amount in which it was rendered.

9. Building and Loan Associations ⇨23(8)

In action by savings and loan association to recover secret profits made by its president and general manager by use of association's assets, evidence sustained trial court's implied finding that such president and general manager received proceeds of check which was endorsed in name of payee by some one other than the payee and was then cashed by the association.

10. Building and Loan Associations ⇨23(8)

In action by savings and loan association to recover secret profits made by its president and general manager by use of association's assets, findings were not inconsistent in that one found certain amount due as secret profits received by defendant and the other found identical sum due on theory of money had and received for use and benefit of the association, where certain counts of complaint were in alternative.

11. Appeal and Error ⇨1071(6)

Though findings are required upon all material issues, judgment will not be set aside on appeal because of failure to make an express finding upon issue if finding thereon, consistent with judgment, results by necessary implication from express findings which are made.

12. Trial ⇨404(3)

Finding of ultimate fact includes finding of all probative facts necessary to sustain such ultimate finding, and it is unnecessary to state probative or evidentiary facts in findings.

13. Building and Loan Associations ⇨23(8)

In action by savings and loan association to recover secret profits made by its president and general manager by use of association's assets, wherein complaint alleged certain counts in alternative, and court rendered finding of certain sum due as secret profits received by defendant and another finding of identical sum due as money had and received for use and benefit of the association, latter finding was adequate finding in which court impliedly found in accordance with evidence presented by prevailing party, and amply supported judgment in amount specified.

14. Jury ⇨28(17)

Where trial by jury has been regularly and voluntarily waived, such waiver cannot later be withdrawn except in discretion of court.

15. Jury ⇨28(17)

Where relinquishment of jury trial is made before amendment to complaint, with full knowledge of facts and as matter of trial tactics, waiver is as binding as if made after amendment.

16. Jury ⇨28(17)

In action by savings and loan association to recover secret profits made by its president and general manager by use of association's assets, wherein defendant's waiver of jury trial was repeated after filing of second amended complaint and after five days of trial had oriented defendant as to nature of transactions relied upon by association, trial court's ordering non-jury trial after declaration of mistrial and after filing of third amended complaint which effected no material change in pleading and prayed for no different relief, was not abuse of discretion.

17. Appeal and Error ⇨151(2)

Where husband and wife cross-complained that plaintiff had slandered the title to wife's realty by allegedly wrongful mortgage foreclosure, husband was not aggrieved by order sustaining demurrers to cross-complaint without leave to amend and could not as sole appellant urge judicial error with respect thereto.

18. Libel and Slander ⇨130

Gravamen of an action for wrongful disparagement of title to real property is invasion of the interest in its marketability.

19. Libel and Slander ⇨139

Conventional elements of damage, in an action for wrongful disparagement of title to real property, are pecuniary loss caused by impairment of vendibility of interest in the property and the cost of clearing title from the disparaging claim.

20. Appeal and Error ⇨948

Burden of showing that trial court abused its discretion in not permitting an amendment to a pleading after sustaining of demurrer rests upon the pleader.

21. Appeal and Error ⇨681

Where record on appeal failed to show that cross-complaint, as to appellant, could be amended so as to state cause of action in appellant, he failed to sustain burden of showing that trial court abused its discretion in not permitting amendment after sustaining of demurrer.

22. Appeal and Error ⇨917(1)

In determining whether trial court had abused discretion in sustaining demurrer to cross-complaint without leave to amend, reviewing court would presume that appellant had pleaded all facts favorable to his case as strongly as it was possible for him to do.

23. Appeal and Error ⇨1170(1)

Where nothing appeared in record of action by savings and loan association to recover secret profits made by the president and general manager by use of association's assets indicated a miscarriage of justice, judgment could not be reversed. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Eric A. Rose, Long Beach, for appellant.

Sylvester Hoffmann, Los Angeles, for respondent.

FOX, Justice.

Plaintiff recovered judgment for (1) $17,667.46 against H. A. Howard,¹ alone; (2) $1,090.41 against Howard and Avalon Enterprises, Inc., jointly and severally, and (3) $5,581.18 against Avalon Enterprises, Inc., alone. No recovery was awarded against Dorothy B. Howard, wife of Howard. By the judgment the cross-complaint of the Howards was dismissed, plaintiff's demurrer thereto having been sustained without leave to amend. Mrs. Howard has not appealed. The appeal of Avalon Enterprises (hereinafter referred to as Avalon) has been dismissed. This leaves Howard as the only appellant.

By its third amended complaint² plaintiff sought to recover asserted secret profits which Howard made in a variety of transactions³ in which he made use of plaintiff and its assets, fraudulently, however, concealing his identity in these transactions from plaintiff and its board of directors.

In a memorandum ruling the trial judge summarized Howard's relation to plaintiff and his general modus operandi as follows:

"The defendant Howard for more than 25 years has been a real estate broker. His clientele for the most part has been the members of the colored race. Sometime prior to November, 1946, he concluded that a federal savings and loan association would not only be a valuable adjunct to his business, but would serve the needs of his community. With that in mind he applied to the Home Loan Bank Board at Washington for a charter under the name of Broadway Savings and Loan Association. This was granted in November, 1946.

The association opened for business in January, 1947, with a board of five directors. The defendant was not only a director but the president and general manager of the association. It is undisputed that he was the dominant figure in the association until he was ousted in September, 1949, at the instance apparently of the national Home Loan Bank Board.

"The defendant Avalon Enterprises, Incorporated, is wholly owned by the defendant Howard and his wife. It was employed by the plaintiff prior to September, 1949, to supervise and disburse some of the loans made by plaintiff to individual borrowers who were constructing their own homes.

[1] "The ability of the defendant Howard to make use of the lending powers of the plaintiff was severely restricted by the charter and the federal laws and regulations pertaining to federal savings and loan associations. He was prohibited, among other things, from borrowing money from the association except for a single loan on a home or combined home and business establishment occupied by him,⁴ or from selling loans to the association.⁵

2. This pleading is more than 100 pages in length.

3. Thirty-four counts are pleaded. However, counts 8, 10, 23 to 30, each inclusive, 33 and 34 were abandoned and dismissed. The findings and judgment, apparently by inadvertence, fail to enumerate count 32 as one of the counts that was abandoned and dismissed. The Reporter's Transcript, however, is clear that this count was in fact abandoned. The proceeds from the transactions alleged in counts 12 and 13 were traced to Avalon but not to appellant.

4. Rules and Regulations for the Federal Savings and Loan System, Chapter I(C), Title 24, Code of Federal Regulations (1949 Ed.), of the Home Loan Bank, issued and promulgated pursuant to Sec. 5, subds. (a) and (d), Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, 12 U.S.C.A. § 1464(a, b), as amended provide:

"Sec. 143.10, sub. (i) Loans to directors, officers, or employees. A federal association may not make a real estate loan to a director, officer or employee of the association * * *: Provided, That nothing herein shall prohibit a Federal association from making loans on the security of a first lien on the home or combination of home and business property owned and occupied by a director, officer or employee of an association * * *.

"Sec. 143.10 sub. (k) Initial loan charges. No director, officer, or employee of a Federal association * * * may receive from the association or from any other source any fee or other compensation of any kind in connection with the procuring of any particular loan from or by such association * * *."

These rules and regulations have the force and effect of law and are judicially noticed. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1875, subds. 2 and 3; 44 U.S.C.A. §§ 301-314; Home Owners' Loan Corp. v. Gordon, 1937, 36 Cal.App.2d 189, 97 P.2d 845; Livermore v. Beal, 1937, 18 Cal.App.2d 535, 541, 542, 64 P.2d 987; Woodward III v. Broadway Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n, 111 Cal.App.2d 218, 223, 244 P. 2d 467.

5. Paragraph 145.6-5. Purchase of Loans. This paragraph of the Rules and Regulations provides: "Any Federal association may purchase loans of any type that it "As the defendant was engaged as a real estate broker in buying and selling on his own account notes secured by either first or second trust deeds or mortgages, in providing real estate loans for persons who wished to buy property listed for sale or exchange with or owned by the defendant Howard, he found himself considerably handicapped in dealing with the association. He surmounted that difficulty in large part by operating in the names of third persons, at times with their consent, and sometime without such consent or knowledge. Without disclosing the manner in which he was operating to the board of directors he approved as president and general manager loans or purchases of existing trust deeds or mortgages and as a director voted approval of such purchases or loans in which he had a beneficial interest. These activities on the part of the defendant Howard were directly contrary to the Rules and Regulations issued by the Home Loan Bank Board.

"The plaintiff having ascertained on or sometime subsequent to September 1949 the factual situation it filed its action. The third amended complaint * * * sets forth various transactions in which the purchasing or lending powers of the association were employed by the defendant Howard in achieving secret profits of various kinds for which recovery is sought. * * *"

These views of the trial judge were carried into the findings in substantially the foregoing language.

The court further found that in numerous transactions the lending powers of the association and its powers to purchase loans were employed by Howard in making secret profits; that in certain of these transactions defendant caused to be acquired at a substantial discount promissory notes secured by trust deeds with the intent on his part to have such instruments paid for by the association at their face value and to personally receive the profit without the knowledge of the association, and that he was successful in so doing; that Howard concealed his identity and personal interest in these transactions from the plaintiff. In some of these transactions this concealment was effected through the use and identification of F. Marie Shaw, Lillian Marie Russell, and Olivia Mae Daniels. None of these individuals had any personal interest in any of the transactions and acted therein "as the dummy, agent, nominee or alter ego of Howard." In handling these purchases, Howard caused the records of plaintiff to show that plaintiff made each such purchase directly from the holder, who endorsed the note and assigned the trust deed securing payment thereof directly to plaintiff. Howard did not appear of record to have any interest therein. In order to further conceal from plaintiff his interest, Howard sometimes caused his profit in such transactions to be paid by plaintiff to Avalon. In other cases he concealed the profit by a check made payable to one of his "dummies" or caused the check for his profits to be made payable to the seller or to some third person who had no connection with or interest in the transaction without, however, the payee's knowledge or consent. Howard then "caused such payee's name to be forged, as an endorser and received the proceeds" from such checks.

Findings IX and X read as follows: IX. "In none of the transactions could Howard have taken a profit but for his having caused the plaintiff to act within the scope of its corporate powers at some point in the transaction, and in none of those instances could he have so caused it to act but for his position as director, president and general manager." X. "Howard at no time used any of his own funds or credit in the purchase of the aforesaid notes, or in any of the transactions wherein he took a secret profit, and the profit he received was wholly through the use of the funds, facilities and corporate entity of plaintiff. In each instance Howard caused the plaintiff to act within the scope of its corporate powers and as a result enabled Howard to profit."

may make; * * * Provided, That no loan may be purchased * * * from a director, officer or employee of such association, * * *"

The court also found that Howard purchased and sold certain real property in the financing of which transactions he made use of the plaintiff and its assets, in that the full purchase price was paid out of the proceeds or loans which he caused the plaintiff to make, each such loan being in an amount in excess of the cost of the property to Howard. He concealed from plaintiff his interest in these transactions by using the names of the persons hereinabove identified and of his real estate company, Avalon, and by means of multiple escrows. Howard never occupied, or intended to occupy, as a home or combination home and business, any of the property, the purchase of which he caused to be financed by plaintiff.

The court further specifically found that "Howard at no time used any of his own funds or credit in the purchase of such property." He retained the profit that was made on these transactions.

The court found that Howard, by the same devices as hereinbefore mentioned, procured loans from plaintiff for borrowers and received a fee or commission therefor, but concealed this fact from the association. The court also found that plaintiff did not discover any of the facts relating to its right of recovery from Howard or Avalon, or either of them, until the month of September, 1949, when a summary report of an audit made by the Home Loan Bank Board was presented at a meeting of plaintiff's directors. By reason of concealment, the court found that Howard and Avalon were estopped from urging or asserting the lapse of time as a defense to this action.

Similarly, the court found that Howard and Avalon were indebted to plaintiff for money had and received for its use and benefit in the amounts heretofore stated.

[2] Howard contends, among other things, that there is no evidence of fraud, bad faith, unfair dealings or other acts on his part which support the findings and judgment. It is therefore necessary to briefly summarize the evidence⁶ relative to the various transactions:

Count 1: In this transaction one Evans sold a note to plaintiff on which there was an unpaid balance of $1,462.70. He received from plaintiff $1,000, the amount of his demand. After paying the Recorder's fee and escrow expense totaling $62.70 a check for the balance of $400 was made out, on Howard's instructions, to C. R. Ransom, who was a real estate broker. There is no evidence that Mr. Ransom had ever met Evans or that he was entitled to a commission from plaintiff. Although the check bore the endorsement "C. R. Ransom" it was not, in fact, his signature and he received no funds therefrom. This check was cashed by plaintiff and the proceeds were given to Howard in cash.

Count 2: Amy Gaither listed her property for sale at Howard's real estate office. Howard, acting through Marie Shaw (described in his brief as the "undisclosed agent of defendant"), opened Escrow No. 1265 in plaintiff's escrow department for the purchase of Mrs. Gaither's property by Marie Shaw for $4,750. Simultaneously, Miss Shaw made application to plaintiff for a loan on the Gaither property of $5,250. Loan File 168 was opened in plaintiff's loan department. Miss Shaw's application falsely represented that she then owned the property and that she had paid $7,950 for it. The $5,250 loan was granted and the proceeds were transferred from Loan File 168 to the Gaither-Shaw escrow, No. 1265, and Gaither received her sales price out of the funds Shaw had borrowed from plaintiff. Miss Shaw received plaintiff's check for the remaining unexpended loan funds from the escrow in the amount of $430.03. She endorsed the check and deposited it in Howard's bank account at his request.

In a couple of weeks, Mrs. Searles visited Howard's real estate office in search of property to purchase. At Howard's direction, Escrow 1371 was opened in plaintiff's escrow department for the sale of the former Gaither property by Miss Shaw to

6. The evidence is viewed, as it must be on appeal, in the light most favorable to the successful party in the trial court.

Searles et ux. for $8,500 on the following terms: $1,500 cash, assumption of the loan to Miss Shaw, and a second trust deed for the balance. At the close of the escrow a note secured by a second trust deed of $1,802.63 payable to Miss Shaw, was delivered to her as the balance of the purchase price, together with plaintiff's check in her favor for the remaining portion of the cash payment made by Searles of $1,475. This check was endorsed by Miss Shaw and deposited in Howard's bank account. She also sold this note to plaintiff about a year later, and the proceeds therefrom were received by Howard. Howard made approximately $3,700 out of the various phases of this transaction.

Count 3: A secured note in favor of Green et ux., on which there was an unpaid balance of $4,198.23, was endorsed and delivered by them to plaintiff. Howard personally approved the transaction as a member of plaintiff's loan committee. The Greens received $3,100, the amount of their demand; $495 was used to pay plaintiff's loan fee and expenses. The remainder was paid by a check for $598, as a "commission" to Emma Morris, a real estate broker. Mrs. Morris, however, never knew anything about the transaction and did not represent any party to it. The check was endorsed "Emma Morris" but she testified it was not her signature. It was then cashed by plaintiff.

Count 4: Howard purchased from a church a secured promissory note, having an unpaid balance of $4,800, for $2,400. He sold the note to plaintiff at face value. Four hundred dollars was paid plaintiff "as an office charge." In his brief Howard admits that "$2,000.00 was paid to and received by him" in this transaction. It was handled in the name of Olivia Daniels, who was employed in his real estate office.

Count 5: Howard purchased a note secured by a trust deed from one Whisenant for $3,000 and then sold it to plaintiff "at face value." He admitted a profit of $1,200 on the transaction. The checks, however, in payment of this profit were made in the name of one Knighten, a real estate broker, who had no personal connection with the deal and who did not in fact endorse the checks.

Counts 7 & 16: (Same transaction but different theories.) In this transaction Mrs. Blodgett purchased a $10,000 property which she occupied as a tenant. She arranged through Howard to have the full purchase price financed by plaintiff. As it was necessary for her to leave Los Angeles on business, she authorized a Mrs. Cleveland, since deceased, to handle the transaction for her. Through a series of three escrows and a loan of $11,750 by plaintiff the purchase was consummated. Twelve hundred dollars ($1,200) of this amount was represented by a check to Mrs. Cleveland. Mrs. Blodgett did not authorize plaintiff to make such payment to her. The endorsement on the check was not that of Mrs. Cleveland. Howard was the last endorser and received the proceeds of the check.

Count 9: Howard purchased a promissory note secured by second trust deed on which there was an unpaid balance of $4,081.41 from one Mosby for $3,000. Plaintiff then purchased the note from Howard at face value. Howard admittedly received $834.41 out of the deal. This amount was represented by two checks: one for $700 and one for $134.40, both payable to Mosby, who, at Howard's request, endorsed them and handed them back to Howard.

Count 11: Through his agent, Marie Shaw, Howard purchased property owned by one Murray for $4,836.66. Then, also through Miss Shaw, he applied for and received a loan from plaintiff of $7,500 on the property based upon an appraisal of $11,500 which the loan committee of plaintiff approved. The application for the loan was in Howard's handwriting and misrepresented the purchase price. A check out of these funds for $2,604.84 in favor of Marie Shaw was signed by Howard who admits he received the proceeds thereof.

Counts 14 & 15: In this transaction Howard bought property from one Williams through and in the name of his agent, Lillian Russell, for $5,500. Plaintiff made a loan on this property of $10,000 which included improvements in the sum of $2,500. Miss Russell authorized payment out of the escrow of $275 as a "commission" to Marie Shaw, another of his agents. Although Miss Shaw worked in Howard's real estate office, her residence address was given. A check for $540.50 was issued to Miss Russell out of this escrow. At Howard's request she endorsed the check, had it cashed, and gave the proceeds to his bookkeeper, Marie Shaw. Howard admits receiving the proceeds of these checks. A third check for $660 was drawn against the funds in this escrow in favor of Paul Hairston. He never saw the check; the endorsement was not made by him; and plaintiff was not indebted to him in any amount.

Count 17: In this rather complicated transaction it appears that Bertha Lee Jenkins and her husband were interested in buying a piece of property that was in an estate for $8,750. They had $2,500 and went to Howard to borrow the difference. He agreed to arrange the loan to them from plaintiff. The loan of $7,500 was made to Lillian Russell, Howard's agent, who did not own the property, and assigned by her to plaintiff. Funds were then transferred from this loan to a Russell-Jenkins escrow and from this escrow to a Jenkins Estate escrow, and the sale to the Jenkinses was consummated and confirmed by the probate court. Marie Shaw received a check for $439 as a "commission" out of this transaction, and Lillian Russell a check for $772.75. The endorsement, however, was not Miss Russell's. Howard admits receiving the proceeds of both of these checks.

Count 18: Howard bought certain real property from one Jackson, taking title in the name of his agent Marie Shaw, who resold the property to Mae Lacy. A loan of $9,000 was made on the property by plaintiff. A check signed by Howard in favor of Marie Shaw for $1,089.95 was drawn against the funds in the escrow. She endorsed and cashed the check, and at his request deposited $1,000 of the proceeds in his bank account and put the balance in his cash drawer.

unpaid balance of $5,223.93. Howard agreed to purchase the note from her for $3,900. An escrow was opened for the purchase of the note by the plaintiff. She executed an assignment of the note and trust deed directly to plaintiff, at Howard's request. She also authorized payment out of the escrow of $1,082.18 to F. E. Johnson, whom she did not know. A check in that amount was signed by Howard in favor of Mr. Johnson. Howard, however, admits that the proceeds of this check were received by him.

Count 20: The Glicksteins owned a vacant lot and entered into an escrow at plaintiff's office with Lillian Russell, Howard's agent, to sell it to her for $2,800. While this escrow was pending, Howard had Miss Russell enter into another escrow with Mrs. Levy and Mrs. Coleman for the sale of this lot to them for $3,300. A third escrow was then opened for a construction loan on this property by plaintiff to Levy and Coleman. Funds were transferred from this loan to the other escrows. All three escrows were closed on the same day. The net profit on this transaction was $432.55, represented by plaintiff's check to Miss Russell, whose endorsement was made by Miss Shaw. Howard admits getting the proceeds of this check.

Counts 21 & 22: (Same transaction but different theories.) Howard, through his agent Marie Shaw, bought a parcel of realty from Foster and Dunn for approximately $4,330. To facilitate the purchase she entered into Escrow No. 1756. She then secured a loan from plaintiff for $5,750, for which purpose a second escrow, No. 1766, was opened between Miss Shaw and plaintiff. Miss Shaw's loan instructions were to pay the entire net proceeds of the loan escrow to the purchase escrow. Instead, only the net amount required to complete the purchase was transferred to Escrow No. 1756, and all the excess loan funds—$1,090.41—were paid to Avalon by plaintiff's check (signed on its face by Howard) and deposited in its account. At Howard's request and without explanation, Miss Shaw drew Avalon's check in favor of Howard, in the same amount, and deposited it in Howard's bank account.

Counts 6 and 31: Counts 6 and 31 are common counts for money had and received in the amount of $70,000. In these counts Howard's fiduciary relation to plaintiff is alleged. Count 31 incorporates by reference all of the other counts except Counts 6 and 10. It also alleges Howard's failure to disclose the facts of these transactions to plaintiff and that he "intentionally concealed" them from plaintiff.

[3,4] The law is settled that one who is a director or officer of a corporation acts in a fiduciary capacity and the law does not allow him to secure any personal advantage against the corporation. Bainbridge v. Stoner, 16 Cal.2d 423, 427, 106 P.2d 423. It is admitted that during the time the transactions here in question took place Howard was a director, general manager, and president of plaintiff. Thus his fiduciary duty to plaintiff was established. A reading of the foregoing summary of the transactions amply supports the trial court's determination that Howard personally profited from them at the expense of plaintiff through the use of the association, its facilities and assets and that in so doing he violated his fiduciary duty to plaintiff. From the character of the transactions, the manner in which they were handled, together with the reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom, and the testimony of Director Hudson, there is also ample support for the trial court's finding that Howard concealed his interest in these transactions from plaintiff and its board of directors and that the personal profits he thus made were unknown to plaintiff and its board and were secret in character. Under these facts, Howard's liability to plaintiff is unmistakably established. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Los Angeles v. Downey, 53 Cal. 466; Fleishhacker v. Blum, 9 Cir., 109 F.2d 543, certiorari denied 311 U.S. 665, 61 S.Ct. 23, 85 L.Ed. 427; Western States Life Ins. Co. v. Lockwood, 166 Cal. 185, 135 P. 496; Angelus Securities Corp. v. Ball, 20 Cal. App.2d 436, 67 P.2d 158; Pasadena Mercantile Finance Corp. v. De Besa, 122 Cal. App. 575, 10 P.2d 492; Industrial Indemnity Co. v. Golden State Co., 117 Cal.App. 2d 519, 256 P.2d 677; Blackburn's Adm'x

v. Union Bank & Trust Co., 269 Ky. 699, 108 S.W.2d 806. Furthermore, many of these transactions were in direct violation of the Rules and Regulations for the Federal Savings and Loan System for they represent loans on property which Howard was purchasing but in which he did not reside. See Footnote 4, infra.

[5,6] Appellant attacks the testimony of Director Hudson to the effect that he did not know of Howard's personal interest in and profit from any of these transactions and that so far as he knew other members of the board did not have any knowledge of these matters, on two grounds: (1) that he was antagonistic to Howard because he had been a defendant in a number of suits brought by Howard and had taken the latter's place as manager and chairman of the board of plaintiff association; and (2) that his statement relative to the lack of knowledge on the part of other directors that Howard was interested in these transactions was hearsay. The answer to the first charge is that it was the exclusive province of the trial judge to determine the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given to their testimony. The charge of hearsay is not well founded for the question, posed by the judge, only sought Hudson's personal knowledge as to whether the other members of the board were aware of Howard's interest in these deals. From Hudson's testimony it is apparent that Howard did not acquaint the board with his interest in any of these transactions when Hudson was present.

[7] Appellant then argues that apart from Hudson's hearsay testimony there is no evidence of concealment and that all of the competent evidence is to the contrary, consequently there is no support for the finding that Howard is estopped to assert the limitations of time. There are two difficulties with Howard's position. The first is that the trial judge could reasonably infer concealment on the part of Howard from: (1) the evidence that these transactions were carried in the names of his agents and upon occasion in the names of persons who were totally unaware of them; (2) the manner in which the checks representing the profits in these deals were handled; (3) the fact that Howard's name did not appear as a principal in any of these matters; and (4) the other facts and circumstances in the record indicating that his relation to and interest in these various transactions was not disclosed but, in fact, purposely and painstakingly covered up. From this the trial judge could reasonably draw the further inference that he concealed all this information from the board. Director Hudson's testimony that he had no knowledge of such matters, and, in effect, that Howard made no such disclosures to the board when he was present, lends support to this inference of concealment on the part of Howard. These facts and circumstances amply support the finding of estoppel.

The second difficulty lies in the trial judge's evaluation of Howard's testimony to the effect that he fully revealed to the board his interest in and relation to these various deals. The inescapable conclusion is that the judge did not believe him. In his memorandum ruling the judge said that material testimony given by appellant "was directly contrary to that given by him in a criminal trial in the federal court which likewise involved the activities of the defendant [appellant] in connection with the plaintiff corporation. Accordingly, defendant's [appellant's] credibility was seriously impaired."

[8] Appellant also argues that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the amount of the judgment against him. The total of the amounts proved under the counts herein summarized aggregates $18,927.43 which is $169.56 more than the total judgment⁷ against him. Thus Howard is not aggrieved.

[9] Count 3 is the only transaction about which there can be any serious question relative to Howard's getting the profit therefrom. He personally approved the purchase of the loan from the Greens. They received $3,100. Plaintiff's loan fees and expenses were $495. Upon someone's instructions, the balance of $598 was paid by check as a "commission" to Emma Morris, a real estate broker. Mrs. Morris, however, knew nothing about the transaction and represented no party to it. The check was endorsed "Emma Morris" but not by her. It was then cashed, on someone's authority, by plaintiff. The court could reasonably draw the inference from Howard's relation to the transaction, the fact that Mrs. Morris was not connected with it, the manner in which it was handled, and from all the testimony in the case, that Howard received the proceeds from this check although he denied it.

[10] Appellant vainly argues the findings are contradictory. Findings XVII and XVIII each find the precise amount for which judgment is entered in favor of plaintiff. One finding is on the theory of "secret profits received by" Howard and the other is upon the theory of "money had and received" by Howard "for the use and benefit of plaintiff." The identical amounts are found to be due plaintiff in each finding. There is no contradiction. Appellant's difficulty arises from his failure to recognize that certain counts are in the alternative, viz., Counts 7 and 16, Counts 21 and 22; and Counts 6 and 31. Also, Count 32 while not formally dismissed was abandoned.

[11, 12] Appellant also argues that the court failed to find on material issues. The rule is that "while findings are required upon all material issues a judgment will not be set aside on appeal because of a failure to make an express finding upon an issue if a finding thereon, consistent with the judgment, results by necessary implication from the express findings which are made." Richter v. Walker, 36 Cal.2d 634, 640, 226 P.2d 593, 596. There can be no question but that the court found adverse to Howard on each issue essential to his liability. His complaint is that the court did not in detail make an express finding as to the amount of his secret profits on each transaction, or, in other words, the amount of money he had received for the use and benefit of plaintiff in each of the counts that were not dismissed or abandoned. The finding, however, of the ultimate fact, viz., the amount due plaintiff, "includes the finding of all probative facts necessary to sustain" such ultimate finding. Fischer v. Ostby, 127 Cal. App.2d 528, 531, 274 P.2d 221; Haigler v. Donnelly, 18 Cal.2d 674, 677-678, 117 P.2d 331, and "it is unnecessary to state the probative or evidentiary facts * * *." Gschwend v. Stoll, 104 Cal.App.2d 806, 808, 232 P.2d 494, 495.

[13] Furthermore, finding XVIII, which is based on Count 31 which is a common count for money had and received for the use and benefit of plaintiff, is an adequate finding in which "the court impliedly found in accordance with the evidence presented by the prevailing party", Cherry v. Hayden, 100 Cal.App.2d 416, 420-421, 223 P.2d 878, 881, and amply supports the judgment. This justifies an affirmation insofar as the sufficiency of the findings is concerned. Eistrat v. Brush Industrial Lumber Co., 124 Cal.App.2d 42, 45, 268 P.2d 181.

Waiver of Jury

[14-16] Appellant also contends that the court erred in denying him the right to trial by jury. An examination of the record discloses, however, that appellant, both before and after the mistrial, filed written waivers of a jury trial. Plaintiff's original complaint was couched in the simple form of a common count for money had and received and sought a maximum recovery of $70,000. After first requesting a trial by jury, the defendants, on September 14, 1951, one day before the trial commenced signed a waiver of jury. During the course of the trial before Judge Mosk, plaintiff asked leave to file an amendment to its complaint. This was granted and such amendment was filed on September 19, 1951. The amended pleading set out in some detail about eight transactions and alleged that because of the clandestine nature of the dealings, defendants "are estopped from pleading, alleging or urging the lapse of time of any statute of limitations as a defense to this action." Defendants thereupon moved for a mistrial upon the grounds of surprise and unpreparedness to defend. Judge Mosk granted the mistrial and ordered plaintiff "to file a further amendment to the complaint naming every transaction upon which he (sic) relies." (Emphasis added.) A second amendment was filed on Oct. 1, 1951. On that date, with knowledge that a retrial would be held on amended pleadings setting forth the various transactions constituting plaintiff's claim, and after about five days of trial prior to the mistrial, during which the nature of plaintiff's case had been developed, defendants filed a second written waiver of jury trial, dated Sept. 28, 1951. Thereafter, plaintiff filed its third amended complaint on December 13, 1951, further amplifying and defining the transactions comprising its claim to recovery of the $70,000 originally sought. Defendant answered, interposing no affirmative defense. In March, 1952, and in January, 1953, defendants filed demands for a trial by jury. On June 30, 1953, the time set for trial of the action, plaintiff moved that the cause be transferred from the jury to the nonjury calendar. The Presiding Judge granted this motion, and the trial subsequently proceeded to the court sitting without a jury.

As the point of departure for our discussion of appellant's contention that he was entitled as of right to a jury upon retrial, we assume, arguendo, but without deciding, that notwithstanding defendants' waiver of trial by jury when this case was first at issue, their right to a trial by jury was restored, after the declaration of mistrial, with respect to subsequent proceedings. But this proposition is of no assistance to them since, following the mistrial, defendants again, in writing, unequivocally waived trial by jury. This was done (1) after five days of trial oriented them as to the nature of the transactions upon which plaintiff relied, (2) after plaintiff had already filed one amendment setting forth some eight specific transactions and introducing allegations charging appellant with concealment to estop defendants from relying on any statute of repose, and (3) with full knowledge that the court, on granting a mistrial, had ordered plaintiff to further amend, so that every transaction on which its action was predicated would be enumerated therein. In this posture of the case, defendants cannot escape the force of their solemn waiver of a jury trial after the mistrial by asserting that plaintiff added new issues to its original complaint by its third amendment. That amendment neither changed the cause of action nor altered the issues, nor effected any material change in the pleadings, nor prayed for any different relief; it merely particularized the transactions making up defendants' scheme of operations, much like a bill of particulars amplifies the obligation tersely stated in a common count. But what is here significant is that defendants, having advance notice that plaintiff's complaint was to be further amended to set forth every transaction, consciously chose to re-waive a jury upon the next trial without regard to the nature of the transactions set out. Defendants' relinquishment of a jury with full knowledge of the facts being a matter of trial tactics, the waiver is as binding upon them as if made after the amendment. See Cloud v. Market Street Ry. Co., 74 Cal.App.2d 92, 104, 168 P.2d 191. Where a trial by jury has been regularly and voluntarily waived, such waiver cannot later be withdrawn except in the discretion of the court. People v. Colton, 92 Cal.App.2d 704, 707, 207 P.2d 890. Under the circumstances previously related, which suggests no more than that defendants changed their minds after two waivers, the court did not abuse its discretion in having the case tried without a jury. Harmon v. Hopkins, 116 Cal.App. 184, 188, 2 P.2d 540.

Cross-Complaint

Appellant also urges that "the trial court erred in sustaining plaintiff's demurrer to the cross-complaint without leave to amend and granting plaintiffs' motion for dismissal of cross-complaint." A prefatory epitomization of the pleading in question is required in answer to this contention.

The cross-complaint was filed by appellant and Dorothy Howard and comprises six causes of action, all sounding in tort. The first two counts purport to state causes of action for slander of title to certain real property (for convenient reference, designated Lots 14 and 15) under substantially the following circumstances: it is alleged that Dorothy was and is the owner of the above-mentioned lots and through her sister, Colleen Williams, obtained from plaintiff loan No. 32 on Lot 14 and loan No. 281 on Lot 15, upon the execution of notes secured by trust deeds on the respective lots; that plaintiff wrongfully caused false notices of default and of trustee's sale to be published, thus clouding, slandering and rendering unmarketable the title to said property; that to eliminate the cloud, action No. 477518⁸ was instituted for an injunction to restrain the sale of said property and for an accounting of the amounts due under the respective notes; that a final judgment was entered enjoining and restraining plaintiff from selling lots 14 and 15 under the notices of default and granting other relief; that the sum of $5,000 was expended by cross-complainants for attorney's fees in prosecuting the above action; that the recordation of the notice of default and publication of the notice of trustee's sale "decreased the value of the property owned by Dorothy B. Howard and rendered it untenable, all to the damage of said real estate and to cross-complainants in the sum of $30,000." Exemplary damages to cross-complainants are also alleged.

The third and fourth counts make essentially the same allegations, except that they charge a conspiracy among plaintiff and others to cloud and slander Dorothy's title, causing great damage to the cross-complainants. The fifth and sixth counts reallege Dorothy's ownership of lots 14 and 15 and charge that plaintiff engaged in the acts previously described solely to embarrass "cross-complainant [presumably Dorothy] in the free enjoyment, use and disposition of said lots" and that cross-complainants' interests have been greatly depreciated and damaged because of such acts by plaintiff, which caused them vexation and harassment, and "rendered the value of cross-complainants' property un-

8. As appears in Count 5, this case was entitled "Colleen B. Williams and Dorothy B. Howard, Plaintiffs, v. Broadway Federal Savings & Loan Association of Los

[17] Plaintiff's separate, general and special demurrers were sustained without leave to amend. From the judgment effectuating these orders, appellant alone has appealed. Under such circumstances, whatever error, if any, inheres in the court's ruling as against his non-appealing co-party's (Dorothy's) rights cannot be asserted by Herbert as a ground for reversal. Fisher v. Nash Bldg. Co., 113 Cal.App.2d 397, 404, 248 P.2d 466; Landfield v. Gardner, 88 Cal.App.2d 320, 323, 198 P.2d 717. That being so, no merit attaches to appellant's claim of judicial error on this phase of the case. He, as the sole appealing party, has not been aggrieved by the court's rulings on the cross-complaint.

For it is amply clear from an analysis of that pleading that all the direct and consequential damages allegedly sustained under each count stem from the disparagement of Dorothy's title by plaintiff. Counts one and two are bottomed on an alleged slander of Dorothy's title to the lots in question. Counts three and four, charging a conspiracy to slander said title, are substantially similar to the previous counts. "Where two or more persons are sued for a civil wrong effected by conspiracy, it is the civil wrong resulting in damage, and not the conspiracy, which constitutes the cause of action." Biggs v. Tourtas, 92 Cal.App.2d 316, 206 P.2d 871. Counts five and six, based on the same recordation and publication of the notices of default and trustee's sale, add no new or distinct cause of action to the cross-complaint. They merely emphasize plaintiff's alleged notice as a foundation for exemplary damages by alleging the above publications were part of a course of harassment and vexation designed to interfere with the free use, disposition, enjoyment and vendibility of the two lots. At most, they reflect an alternate theory of the basis of recovery or measure of damages rather than a separable cause of action. Wells v. Lloyd IV, 6 Cal.2d 70, 88, 56 P.2d 517. The quintessence of the pleading is the injury to Dorothy's title and the damage flowing therefrom.

[18-22] The gravamen of an action for wrongful disparagement of title to real property is the invasion of the interest in its marketability. Phillips v. Glazer, 94 Cal. App.2d 673, 677, 211 P.2d 37. The conventional elements of damage are the pecuniary loss caused by the impairment of vendibility of the interest in the property and the cost of clearing title from the disparaging claim. Phillips v. Glazer, supra; Rest., Torts, sec. 663(b). Assuming for the sake of argument that the cross-complaint states a valid cause of action in favor of Dorothy, the non-appealing party, that pleading not only fails to allege the invasion of any legally protected interest in appellant, but inferentially even negatives such an implication. The cross-complaint discloses that the loans on the lots were obtained by Colleen B. Williams for Dorothy and the allegation is constantly iterated that Dorothy was the owner of the lots. No assertion is made that appellant had any interest therein. It is highly significant that action No. 577518, to enjoin the trustee's sale, was brought by Dorothy and Colleen Williams; appellant's brief refers to that action as one brought by Colleen and Dorothy "as plaintiffs and owners" of the two lots. Appellant was not a party to that action; and any right to recover attorney's fees expended in that action, if recoverable at all, accrued to Dorothy, and not to a stranger to the action who might have advanced such funds. It is thus plain that as to appellant the demurrer was properly sustained. The burden of showing that the trial court abused its discretion in not permitting an amendment rests upon appellant. Vilardo v. County of Sacramento, 54 Cal. App.2d 413, 417, 129 P.2d 165. That burden is not met where, as here, the record before us is devoid of any indication that the cross-complaint could be so amended as to state a cause of action in appellant. Paraco, Inc., v. Department of Agriculture, 118 Cal.App.2d 348, 358, 257 P.2d 981. Under such circumstances, it will be presumed that appellant pleaded all the facts favorable to his case as strongly as it was possible for him to do. Faulkner v. California Toll Bridge Authority, 40 Cal.2d 317, 328, 253 P.2d 659; Augustine v. Trucco, 124 Cal.

App.2d 229, 244, 268 P.2d 780. For the foregoing reasons, there is no basis for disturbing the court's judgment on the cross-complaint.

[23] We find nothing in the record indicating a miscarriage of justice. Under such circumstances the judgment may not be reversed. Art. VI, sec. 4½, Calif.Const.

The appeal from the order denying motion for new trial is dismissed. The judgment is affirmed.

v.

George L. JOHNSON, Defendant and Appellant,

Cr. 2600.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

June 24, 1955.

Hearing Denied July 20, 1955.

Defendant was convicted of violation of Vehicle Code. The Superior Court, Mercer County, R. R. Sischo, J., denied defendant's application, made after expiration of probation period, to have information and finding of guilt set aside, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Finley, J. pro tem., held that where it appeared that defendant had satisfactorily completed his probationary period, he was entitled to have information and finding of guilt set aside, notwithstanding that he had, after expiration of probation period, committed again offense of which he had been originally convicted.

Order reversed.

2. Criminal Law ⇨1023(12)

Where probationary period expired without revocation, order granting probation was a "final judgment" insofar as subsequent orders were concerned, and order subsequently denying application to have information and finding of guilt set aside was appealable as an order made after judgment, affecting substantial rights of defendant. It is not necessary, in order to have information and finding of guilt set aside upon completion of probationary period, that defendant prove total and permanent reformation or rehabilitation. Pen.Code, § 1203.

5. Criminal Law ⇨982

Withholding of privilege, after completion of probation, to have information and finding of guilt set aside, not amounting to a constitutionally guaranteed right, does not constitute punishment in sense that it is a penalty exacted by society for commission of a crime. Pen.Code, § 1203.

Word "shall" within statute relating to the setting aside of information and finding of guilt upon completion of probation period was intended to be mandatory, and, where a court finds that defendant has fulfilled conditions of probation for entire period, he is entitled as a matter of right to the benefits prescribed in the statute. Treadwell & Kane, Merced, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Doris H. Maier and F. G. Girard, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

FINLEY, Justice pro tem.

Defendant has appealed from an order of the trial court denying an application he made therein under the provisions of section 1203.4 of the Penal Code.

On September 6, 1950, an information was filed in the Superior Court for Merced County charging defendant with a violation of section 501 of the California Vehicle Code, a felony. Defendant pleaded not guilty, and after trial before the court sitting without a jury, he was found guilty as charged. Application for probation was made and granted. After his probationary period had expired, defendant, on October 7, 1954, petitioned the court for an order under the provisions of section 1203.4 of the Penal Code. In the petition he alleged that he had successfully completed his probationary period on January 2, 1954, and prayed that the information and finding of guilt by the trial court be set aside. A hearing on the petition was held, at which time the trial court, over defendant's objection, admitted and considered evidence concerning a subsequent violation by defendant of the provisions of section 501 of the Vehicle Code occurring on August 12, 1954. Defendant offered no opposing evidence but did offer evidence, which was not refuted, that he had successfully completed his term of probation on January 2, 1954, some seven months prior to the August 12, 1954, violation.

Two questions are presented for determination herein. The first: Under the provisions of section 1237 of the Penal Code and the circumstances of this case, is the order granting probation to be deemed a final judgment so that, under subdivision 3 of the section, an appeal would lie from the order denying defendant's petition to have the information and finding of guilt set aside as being an "order made after judgment, affecting the substantial rights" of appellant? The second question: At the hearing on defendant's petition, did the trial court, in passing upon the petition, properly admit and consider evidence of a law violation occurring subsequent to the successful termination of the probationary period which, had it occurred within that period, would have constituted a violation?

[1, 2] With reference to the first question, respondent argues that since an order revoking probation has been held not to be an appealable order prior to the pronouncement of judgment, People v. Robinson, 43 Cal.2d 143, 271 P.2d 872, so should an order denying a defendant's application under the provisions of Penal Code section 1203.4, following an order granting probation, be nonappealable. The circumstances and reasoning are, however, quite different. The purpose of revoking probation is so that judgment and sentence may be pronounced. An appeal then lies from the judgment whereupon the validity of all orders made prior to judgment becomes reviewable by the appellate court. People v. Boyce, 99 Cal.App.2d 439, 221 P.2d 1011. But if the probationary period expires without revocation, there can then be no formal judgment, and the order granting probation under the provisions of Penal Code, section 1237, must be considered as the final judgment in so far as any order made thereafter "affecting the substantial rights of the party" are concerned. People v. McCree, 128 Cal.App.2d 196, 275 P.2d 95; People v. Camargo, 130 Cal.App.2d 543, 279 P.2d 194. In the present case it appears from the record that after granting probation the trial court thereupon immediately went further and pronounced formal judgment of conviction. That point is not raised by either party on this appeal, however, so we shall consider it no further.

[3-5] As to the second point raised by appellant, we are satisfied that it is well taken, and that for the purpose of passing upon appellant's petition the trial court improperly admitted and considered evidence of a criminal episode involving defendant, which took place some seven months after his probationary period had expired. The granting of probation, aside from being an act of clemency extended to one who has committed a crime, is also in substance and effect a bargain made by the People, through their legislature and courts, with the malefactor. The Penal Code, section 1203 et seq., dealing with the subject of probation, provide in effect that in granting probation the People of the State, speaking through their courts, may say to one who has committed a crime, "If you will comply with these requirements you shall be entitled to this reward." The purpose and hope are, of course, that through this act of clemency, the probationer may become reinstated as a law abiding member of society. Removal of the blemish of a criminal record is the reward held out through the provisions of Penal Code, section 1203.4, as an additional inducement. The obvious purpose is to secure law compliance through an attempt at helpful cooperation rather than by coercion or punishment. The law does not require positive proof of total and permanent reformation or rehabilitation as a condition to surrender of the right to impose judgment and sentence, for there could be no such proof. Neither People v.

Majado, 22 Cal.App.2d 323, 70 P.2d 1015, nor In re Phillips, 17 Cal.2d 55, 109 P.2d 344, 132 A.L.R. 644, cases cited by respondent, lays down any such requirement. The theory seems to be that if one with a reasonably satisfactory background commits a crime, the experience of apprehension and processing through court, together with the restrictions imposed through probation upon unlawful or intemperate conduct, may effect a greater degree of reformation than jail or prison confinement, and a showing that the terms of probation have been complied with would support a hope, at least, that reformation had been accomplished. At any rate the statute requires no further proof thereof. No provision of the law has been brought to our attention, other than that contained in Penal Code, section 1203.4, which authorizes retroactive punishment for wrongdoing subsequent to the expiration of the probationary period. The withholding of a privilege not amounting to a constitutionally guaranteed right does not constitute punishment in the sense that it is a penalty exacted by society for the commission of a crime. In re Phillips, supra.

[6-9] It is true that the word "shall" when appearing in a statute is not necessarily mandatory, and may be construed as directory or permissive, depending upon the intent of the legislature. Cake v. City of Los Angeles, 164 Cal. 705, 130 P. 723; In re Estate of Mitchell, 20 Cal.2d 48, 123 P.2d 503; Carter v. Seaboard Finance Co., 33 Cal.2d 564, 203 P.2d 758. But it is also true that "When language which is reasonably susceptible of two constructions is used in a penal law ordinarily that construction which is more favorable to the offender will be adopted." People v. Valentine, 28 Cal.2d 121, 143, 169 P.2d 1, 14; Downing v. Municipal Court, 88 Cal.App.2d 345, 349, 198 P.2d 923. It is our interpretation of Penal Code section 1203.4 that the word "shall" as used therein was intended by the legislature to be mandatory, and if, upon the evidence and the record, a court finds that the defendant (to use the exact language of the section) "has fulfilled the conditions of his probation for the entire period thereof, or who shall have been discharged from probation prior to the termination of the period thereof", said defendant is entitled as a matter of right to the benefits prescribed in said section. It was apparently intended that where a defendant has performed the requirements laid down in terms of probation the court should have no discretion but to carry out its part of the bargain with said defendant, even though it might appear at the time of application for said benefits that complete and permanent reformation or rehabilitation has not been accomplished.

Inasmuch as here defendant's probationary period had expired prior to the filing of his petition for the benefits made available under Penal Code, section 1203.4, and in view of the lack of any evidence that he had not fulfilled the requirements demanded thereunder, the defendant is entitled to have his petition granted.

The order appealed from is reversed.

The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Walter C. Allen, J., entered judgment for defendant and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that plaintiff failed to meet burden of proving defendant's negligence by credible evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Master and Servant ☞265(2, 3)

2. Negligence ☞136(14)

Negligence is ordinarily question of fact.

4. Master and Servant ☞284(1)

FOX, Justice.

This action was brought under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51 et seq. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment based on findings that defendant was free from negligence.

Plaintiff had been employed as a car man by defendant for a number of years prior to June, 1951. His duties were to clean motor blocks by dipping the block into a large vat containing a very hot oakite solution. The motor blocks weigh some 500 pounds each. An overhead crane was used in raising and lowering the blocks. It was made of iron, set in concrete and operated by air. There were two hooks which attached to each end of the block by exhaust studs and a big ring that hooked in the pulley and raised the blocks. Plaintiff used his hands to steady the blocks as they were being raised from the vat.

On June 6, 1951, when plaintiff was raising a motor block out of the vat, it swayed to one side and one of the studs caught on the steam pipes in the vat causing one end to become detached from the crane. Plaintiff claims to have reached out over the vat, caught the end of the motor block and pulled it over the edge, thus preventing the block from falling back into the solution. It was then that his feet slipped and he injured his back. Plaintiff was working alone at the time.

Plaintiff testified that the crane had a tendency to run backwards when pulled around to the south and had had this tendency ever since he had been there. Plaintiff said he had spoken to the foreman about it. This was his only complaint about the equipment or its operation.

Plaintiff had regularly and steadily operated this particular crane since some time in 1948 or 1949. He was thoroughly familiar with his job and the operation of the equipment. He was doing the job "in the usual and customary manner. There wasn't anything different from what it had been all the time." The crane had been completely dismantled and overhauled on at least two occasions—the last one in 1950. It was greased weekly.

[1-5] "To recover under the act it is incumbent upon plaintiff to establish that the railway company was negligent and that such negligence was a proximate cause of his injury." Crowder v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 117 Cal.App.2d 568, 571, 256 P.2d 85, 87; Spencer v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 92 Cal.App.2d 490, 494, 207 P.2d 126; Eckenrode v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 335 U.S. 329, 69 S.Ct. 91, 93 L.Ed. 41. In the instant case the court found that defendant was not guilty of any negligence which was a proximate cause of injury to plaintiff. He argues, however, that this finding is not supported by the evidence. Negligence is, of course, ordinarily a question of fact. There is nothing in the evidence herein to justify not applying the general rule. It was, therefore, incumbent upon plaintiff to establish defendant's negligence as a fact by a preponderance of the evidence. To do this plaintiff points to his own testimony. The trial judge, however, had the responsibility of evaluating such testimony and of determining the weight to be given to it and the credibility of plaintiff. In passing on these matters, the judge could consider plaintiff's "interest in the result of the case, the manner in which he testified", Devens v. Goldberg, 33 Cal.2d 173, 180, 199 P.2d 943, 948, the character of his testimony, and other relevant circumstances. Implicit in the finding in favor of defendant on the question of negligence is the court's failure to give full credence to plaintiff's story. Since plaintiff failed to meet the burden of proving defendant's negligence by credible evidence, the finding on that crucial issue was necessarily against him. Hence he has failed to establish any right of recovery.

[6] The difficulty of plaintiff's position is that he would have this court reweigh the evidence, reevaluate plaintiff's credibility and draw inferences contrary to those drawn by the trial court. Under settled principles, a reviewing court may not do this.

The judgement is affirmed.

June 27, 1955.

Appeal by plaintiff from order of the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, H. A. van der Zee, J., granting defendant's motion to dissolve an attachment. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. J., held that where plaintiff had lost right to appeal from judgment in favor of defendant, attachment was properly dissolved even though plaintiff had been granted a new trial.

Order affirmed.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨460(2)

Where plaintiff failed and refused to furnish undertaking although written notice

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order granting defendant's second motion to dissolve an attachment, after the first such motion had been denied.

[1] Plaintiff sued on an accepted sight draft given in Mexico City and, in a second cause of action, on a judgment given in Mexico City upon the draft. Contemporaneously he secured an attachment which was levied on certain shares of stock owned by defendant. Pursuant to a trial judgment was entered for defendant on November 26, 1951. No formal written notice of entry of judgment was given to plaintiff. On December 4, 1951, plaintiff served and filed notice of intention to move for a new trial. On January 3, 1952, defendant served and filed notice of motion to dissolve the attachment. On January 28, 1952, plaintiff's motion for a new trial was granted. On February 6, 1952, defendant's motion to dissolve the attachment was denied. Thereafter defendant timely appealed from the granting of plaintiff's motion for a new trial and from the denial of her motion to dissolve the attachment. The order granting the new trial was affirmed by the other division of this court on June 30, 1953 in Henderson v. Drake, 118 Cal.App.2d 777, 258 P.2d 879, which judgment has become final. The order denying defendant's motion to dissolve the attachment was affirmed by the Supreme Court on December 31, 1953, Henderson v. Drake, 42 Cal.2d 1, 264 P.2d 921. On January 12, 1954, defendant noticed her second motion to dissolve the attachment, which was granted by minute order on February 4, 1954 after the remittitur of the Supreme Court decision had come down. On February 11, 1954 the Superior Court entered a written order in which it found that plaintiff had failed to appeal from the judgment for defendant and that the time for such appeal had expired, wherefore the attachment was ordered dissolved and the Sheriff directed to release any attachment levied and to notify all garnishees of the release. The appeal before us is from the two orders of February 4 and February 11, 1954.

In its decision, 42 Cal.2d 1, 264 P.2d 921, 922, the Supreme Court gave a construction of Sections 553 and 946 of the Code of Civil Procedure decisive of this appeal. Section 553 provides in part, "If the defendant recovers judgment against the plaintiff, and no appeal is perfected and undertaking executed and filed as provided in section 946 of this code * * * all the property attached * * * must be delivered to the defendant or his agent, the order of attachment be discharged, and the property released therefrom" and Section 946, "An appeal does not continue in force an attachment, unless an undertaking be executed and filed on the part of the appellant * * * and unless, within five days after written notice of the entry of the order appealed from, such appeal be perfected." The Supreme Court held that the effect of these sections was "that the attachment remains effective as long as an appeal may be taken unless written notice of entry of judgment is given, in which event the attachment perdures for only five days after such notice unless an appeal is perfected within that time." It was further held that when on February 6, 1952 the trial court decided the first motion to dissolve the attachment, defendant could still appeal the order granting a new trial, and if defendant would do so, plaintiff under rule 3(a) of the Rules on Appeal would have 20 days after mailing of notification by the clerk of such appeal to appeal from the judgment. "Therefore, on February 6, 1952, there was still an opportunity for plaintiff to perfect an appeal, file an undertaking, and in that manner keep alive the attachment, and the trial court correctly refused to order that the attachment be dissolved."

It is undisputed that when defendant did appeal from the order granting a new trial plaintiff did not avail himself of his right of cross-appeal of the judgment under rule 3(a), and that when the second motion to dissolve the attachment was decided, plaintiff had lost all opportunity to perfect an appeal from the judgment for defendant. That is what distinguishes the situation at the time of the second motion to dissolve from the one at the time of the earlier motion and what justifies the opposite result.

Appellant contends that the Supreme Court cannot have intended to hold that plaintiff, to keep his attachment alive, should have taken an appeal from the judgment after it had been set aside on his motion for a new trial. The majority opinion did not expressly state what effect if any the motion for and the granting of a new trial had on the life of the attachment, but decided the appeal solely on the ground that the right to appeal had not yet been lost. See 42 Cal.2d at page 5, 264 P.2d at page 923 "Regardless of the effect or lack of effect on the attachment of the order granting a new trial * * *." However, the point is treated at length in one of the dissenting opinions, 42 Cal.2d at pages 8-9, 264 P.2d at page 924, stating the rule "that the pendency of a motion for a new trial or the granting of that motion does not operate to stay the extinguishment of an attachment * * *." This court came to the same conclusion in its opinion on the appeal of the order denying the first motion to dissolve the attachment, Henderson v. Drake, Cal.App., 255 P.2d 875, after which the Supreme Court granted the hearing which resulted in the opinion in 42 Cal.2d 1, 264 P.2d 921. There is no conflict between the majority opinion and that of this dissenting justice or of our court as the point is not treated in the majority opinion. No good purpose would be served by repeating the arguments given in the two opinions mentioned. On the grounds there stated we hold that our code does not provide for the keeping of an attachment in effect in case of a motion for or the granting of a new trial, and that to maintain the attachment plaintiff should have appealed.

As he did not do so the attachment was correctly dissolved.

[2] Appellant urges that even if the order dissolving the attachment was correct its effect was stayed by his appeal and that therefore the Sheriff should not have been ordered to release the attachment levied. His contention was rejected by the trial court when it denied a motion to vacate the order of February 11. Appellant contends that the question whether the appeal of the order dissolving an attachment stays its effect is governed by the general stay provision of Section 949 Code of Civil Procedure not by the quoted provision of Section 946 with respect to the effect of an appeal on an attachment. We do not agree. Sections 553 and 946, supra, clearly show the intent that no attachment will remain in effect after judgment for defendant during the often prolonged period of an appeal unless the undertaking of Section 946 has been executed and filed. There is as much reason for such security when the appeal is taken from the order dissolving the attachment as when the appeal is taken from the judgment for defendant. In Hallam Cooley Agency v. Superior Ct., 30 Cal. App.2d 20, 85 P.2d 457 and Albertsworth v. Glens Falls Indem. Co., 84 Cal.App.2d 816, 821 et seq., 192 P.2d 66 the court assumes that Section 946 is applicable to an appeal from an order dissolving an attachment where an undertaking to keep the attachment in effect has been furnished. In Flagg v. Puterbaugh, 101 Cal. 583, 584, 36 P. 95, the Supreme Court clearly indicates that an appeal from an order dissolving an attachment is authorized although it will not preserve the lien of the attachment. In Doud v. Jackson, 102 Cal.App. 213, 283 P. 107 it was held that the question whether the attachment had lapsed by failure to file undertaking on appeal under Section 946 when appeal was taken from an order to dissolve attachment becomes immaterial on the affirmance of said order; it does not appear that in that case there had been a judgment for defendant. In the case before us, although written notice of the order dissolving the attachment had been given, appellant failed and refused to furnish the undertaking of Section 946 or any undertaking on appeal, notwithstanding the fact that a judgment for defendant had been rendered which was not appealable at that time. Under these circumstances the attachment was not kept in effect by the appeal from the order dissolving the attachment, which order moreover will be affirmed.

Orders affirmed.

John Hayden KERNS, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5346.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,

June 24, 1955.

Defendant was convicted of burglary in the second degree. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Joe Raycraft, J., rendered judgment on the verdict, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that trial court's overruling of defendant's objections to questions, asked him as witness by deputy district attorney, as to whether he recalled telling a police officer about a woman being with defendant when he broke window of another store than that of alleged burglarized store, on ground of their irrelevancy, was not error or prejudicial to defendant, in view of instruction to jury, limiting application of defendant's testimony, answering questions in negative, to its bearing on question of defendant's guilt of crime charged, and defendant's previous testimony that he broke window of burglarized store and entered it to search for receipts desired by woman waiting for him in automobile across street from store.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Burglary $\S$ 41(1)

Evidence was sufficient to warrant conviction of burglary in second degree.

2. Criminal Law $\S$ 372(10)

In prosecution for burglary of store entered by defendant after breaking window, questions, asked defendant as witness by deputy district attorney, as to whether defendant recalled telling police officer, about five years before crime charged, about a woman being with defendant when he broke window of another store, were not objectionable as irrelevant, in view of defendant's testimony that he broke window of and entered burglarized store to search for receipts desired by woman waiting for him in automobile across street from store and such officer's testimony as to defendant's similar descriptions of the two women.

3. Criminal Law $\S$ 673(5)

In prosecution for burglary of store entered by defendant after breaking window, trial court's overruling of defendant's objections on ground of irrelevancy, to questions, asked him as witness by deputy district attorney, as to whether he recalled telling police officer, five years before crime charged, about a woman being with defendant when he broke window of another store, was not error or prejudicial to him, in view of instruction to jury, limiting application of defendant's testimony, answering questions in negative, to bearing thereof on question of his guilt of crime charged, defendant's previous testimony that he entered burglarized store to search for receipts desired by woman waiting for him in automobile across street from store, and such officer's testimony as to defendant's similar descriptions of the two women.

4. Criminal Law $\S$ 372(1)

When accused's conduct in offense previous to crime charged bears such similarity in significant respects to his behavior at time of commission of such crime as naturally to be explained as caused by general plan, similarity is not merely coincidental, but indicates that defendant's conduct was directed by design, so as to render evidence of such previous conduct relevant.

5. Criminal Law $\S$ 369(2)

Remoteness of offense committed by accused before crime charged affects only weight, not relevancy, of testimony as to such prior offense.

6. Criminal Law $\S$ 372(1)

Evidence merely tending to show accused's attempt to commit other offenses than that charged may be received to prove common scheme or plan, though insufficient to prove corpus delicti of such other offenses.

7. Criminal Law $\S$ 371(6), 1169(11)

In burglary prosecution, where defendant placed his intent in issue by testifying on direct examination that he had no intention to steal anything, trial court's permission of prosecution to cross-examine defendant as to circumstances of prior attempt by him to commit burglary, was not error prejudicial to defendant, and evidence elicited on such cross-examination was proper and admissible.

8. Criminal Law $\S$ 781(1)

In burglary prosecution, instruction informing jury that defendant had made statements at variance with his testimony and defining confession was pertinent and appropriate, in view of police inspector's testimony as to defendant's statements that he was in burglarized store to help a woman, his refusal to identify her, his failure to state whether he was ever inside store before, and his statements that he was supposed to meet such woman in front of store to help her and that his purpose in going there was to pick up some clothing.

9. Criminal Law $\S$ 1186(4)

In burglary prosecution, defendant was not prejudiced by his cross-examination respecting his statement to police five years before crime charged when questioned about similar act of trespass, nor by court's instruction to jury, where evidence proved him guilty and he did not question sufficiency of proof to warrant conviction nor state any fact indicating his innocence at time of his arrest or at trial, there being no miscarriage of justice. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Appellant was convicted of burglary in the second degree. Also, he was found to have had two prior felony convictions, to wit, robbery and forgery. His motion for a new trial having been denied, he now seeks a reversal of both judgment and order on the grounds of error in admitting testimony and in giving an erroneous instruction.

[1] Mrs. Harvey and Mrs. Streeter, sisters, closed their store in Long Beach about five p. m. and securely locked the doors. About 11:15 p. m., Miss Mershimer who lived near the store was on her way home accompanied by a girl friend. She observed appellant with some keys trying to gain entrance into that establishment. He soon despaired of success with his gentle approach, kicked out the window and crawled in. Thereupon, the observant girls called police who promptly arrived and took the house-breaker in charge. About eight minutes after he had entered, the officers brought him from the rear to the front door. There Miss Mershimer recognized him as the person she had observed break the window. She had seen him often in the vicinity and knew him as the brother of a girl friend who resided just across the street from the store. The testimony of Officer Hainley who found appellant inside the store, observed the broken glass, heard the deceptive story of the culprit and his refusal to answer questions that were harmless for an innocent man was sufficient when added to that of Miss Mershimer to warrant a conviction. But in addition, appellant took the stand and reeled off a bizarre narrative of having imbibed liquor at several bars, met a woman named Ardis with whom he drank beer at three saloons. He had seen her near the Harvey store while he roomed at his sister's home. She was 35 or 36 years of age, five feet, four inches tall, with dark hair, prematurely gray. He testified that he sat for a while in Ardis' car; that she stated she was leaving for Nevada that night to get a divorce, but had to pick up a few things at the "clothing exchange store" of herself and her husband before she left; that she must go to her husband's place to get the keys. He testified that she left and soon returned, saying that she could not get the keys, but must get two envelopes in the store, two dresses of her own and would appellant assist her in getting them. He testified that they drove to a point near the Harvey store and parked; that Ardis said it would be all right for him to break in; that while Ardis remained in the car across the street he broke the window and crawled through to the inside; that he tried to open the door; could not; searched for the envelopes containing receipts she desired. He never asked her name, nor did she ask his.

[2-6] After testifying that he had been convicted of robbery and forgery, he was asked by the deputy district attorney:

"Q. Do you recall back in 1949 telling the officers about a Marie that was with you when you broke the window of another store? A. No.

"Q. Well, to refresh your recollection, this officer sitting here to my left, Inspector Wishon, you recall him do you not? A. Yes.

"Q. You have talked to him before, have you not? Don't you recall back in 1949 when he was questioning you about breaking a window at a place over at 3301 Eleventh in Long Beach and you told him that you had gone by there with a girl named Marie and that she had vanished when the police arrived? Do you remember that story? A. No, I don't."

To the first of such questions, appellant objected on the ground that it was irrelevant. But it was not irrelevant. Inspector Wishon had testified concerning the circumstances of appellant's arrest for trespass in February 1949 when appellant had said that prior to such arrest he had picked up a girl named Marie, in the Cinnabar Cafe; that they had engaged in intercourse back of that establishment; that when they were frightened, Marie ran away while he was caught by the officers; that she was 28 to 30 years of age, about five feet, six inches tall, weighed 128 pounds, had black hair. Wishon further testified that appellant in conversation with him on October 4, 1954, gave a description of the woman who had had him enter the store for her, said she was 28 to 30 years of age; five feet, six inches tall, dark hair and weighed 128 pounds. Appellant assigns as prejudicial the court's overruling his objections to such questions, and contends that such testimony did not come within exceptions to the general rule that prior unlawful acts of an accused are not admissible to prove his guilt of the act for which he is on trial; that they did not tend directly to establish the crime alleged or show intent or a common scheme embracing both offenses; that the evidence as to the previous incident must be identical with or very similar and close in time to the act alleged in the matter at bar.

There are two answers to such contentions. (1) The court read an instruction¹ limiting the application of the testimony objected to. It is observed that the jury were forbidden to infer therefrom a distinct offense but the evidence was received for such bearing as it might have on the question: "whether the defendant is innocent or guilty of the crime charged against him in this action." (2) It is the law that when the conduct of an accused person in a previous offense bears such similarity in significant respects to his behavior at the time of the commission of the crime under investigation "as naturally to be explained as caused by a general plan, the similarity is not merely coincidental but indicates that the defendant's conduct was directed by design." Remoteness of prior offense affects only the weight and not its relevancy. People v. Burns, 109 Cal.App.2d 524, 537 et seq, 241 P.2d 308, 242 P.2d 9; People v. Rickson, 112 Cal.App.2d 475, 479, 246 P.2d 700. Evidence which merely tends to show an attempt to commit other offenses may be received to prove a common scheme or plan "even though it falls short of proving the corpus delicti of such other offenses." People v. Lisenba, 14 Cal.2d 403, 431, 94 P.2d 569, 583.

In the light of such authorities, it appears without extended suasion that appellant's story to the officer in 1949 is so nearly identical with that related after his apprehension in 1954 in attempting to exculpate himself from the burglary charge that the inference is irresistible that he had one permanent excuse for explaining his behavior. He had one woman to hide behind; in each instance she was in detail the same—the progeny of his imagination. He had met her in a cafe; she went to their rendezvous

1. CALJIC 33. In re Evidence of Other Offenses

"Evidence was offered in this case for the purpose of showing that the defendant committed another crime than the one of which he is accused and for which he is on trial in this action, namely, that of trespass, a misdemeanor.

"Such evidence was received for a limited purpose only: not to prove distinct offenses or continual criminality, but for such bearing, if any, as it might have on the question whether the defendant is innocent or guilty of the crime charged against him in this action.

"You are not permitted to consider that evidence for any other purpose, and as to that purpose you must weigh such evidence as you do all other in the case.

"The value, if any, of such evidence depends on whether or not it tends to show—

"That the defendant possessed knowledge that might have been useful in the commission of the crime for which he is now on trial; (or)

"That there existed in the mind of the defendant a plan, scheme, system or design, into which fitted the commission of the offense for which he is now on trial.

"On the question whether or not the defendant possessed knowledge that might have been useful in the commission of the crime for which he is now on trial you may consider, for such bearing, if any, as it may have on that question the evidence that was offered to prove that previously he had committed another crime."

gladly; on neither occasion was the woman's name known to appellant; nor was any such woman ever found. Such conduct shows a common design, the same recipe for explaining in event of capture, or for establishing an alibi.

[7] Appellant himself placed his intent in issue when he testified on direct that he had no intention of stealing anything. In one action for rape, even though a former offense resulted in no prosecution, when the defendant was brought to trial for having entered prosecutrix' home to commit rape, he testified that he had no intent to commit rape. Evidence of his having, three months before, crawled into a bed where a woman and her husband slept, was admissible to rebut his disclaimer of intent when he entered the prosecutrix' abode. People v. Kinder, 122 Cal.App.2d 457, 464, 265 P.2d 24. No prejudicial error occurred in allowing the prosecution to cross-examine the defendant with reference to the circumstances of his prior attempt and the evidence elicited was proper and admissible. Ibid.; see People v. Peete, 28 Cal.2d 306, 319, 169 P.2d 924; People v. Kynette, 15 Cal.2d 731, 746, 104 P.2d 794; People v. Zatzke, 33 Cal.2d 480, 484, 202 P.2d 1009; People v. Thorne, 10 Cal.2d 705, 706, 76 P.2d 491.

[8] Appellant assigns as prejudicial error the giving of the instruction set out on the margin below.² The purpose of such instruction was to inform the jury that appellant had made statements at variance with his testimony at the trial and to define confession. It was followed by the instruction that the jury be cautious in considering any oral admission. The instruction quoted was pertinent and appropriate in view of appellant's statements to Inspector Wishon that he was in the store to help out a woman, his refusal to identify the lady, his failure to tell whether he had ever been inside the store before, his statement that he was supposed to meet the woman in front of the store to help her and that his purpose in going there was to pick up some clothing.

[9] In any event, neither by the cross examination of appellant with reference to his statement to the police in 1949 when questioned about his act of trespass, nor by the court's instruction was he prejudiced. Not only does all the record prove him guilty but he did not question the sufficiency of the proof. After the report had been telephoned that he was seen entering the place through a hole he had created by breaking out the glass, he was apprehended and arrested within the premises near midnight. He did not state a single fact, as against the People's proof, that would indicate his innocence then or at the trial. There is no legitimate basis for reversing

"Evidence has been received in this case tending to show that on occasions other than this trial the defendant himself made statements tending to prove his guilt of the alleged crime for which he is on trial.

"A statement thus made by a defendant may be either a confession or an admission.

"A confession is a statement that was made by one who is a defendant in a criminal trial, at a time when he was not testifying in that trial, by which he acknowledged certain conduct of his own that constituted a crime for which he is on trial, a statement which, if true, discloses his guilt of that crime and excludes the possibility of a reasonable inference to the contrary.

"If under my instructions you find that a voluntary confession was made, you are the exclusive judges as to whether or not the confession was true; and in deciding that question you should consider all the circumstances connected with the making of the statement, as shown by the evidence.

"An admission is something less than a confession in that it does not concede so much pointing toward defendant's guilt, and does not alone, even if true, support a deduction of guilt. v.

Civ. 8453.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

June 23, 1955.

Hearing Denied Aug. 17, 1955.

'Action by vendors against purchasers for breach of contract for sale of land requiring vendors, who were lessees from third party, to exercise their option to purchase and thereafter execute and deliver to purchasers, deed conveying title to premises, and requiring purchasers to advance money required to exercise option, to pay vendors balance of purchase price, and to execute and deliver to vendors, lease of premises upon same terms as prior lease. The Superior Court, Tehama County, Albert F. Ross, J., sitting without jury, rendered judgment for vendors, and purchasers appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that vendors were under no duty to tender or pay rental until execution of lease, that where draft of proposed lease did not conform to parties' agreement, it could not be deemed offer of performance of agreement, and that where sale was completed on September 5, and vendors' planting of crops usually took place right after first rains in December, vendors were reasonably entitled to lease by that time, and purchasers' failure to perform was actionable breach of contract.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨931(1)

On defendants' appeal from judgment for plaintiffs on findings of court trying case, all conflicts in evidence had to be resolved in favor of plaintiffs.

2. Landlord and Tenant ⇨202(1)

Under contract for sale of land requiring vendors, who were lessees from third party, to exercise their option to purchase and thereafter execute and deliver to purchasers, deed conveying title to premises, and requiring purchasers to advance money required to exercise option, to pay vendor's balance of purchase price, and to execute and deliver to vendors, lease of premises upon same terms as prior lease, vendors were under no duty to tender or pay rental until execution of lease.

3. Landlord and Tenant ⇨22(3)

Vendor and Purchaser ⇨15

Where contract for sale of land required purchasers to execute and deliver lease of land to vendors immediately upon consummation of sale, and where sale was completed on September 5, and vendors' planting of crops usually took place right after first rains in December, vendors were reasonably entitled to lease by that time, and purchasers' failure to perform amounted to failure of consideration, and was actionable breach of contractual relation.

6. Landlord and Tenant Ⓒ22(4)

In action by vendors against purchasers for breach of contract for sale of land requiring purchasers to execute and deliver lease of land to vendors immediately upon consummation of sale, whether vendors surrendered their rights under contract by renting other land when, some three months after completion of sale, purchaser submitted draft of proposed lease which did not conform to parties' agreement, was issue of fact.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

In 1949 plaintiff Dan W. Lewis, who had been a truck gardener in Tehama County for many years, and his wife, Helen, were occupying a tract of land as lessees under a lease with an option to purchase.

On August 2, 1950, plaintiffs and defendants entered into a written memorandum of agreement whereby plaintiffs, sellers, agreed to exercise their option under the Dyer lease, and defendants, buyers, agreed to pay the purchase price of $30,000 and take title thereto, paying plaintiffs the sum of $4,000 in addition to the purchase price. It was also agreed that defendants as buyers were "to execute and deliver to the Sellers immediately upon the consummation of the aforesaid sale a Lease of the premises upon the same terms as the present lease from Mrs. Dyer, without any options, and subject to adjustment of the rental on an acreage and pro-rata basis to allow for land to be used by the Buyers and which cannot be used by the Sellers, it being understood that the Buyers intend to plant orchard and that there will be a progressive limitation of use by the Sellers and Lessees."

Under the Dyer lease the lessees were required to pay rental in the total amount of $1,200, payable "$600.00 upon the execution of this Lease, receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged; and the balance on or before the 15th day of August, 1950."

The sale to defendants was consummated on September 5, 1950, but no lease was executed by defendants to plaintiffs, and plaintiffs commenced an action to recover damages from defendants, alleging, among other things, that it became necessary for plaintiffs to rent other lands at a higher rental, to their damage in the sum of $5,000.

Defendants in their answer admitted the agreement with plaintiffs but denied any breach thereof. The answer also set up two separate defenses: one, that plaintiffs were obligated to pay a rental of $600 upon the execution of a lease and failed to do so; the other, that plaintiffs had abandoned and disaffirmed the portion of the agreement providing for a lease.

The case was tried by the court sitting without a jury. The court found, among other things, that the plaintiffs had fully performed all their obligations under the provisions of the memorandum of agreement; that defendants had failed and refused to execute, deliver or tender a lease of the premises in accordance with the terms of said agreement; that said failure and refusal were without any legal cause, excuse or justification, and constituted a breach of the agreement by the defendants; that as a direct and proximate result of said breach plaintiffs were damaged in the sum of $2,100; and that plaintiffs were not obligated to pay or tender to defendants the rental of $600 at any time prior to the execution and tender by defendants of the lease required of them under the contract, and that plaintiffs were at all times ready, willing and able to perform all their obligations under the lease that they were entitled to receive. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiffs for $2,100 in accordance with said findings, and defendants have appealed from said judgment.

[1] Appellants make three major contentions in arguing for a reversal of the judgment: (1) That the complaint did not state a cause of action; (2) that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings; and (3) that the court applied an incorrect measure of damages. Before discussing these contentions we shall set forth additional facts shown by the record, bearing in mind the familiar rule that all conflicts must be resolved in favor of respondents.

On September 5, 1950, plaintiffs were still in possession of the premises, with produce yet to be harvested, and remained in possession until October 10, 1950, at which time plaintiff had finished harvesting and told defendant that he could "have it." Plaintiffs' son continued to occupy the dwelling on the premises, at least until the latter part of 1950, but after October, 1950, plaintiff Dan Lewis did no farming. At the trial said plaintiff at first insisted that the reason he did not commence cultivation, according to usual practice after the first rains in December, was that defendant's extensive leveling operations prevented him from so doing, but later, on cross-examination, plaintiff admitted that the only thing that kept him from going on the land and planting it to crops was the lack of a written lease. According to the testimony of defense witnesses, there was little leveling done prior to January, 1951, only to the extent of discing and staking of some 20 acres on the south, and no extensive leveling was done until April, 1951, and plaintiff admitted on cross-examination that he could not estimate how many acres were being worked by defendant in December, 1950.

Regarding negotiations for the execution of a lease back to plaintiffs after the sale, record indicates that early in December, 1950, defendants' attorney wrote to plaintiff Dan Lewis advising him that defendant Al James would be there on December 14, and asking plaintiff to come to his office with a list of the desired modifications in the lease.

Later in the same month defendants' attorney again wrote to plaintiff, enclosing in the letter a draft of a proposed lease. In response thereto, plaintiff went to counsel's office and with the aid of a secretary wrote a letter to defendant, dated December 28, 1950, explaining that "since the ground is now very wet, if it is leveled at this time, this operation would sour the ground so that it would not be usable for the purpose of raising garden this year. Also, the way the leveling stakes are marked, in some sections as much as twenty-four inches of top soil would be removed in the leveling, which would make this area unsuitable for raising garden this season. In fact, if more than six inches of top soil is removed, the ground would not be good for gardening the first year. Since the year has been so wet, it would seem to me best for you to rent this land to someone else who might be interested in raising grain or some other crop for this year; I would be interested in having it next year, however."

The above and subsequent correspondence between the parties was to no avail, and plaintiff ultimately leased other land of comparable size and type. Regarding the contents of the draft of the proposed lease sent to plaintiff in December, 1950, plaintiff testified that in many respects it was detrimentally dissimilar to the Dyer lease. As a witness, defense counsel testified that at no time did plaintiff make any objections to any provision in the draft and that he had never indicated specifically what changes were desired.

Additional evidence will be set forth in the course of this opinion.

[2] Appellants' first contention that the complaint did not state a cause of action because it did not allege a tender of the $600 rental payment cannot be sustained.

The pertinent portions of the memorandum of agreement are as follows:

"Whereas, it is the desire of the Sellers herein to sell to the buyers, and the Buyers to buy said premises for a total cash purchase price of $34,000, with the additional consideration of a Lease to the above-named Sellers for a period of two (2) years.

"Buyers further agree to execute and deliver to the Sellers immediately upon the consummation of the aforesaid sale a Lease of the premises upon the same terms as the present lease from Mrs. Dyer. * * *

The contract, for the breach of which respondents sought damages, was an agreement to sell. The agreed exchange consisted of the promise by respondents to exercise their option to purchase and thereafter execute and deliver to appellants a deed conveying the title to the premises, and the promise by appellants to advance through escrow the money required to exercise said option ($30,000), to pay respondents the balance of the purchase price provided ($34,000), and to execute and deliver to respondents a lease of the premises upon the same terms as the Dyer lease. To fully perform their part of the agreed exchange appellants were required to execute a lease. If any such lease were executed then it could possibly be said that delivery thereof was concurrently conditional upon payment or tender of the rental therein required. But in the agreement sued upon nothing further was required of respondents than that they exercise their option and execute and deliver a deed of the premises, and until the relationship of lessor-lessee was created by the execution of a leasing contract, no duty, conditional or unconditional, was placed upon respondents to pay rental. In such case an allegation of tender of payment allegedly due under a leasing contract not yet in existence would have been entirely superfluous, and a failure to so allege would not defeat the cause of action stated in the plaintiffs' complaint. See de la Falaise v. Gaumont-British Picture Corp., 39 Cal.App.2d 461, 470, 103 P.2d 447.

Appellants next contend that the evidence is insufficient to support findings numbers 6, 7 and 9. In finding 6 the court found in part that "Plaintiffs have fully performed all of their obligations under the provisions of said agreement." Finding 7 is in part that "the failure and refusal of defendants to execute and deliver to plaintiffs a lease * * * constituted a breach of said agreement on the part of said defendants." Finding 9 is that "all of the allegations of the first and second affirmative defenses alleged on page 2 of defendant's Amended Answer herein are and each of them is untrue."

As to finding 6 appellants argue that since respondents "failed to pay the initial rental required by the basic lease which supplied all of the terms of the agreement," they had not performed all their obligations under the provisions of the agreement and this finding to the contrary is therefore unsupported by the evidence. There is no merit in this contention for, as hereinbefore pointed out, respondents were not required to tender or pay the rental until a lease was executed by appellants in accordance with the agreement. There is likewise no merit in appellants' contention that the evidence is insufficient to support finding 9 since the agreement, as properly construed by the court, created no obligation on the part of respondents to pay rental before a lease was executed by appellants.

Appellants' contention that "finding No. 7 is not supported by the evidence because the evidence shows, without contradiction, that a draft of lease was submitted to plaintiffs and that plaintiffs did nothing in response thereto and did nothing to put defendants in default" is but an argument as to the weight of the evidence. The evidence is sufficient to support this finding. The record shows that the only offer by appellants to perform their obligation to execute a lease back to respondents was in December, 1950, when they submitted a draft of a proposed lease to respondents. At that time, according to the testimony of respondent Dan Lewis, objection was made to certain of the provisions therein contained which did not conform to the terms of the Dyer lease as called for in the agreement between the parties.

[3,4] Since the draft of the proposed lease did not conform to the agreement of the parties, it may not be deemed an offer of performance. For, an offer to perform upon terms and conditions not designated in the contract is not only not binding upon the offeree, unless he accepts the new conditions or fails to make objection thereto, but also is tantamount to a refusal to perform. Civ.Code, §§ 1494, 1501; Pitt v. Mallalieu, 85 Cal.App.2d 77, 83, 192 P.2d 24; K. & M., Inc., v. LeCuyer, 107 Cal.App.2d 710, 717, 238 P.2d 28; Steelduct Co. v. Henger-Seltzer Co., 26 Cal.2d 634, 646, 160 P.2d 804.

[5] Furthermore, the agreement required that appellants, as buyers, execute and deliver a lease immediately upon consummation of the sale. The sale was completed upon September 5, 1950. Respondent testified that the planting of his crops usually took place right after the first rains in December. That respondents were entitled to a lease by that time, if not sooner, would seem to be a reasonable construction of this contract provision. A lease of the premises was part and parcel of the agreed exchange and a failure to perform in this regard, within the time reasonably contemplated by the parties, amounted to a failure of consideration, and was an actionable breach of the contractual relation. Bliss v. California Co-operative Producers, 30 Cal.2d 240, 248, 181 P.2d 369, 170 A.L.R. 1009; Buxbom v. Smith, 23 Cal.2d 535, 548, 145 P.2d 305.

[6] Appellants contend also that the finding (number 10) that there was no abandonment, disaffirmance or surrender by respondents of rights under the agreement is not supported by the evidence. This contention cannot be sustained as it appears from the record that appellants did not execute a lease as agreed and further that appellants conducted operations on the land that interfered with respondents' contemplated use thereof. Under such circumstances respondents were justified in renting other land, and it cannot be held as a matter of law that their action in so doing constituted a surrender of their rights under their contract with appellants. At most, there was presented to the court an issue of fact upon which the evidence was conflicting.

Appellants contend finally that the trial court applied an incorrect rule as to the measure of damages. They argue that the correct rule of damages to be applied is the difference between the reasonable rental value, concerning which the record is silent, and the agreed rental, and that the trial court was in error in allowing respondents damages equal to the difference between the agreed rental and rent they had to pay for leasing other property.

[7, 8] The measure of damages for the breach of an obligation arising from contract "is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom." Civ.Code, § 3300. More specifically, the detriment caused by the breach of an agreement to lease is the difference between the agreed rental and the rental value for the term at the time of the breach, or, as sometimes expressed, "the fair value of the use of the premises." McCulloch v. Liguori, 88 Cal.App. 2d 366, 375, 199 P.2d 25, 31, 14 Cal.Jur.2d p. 770. In application of this general rule the courts have computed actual pecuniary damage by use of evidence relating to the rental value of similar property, as, for example, the allowance to the lessee in the McCulloch case of the difference between rental value of similar property at the time of the breach and the amount of monthly rental agreed on by the parties to the contract. In the instant case the court received evidence of the similarity between the premises in question and the Hoy property adjacent thereto which respondents leased, and awarded respondents damages in the amount of $2,100 for the season of 1951, representing the difference between the agreed rental and the rental charged by respondents' lessor Hoy.

We are satisfied that the instant case presented questions of fact for the trial court to determine and that the evidence amply supports the finding and judgment. There was evidence that the fair and reasonable market value of the property that respondents had an option to purchase for $30,000 was $40,000 on August 2, 1950, the date of the agreement between respondents and appellants. Under the agreement with respondents appellants secured said property for $34,000, and a substantial part of said agreement was "the additional consideration of a lease to the above-named Sellers for a period of two years." The evidence supports the determination of the trial court that appellants breached said agreement and respondents were entitled to the damages awarded for said breach.

Action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when an elevator he was operating fell. From adverse determinations in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Herman A. van der Zee, J., plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Motion to dismiss appeal. The defendants and respondents Independent Elevator Company, Inc. and B. C. Van Emon Elevators, Inc. move to dismiss the appeal from the order denying plaintiff's motion to enter default as to them.

The action was brought by Barbaria for injuries sustained when an elevator he was operating fell. He sued four defendants, the two petitioners who are elevator maintenance companies who at some time worked on the repair and maintenance of the elevator, Atwell, Vogel and Sterling, Inc., who was to inspect the elevator and Pat Keane the individual inspector, both the latter because they did not report the defect that caused the accident. All four defendants answered denying negligence. The verdict was for the plaintiff as to Atwell, Vogel and Sterling, Inc. and Pat Keane, and for the defendants elevator companies. Judgment was entered accordingly. The two losing defendants moved to vacate the verdict and grant a new trial on all the legal grounds, and plaintiff moved to set aside the part of the verdict rendered against him and grant a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence and errors of law. The court granted the motion for new trial by Atwell, Vogel and Sterling, Inc. and Pat M. Keane on the ground of excessive damages, insufficiency of the evidence and errors of law excepted to by said defendants. The court denied the plaintiff's motion for a new trial as to the two elevator companies.

At the beginning of the second trial plaintiff moved for a default judgment against the two elevator companies because they declined to defend on the ground that as to them a final adjudication had been reached at the first trial. The court denied the motion and declared that the trial would proceed as to the other two defendants only. At the end of the trial the court directed a verdict for said two defendants and verdict and judgment were entered as to said two defendants only. Plaintiff appealed from said judgment and "from the order of said court denying plaintiff's motion for entry of default against defendants Independent Elevator Co. and B. C. Van Emon Elevators, Inc." Said two elevator companies moved to dismiss the appeal from the order denying plaintiff's motion on the ground that it was not appealable. It was dismissed on the May calendar on that ground. See 3 Cal.Jur.2d 513; Brown v. Sterling Furniture Co., 175 Cal. 563, 166 P. 322, and Broadribb v. Tibbets, 60 Cal. 412. At the request of plaintiff's attorney the order of dismissal was set aside for the purpose of hearing further argument.

determination with respect to these two defendants. He cites two cases to the effect that orders of dismissal or nonsuit are so appealable. However, no dismissal or nonsuit as to plaintiff's action against these two defendants was entered or proposed by defendants. Plaintiff's motion was evidently not well taken. "Section 585 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not authorize the entry of any default in cases where an answer is on file, whether the defendant does or does not appear at the time the action is called for hearing." Warden v. Lamb, 98 Cal.App. 738, 741, 277 P. 867, 868; 2 Witkin California Procedure 1691. Here all defendants had filed answers. The granting of a new trial did not change the pleadings prior to the first trial, it returns the action to the exact state in which it was before the trial. Bloomquist v. Haley, 204 Cal. 258, 261, 268 P. 364; Mitchell v. Rasey, 139 Cal.App. 350, 353, 33 P.2d 1056; 3 Witkin California Procedure 2095. The fact that plaintiff moved for a default in a situation where the court clearly had no power to grant it cannot be a reason to hold appealable an order otherwise not appealable.

The crux of the matter is that plaintiff took the position that the order granting a new trial on the motion of the two losing defendants, which was directed against the verdict without any limitation, set aside the whole judgment also as to the two elevator companies, whereas these companies take the position that because of the denial of the plaintiff's motion this part of the judgment remained intact. There can be no doubt that the latter was the intention of the court. Whether the orders made were effective to reach that result need not be decided on this motion for dismissal of an appeal from a certainly nonappealable and correct order.

Motion to dismiss appeal granted.

McCOMB, Justice.

Defendant appeals from an interlocutory judgment of partition of real property.

Facts: On March 31, 1949, plaintiffs filed a complaint against William M. Anderson who was in possession of the real property which is the subject of this action. In such complaint plaintiffs claimed an undivided one-half interest in the real property. On April 11, 1949, defendant William M. Anderson filed an answer in which he admitted plaintiffs were the record owners of an undivided one-half interest in the property, but denied that they owned any interest in fact.

On July 2, 1953, defendant William M. Anderson died, and Stuart H. Leach was appointed the executor of his estate and substituted in the present proceedings.

On January 14, 1954, plaintiffs filed an amended complaint for partition of the property. Defendant answered, denying the ownership of plaintiffs, and alleged the property to have been the sole property of the deceased William M. Anderson, and for an affirmative defense alleged that decedent William M. Anderson and defendant, as his successor, had been continuously in possession of the property from February 1, 1948, to January 15, 1954, and hence had a prescriptive title to the property.

This is the sole question necessary for us to determine:

Did the evidence sustain the trial court's finding that defendant was not in the peaceable and undisputed possession of the real property in question for five years prior to the commencement of the present action?

Yes. The record discloses that in the instant case defendant's predecessor went into possession February 1, 1948; that the original complaint was filed March 31, 1949, and the five year period in order to vest title in defendant by adverse possession did not elapse until February 1, 1953. Therefore it is clear that defendant and his predecessor were not in uninterrupted possession of the property for five years, since the filing of the complaint before the statutory period had elapsed interrupted defendant's possession so as to prevent any title arising by adverse possession. (Knoke v. Swan, 2 Cal.2d 630, 632 [2], 42 P.2d 1019, 97 A.L.R. 841; In re Estate of Richards, 154 Cal.

478, 488, 98 P. 528.) Hence the provisions of section 1007 * of the Civil Code have no application to the present case.

No error appearing in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

Action to annul annexation proceedings of city. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Arnold Praeger, J., entered judgment annulling annexation and city appealed. This is an appeal from a judgment in certiorari annulling annexation proceedings of the City of Covina which were taken pursuant to the provisions of the Annexation of Uninhabited Territory Act of 1939, Government Code, §§ 35300-35326 and §§ 35000-35006, for brevity hereinafter called the Act. The territory here involved is designated as Westerly Annexation District No. 18, hereinafter referred to as WAD 18.

Factual Background

On September 17, 1951, Ordinance No. 314 was passed by the City Council of Covina annexing to the city under the act certain uninhabited territory. After two publications of the ordinance, on September 21 and 28, 1951, and the expiration of 30 days from and after its passage, the ordinance was, on October 24, 1951, duly filed by the Secretary of State of California. The territory included in this proceeding, known as Westerly Annexation District No. 6, hereinafter called WAD 6, was a strip of land approximately one mile in length and 33 feet in width, except at the extreme westerly end thereof where a portion of the strip is some 230 feet in width.

On January 4, 1954, William F. and Genevieve Lavelle filed with the City Clerk a petition requesting annexation to the city of two parcels of uninhabited land owned by them. On the same date a separate petition was filed on behalf of Sadie Vincent requesting annexation of uninhabited land owned by her. On January 8, 1954, another such petition was filed by Frank E. and Gertrude P. Anderson covering uninhabited land owned by them. The total acreage encompassed in these three petitions was approximately 29 acres. Subsequently, the City Council, acting on these petitions, treated them as consolidated, added 26 acres, not included in any of the petitions, and proceeded under the act to annex this territory to the city in one proceeding known as Westerly Annexation District No. 15, hereinafter called WAD 15. To that end the City Council passed annexation Ordinance No. 352 on May 3, 1954. The plaintiffs in this case attacked the action of the city in annexing the territory covered by WAD 15 by certiorari. Pursuant to stipulation, the superior court, on June 18, 1954, rendered a judgment annulling and setting aside Ordinance No. 352 and declaring that the proceedings known as WAD 15 were null and void.¹

On May 27, 1954, and prior to the rendition of the aforesaid judgment, a new petition was presented to the City Clerk of Covina and accepted by him for filing, which requested annexation to the city as uninhabited territory the identical lands described in WAD 15 and Ordinance No. 352. This new petition was signed by all those who had signed the three separate petitions and, in addition, by F. M. McCown. Thereafter the City Council, acting on this petition and pursuant to the provisions of the act, initiated the proceedings known as Westerly Annexation District No. 18, here under attack. After public hearings on July 19, Ordinance No. 367 was adopted, on

1. These proceedings were annulled because there was no petition which described the lands covered by WAD 15 as required by Gov't Code, sec. 35305.

WAD 18 abuts upon that portion of the city which was added by the proceedings known as WAD 6 and extends southerly therefrom. The northerly boundary line of WAD 18 and the southerly boundary line of that portion of the city added by WAD 6 are coterminus for an aggregate distance of over 2,000 feet. For purposes of clarification, a map showing WAD 18 and its relation to the city is reproduced.

The first question is: Did the City Council have jurisdiction to act upon the petition of May 27, 1954, and pursuant thereto initiate proceedings for the annexation of the territory therein described?

It may be conceded, as plaintiffs argue, that the vitality of three petitions was not affected by the judgment of June 18, 1954, invalidating WAD 15, and that they were still before the City Council for consideration. The factual picture, however, had changed. A new petition, in proper form, encompassing the same territory as WAD 15 and signed by the same property owners who had previously signed the separate petitions and also by the owner of the remaining land included therein was on file. It was properly presented for there is no statutory prohibition against presenting a petition which includes territory in another petition for annexation to the same municipality. The only provision of the law relating to the presentation of a subsequent petition covering territory included in another petition is Gov't Code sec. 35308.² That section, however, relates only to a subsequent petition to another city which includes some of the same territory. There is likewise no statutory prohibition against a city council's acting upon a petition which includes territory in another petition filed with it. However, Government Code, section 35309³ prohibits the legislative body of a city from taking "any action" on an annexation petition which describes any territory that is included in an earlier petition to another city, until the ordinance of the first city disapproving annexation becomes effective. The purpose of such restrictions is obvious, for two cities cannot at the same time exercise jurisdiction over the same territory. See City of Anaheim v. City of Fullerton, 102 Cal.App.2d 395, 227 P.2d 494. But in the instant case we have no such problem since we are dealing with a single city. Hence the statutory inhibitions and priorities are not here applicable. So, when the WAD 15 proceedings were set aside by the judgment of June 18, 1954, the City Council had four annexation petitions before it covering all or portions of the territory in question. Since the law did not establish any priority for the consideration of these petitions the City Council had the right in the orderly conduct of the city's affairs to exercise a reasonable discretion as to which of these petitions it would first consider. In the good faith exercise of such discretion they were entitled to take into account the practical aspects of the situation. By the adoption of Ordinance 352 in the WAD 15 proceedings the City Council obviously believed the parcels represented by the three separate petitions plus the additional territory should be annexed to the city. That attempt, for technical reasons, proved abortive. The deficiencies, however, had now been corrected by the petition of May 27th. To have gone back and conducted three separate annexation proceedings pursuant to the request of the three petitions rather than a single proceeding would have resulted in unnecessary additional work and expense to the city and created complications with respect to the annexation of the property owned by Mr. McCown, one of which would have been a fourth annexation proceeding in the event he persisted in his desire to have his property become a part of the city.

2. Gov't Code, sec. 35308 reads: "When a petition for the annexation of any territory to a city has been received by its legislative body a petition asking for the annexation of any of the territory described in the petition shall not be presented to the legislative body of any other city until an ordinance disapproving such annexation becomes effective."

3. Gov't Code, sec. 35309 reads: "After one legislative body has received a petition, no other legislative body shall take any action for the annexation of any part of the territory described in the petition, until the ordinance of the first city disapproving annexation becomes effective."

While the attempt by the Lavelles, Andersons and Sadie Vincent to withdraw their earlier separate petitions so that the collective petition of May 27th would be before the council may not have been effective for that purpose, see Sweetwater Fruit Co. v. City Council, 126 Cal.App.2d 655, 272 P.2d 828, the City Council could take their request to withdraw their individual petitions into consideration in exercising its discretion as to which of the several petitions should be taken up and in deciding to proceed pursuant to the petition of May 27th.

A closely parallel situation was considered in People ex rel. Cuff v. City of Oakland, 123 Cal. 598, 56 P. 445. In that case a petition for annexation of inhabited territory was filed with the City Council. A committee of the counsel reported to that body, recommending that no action be taken on the petition as the description of the property contained therein was insufficient. Before final action was taken by the council on this petition, which was subsequently held to be valid, a second petition covering all the territory included in the first and territory in addition thereto, was presented to the City Council and proceedings for annexation were initiated pursuant to the second petition. It was contended the council had no jurisdiction to act on the second petition. The court in effect held that the fact that the first petition later was held to be a valid petition did not deprive the council of jurisdiction to act upon the second petition.

In sustaining the annexation proceedings under the second petition the court pointed out also that no one had been injured by reason of the council's error as to the sufficiency of the first petition and the consequent failure to submit it to a vote. On this point the court stated, 123 Cal. at pages 606-607, 56 P. at page 448, that "*the second petition embraced all the territory described in the first, and additional territory not described in the first * * " as no one who was included in the first petition as a resident of the territory proposed to be annexed was excluded by the second, it could not be necessary to submit both to a vote of the electors. No one could be injured by the failure to submit the first to a vote * * *." (Emphasis added.)

[1] The rationale of the Oakland case applies, a fortiori, to the situation here present. Plaintiffs in the instant case have suffered no prejudice by the council's proceeding upon the combined petition rather than upon the three separate petitions. Plaintiffs are not property owners within the area being annexed—the sole property owners therein are the signers of the May 27th petition. Neither are they owners of property embraced within any of the territory covered by the separate petitions. Therefore, they had no right of protest as property owners in any of the proposed annexation areas which could have compelled cessation of such proceedings. Gov't Code, sec. 35313. As in the Oakland case, supra, all property included in the three separate petitions was included in the later consolidated petition, all of whose signatories, as the sole property owners involved, were eager to go ahead with the WAD 18 proceeding. As citizens of or taxpayers in Covina, plaintiffs had available to them the same right of protest against the WAD 18 proceeding as would have been available if there had been three or four separate annexation proceedings. Since all of the property encompassed by WAD 18 formed a compact, unified parcel of land, the legislature clearly had sufficient right and reason to expedite the pending matters by giving priority to the petition which provided the most efficacious means of accomplishing the annexation with no sacrifice of any essential right of the parties now complaining.

The second question is: Is WAD 18 contiguous to the City of Covina?

Section 35302 of the Government Code reads: "The boundaries of a city may be altered and contiguous uninhabited territory annexed to, and incorporated within it, pursuant to this article."

Government Code section 35002.5, which became effective on September 22, 1951, provides: "Territory shall not be deemed contiguous as the word 'contiguous' is used in this chapter if the only contiguity is based on a strip of land over 300 feet long and less than 200 feet wide exclusive of highways."

An examination of these sections discloses that they are dealing with the territory proposed to be annexed rather than with the physical shape and dimensions of the part of the city to which such territory would be attached. Section 35002.5, supra, provides in effect only that if contiguity to the city is based on a strip of land over 300 feet long and less than 200 feet wide it shall not be deemed contiguous within the meaning of the statute. It does not provide that territory may not be annexed to a portion of the city which is over 300 feet long and less than 200 feet wide. The obvious purpose of this section is to place some restrictions on "strip" annexations and thus "at least partially" prohibit "the extremes of gerrymandering" made possible by the decision in 1949 in City of Burlingame v. County of San Mateo, 90 Cal.App.2d 705, 203 P.2d 807. People ex rel. Forde v. Town of Corte Madera, 115 Cal.App.2d 32, 47, 251 P.2d 988.

This interpretation is completely consonant with the realities of the evil designed to be abolished and the logic of the situation. For it must be kept in mind that the annexing city, regardless of the irregularities of its own preexisting contours, must be treated as a geographical entity. The description in the statute of the physical shape and dimensions on which a nexus with the city may not be based applies solely to the contiguous strip of territory whose annexation is being undertaken and not to the portion of the city to which it is juxtaposed.

[2,3]- Before the adoption of section 35002.5 any contiguity to the city of the area to be annexed was sufficient. By the amendment the legislature has stated what is not contiguity. It has not stated what is contiguity, except by the statement of what is deemed not to be contiguity. Therefore, in order to determine what is contiguity the same test is applied as was applied prior to the adoption of that section, except it must be tested further to determine whether it falls within the prohibition. Contiguity exists where boundary lines are coterminous. City of Burlingame v. County of San Mateo, supra. Here the common boundary lines of the area to be annexed (WAD 18) and the City of Covina are continuously coterminous for an aggregate length of over 2,000 feet. Furthermore, such territory does not fall within the prohibition of section 35002.5 for the contiguity of WAD 18 to the city is not based on a strip of land over 300 feet in length and less than 200 feet wide, but is in fact based on coterminous boundary lines. The trial court was therefore in error in holding that WAD 18 is not contiguous to the City of Covina.

[4,5] Plaintiffs argue that if WAD 18 proceedings were held valid "its effect would be to virtually surround a large area of unincorporated lands as was true in the Burlingame case * * *." A glance at the map reproduced herein shows there is no such situation in this annexation. Furthermore, anticipating this problem, the legislature, in 1951, enacted section 35326 of the Government Code which provides that "Territory shall not be annexed to a city * * * if, as a result of such annexation, unincorporated territory is completely surrounded by such city." (Italics added.) This, of course, is a matter of public policy on which the legislature, and not the courts, has the right to speak. People ex rel. Forde v. Town of Corte Madera, supra. The legislature has said there shall be no encirclement of unincorporated territory. Beyond that it has not gone. The court's function in the premises is to interpret the rules laid down by the legislature, not to make new or additional rules. Johnson v. City of San Pablo, 132 Cal.App.2d 447, 283 P.2d 57. Plaintiffs' argument on this point is completely lacking in merit.

[6] Plaintiffs also contend that WAD 18 is not contiguous to the City of Covina on the theory that the portion of the city with which its boundaries are coterminous is not itself legally a part of the city. Reference to the map discloses that the more than 2,000 feet of the city boundary line with which WAD 18 is coterminous was formerly WAD 6 which was annexed to the city in 1951. Plaintiffs, however, contend that the annexation of WAD 6 is void. If their position is correct then there would be no contiguity of WAD 18 with the city, and the attempted annexation of the latter territory would necessarily fail. Plaintiffs' argument that WAD 6 is void is based on the fact that section 35002.5 of the Government Code went into effect on September 22, 1951, and that Ordinance 314 of the City of Covina annexing the territory designated as WAD 6 was not filed by the Secretary of State until October 24, 1951, and that such annexation did not become effective until such date; that WAD 6 was a strip of land more than 300 feet in length and less than 200 feet wide and consequently, in view of the provisions of section 35002.5, could not legally be annexed to the city.

The attorney general refused to authorize quo warranto proceedings to test the validity of the WAD 6 proceedings. Ops. Atty. Gen., pp. 54-63, 6-29-54. The trial court concluded that "the validity of Westerly Annexation District No. 6 cannot now be attacked by certiorari." Plaintiffs apparently do not attack this conclusion. Rather, they take the position that the purported annexation of WAD 6 was void and may be so held in the instant case and that since the proceedings to annex WAD 6 were void section 349½ Code of Civil Procedure,⁴ which provided a three months' statute of limitations for attacking annexation proceedings, is not applicable.

Plaintiffs' position is not sound for their first premise is erroneous. Ordinance No. 314, which annexed to the city the territory known as WAD 6, was passed on September 17, 1951 (and given its first publication on Sept. 21st). That was the final legislative act on the part of the city. True, the ordinance required a second publication and the expiration of 30 days after its passage before it went into effect. But this second publication was merely a matter of routine and the 30 days would elapse in due course of time. It is also true that when "an ordinance approving annexation becomes effective" the city clerk must immediately "transmit" a certified copy to the Secretary of State. Gov't Code, sec. 35316. Upon receipt of such copy, "the Secretary of State shall file it * * *." Gov't Code, sec. 35317. From the date of such filing, "annexation is complete * * *." Gov't Code, sec. 35318. It is obvious that these acts were purely ministerial in character. They were simply routine procedure to give notice to the world that the City Council of Covina had approved the annexation of the territory encompassed within WAD 6. These ministerial acts could not invalidate the action which the City Council took and had a perfect legal right to take on September 17th, which was five days before section 35002.5 went into effect.

[7] This conclusion is fortified by the principle that statutes are prospective in their operation in the absence of a clear intention to the contrary. 23 Cal.Jur. sec. 26, p. 629. There is nothing whatever in section 35002.5 to suggest that it should apply to an annexation proceeding, such as here, where the City Council had taken final legislative action approving the annexation prior to that section becoming the law of the state.

It is therefore clear that on the record before us the WAD 6 proceedings were not void. Because more than three months have elapsed since the completion of that annexation proceeding, it may not now be challenged. The territory represented by WAD 6 was therefore legally incorporated into and became a "part of the city." Since, therefore, the boundary line of WAD 18 is coterminus with that of the city for more than 2,000 feet the requirement of contiguity is fully satisfied.

The judgment is reversed with directions to enter findings of fact, conclusions of law and judgment in accordance with the views herein expressed.

MOORE, P. J., and McCOMB, J., concur.

4. The material portion of section 349½, C.C.P. reads:

Nancy BUTTE, Petitioner,

v.

SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California In and for the CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, State of California, Respondent, Felix Butte, Real Party In Interest.

No. 16686.

District Court of Appeal, First District,

June 24, 1955.

Proceeding by wife as plaintiff in divorce action for writ restraining court from proceeding with trial until reasonable time after defendant had furnished certain records for plaintiff's inspection; paid her attorney's fees, money for employment of accountant, and money for cost of suit, as previously ordered by court. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that action of trial court in denying plaintiff's motion for postponement was not abuse of discretion, where it appeared that parties had not anticipated immediate payment of such costs, where suit had been pending approximately three years since inception, and where it appeared that trial judge was convinced that interested parties and children would be best served by bringing action on for trial and final adjudication.

1. Divorce ⇨145

In divorce action, decision of wife's motion to postpone trial until reasonable time after husband furnished certain records for her inspection, paid attorney's fees, money for employment of accountant, and money for cost of suit, rested primarily with trial court acting in exercise of sound discretion. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 137.3.

2. Divorce ⇨184(5)

Ruling of trial court on wife's motion for postponement of divorce action until reasonable time after husband furnished certain records for her inspection, paid her attorney's fees, money for employment of accountant, and money for cost of suit, would not be disturbed by reviewing court unless it found that there had been abuse of discretion.

3. Divorce ⇨145

In proceeding by wife to restrain court from proceeding with divorce action until reasonable time after defendant husband furnished certain records for plaintiff's inspection, paid her attorney's fees, money for employment of accountant, and money for cost of suit, as previously ordered by court, denial of plaintiff's motion for postponement was not abuse of discretion, where it appeared that parties had not anticipated immediate payment of such costs, where suit had been pending for three years, and where it appeared that trial judge was convinced that interested parties and children would be best served by bringing action on for trial. FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

Nancy Butte, plaintiff and cross-defendant in a divorce action, seeks a writ restraining the superior court from proceeding with the trial until a reasonable time after defendant and cross-complainant has made certain records and documents available for her inspection and has paid her attorney fees, money for the employment of an accountant, and money for costs of suit, as previously ordered by the court.

[1] The issues here presented have been twice considered by the trial court: first, upon hearing and granting defendant's motion to set the cause for trial; second, upon hearing and denying plaintiff's motion to postpone the trial. The decision in such a case rests primarily with the trial court acting in the exercise of a sound discretion; especially in view of the statutory provision that an award of costs or of attorney fees "may be enforced by the [trial] court by execution or by such order or orders as, in its discretion, it may from time to time deem necessary." Civil Code, § 137.3, emphasis added. The question before us as a reviewing court is not what action we would take if it were for us in the first instance to decide. It is: Can we say, in view of all the circumstances of the case, that the trial court committed an abuse of the discretion vested in it?

Two orders for the payment of money are involved.

An order dated February 20, 1953, directs defendant to pay plaintiff's attorney $500 on account of fees, the latter "payable immediately."¹

An order dated December 29, 1954, directed defendant to make available for inspection all documents, book accounts, bank accounts, income tax returns, and other records of income and expenses of defendant or of any business, partnership or corporation in which he has had an interest since the marriage of the parties.

The December 29, 1954, order also directs defendant to pay plaintiff $500 for the employment of an accountant, to be paid in advance of performance of services by the accountant; if defendant has not paid or arranged for payment of this sum by January 26, 1955, "the matter of time of payment will at that time be ordered by the court." (We find in the record no order fixing the time for such payment.)

The December 29, 1954, order also directs defendants to pay plaintiff the additional sum of $75 court costs, "payable immediately," and to pay plaintiff's attorney an additional $1,000 as attorney's fees, "payable immediately" except that the payment of this $1,000 "shall not be enforced by plaintiff's attorney by execution or contempt order prior to the trial of this action."²

Plaintiff claims that none of these moneys for costs or attorney fees or services of an accountant have been paid. Defendant claims the $27 item for costs has been paid but admits the other items have not been paid. He also claims and the evidence would support a finding that he lacks current ability to pay.

Plaintiff contends that the following principle applies: "In protection of the rights of the respective parties it has been generally held in actions involving matrimonial status that the court will not proceed with an action against a spouse who is unable to pay the amounts actually necessary to conduct a defense, unless the spouse seeking the assistance of the court is able to and does pay such amounts. [Citations.] The theory supporting this rule is that it is less harmful to leave the parties in status quo than to run the risk that the moving party will obtain an unfair advantage because of the inability of the other party to make an adequate defense." Kopasz v. Kopasz, 34 Cal.2d 423, 424-425, 210 P.2d 846, 847.³

[2] The application of this principle, we must bear in mind, is the function of the trial court, acting in the exercise of a sound legal discretion. Its ruling can not be disturbed by a reviewing court unless the latter finds there has been an abuse of discretion. In the instant case there are a number of factors which tend to the conclusion that there has been no abuse of discretion.

First, we can not say as a matter of law that the court when making the orders for attorney fees and for payment of an accountant intended to impose obligations to pay prior to trial.

The December, 1954, order by its terms held in abeyance the fixing of the time for

1. It also orders him to pay $300 a month for the support of plaintiff and their two minor children and enjoins him from conveying or encumbering any of the community property or any of his separate property pending the trial of the action, but these features of the order are not here directly involved.

2. An appeal from the order of December 29, 1954, was pending when the trial court fixed the time of trial and refused a postponement of the trial.

Later, defendant abandoned that appeal and gave notice of a motion to vacate or to modify the order of December 29, 1954.

3. In the Kopasz case the Supreme Court was not reviewing the action of a lower court. It was acting in the exercise of its own discretion. It stayed proceedings on the merits of an appeal until compliance by the appellant-husband with an order requiring him to pay the respondent's costs and attorney's fees on appeal.

payment of the $500 for an accountant and proscribed collection of the $1,000 attorney fee by execution or contempt process before trial.

There is evidence that at the hearing of plaintiff's application for attorney fees in February, 1953, prompt payment was not expected. Defendant's then counsel said he was worried about any payment "at this time" because of the difficulty in meeting the order for support money. The judge said, "Why not make an order and let her wait?" Fixing it at $500, the judge said, "he can't pay it right now." Defendant asked the judge, "where am I going to get the money this time?" and the judge replied, "it will be a judgment against you." During this discussion, plaintiff's attorney said, "I'm not going to come in in a month."

It further appears that when in December, 1954, plaintiff's counsel was asking for an additional fee of $1,000 and stated she was willing that there be a restriction that she would not execute or proceed in contempt on the $1,000, the court asked, "What good would another allowance be if you don't have the first?" and she replied, "Well, we have confidence that Mr. Butte is going to pay up some day."

The need for an extensive examination of accounts, records, and papers prior to the trial is problematical. According to an affidavit by plaintiff's counsel this action involves complicated questions of fact and law pertaining to property including the extent of defendant's interest in a Fresno winery and the community and separate property nature of said interest; the winery was involved in a complicated bankruptcy proceeding which must be gone into thoroughly in order to determine the nature of defendant's and plaintiff's present interests therein; in affiant's opinion plaintiff can not be properly represented in the trial of the action without the previous services of an accountant to go thoroughly into the financial affairs of the defendant and through all pertinent books and records; that without such the case will take a long time, perhaps 6 or 8 weeks, to try, which in large part could be avoided by the proposed accounting. Affiant estimated it would take two weeks to prepare for trial after the books, records and papers are made available to the plaintiff.

The only business venture in which the record indicates defendant has had an interest is a corporation that operated a winery at Fresno. The enterprise began to encounter difficulties in 1947 due to a drop in market prices. In 1950 the inventory was lost by fire. Bankruptcy proceedings ensued. In February, 1955, notice of intention to sell the corporation's real and personal property for the benefit of the trustee in bankruptcy was given, which defendant by affidavit states "liquidates the * * * Winery, which is the subject of the accounting, and there is at this date, no need for an accountant;" that the books, records and papers requested by plaintiff's attorney are the records, books and papers of the bankruptcy court and defendant is powerless to obtain them. Plaintiff denies the last statement but does not say what books, papers and records are involved. It is quite possible, therefore, that the need for an accounting could better be determined by the trial judge during the course of the trial. If he finds it desirable he can appoint a referee to conduct the inquiry, postponing the trial meanwhile. Certainly we can not say as a matter of law that such a procedure would not better serve the interests of the parties than the method plaintiff presently seeks to pursue. Incidentally, if the winery business has been completely liquidated, the problem of ascertaining the relative community and separate property ownerships is not likely to prove complicated, especially in view of the fact that the parties have been married less than six years.

That would leave the issues of divorce and of custody of the children as the principal issues. In this connection, defendant's counsel states that defendant will adopt the report of the court's domestic relations commissioner which recommends that custody of the children be given the plaintiff (their two children are under four and five years, respectively) and will ask the court that the parents be granted joint legal custody with physical custody to plaintiff, the defendant to have reasonable right of visitation.

The record indicates that defendant's only income is a salary of $364.20 net per month; and that by a former marriage he has a six year old child for whom he endeavors to maintain a home.

A good deal of the time and energy of the parties and their counsel has been spent in proceedings for the enforcement of the order for support pendente lite. The action has been pending since April 17, 1952. In this connection we note that section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure requires that every action be brought to trial within five years of its filing, save for certain exceptions not present here according to the record furnished us.

[3] It is apparent, from these circumstances and from certain observations which he made at the hearing, that the judge who denied plaintiff's motion for postponement was convinced that the interests of the parties and of the children would be best served by bringing the action on for trial and final adjudication. We find no error, no abuse of discretion, in such a decision upon the facts presented.

The alternative writ is discharged and the peremptory writ denied.

Civ. 20563.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

June 24, 1955.

Action for rescission of contract for exchange of certain realty for mining claims, or, in alternative, for damages for fraud. From an adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Jerold E. Weil, J., the plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that evidence sustained the trial court's findings that the plaintiffs had not acted with reasonable diligence in giving notice of rescission and that the plaintiffs had sustained no damage.

Affirmed.

1. Contracts ⚡270(1)

Mines and Minerals ⚡59

Requirement of prompt rescission is mandatory, and party may not wait to see whether contract turns out to be good or bad; and this is particularly true as to contracts relating to mining property. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1691.

2. Contracts ⚡270(1)

Diligence is condition of right to rescind, and the right is lost and transaction ratified by failure to rescind promptly after discovery of facts which entitle party to rescind. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1691.

3. Appeal and Error ⚡991

Whether party claiming to have been defrauded has rescinded promptly depends upon circumstances of particular case and is question primarily for trial court. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1691.

4. Appeal and Error ⚡1010(1)

Conclusion of trial court, as to whether party has acted promptly to rescind a contract, will not be set aside by reviewing court if it finds reasonable support in the evidence. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1691.

5. Exchange of Property ⚡8(4)

In action for rescission of contract for exchange of certain realty for mining claims, or in alternative for damages for fraud, evidence sustained trial court's finding that plaintiffs had not acted with reasonable diligence in giving notice of rescission. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1691.

6. Pleading ⚡409(3)

In action for rescission of contract or in alternative for damages for fraud, wherein plaintiffs claimed they had sustained damages in sum of $33,000, if defendants' denial of each and every allegation of complaint constituted negative pregnant as to damages allegation, objection was waived by trial of case on theory that denial was sufficient and that question of damages was in issue.

7. Fraud $\Rightarrow$ 58(1)

In action for rescission of contract or in alternative for damages for fraud, wherein plaintiffs claimed they had been damaged in sum of $33,000 by exchanging realty worth $33,000 for certain mining claims, evidence sustained trial court's finding that plaintiffs had not sustained any damage.

Appeal by plaintiffs from an adverse judgment in a suit for rescission of a contract for the exchange of real properties on the ground of fraud or, in the alternative, for damages. Paul B. Sogg will be referred to as plaintiff. Lester J. Harvey will be referred to as defendant.

On July 11, 1951 plaintiffs Paul B. Sogg and Florence A. Sogg entered into a written contract with defendants Lester J. Harvey and Clara Harvey by which the Soggs agreed to convey to the Harveys a parcel of realty in the County of Los Angeles in exchange for some mining claims in the County of Coconino, Arizona, and miscellaneous equipment thereon. A quarry was located on the mining claims from which stone was being produced. The exchange was consummated on August 21, 1951.

The complaint contains the usual allegations in an action grounded on fraud, charging numerous false representations by defendant with respect to the mining claims.

The court found: 1. Defendants did not make any of the representations alleged except certain ones which they had fulfilled and that they "did represent that the net profit from the operation of said quarry was at the time of the sale, Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) per week." 2. "That it is not true that at the time of entering into the contract for the exchange of said properties plaintiffs had no knowledge or information concerning the management, operation or supervision of a stone quarry." 3. "That it is not true that plaintiffs obtained all their information and knowledge in respect thereto from the statements, assertions, representations, warranties and promises of defendants." 4. "That it is true that plaintiffs undertook an investigation of said facts before entering into the contract." 5. Plaintiffs did not rely on any representation of defendants in entering into the contract. 6. Plaintiffs did not, as alleged, for the first time between September 1951 and June 1952 discover that any representation of defendants was false, fraudulent, or untrue. 7. On July 3, 1952 plaintiffs caused a notice of rescission to be served on defendants Harvey. 8. The notice of rescission was not served promptly after plaintiffs discovered and had knowledge of all the true facts concerning the property and the profits thereof. 9. At the time of the exchange the parcel of realty exchanged for the mining claims had a value of not less than $33,000. 10. Plaintiffs have not sustained any damage. Judgment was for defendants. Plaintiffs appeal.

Plaintiffs' sole claim is that the findings are not supported by any substantial evidence. On the question of the right to rescind, it will be necessary to consider only whether the finding that plaintiffs did not give notice of rescission promptly after they discovered and had knowledge of all the facts concerning the quarry and the profits thereof is supported; since, if it is, it is sufficient to sustain the judgment decreeing that plaintiffs were not entitled to rescission.

On June 29, 1951, prior to entering into the contract, plaintiff made an inspection of the quarry. Before this visit he had contacted a Mr. Webster, an official of Western States Stone Company, and was told by Webster that the company would be interested in purchasing all the stone produced by the quarry. At the request of plaintiff, Webster suggested a foreman for the quarry whom plaintiff later employed. On July 25, 1951, prior to the close of the escrow for the exchange, plaintiff again visited and inspected the quarry with Webster and met the proposed foreman, a Mr. Beach, an experienced operator of quarries, and employed him. On this occasion Webster told plaintiff they could take production from the quarry up to one carload a day. Plaintiff told Webster he understood there was a set market on the stone, and asked if he could expect the prevailing market for his stone if the quality met with Webster's approval. Webster replied, "Yes."

Webster testified that within 30 days or 6 weeks from July 25, 1951, he again went to the quarry because "[i]t was understood that we were going to get a reasonable amount of material out there to fill our orders; we had made commitments and they were not forthcoming, so I attempted to check as to why"; "Mr. Beach took me up to the quarries and he was having difficulty producing the grade of stone that we were demanding because of the checked formation that he was endeavoring to uncover"; he went to half a dozen diggings; the situation was general in that location as a whole; "[y]ou will find areas where perhaps a few tons can be taken out in large pieces and then you run into faults or flaws they call them." About the time of the exchange Western Stone bought 20,000 to 25,000 tons of stone from plaintiff. Webster testified it was "just fair" quality, that "We found it rather difficult [to meet specifications] because the majority of the stone would not meet the competitive market from a quality standpoint, so we were controlled by the volume we could move provided he produced it, which he didn't." There was evidence the quarry produced stone that had an excellent market and could be sold at any time.

When plaintiff first discussed the deal with defendant, defendant told him they were shipping a minimum of one car of 55 tons a week with a net profit of $10 or more a ton, or $500 or more per week, that there was about 300 years of good production with the present claims, and that the equipment was in excellent condition. Defendant also told him that "you cannot depend on the help because of the type of men that come up and work" in that part of the country, and that water was a problem at the quarry, that there was no water there, and it was necessary to transport it 7 or 8 miles for the use of the men.

On November 14, 1951 plaintiff wrote to defendant stating that the equipment was in poor condition. Between August 28 and November 28, 1951, plaintiff was required to expend $1,782.95 for a new building on the property and to install a scale at a cost of $1,638.23. Between August 16 and December 15, 1951, he expended $519.36 for repairs to the equipment.

On November 27, 1951 plaintiff listed the quarry for sale. He testified he was interested in selling at that time because his interest in the quarry was lessening, he could not see any profit, he was operating at a loss, the equipment was not in good shape, and an expenditure of $10,000 was required to increase production to paying quantities.

Plaintiff discharged Beach in February 1952. He discontinued quarrying stone in February 1952 because "We found that the cost of production left no room for any margin of profit; I was going deeper into the hole at all times. The quality of the stone was such that I found a very difficult market. My main source, practically the only source that I had ever sold stone to, the Western States Stone Company, were raising objections to the quality of the stone and I was running into too many obstacles." He testified that by "too many obstacles" he meant "Cost of operation, the quality of the stone, the loss actually, of not making any money; you couldn't make any money there; I couldn't make any money there; I made a diligent effort to keep going; I had invested of my own money close to $7,000 at that time in money and I did not want to go into the red any further. Those were sufficient obstacles for me to stop. * * * The lack of good quality, sufficient salable, marketable stone." Between the time he acquired the quarry and the time he discontinued quarrying stone, his gross receipts were $6,-880.81. He was at the quarry only half a dozen times from the date of his first visit until the trial.

Beach, plaintiff's foreman, testified he went to work for plaintiff about August 1, 1951; that in the first two months thereafter he inspected all of the quarry; the stone was inferior; it had "a soft texture, hard to process," you could not "obtain large enough pieces to make it marketable"; he left in February 1952 because he had been there long enough to find out that he "could not operate for him [plaintiff] and make a profit." Beach further testified that plaintiff refused to permit him to operate the quarry in the way he felt it should be operated; that he told plaintiff it would cost $10,000 to put the quarry on a paying basis.

The notice of rescission was served on July 3, 1952.

[1,2] A party rescinding must rescind promptly on discovering the facts which entitle him to rescind. Civ.Code, § 1691. The requirement of prompt rescission is mandatory, and a party may not wait to see whether the contract turns out to be good or bad; and this is particularly true in relation to contracts relating to mining property. Hazzard v. Johnson, 45 Cal.App. 19, 27-28, 187 P. 121. Diligence is a condition of the right to rescind, and the right is lost by delay. Estrada v. Alvarez, 38 Cal.2d 386, 391, 240 P.2d 278. The transaction is ratified by failure to rescind promptly after discovery of the facts which entitle the party to rescind. Wilbur v. Griffins, 56 Cal.App. 668, 677, 206 P. 112. In Campbell v. Title Guarantee, etc., Co., 121 Cal.App. 374, at page 376, 9 P.2d 264, at page 265, the court observed:

"As was said in Schneider v. Henley, 61 Cal.App. 758, at page 763, 215 P. 1036, 1038: 'Subdivision 1 of section 1691 of the Civil Code requires prompt action in case of rescission. * * * In Marten v. [Paul O.] Burns Wine Co., 99 Cal. 355, 33 P. 1107, it was held that a delay of 3 months was too long. In the case of Bailey v. Fox, 78 Cal. 389, 20 P. 868, a delay of 4 months was held to be fatal, and in Gamble v. Tripp, 99 Cal. 223, 227, 33 P. 851, the Supreme Court said that a delay of 4½ months, in the absence of some excuse shown therefor, was certainly not the prompt action required by the Code. From an examination of authorities, it would appear that 30 days is about the utmost length of time which the courts are disposed to allow to the purchaser for rescission, unless there are unusual circumstances in the case excusing longer delay."

In Estrada v. Alvarez, supra, 38 Cal.2d 386, at page 391, 240 P.2d 278, at page 281, it is said:

"'There have been many cases in which delays for much shorter periods than a year have been held to be fatal to the right to rescind.' (Clanton v. Clanton (1942), 52 Cal.App.2d 550, 556, 126 P.2d 639, and King v. Los Angeles County Fair Ass'n (1945), 70 Cal.App.2d 592, 596-597, 161 P.2d 468, which collect some of those cases; see also Campbell v. Title Guarantee, etc., Co. (1932), 121 Cal.App. 374, 377, 9 P.2d 264; Schneider v. Henley (1923), 61 Cal.App. 758, 763, 215 P. 1036; Brown v. Domestic Utilities Mfg. Co. (1916), 172 Cal. 733, 737, 159 P. 163; Ferguson v. Edgar (1918), 178 Cal. 17, 19, 171 P. 1061.)"

[3,4] Whether a party claiming to have been defrauded has rescinded promptly depends on the circumstances of the particular case and is a question primarily for the trial court. French v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 579, 589, 217 P. 515; Noll v. Baida, 202 Cal. 98, 105, 259 P. 433; Esau v. Briggs, 89 Cal.App.2d 427, 438, 201 P.2d 25. It is a question of fact. Miller v. Eisenberg, 90 Cal.App.2d 479, 482, 203 P.2d 11. The conclusion of the trial court will not be set aside by a reviewing court if it finds reasonable support in the evidence. McCray v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 12 Cal.App.2d 537, 538, 55 P.2d 1234.

[5] Viewing the evidence and the reasonable inferences that may be drawn therefrom in the light most favorable to defendants and disregarding conflicting evidence and inferences, it is manifest we cannot say, as a matter of law, that the trial court's finding that the notice of rescission was not served promptly after plaintiffs discovered and had knowledge of all the true facts concerning the quarry and the profits thereof is without support in the evidence. A conclusion may be derived from the evidence that at least as early as February 1952 plaintiff had knowledge of all the facts with respect to the quarry and, if his testimony is to be believed, that he then knew the representations with respect to its productivity and profits were untrue. The trial court may even have fairly inferred that he learned all the facts as early as November 1951. Plaintiffs did not give notice of rescission until July 3, 1952. They did not act with reasonable diligence.

[6] As we have noted, the court found that plaintiffs did not sustain any damage. They contend the finding is without evidentiary support. The complaint alleged that the property plaintiffs exchanged for the quarry had a value of $33,000; that the quarry was of no value to plaintiffs over and above the value of the movable personal property; that they sustained damages in the sum of $33,000. Defendants answered these allegations thus: "defendants deny generally and specifically each and every allegation therein contained." Plaintiffs assert that the denial is a negative pregnant and constituted an admission of damage in the amount of $32,999. The cause was tried on the theory that the denial was sufficient and that the question of damages was in issue. Assuming, without deciding, that the denial is a negative pregnant, the point was waived. (3 Cal.Jur.2d 618, § 149.)

[7] There was evidence that the property which was exchanged for the quarry had a value of about $33,000 at the time of the exchange. On November 27, 1951 plaintiff listed the quarry and equipment with a real estate broker and granted him the right to sell it for $60,000. At the time he gave the listing plaintiff stated to the broker "that he felt he did not have the proper management and that he was concerned about the way the operation was going on, the things that were happening at the quarry concerning his superintendent, Mr. Beach * * * that Mr. Beach, he felt, was not doing a good job and that he was misusing the funds and taking advantage of his being absent, and that he did know that Mr. Beach was selling stone on the side, that he had received no money for, and just in general that he was pretty disgusted with the whole thing." In a letter to the broker dated November 29, 1951 plaintiff stated:

"My superintendent Mr. A. A. Beach informs me that he can easily quarry 150 tons per week of assorted flagstone and should by the first of the year, 1952, attain 200 tons weekly. From my observations with all the product being sold and desired by the Western States Stone Company, with proper supervision, which I am unable to do, owing to my other varied activities, the profit per average ton should be $5.00."

A qualified expert testified that the value of the quarry alone was $22,500. There was evidence that the value of cabins and equipment on the property was $19,000. The finding that plaintiff sustained no damage is amply supported by the evidence.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

The question here posed is whether a property settlement agreement, incorporated by reference into a decree, so merges as to be competent authority for the issuance of a writ of execution on such decree. The inquiry arises from the order of the court below, here on appeal, which quashed an execution and restrained the sheriff from conducting a sale of plaintiff's property under and by virtue of such writ.

Plaintiff was awarded a decree of annulment on July 22, 1943. On the day preceding the decree, the parties executed a writing settling their property rights whereby it was provided that plaintiff should pay defendant $50 a month for life or until her remarriage. The court by its decree referred to the agreement settling the property rights "and by this reference embodied in and made a part of this judgment" and attached a copy of the agreement. Subsequently, plaintiff failed to make the payments as provided by the judgment and became indebted to defendant in a sum in excess of $2,400. Such delinquent sum was still unpaid on June 21, 1954, when defendant procured the issuance of the writ of execution on the theory that the property settlement had been merged in the decree.

After levy had been made by the sheriff on the property of plaintiff, the latter made a motion for the court to quash the writ, based upon his own affidavit. In that document, he averred that a copy of the property settlement "was attached and by reference embodied in and made part of the judgment." The court granted the motion, thereby holding that the property settlement did not merge in the judgment of annulment. Such order is contrary to the law of this state.

Plaintiff contends that the agreement for property settlement did not merge in the decree of July 22, 1943; that the decree merely referred to the property settlement and was not made a part of the decree and that the decree did not order performance of its provisions. In support of such thesis, plaintiff cites Howarth v. Howarth, 81 Cal.App. 2d 266, 183 P.2d 670; Kent v. Superior Court, 106 Cal.App.2d 593, 235 P.2d 420; Plummer v. Superior Court, 20 Cal.2d 158, 124 P.2d 5; Price v. Price, 85 Cal.App.2d 732, 194 P.2d 101; Shogren v. Superior Court, 93 Cal.App.2d 356, 209 P.2d 108; and 1 Armstrong's California Family Law, page 426. Each of such authorities has been overruled in each respect as to which it is contrary to Flynn v. Flynn, 42 Cal.2d 55, 265 P.2d 865, 867.

[1] It is, by the Flynn decision, now the law that merger is the substitution of rights and duties under the judgment for those under the agreement of the parties; in any situation requiring a determination of the potency of the judgment to effect the provisions of the agreement, it is necessary to determine whether the parties intended a merger; in the absence from the judgment of an express order to perform the terms of the agreement, the intention of the parties and the court must be derived from such competent proofs as are available; "the necessity of referring to an extrinsic document presents no insuperable barrier to giving effect to the decree"; where it is difficult to determine from only the "permanent records of the court alone the intended character of the payments involved, courts do not hesitate to consider all of the admissible extrinsic evidence correctly to interpret their decrees."

The decree in the Flynn case reads in part as follows: "The property settlement agreement * * * is hereby specifically incorporated herein and made a part of this decree, and defendant is hereby ordered to make all of the payments provided * * *."

[2] The decree in the case at bar reads as follows: "It is ordered and adjudged—that the properties and property rights of plaintiff and defendant herein are adjusted, settled and distributed as per the terms and conditions of that certain agreement dated July 21, 1943, executed by plaintiff and defendant herein, a full and true copy of which agreement is on file herein attached—and which is hereby approved by the court and by this reference embodied in and made a part of this judgment." From a comparison of the two judgments, it is clear that there is no substantial difference in the language and intent of the two decrees. In both, the agreements were incorporated by reference; in each instance, the agreement was by reference made a part of the decree and it was adjudged that the property rights of the parties are adjusted and settled as per the terms of the agreement presented to the court. In view of such language, is it possible that either party or the court intended otherwise than to enter a final judgment of the rights of the parties under that document?

Also, from the terms of the agreement, it is apparent that a final adjudication was intended. While plaintiff took over $18,000 and 80 shares of an Arizona corporation, the value of which was not determined, defendant received a six-year old automobile, two United States Bonds of the face value of $1,025 and the household furniture. The only other asset to go to defendant in any degree to compensate her for the lion's share her husband had taken was the paltry sum of $50 per month during her lifetime as a single woman. In view of such disparity in the amounts awarded by the agreement to the parties and of their stipulation that their contract should be made a part of the decree, it requires no Mill or Spencer to infer that the parties intended a final judgment to be entered settling for all time every conceivable claim of either party against the other. If they had had no such purpose, why should they agree to have their contract incorporated in the decree? Surely, by their stipulation, they did not mean that next year, or at any time, defendant should file suit to collect on her agreement. Such an interpretation would lead to absurd results. If a merger was not intended, then the language of the stipulation was meaningless and its presentation and filing were idle acts. If merger is a question of fact to be determined from the intention of the parties and the court, then the agreement of these parties merged; for from all the available evidence the parties intended to adjust all claims of either against the other and to perpetuate such adjustment by a judgment.

[3] Plaintiff attempts to support his position by the dissenting and concurring opinions in Fox v. Fox, 42 Cal.2d 49, 265 P.2d 881; Dexter v. Dexter, 42 Cal.2d 36, 265 P.2d 873; and Flynn v. Flynn, 42 Cal. 2d 55, 265 P.2d 865. Such argument fails of its purpose. However so eloquent or profound a dissenting opinion or a concurrence may be, it is not authority. Grattan v. Wiggins, 23 Cal. 16, 27; Mix v. Ingersoll Candy Co., 6 Cal.2d 674, 679, 59 P.2d 144; Turney v. Collins, 48 Cal.App.2d 381, 388, 119 P.2d 954.

The judgment is reversed; the court below is instructed to enter an order dissolving the injunction issued to prevent a sale under the execution.

Civ. 20728.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,

June 22, 1955.

Husband's action for separation. Wife cross-complained for annulment. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clyde C. Triplett, J., granted temporary custody of minor child of parties to husband. Wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J. pro tem., held that evidence sustained trial court's conclusion that welfare of child would be best served by permitting temporary custody to remain with its father, and trial court did not abuse its discretion.

Order affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨1078(5)

Where wife seeking annulment of marriage appealed from minute order and from whole of order setting temporary alimony and temporary custody of child, but brief on appeal attacked only portion of order awarding temporary custody of child to husband seeking separate maintenance, all other provisions of order were affirmed, under rule that claims of error not advanced in opening brief are waived.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨931(1), 946

Divorce ⇨296, 312.6(3, 5)

Husband and Wife ⇨299½

Statute setting up considerations for guide of courts in awarding custody of child in actions for divorce or separate maintenance confers a broad discretion on the court to do what is best for welfare of child, and court's determination will not be disturbed upon appeal in absence of manifest showing of abuse, and every presumption supports reasonableness of award. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 138(1, 2).

3. Parent and Child ⇨2(3)

In a contest between parents concerning the custody of their minor child, neither is entitled to custody as a matter of right, and under statute setting up considerations for guidance of court, in awarding custody in divorce and separate maintenance actions, each is equally entitled to custody, and no showing or finding of unfitness is necessary to enable the court to award custody to one parent or the other in accordance with what, in its sound discretion, is deemed the best interest of the child. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 138(1, 2).

Husband and Wife ⇨299½

Statute providing that, in actions for divorce or separate maintenance, as between parents adversely claiming custody of child, neither parent is entitled to it as of right, but, other things being equal, if child is of tender years it should be given to mother, does not give mother absolute right to custody of child of tender years, and qualifying clause, "but other things being equal" leaves large measure of discretion with trial court, and if court finds that other things are not equal and there is any evidence to support such finding, court does not abuse its discretion. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 138(2).

5. Husband and Wife ⇨299½

Marriage ⇨64

In proceeding to determine temporary custody of child whose father was seeking separate maintenance and whose mother was seeking annulment, evidence justified court's ruling that welfare of child would be best subserved by permitting custody to remain with father temporarily. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 138(2).

6. Appeal and Error ⇐1010(1)

It is not province of reviewing court to present a detailed argument on sufficiency of evidence to support findings where it appears that question is one purely of determining which side shall be believed.

7. Courts ⇐104

Where an appellant has failed to show that the trial court was wrong, it is not incumbent upon a reviewing court to engage in a dissertation upon the law for the purpose of demonstrating that the court was right.

ASHBURN, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff husband brought this action praying (1) for a decree that, because of defendant wife's cruelty, he "may live separate and apart from the defendant" and (2) for exclusive custody of the child of the marriage, alleged to be then in his custody. The wife, in addition to answering, filed a cross-complaint for annulment on grounds of her non-age and plaintiff's fraudulent inducement of the marriage. She alleged the child to be in the joint custody of the parties and prayed that custody be awarded to her. The child was in fact in the custody of the plaintiff. Each party obtained an order requiring the other to show cause why the custody of the child should not be awarded, "during the pendency of this action" to the moving party. The wife also sought attorney fees, court costs and support for herself and the child during the pendency of the action. The orders were heard together, and after a somewhat elaborate trial of the issue, temporary custody was awarded to plaintiff by minute order of May 21, 1954, reading as follows: "Heretofore submitted on May 14, 1954, the court now renders its decision and order as follows: Temporary custody of the minor child is given to plaintiff subject to right of reasonable visitation of defendant. Plaintiff and defendant are ordered restrained from removing the minor child from Los Angeles County, California, without the written permission and consent of both parties or order of court first obtained. Plaintiff is ordered to pay to the defendant for her support and maintenance and as alimony the sum of $5.00 per week payable on Saturday of each week beginning May 22, 1954, such payment to discontinue if defendant removes from Los Angeles County. * * *" This was followed by written findings and conclusions of law on July 12, 1954, but there was no formal order signed by the judge.

The child is a girl, two years of age. And the court found that "both parties are fit persons to have the custody and control of the minor child," but that "the best interests of the minor child demand that the plaintiff have custody and control of the minor child subject to the right of reasonable visitation reserved to the defendant."

[1] Defendant appealed from the minute order "and from the whole of said order." But her brief on appeal attacks only that portion of the order which awards temporary custody of the child to plaintiff. As to all other provisions of the order it must be affirmed pursuant to the settled rule that claims of error not advanced in the opening brief are waived. Title Guarantee & Trust Co. v. Fraternal Finance Co., 220 Cal. 362, 363, 30 P.2d 515; David v. Goodman, 89 Cal.App.2d 162, 170, 200 P.2d 568; 4 Cal.Jur.2d § 480, p. 310.

[2-4] Section 138, Civil Code, contains these pertinent provisions:

"In awarding the custody the court is to be guided by the following considerations:

"(1) By what appears to be for the best interests of the child; and if the child is of a sufficient age to form an intelligent preference, the court may consider that preference in determining the question;

"(2) As between parents adversely claiming the custody neither parent is entitled to it as of right; but other things being equal, if the child is of tender years, custody should be given to the mother; if the child is of an age to require education and preparation for labor or business, then custody should be given to the father."

This section confers a broad discretion on the court to do what is best for the welfare of the child. And the appeal presents only the question whether that discretion was abused in the instant case. "In a divorce proceeding involving the custody of a minor, primary consideration must be given to the welfare of the child. The court is given a wide discretion in such matters, and its determination will not be disturbed upon appeal in the absence of a manifest showing of abuse. Gantner v. Gantner, 39 Cal.2d 272, 275, 246 P.2d 923; Taber v. Taber, 209 Cal. 755, 757, 290 P. 36. 'Every presumption supports the reasonableness of a decree.' *Runsvold v. "In a contest between parents concerning the custody of their minor child neither is entitled to custody as a matter of right. Under the statute, Civ. Code, § 138(2), each is equally entitled to custody and no showing or finding of unfitness is necessary to enable the court to award custody to one or the other in accordance with what, in its sound discretion, is deemed the best interests of the child. Munson v. Munson, 27 Cal.2d 659, 666, 166 P.2d 268; Stever v. Stever, supra, 6 Cal.2d 166, 169, 56 P.2d 1229; Beal v. Beal, 218 Cal. 755, 758, 24 P.2d 768." Davis v. Davis, 41 Cal.2d 563, 565, 261 P.2d 729, 730. "An abuse of discretion must be clearly established before the reviewing court will interfere with an award of custody. Wolfe v. Wolfe, 30 Cal.2d 1, 5, 180 P.2d 345; Munson v. Munson, 27 Cal.2d 659, 666, 166 P.2d 268; Prouty v. Prouty, 16 Cal.2d 190, 191, 105 P.2d 295. The trial court is given a wide latitude of discretion in determining whether other things are equal within the meaning of the Code section. Taber v. Taber, 209 Cal. 755, 756, 290 P. 36. It is the welfare of the child and not the shortcomings of the respective parties which is determinative." Clarke v. Clarke, 35 Cal.2d 259, 261, 262, 217 P.2d 401, 402. "This section (Civ.Code, sec. 138, subd. 2) does not give the mother the absolute right to the custody of a child of tender years. The qualifying clause, "But other things being equal", still leaves a large measure of discretion with the trial court. If the court finds that other things are not equal, as it evidently did here, and there is any substantial evidence to support such a finding, our inquiry is at an end." Scott v. Barnes, 118 Cal.App.2d 271, 275, 257 P.2d 700, 703.

[5] We deem it unnecessary to detail or review the evidence justifying the court's ruling at bar; it fully sustains the conclusion that the welfare of the child will be best subserved by permitting the custody to remain with the father, at least temporarily. The trial judge expressed real concern over the proper order to be made by him, accorded both sides a full hearing and exercised a discretion which cannot upon this record be termed an unsound one,—certainly he did not abuse his discretion.

Cases arising upon application for modification of an existing custody order are not controlling here; we deal with one awarding temporary custody prior to trial. The cited cases of Juri v. Juri, 69 Cal.App. 2d 773, 160 P.2d 73; Washburn v. Washburn, 49 Cal.App.2d 581, 122 P.2d 96, have to do with motions for modification.

[6, 7] We reiterate what this court said in Sonkin v. Hershon, 130 Cal.App.2d 491, 279 P.2d 156, 157: "It is not the province of a reviewing court to present a detailed argument on the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings where it appears that the question is one purely of determining which side shall be believed. The trial court having determined this with the witnesses before it, the controversy is settled. Gillespie v. Gillespie, 121 Cal.App. 2d 95, 97, 262 P.2d 607." And in Re Estate of Phelps, 132 Cal.App.2d 850, 283 P.2d 293, 295: "Where an appellant has failed to show that the trial court was wrong it is not incumbent upon a reviewing court to engage in a dissertation upon the law for the purpose of demonstrating that the court was right."

The order is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

June 24, 1955.

Proceeding on application to District Court of Appeal for bail pending appeal after denial of application by trial court. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that where trial court was justified in its denial of bail on showing before it, and where the only affidavits that would support granting of bill were those filed in District Court of Appeal on application for bail, application would be denied and petitioner granted leave to renew application in trial court based on subsequent affidavits.

Application denied with permission granted to renew application for bail in trial court.

1. Bail ⇨46

Under rule permitting convicted person to seek bail from appellate court after denial of bail by trial court, appellate court can grant bail only if appellate court finds denial by trial court was unjustified. West's Ann. Rules on Appeal, rule 32(b).

2. Bail ⇨49

Where trial court was justified in its denial of bail on showing before it, and where the only affidavits that would support granting of bail were those filed in District

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

This is an application for bail pending appeal under Rule 32(b) after the trial court denied the application. After the filing of the application in this court the applicant was permitted to file additional affidavits relative to her present health and physical condition. The District Attorney and Attorney General were also permitted to file counter-affidavits.

[1, 2] When a convicted person seeks bail from an appellate court under Rule 32 (b) the appellate court can grant bail after a denial by the lower court only if the appellate court finds that the denial by the lower court was unjustified. Since on the showing made in the lower court the denial of bail was not "unjustified," and since the only affidavits that would support the granting of bail are those filed in this court, it would seem that in such circumstances the present application should be denied and the petitioner granted leave to renew the application in the trial court based on the subsequent affidavits. People v. Perdue, 48 Cal. 552; Ex parte Curtis, 92 Cal. 188, 28 P. 223.

The application is denied with permission granted to petitioner to renew the application for bail in the trial court based upon the affidavits filed in this court and any other relevant evidence available.

Action by real estate brokers against owner of realty for commission alleged due from owner for finding purchaser of realty. The Municipal Court of Los Cerritos Judicial District, entered judgment for brokers, and realty owner appealed. The Appellate Department of the Superior Court, County of Los Angeles, Bishop, Acting P. J., held that where brokers were given exclusive agency to sell owner's property at $14,500 on terms of $4,500 cash and $10,000 at $100 per month including interest at 6%, but agreement buyer had signed reserved to him right to pay off mortgage all at once or make payments of more than $100 a month, brokers failed to procure purchaser on terms specified in listing contract and were not entitled to commission.

Judgment reversed.

Swain, J., dissented.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨840(1)

In action by brokers against landowner for commission alleged due for finding purchaser for land wherein facts were set forth in second cause of action of amended complaint, the reviewing court was required to disregard first cause of action in which same facts were pleaded as common count.

2. Trial ⇨404(1)

Where finding of trial court referred specifically to one particular contract marked in evidence, finding could not be interpreted as referring to different contract.

3. Brokers ⇨86(5)

In action by brokers against landowner for commission alleged due for finding purchaser for land, finding that buyer brokers had produced had been ready, willing and able to purchase said property on terms and under conditions of their listing contract was not supported by evidence.

4. Brokers ⇨49(3)

Where brokers were given exclusive agency to sell property at $14,500 on terms of $4,500 cash and $10,000 at $100 per month including interest at 6 per cent, but agreement prospective purchaser had signed reserved to purchaser right to pay off mortgage all at once or make payment of more than $100 per month, brokers failed to procure purchaser on terms specified in listing contract and were not entitled to commission.

5. Brokers ⇨49(3)

Where real estate broker procured purchaser for realty who agreed to pay $4,500 down and $10,000 trust deed all at once or more than at $100 per month, and listing contract provided for $4,500 down payment and $10,000 trust deed to be paid at $100 per month, the variance must be objected to by owner when terms of purchase are brought to him if, when sued for commission, owner desires to defend on variance.

6. Brokers ⇨88(14)

In action by brokers against landowner for commission, trial court's finding that brokers had procured purchaser ready, willing and able to sign upon landowner's terms was not equivalent of finding to effect that landowner waived or was estopped to assert that there was material variance between terms purchaser agreed to and those broker was authorized to obtain.

BISHOP, Acting Presiding Judge.

The plaintiffs are faced with a dilemma, as they defend their judgment of $725: if the issues are restricted to the two framed as a result of a pretrial conference, the vital one of those issues must be resolved against them; and if the issues are as broad as the findings, then the evidence fails to support an essential finding.

[1] The action is one for a broker's commission. As the facts are set forth in the second cause of action of the amended complaint, we must disregard the first cause of action, in which they are pleaded as a common count. Orloff v. Metropolitan Trust Co., 1941, 17 Cal.2d 484, 489, 110 P.2d 396; Neal v. Bank of America, 1949, 93 Cal.App.2d 678, 681, 209 P.2d 825; Maselli v. E. H. Appleby & Co., Inc., 1953, 117 Cal.App.2d 634, 637, 256 P.2d 618. We have, then, an action based upon the theory that the plaintiffs, armed with an exclusive listing, had secured a buyer ready, willing and able to buy according to the terms of the listing. As indicated by the documents attached to the amended complaint, the terms authorized by the defendants were: price $14,500, to be paid as follows: $4,500 cash, seller to carry $10,000 at $100 a month, including interest at 6%. The prospective buyers signed a written offer, whose terms we shall examine in a moment.

We have no report of the discussion that took place in the pretrial conference, but as the actual trial commenced "the two main issues to be reached in the present trial" were stipulated to be: first, did the plaintiffs on or about November 11 produce to the defendants "a binding contract of sale" in accordance with the terms of the exclusive listing, signed by a buyer ready, willing and able to buy defendants' property; and, second, something indefinite, about a down payment of $500 which proves to be of no concern to us. The trial court found, in one of its Findings of Fact, that the plaintiffs did procure from the buyer "a binding and enforceable written purchase contract (Exhibit 'B' of Complaint) * * and that the terms of said contract of purchase complied with the terms and conditions" of the listing agreement. Unfortunately, for the judgment, the facts are not in accord with this finding; the issue should have been resolved against the plaintiffs.

The written offer, signed by the prospective purchasers, was never accepted by the defendants, and at no time merited being characterized as a binding contract. However, there is precedent for this unhappy terminology; (for two examples see Barnes v. Osgood, 1930, 103 Cal.App. 730, 734; 284 P. 975; Twogood v. Monnette, 1923, 191 Cal. 103, 107; 215 P. 542, and our conclusion that the finding is contrary to the fact is not a matter of semantics. The price in the listing agreement and the offer were the same: $14,500. In its early passages the offer recited that $500 had been paid as a deposit (the evidence was to the contrary), and that the balance of the $14,500 was to be placed in escrow within 30 days, as follows: $4,500 cash (inclusive of the $500) "balance and terms as follows: Buyer agrees to pay $145.00 & $45.00 down. (sic) Seller to carry 1st trust deed of $10,000. Payable @ $100.00 or more per mo. including interest at 6%. Rylee & Cogburn to get loan on 15123 Cabell for Down payment." We can only interpret the reference to "Rylee & Cogburn to get loan on 15123 Cabell for Down payment" as a condition, which if not met, would release the prospective purchasers from the deal. If so, this was no "binding contract," but a conditional offer.

[2] Escrow instructions, signed by the prospective purchasers, were received in evidence. These, however, may not be made use of to support the finding that we have been considering. A copy of the "written contract" on which plaintiff relies was attached to the amended complaint as "Exhibit B", and the finding that plaintiff procured "a binding and enforceable written purchase contract" specifically refers to that Exhibit B. The finding may not be interpreted as referring to a different contract.

[3] It may be that there was no intention of limiting the issues to the two referred to, and as finding III is broader in scope we assume there was no such intention. Finding III—that plaintiff did "produce a buyer ready, willing and able to purchase said property on the terms and under the conditions of said [listing] contract"—however, is not supported by the evidence, whether the offer made by the buyers is found in this deposit receipt or in the escrow instructions. The matter we are about to discuss is a further reason for the conclusion already reached, that on the first issue framed at the pretrial hearing, the evidence fails to support the finding that was made.

The listing agreement, down in its "contract" provisions, set the price at which the plaintiff was authorized to procure a buyer, at $14,500, upon these terms already noted: "Forty Five Hundred Dollars ($4500) cash, balance as follows: Seller to Car $10,000 at $100. mo. including interest at 6%. Seller Will Consider Sec. T.D.—Buyer to get Top Loan." Up above the "Contract", on this listing agreement under the heading "Remarks: Exchange, Encumbrance, Financing", we find: "Seller will Carry—Submit all Cash offers." We interpret the "Seller to Car" $10,000 at $100 mo., down in the "contract", as meaning that in addition to the $4500 to be paid as cash, the seller is to receive $100 a month until $10,000 and interest at 6% have been paid. (Unless it means this—it is too uncertain to be valid.) By such an arrangement the seller would have a secured investment, paying 6% interest on a sum varying from $10,000 down to less than $100 over a long period. Looked at another way, the seller would have a secured income of $100 per month spread over a period in excess of twelve years.

[4-6] The offer brought to the defendants by the broker, whether we take the deposit receipt or the escrow instructions, was not "on the terms and under the conditions of said contract" to quote from finding III, for in both those writings the prospective buyer retained the right to pay off the whole $10,000 at any time, or to pay greater sums than $100 in any month. The variance between the terms upon which the broker was authorized to "sell" defendants' property and the terms of either "binding agreement" to buy it is not unsubstantial. See Andrews v. Waldo, 1928, 205 Cal. 764, 769, 272 P. 1052. It is the sort of a variance, no doubt, that must be objected to by the owner, when the terms of the purchase are brought to him, so that the broker may have the variance eliminated, if the purchaser can be persuaded to accept the owners' terms. Lathrop v. Gauger, 1954, 127 Cal.App.2d 754, 767, 274 P.2d 730, 738, and cases cited. The Lathrop case notes an exception to the rule to which it refers: "a failure to timely specify a particular ground of objection does not preclude the assertion of such ground as a defense if the seller, through no fault of his own, was not aware of the facts giving rise to the grounds of objection." The case of Gulart v. Azevedo, 1923, 62 Cal.App. 108, 216 P. 405, 408, is given as an authority recognizing the exception just referred to, and there we find this passage: "Respondent contends that, by refusing to convey the property on the sole ground that his wife would not sign the quitclaim deed sent to him for execution, the defendant waived all other objections that he had an opportunity to make at that time. The simple answer is that defendant did not then have the opportunity to make the objections here relied on, because of plaintiff's incorrect statement that the land had been sold in accordance with the terms of the listing contract. Had that statement been true, the defendant could have made no objection which would have been a defense to this action." The evidence in this case would have warranted a finding that plaintiffs represented that they had a purchaser signed up on defendants' terms, and, that neither the deposit receipt nor the escrow instructions were shown to the defendants. There was no finding on this phase of the case. A finding that a purchaser was secured on defendants' terms is not the equivalent of a finding, the effect of which is that defendants waived, or are estopped to assert, that there was a material variance between the terms agreed to by the purchasers and those the broker was authorized to obtain. An excuse for non-performance is not the same as performance. Krotzer v. Clark, 1918, 178 Cal. 736, 739, 174 P. 657; Downs v. Atkinson, 1929, 207 Cal. 259, 261, 277 P. 723.

PATROSSO, J., concurs.

SWAIN, Judge.

I dissent. The purchasers signed not only the offer which contained the provision "Rylee and Cogburn to get loan on 15123 Cabell for down payment" but also signed escrow instructions (No. 11279), dated November 4, 1953 in which they agreed to purchase the property on the terms set out in the listing agreement no mention being made as to Rylee and Cogburn getting a loan. In addition to that, a loan escrow was opened (see plaintiff's Ex. F) into which the lender deposited $4,500 with instructions "When escrow closed transfer net proceeds to escrow No. 11279". The defendants and Mrs. De Fini's attorney were informed of this prior to November 11, 1953. It is true that the loan escrow was not opened until November 17, 1953, but the escrows support the finding that on or about the 3rd day of November, 1953, "plaintiffs had produced * * * a buyer ready, willing, and able to purchase said property on the terms and under the conditions required in said contract."

The reason which Mr. De Fini gave for not signing the escrow instructions was that he would not sign until his wife signed. Mrs. De Fini refused to sign until the full down payment was deposited in escrow. Neither reason is a defense. Plaintiffs were required to obtain a qualified purchaser before the listing expired but this does not mean the sale had to be completed by that date. The purchaser had a reasonable time thereafter to complete the sale; this included putting the balance of the down payment into the escrow. Laack v. Dimmick, 1928, 95 Cal.App. 456, 470-471, 273 P. 50, 55, holds, "It is the contention of defendants that 'under the circumstances of the instant case it is apparent that the purchaser must not only be ready at the time of his announced desire to purchase, but continue to be able to respond as and when the seller presents his deed and certificate of title.' * * * The purchaser must be able to buy; and the word 'able' means financially able. This does not mean, however, that such purchaser must have all the money in his immediate possession or to his credit at a bank, but only that he must be able to command the necessary funds to close the deal within the time required. Even where the purchaser was not personally able to buy, it was said that 'it is sufficient if (he) has arranged so that these funds will be available for payment when the time comes to close the transaction, although part of it be obtained on the purchase property itself.' Pellaton v. Brunski, 69 Cal.App. 301, 231 P. 583. It is much more clearly sufficient if the purchaser has assets of greater value than the purchase price and a financial rating which will enable him to command the funds when needed. For in such event the purchaser is not only able to purchase, but is able to respond in damages if he refuse to go ahead with the contract. Furthermore, the contract of sale provided that the balance of the purchase price was payable 'within * * * days' from date upon the execution and delivery of a deed and a guaranty certificate of title showing title in the owner. Where a contract for the sale of realty does not fix the time for final payment, a reasonable time is allowed. McGibbon v. Schmidt, 172 Cal. 70, 75, 155 P. 460. Or, to state it in other words, the rule that a purchaser must be ready willing, and able means, where no time is fixed in the contract, that he must be ready, willing, and able to carry out the purchase within a reasonable time. Bunyard v. Farman, 176 Mo.App. 89, 161 S.W. 640."

I would affirm the judgment.

Action by former client against attorney for declaratory judgment as to former client's rights under contingent fee contract.—The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Philbrick McCoy, J., gave judgment for client. Attorney appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that where contract provided that attorney was to take necessary legal steps to protect or collect legacy of client, parties intended that if legacy could not be protected, attorney would attempt to collect a cash settlement for client's claim, and when final decree of distribution in estate established all of client's claims, attorney had fully performed all that was required of him under contract.

Judgment reversed with directions.

1. Attorney and Client ⇨148(1)

Contingent fee contract between attorney and client, when explained by reference to circumstances under which it was made and matter to which it relates, left no doubt as to its meaning, and statute providing that any possible doubts as to meaning of contract should be resolved against person preparing it was not applicable. West's Ann. Civ.Code, §§ 1647, 1654.

2. Attorney and Client ⇨149

In contingent fee contract between legatee and attorney providing that attorney would take necessary legal steps to protect or collect legacy of client, words "protect or collect" were used with reference to two alternative possibilities, that attorney would seek to protect the legacy, or collect a settlement in cash for client's claim, and upon final decree of distribution in estate granting client's claim, attorney had fully performed under contract, and was not required to bring accounting action against trustee under will.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Protect or Collect".

Statutes ⇨197

The word "or" should be construed as meaning "and" only when such construction is found necessary to carry out the obvious intent of the legislature in a statute or the obvious intent of parties in a contract, when such intent may be gleaned from the context in which the word is used. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1644.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Or".

4. Contracts ⇨159

In its ordinary sense, the function of the word "or" in a contract is to mark an alternative such as "either this or that".

5. Contracts ⇨147(1), 169

The object and meaning of a parties' contract must be determined by their intent at the time of its execution and cannot be extended beyond its plain import by circumstances which occurred after its execution and which were not within parties' contemplation at time of execution.

SPENCE, Justice.

Defendant Ford, an attorney, appeals from an adverse judgment in a declaratory relief action brought by plaintiff, his former client, for the purpose of settling controverted claims relative to a contingent fee contract, which was followed by an assignment. The trial court construed the original contract in line with plaintiff's contention that defendant had failed to complete the agreed legal services; and upon that basis, it concluded that the contract and the assignment were of no further force and effect. Defendant maintains that the court erred in its construction of the parties' contract, and in its adjudication that the above-mentioned instruments were of no further force and effect. The record supports defendant's position.

Carl Hugo Johanson died in 1939. The residue of his estate—consisting primarily of stock in the Panama Glove Company, a corporation, and certain patents and contracts relating thereto—was bequeathed in trust to his widow, his attorney Oscar Houge, and his "faithful employee" Helen Smith. The will directed the trustees to keep the income from the securities and the income "from patents and [related] contracts" in separate accounts. The income from the securities was to be paid 50% to the testator's widow, 35% to Miss Smith, and 15% to one Weber, another employee, "as long as he continued to work for the Glove Company." The patent income was to be paid 50% to the testator's widow, 20% to Miss Smith, 5% to Weber, and 25% to the attorney Oscar Houge. Upon the death of the testator's widow, two-thirds of such portion of the income which she was entitled to receive under the trust was to be paid to the remaining beneficiaries in certain proportions.

The trust was to terminate on the death of both the testator's widow and Miss Smith. At that time the corpus was to be distributed, with one-third going to the testator's church. As to the remaining two-thirds of the corpus, the will provided for distribution as follows: To Oscar Houge during his lifetime an undivided 25% in all the patents and contracts relating thereto in the trust estate; but if at the time of distribution of the trust estate, he should not be living, then said 25% should go to "his son, Norman O. Houge (plaintiff herein), provided he is still engaged in devoting his time to the successful operation of the promotion of the sale and operation of the machinery and equipment and methods described in said patents"; and as to "all the tate not specifically heretofore distributed," 21% was to go to a named beneficiary and "the rest * * * to Norman O. Houge provided he is still engaged in working for the businesses of the trust estate and promoting its best interests."

Plaintiff anticipated that he would be called into military service, and he voluntarily quit his employment in the trust's business. Then fearing that he might not secure re-employment there, plaintiff discussed with defendant the effect of such absence from the business on his interests under the will and the possibility of a forfeiture because of his failure to meet the employment condition. Defendant advised plaintiff that it would probably be necessary to take legal action to protect plaintiff's interest in the trust estate. Accordingly, the parties on February 6, 1941, entered into the following "attorney and client" contract: "The undersigned client (plaintiff) hereby employs the undersigned attorney (defendant) to render legal service in connection with the following matter, to wit: Drawing contracts and taking other necessary legal steps to protect or collect legacy of client under estate of Carl Hugo Johanson now pending in L.A. Superior Court. As consideration the client agrees to pay said attorney a fee as follows: * * * Contingent: Forty (40) percent of the amount recovered, preserved or protected by the legal services rendered. * * * Attorney is vested with authority to compromise and settle this matter, in his discretion, except that no settlement shall be made for less than $10,000.00."

On February 18, 1941, nine days after the above contract was signed, the testator's widow, Mrs. Johanson, died. In March, 1941, plaintiff was drafted into the Army. Upon his discharge, he was refused further employment in the trust's business. In October, 1944, plaintiff's father, Oscar Houge, died. Oscar Houge had been the executor of the Johanson will, as well as a trustee and a life-income beneficiary of the trust estate. In 1946, the subsequently appointed administrator with the will annexed submitted a final account and petition for distribution in the Johanson estate, wherein attempt was made to eliminate plaintiff from taking any distributive share therein because of his failure to meet the condition of continuous employment in the trust's business. On plaintiff's behalf, defendant filed objections, and the issue of plaintiff's alleged forfeiture of his legacy went to a contested trial in 1947. While the trial court indicated from the bench an unfavorable ruling on plaintiff's claim, defendant was able ultimately to obtain a decision in plaintiff's favor upon the signing of the findings and conclusions.

The decree of distribution in the Johanson estate was entered in 1948, vesting plaintiff's interest in the trust free of the employment condition and giving plaintiff a twofold status: (1) as an income beneficiary of the trust; and (2) as a remainderman of the corpus of the trust, upon its termination. The Johanson will had not given plaintiff a share in the trust income, but apparently his claim thereto was successfully advanced by defendant following the death of Mrs. Johanson and Oscar Houge, two of the life-income beneficiaries, with plaintiff succeeding to the share of his deceased father as such income beneficiary. An appeal was taken from the 1948 decree by Helen Smith, the surviving trustee, and then dismissed. Thus in early 1950 the decree, establishing plaintiff's distributive rights in both the income and corpus of the trust estate, became final—nine years after the execution of the 1941 contract by plaintiff and defendant. The trust was then to continue, but to terminate upon the death of Helen Smith, the sole surviving trustee. On March 6, 1950, a stipulation leading to the closing of the Johanson estate was signed.

On this same last-mentioned date—March 6, 1950—plaintiff, at defendant's request, executed the following assignment: "For Value Received, pursuant to written contract dated February 6, 1941, the undersigned, Norman O. Houge, hereby assigns, sets over, and transfers to Patrick H. Ford, forty (40) percent of his right, title, and interest in and to the corpus and beneficial right in the trust created by the Will of Carl Johanson (L.A. Superior Court, Probate No. 191032) of which Helen Smith is now the trustee." By virtue of this assignment, defendant has received to date approximately $1,000.

Sometime in 1951 plaintiff became dissatisfied with the sums distributed to him out of the patent income, and he attempted to persuade defendant to take some legal action to compel the trustee to increase the amount of income distributed to the beneficiaries of the trust. In particular, plaintiff assailed the trustee's failure to cause the Glove Company, which was controlled by the trust, to declare dividends, which, if issued, would have come into the trust estate. Accordingly, plaintiff urged defendant to seek an accounting from the trustee and, if necessary, to petition for her removal. Defendant advised against such action, contending that it would be unwise in that it would seriously diminish the small income then being produced by the trust if the trustee used trust income to defend herself. Ultimately, in November, 1952, in discussing the matter with defendant, plaintiff cited their contractual arrangement and insisted that defendant was thereby obligated to initiate such further legal proceedings as plaintiff desired. Defendant, on the other hand, maintained that plaintiff's legacy was fully vested by the final decree of distribution, that their 1941 contract was thereby completely performed, and that he was under no further obligation to plaintiff. Plaintiff then brought this action for declaratory relief.

The principal point in controversy is the proper construction to be placed on the parties' contract for the purpose of determining their rights and obligations. Defendant contends that his services under the contract ended when the decree for distribution had become final and the Johanson estate had been distributed to the trustee; that the contingent fee arrangement entitled him to forty per cent of everything plaintiff received by virtue of that final decree; and that the assignment merely confirmed the proportionate division of plaintiff's share in the trust estate, whether income or corpus. On the other hand, plaintiff contends that the contract imposed upon defendant a continuing duty, obligating him not only to exert every effort to secure a favorable decree of distribution, but also to take such further action during the entire existence of the trust as might appear necessary to plaintiff to obtain both income and corpus; and that the latter obligation would require defendant to institute legal proceedings based upon alleged illegal acts of the trustee, and for the purpose of obtaining further distribution of income.

[1] Plaintiff relies upon section 1654 of the Civil Code, and contends that as defendant prepared the contract, any possible doubt as to its meaning should be resolved against defendant. That section, however, applies by its terms only "In cases of uncertainty not removed by the preceding rules * * *" (see 12 Cal.Jur.2d § 149, p. 363, and cases cited); and in our opinion, the plain wording of the contract, when "explained by reference to the circumstances under which it was made, and the matter to which it relates", Civ.Code, § 1647, leaves no doubt as to its meaning.

[2-4] It will be recalled that defendant was employed by plaintiff to "protect or collect" plaintiff's legacy "under estate of Carl Hugo Johanson." Plaintiff's right to any legacy was doubtful because the terms of the Johanson will made such legacy contingent on plaintiff's continuous employment in the trust business, and plaintiff had already discontinued such employment with a view to entering the military service. Plaintiff obviously had in mind a possible settlement in cash, as he authorized defendant to settle for not less than $10,000. Under these circumstances, it is entirely clear that the parties had in mind that defendant's services might result either in (1) the possible protection of plaintiff's legacy by establishing his right thereto, free from the condition of continuous employment, in the final decree of distribution in the Johanson estate; or (2) the possible settlement in cash of his disputed claim; and that defendant's obligation to render legal services under the contract would be terminated at such time as he might accomplish either objective as set forth in the contract. Thus, the words "protect or collect" were obviously used advisedly and with reference to the two alternative possibilities; and there is no reason here for construing the word "or" in any way other than in its "ordinary and popular sense." Civ.Code, § 1644. The cases cited by plaintiff to sustain his claim that the word "or" should be construed here as meaning "and" do not sustain his position. Resort to such unnatural construction of the word "or" is sanctioned only when such construction is found necessary to carry out the obvious intent of the legislature in a statute or the obvious intent of the parties in a contract, when such intent may be gleaned from the context in which the word is used. Arnold v. Hopkins, 203 Cal. 553, 563, 265 P. 223; Heidlebaugh v. Miller, 126 Cal.App.2d 35, 38, 271 P.2d 557. In its ordinary sense, the function of the word "or" is to mark an alternative such as "'either this or that'", Barker Bros., Inc., v. City of Los Angeles, 10 Cal.2d 603, 606, 76 P.2d 97, 99; People v. Smith, 44 Cal.2d 77, 279 P.2d 33; and such was the plain meaning of the word "or" as used by the parties here in the phrase "protect or collect."

It should be further recalled that at the time the 1941 contract was made, neither plaintiff nor defendant contemplated the possibility of the receipt by plaintiff of any income from the trust during the life of the trust. The Johanson will did not make plaintiff an income beneficiary, and plaintiff's whole concern was directed at the establishment of his right to a share of the corpus at the termination of the trust, which right was made contingent by the will upon plaintiff's continuous employment in the trust business. It was only after the deaths of Mrs. Johanson and of plaintiff's father, who were two of the trustees and life income beneficiaries, that defendant succeeded in establishing not only plaintiff's claim to a share of the corpus at the termination of the trust, but, in addition, plaintiff's right to participate in the income of the trust during the life thereof by reason of the intervening death of plaintiff's father. And as plaintiff testified, it was only after the 1947 trial and following defendant's explanation, that plaintiff became aware that he might have a right to participate in the income during the life of the trust.

intent at the time of its execution, and it cannot be extended beyond its plain import by circumstances which occurred after its execution, and which were not within their contemplation at the time of execution. Plaintiff testified that at the time of making the contract in 1941, he had no idea of instituting any action to force an accounting by the trustees or the removal of the trustees. Yet it is plaintiff's present claim that long after defendant had established plaintiff's rights by the final decree of distribution in 1950, defendant was still obligated to perform legal services by bringing an action, on plaintiff's demand, to force an accounting by, or the removal of, the trustee.

We are of the opinion that defendant's obligation under the contract to "protect" plaintiff's legacy was fully performed when he had taken the necessary steps to obtain a final decree of distribution establishing plaintiff's rights in the trust estate. Moreover, such was the view of the parties, for when the Johanson estate was closed in 1950, plaintiff executed an assignment transferring to defendant forty per cent of all plaintiff's "right, title and interest" in plaintiff's legacy. This assignment declares on its face that it was executed pursuant to the 1941 contract. Defendant successfully performed legal services on plaintiff's behalf over a period of nine years, and the assignment recognized the validity of their contract for a forty per cent contingent fee. No claim of fraud or undue influence is asserted in the making of the contract or the assignment. The only claim made by plaintiff is that there was a partial failure of consideration because of defendant's failure to perform further legal services, which we have held he was under no obligation to perform.

Plaintiff cites and relies upon Dalzell v. State Bar, 6 Cal.2d 433, 57 P.2d 1300, but that case is clearly distinguishable. It involved a twenty-five per cent contingent fee contract to "collect" and "'undivided interest in the property of Florence Ferguson Shoemaker, according to the decree of distribution in her estate'". 6 Cal.2d at page 434, 57 P.2d at page 1301. The attorney successfully brought an action and obtained judgment for approximately $18,000. In payment of the judgment, he received various sums totalling in excess of $12,000, of which he wrongfully retained in excess of $7,000, and remitted only $4,950 to his clients. He was disciplined because of his "unwarranted overcharge of his clients and because of his failure to account to them over a period of several years". 6 Cal.2d at page 438, 57 P.2d at page 1302. No comparable contract or circumstances are before us here.

From what has been said, it follows that the trial court erred in concluding that defendant had not completely performed his obligation under the 1941 contract when he had secured the favorable final decree of distribution establishing plaintiff's right to his legacy. The trial court further erred in declaring that the 1941 contract and the assignment made pursuant thereto were of no further force and effect.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment in favor of defendant Ford in accordance with the views herein expressed.

Kenneth A. McCONNELL and Louise A. McConnell, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

Harry L. COWAN, Petitioner, Defendant and Respondent.

L. A. 23183.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.

July 5, 1955.

Action for judgment declaring that plaintiff was not under obligation to pay defendant an amount agreed upon as compensation for services rendered by defendant in procuring lease for certain real property for the plaintiff. Defendant by cross-complaint sought to recover the compensation. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Joseph M. Maltby, J., rendered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that, under the evidence, the defendant broker had had some discretion and, as matter of law, was not a mere "middleman" and was not entitled to commission without having disclosed to both the prospective lessor and the prospective lessee that he had a commission agreement with each.

Judgment reversed.

1. Brokers ⇨67(2)

So-called middleman exception to dual representation rule of agency is that if scope of broker's employment is limited to bringing parties together so that they may negotiate their own contract, he is mere "middleman" and upon performance, he is entitled to compensation from each of them who has agreed to pay him, though the others are unaware of such employment. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 10176(d).

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Middleman".

If broker engaged by both parties is clothed with some discretion in matter of advising or negotiating the transaction, he cannot recover compensation from either, unless both of them knew of the double agency at the time of the transaction. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 10176(d).

3. Brokers ⇨67(1)

The word "middleman", within so-called middleman exception to dual representation rule of agency, is short term for describing situation in which agent has limited authority, i. e., he has no power to negotiate and does not negotiate terms on which principals will deal, so that there is no opportunity for him to sacrifice interests of one principal to detriment of other. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 10176(d).

4. Brokers ⇨67(2)

Where broker who engaged in negotiation of leases as a specialty was authorized by prospective lessee to see if he "could get one of the deals", i. e., with improvements or without improvements at lesser rent, and testified, in prospective lessee's action against him for judgment declaring nonliability for commission, that prospective lessee could not have obtained lease on his own initiative, broker had some discretion and, as matter of law in the action, was broker and not mere "middleman" and was not entitled to commission without having disclosed to both prospective lessor and prospective lessee that he had commission agreement with each. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 10000 et seq., 10131, 10134, 10176(d).

CARTER, Justice.

By his complaint in this action plaintiff sought to have it declared that he was not under obligation to pay defendant an amount agreed upon as compensation for services rendered by defendant in procuring a lease of certain real property for plaintiff. Defendant by cross-complaint sought to recover said compensation from plaintiff. Judgment was rendered in favor of defendant, and plaintiff has appealed.

From the trial court's findings it appears that E. D. Mitchell owned certain real property in the city of Long Beach. Plaintiff was desirous of leasing the property from Mitchell and, on October 24, 1952, he authorized defendant to submit to Mitchell an offer to lease the property. It was thereupon orally agreed between plaintiff and defendant that if plaintiff were able to secure a lease of the property he would pay defendant 5% of the net profits from the business to be conducted on the property by plaintiff. The oral agreement was followed by a written agreement on October 27, 1952. The offer from plaintiff to Mitchell for such lease was transmitted by defendant to and refused by Mitchell. But on October 28, 1952, Mitchell authorized defendant to submit a written offer for a lease of the property to plaintiff, varying from plaintiff's offer, which provided that Mitchell would pay defendant a 3% commission. The latter offer was submitted by defendant to plaintiff and was accepted by him. Thereafter, on November 4, 1952, plaintiff and Mitchell, without defendant's participation, executed a lease of the property. Mitchell had no knowledge of the 5% agreement between plaintiff and defendant, but plaintiff knew defendant was to receive a 3% commission from Mitchell. The court then found that defendant was acting as a middleman to bring plaintiff and Mitchell together and was not an agent of either, hence the 5% agreement was valid and enforceable because in such a situation the rule was not applicable that an agent may not recover compensation from both principals unless full disclosure was made to each. The court also found that defendant had no authority to vary the terms of or exercise any discretion in connection with plaintiff's offer to Mitchell and the same was true of the offer from Mitchell to plaintiff. It was admitted that defendant was, at the time of the transaction here involved, a licensed real estate broker.

The evidence is as follows: Defendant testified that, before contacting plaintiff, he knew Mitchell wanted to lease the property, but had no listing from him. About October 24, 1952, he approached plaintiff, who was engaged in the hamburger sandwich business, and talked to him about leasing the Mitchell property. Thereafter three writings on plaintiff's stationery, addressed to defendant, setting forth the agreement as to defendant's commission between the parties, were signed by plaintiff.¹ The first document was dated October 24, 1952, the second October 27, 1952, and the third November 5, 1952. The first two were signed on October 27, 1952. The first document stated that defendant was therewith authorized "to offer for me" (plaintiff) a proposition to lease a portion of Mitchell's property in the city of Long Beach at a rental of $750 per month provided Mitchell expended $25,000 for improvements on the property; it closed by stating that plaintiff would lease, as offered, only if Mitchell "pays you [defendant] your desired leasing fee." Defendant submitted the offer to Mitchell on October 27, 1952, but does not know whether he showed him the first document. Mitchell rejected the offer as he did not want to make any improvements but said he wanted to lease the property on a ground lease basis. Defendant returned to plaintiff thereafter on the same day and told him he wanted "it put in writing," meaning the oral agreement made on October 24th that he was to get 5% of the net profits from plaintiff's business to be conducted on the property proposed to be leased as commission for "getting the lease." The second writing followed, which stated that "for and in consideration of ten dollars * * * and other considerations given by you [defendant] to me" (plaintiff), plaintiff agreed to pay the 5% commission on the basis above mentioned. The third writing merely amplified the second. In explanation of the "other considerations" in the second writing, defendant testified he intended to take Mitchell's property for himself and that the substance of his discussion with plaintiff was that the latter had been unable to get the property. Defendant said he was going to see Mitchell and get it for himself, and plaintiff asked defendant what kind of a deal he would make with him if he got it for plaintiff instead of himself, to which defendant queried, what deal would be fair. They then agreed upon "the five per cent." In further amplification of the nature of the arrangement between plaintiff and defendant, the latter testified: "After I had talked with Mr. Mitchell * * * in my original conversation with him [plaintiff] on the 24th, he had already told me that he would take the place whether he got the building built or he didn't get the building built. He would take a ground lease or take it with the building on it. He agreed to my five per cent and I was to see Mr. Mitchell to find out if I could get one of the deals. When Mr. Mitchell agreed to the $500 a month ground lease I told * * * [plain-that these documents were agreed to by plaintiff.

tiff] I wanted to put our verbal agreement as to the five per cent in writing, it looked like we were going to make this deal." (Emphasis added.) Defendant further testified that plaintiff could not have obtained the property on his own initiative and the 5% commission was for getting a lease from Mitchell for plaintiff. After Mitchell rejected plaintiff's offer and on October 28th, defendant obtained from Mitchell a writing (hereinafter called fourth writing) addressed to defendant in which Mitchell agreed to lease the property to plaintiff for a term of 10 years at $500 per month; no provision was made for improvements by Mitchell and it embodied substantially the same basic terms as later appeared in the lease executed by plaintiff and Mitchell; Mitchell also agreed therein to pay defendant 3% of the total rental as a "leasing commission." Defendant advised plaintiff of Mitchell's offer and plaintiff signed on the fourth writing his acceptance thereof. Defendant was paid the 3% by Mitchell at the time the fourth writing was signed and before plaintiff and Mitchell executed the lease. Defendant testified he did not remember whether he told Mitchell he was receiving a commission from plaintiff. The lease was signed on November 4, 1952. Mitchell testified that defendant took no part in any negotiations after getting the fourth writing signed by both parties.

Plaintiff's case is based on the rule that: "[W]here an agent has assumed to act in a double capacity, a principal who has no knowledge of such dual representation * * * may avoid the transaction. Actual injury is not the principle upon which the law holds such transaction voidable; rather, the law holds it voidable in order to prevent the agent from putting himself in a position where he will be tempted to betray his principal. * * * To this point Mechem in his work on Agency, Second Edition, Volume 2, section 2138, p. 1715, says: '* * * an agent who is relied upon to exercise, in behalf of his principal, his skill, judgment, knowledge or influence, will not be permitted without such principal's full knowledge and consent, to undertake to represent the other party also in the same transaction. Such conduct is a fraud upon his principal, and not only will the agent not be entitled to compensation for services so rendered, but the contract or dealings made or had by the agent, while so acting also for the other party without the knowledge or consent of the principal, are not binding upon the latter, and if they still remain executory, he may repudiate them on that ground, or, if they have been executed in whole or in part, he may by acting promptly and before the rights of innocent parties have intervened, restore the consideration received, rescind the contract and recover back the property or rights with which he has parted under it. It makes no difference that the principal was not in fact injured, or that the agent intended no wrong, or that the other party acted in good faith; the double agency is a fraud upon the principal and he is not bound.'" Vice v. Thacker, 30 Cal.2d 84, 90, 180 P.2d 4, 8; see, also, Glenn v. Rice, 174 Cal. 269, 162 P. 1020; Butler v. Solano Land Co., 203 Cal. 231, 263 P. 530; Gordon v. Beck, 196 Cal. 768, 239 P. 309; 2 Cal. Jur.2d, Agency, § 107; 9 Cal. Jur.2d, Brokers, § 77; Rest., Agency, § 390 et seq.; Business & Professions Code, § 10176(d). It is also held that neither principal is liable for the commission unless both knew of the dual representation, even if one does know of it he is not liable if the other does not which is the situation we have here, because, as above noted, plaintiff knew defendant was to receive a commission from Mitchell. The rule is thus stated: "His [the agent's] contract for compensation being thus tainted, the law will not permit him to enforce it against either party. * * * And the fact that the party whom he sues was aware of the double agency and of the payment, or agreement to pay, compensation by the other party, and consented thereto, does not entitle him to recover. He must show knowledge by both parties. One party might willingly consent, believing that the advantage would accrue to him, to the detriment of the other. The law will not tolerate such an arrangement, except with the knowledge and consent of both, and will enter into no inquiry to determine whether or not the particular negotiation was fairly conducted by the agent.

It leaves him as it finds him, affording him no relief." Glenn v. Rice, supra, 174 Cal. 269, 272, 162 P. 1020, 1021; see, also, Gordon v. Beck, supra, 196 Cal. 768, 239 P. 309; Riggins v. Patterson, 37 Cal.App. 319, 174 P. 119; cases collected Chandler v. Lack, 73 Okl. 285, 170 P. 516, 14 A.L.R. 464; 80 A.L.R. 1075.

[1-3] The question presented therefore is whether the evidence shows as a matter of law that the arrangement did not fall within the so-called middleman exception to the dual representation rule later discussed herein. Defendant contends that plaintiff does not question the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings favorable to the exception and that they show that defendant had no discretion in exercising his agency and hence he was what is sometimes euphemistically called a middleman; that under such circumstances the agent may receive compensation from both principals without disclosing to either that he had an arrangement with both for a commission. The exception is stated: "If the scope of a broker's employment is limited to bringing parties together so that they may negotiate their own contract, he is a mere middleman. Upon performance, he is entitled to compensation from each of them who has agreed to pay him, even though the others are unaware of such employment. But if a broker engaged by both parties is clothed with some discretion in the matter of advising or negotiating the transaction, he cannot recover compensation from either, unless both of them knew of the double agency at the time of the transaction." 9 Cal.Jur.2d, Brokers, § 77; see, also, Clark v. Allen, 125 Cal. 276, 57 P. 985; Green v. Robertson, 64 Cal. 75, 28 P. 446; King v. Reed, 24 Cal.App. 229, 141 P. 41; Carothers v. Caine, 38 Cal.App. 71, 175 P. 478; Kennedy v. Johnson, 109 Cal.App. 662, 293 P. 698; Anderson v. Thacher, 76 Cal.App.2d 50, 172 P.2d 533; Hooper v. Mayfield, 114 Cal.App.2d 802, 251 P.2d 330; Butler v. Solano Land Co., supra, 203 Cal. 231, 263 P. 530; Rest., Agency, §§ 390-394.

2. Commonly a middleman is a trader who buys commodities from the producer and

The word "middleman" is a short term for describing a situation in which the agent has limited authority, that is, he has no power to and does not negotiate the terms on which the principals will deal, yet he is an agent or he may possibly be an independent contractor, or falls in one of the recognized legal categories.² Being so limited there is no opportunity for him to sacrifice the interests of one principal to the detriment of the other and the reason for the dual representation rule fails.

While plaintiff could have been more specific in his attack on the findings (he claims the findings that defendant was a middleman and not an agent for either party are conclusions of law), it is clear that his basic premise is that the evidence shows as a matter of law that this was not a situation where an agent had limited authority—no right or duty to exercise discretion or negotiate in regard to the terms upon which the principals would deal.

[4] The writings shed no light on the scope of defendant's authority but defendant's own testimony of the arrangement between him and plaintiff shows as a matter of law that this is not a case of an agent with limited authority and hence the findings are not supported by the evidence. It is true, as pointed out by defendant, that plaintiff testified in regard to the first writing that he was to pay the 5% commission if defendant got the lease from Mitchell on the terms there stated, which would indicate that defendant's sole power was to transmit the offer, and the same is true as to Mitchell and his offer, the fourth writing, but plaintiff's offer was rejected by Mitchell, and according to defendant's own version (heretofore quoted), he was to see if he "could get one of the deals," from Mitchell, that is, with Mitchell building the improvements as offered by plaintiff, or at a lesser rent without improvements as offered by Mitchell. There was, therefore, vested in defendant, authority to negotiate with Mitchell and get one deal or the other—exercise some discretion. The fact that the lease was drawn and executed without any participation by defendant is not significant, because the basic terms thereof had already been stated in Mitchell's offer and plaintiff's acceptance of it (the fourth writing). It is undisputed that defendant was engaged in the real estate brokerage business and one of his specialties was the negotiation of leases. He said that plaintiff could not obtain a lease from Mitchell on his own initiative and that he was to receive the 5% commission for getting a lease from Mitchell. It appears from defendant's testimony and the undisputed evidence that the transaction was one in which defendant was more than a mere errand boy-servant for plaintiff and Mitchell, to carry offers from one to the other. Although it has been held that whether a person is a "middleman" is generally one of fact, Clark v. Allen, supra, 125 Cal. 276, 57 P. 985, it is one of law here on defendant's own testimony as to the arrangement.

The cases in which it has been held that the agent had no discretion and could receive commissions from both parties are distinguishable. In Clark v. Allen, supra, 125 Cal. 276, 57 P. 985, and Green v. Robertson, supra, 64 Cal. 75, 28 P. 446, the facts do not appear. In King v. Reed, supra, 24 Cal.App. 229, 141 P. 41, the broker had only one fixed price which he could transmit to the proposed buyer. In Carothers v. Caine, supra, 38 Cal.App. 71, 175 P. 478, only an offer was to be transmitted. Moreover, the last cited case is contrary to Butler v. Solano Land Co., supra, 203 Cal. 231, 263 P. 530, and is impliedly overruled by that case. In Kennedy v. Johnson, supra, 109 Cal.App. 662, 293 P. 698, the negotiations and deal were made by the principals and the broker only brought them in contact. In Anderson v. Thacher, supra, 76 Cal.App.2d 50, 172 P.2d 533, Hooper v. Mayfield, supra, 114 Cal. App.2d 802, 251 P.2d 330, and Butler v. Solano Land Co., supra, 203 Cal. 231, 263 P. 530, the rule was stated but found not applicable in those cases.

Consideration should also be given to the Real Estate Law regulating the business of real estate brokers and salesmen. Bus. &

Prof.Code, § 10000 et seq. That statute states the policy against dual representation. A broker's license may be revoked or suspended if, while he is "performing or attempting to perform" any of the acts within the scope of the regulatory act, he is guilty of "acting for more than one party in a transaction without the knowledge or consent of all parties thereto." Bus. & Prof.Code, § 10176(d). The act defines a broker as one who "offers to buy [or sell], lists, or solicits for prospective purchasers" of real estate and also one who for compensation "negotiates * * * leases [of], or offers to lease" real estate. Bus. & Prof.Code, § 10131. "One act, for a compensation" of "offering for another to buy or sell * * * real estate" or "leasing * * * real estate" shall constitute acting as a broker. Bus. & Prof.Code, § 10134. If defendant was acting as a broker then under the act the policy against dual representation is applicable to him. The cases holding that various activities and scopes of authority were not within the act—that the agent was only a "middleman"—involved the exercise of less authority than defendant exercised in this case. In Freeman v. Jergins, 125 Cal.App.2d 536, 271 P.2d 210; Shaffer v. Beinhorn, 190 Cal. 569, 213 P. 960; McKenna v. Edwards, 19 Cal.App.2d 327, 65 P.2d 810, and Crofoot v. Spivak, 113 Cal. App.2d 146, 248 P.2d 45, the one claiming compensation was only to find and introduce to the seller a person who might be interested as a buyer; he neither had nor exercised any other authority. In other cases the authority was broader and a different result was reached, see Hooper v. Mayfield, supra, 114 Cal.App.2d 802, 251 P.2d 330; Abrams v. Guston, 110 Cal.App. 2d 556, 243 P.2d 109; Rhode v. Bartholomew, 94 Cal.App.2d 272, 210 P.2d 768; Davis v. Chipman, 210 Cal. 609, 293 P. 40; Ryan v. Walker, 35 Cal.App. 116, 169 P. 417; Cram v. McNeil, 32 Cal.App. 101, 162 P. 140.

Applying the rule announced in the above cited cases to the facts of this case leads us to the inevitable conclusion that defendant acted as agent for both plaintiff and Mitchell, and he, therefore, cannot recover compensation from either unless he disclosed to both his agreement to receive compensation from both. This he admittedly failed to do.

The judgment is reversed.

v.

The SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY, Respondent;

Marle Sayegh, as Guardian, etc., et al.,
Real Parties In Interest.

L. A. 23726.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

July 5, 1955

Proceeding upon a petition for a writ of prohibition to restrain Superior Court from retrying issue of fact relative to validity of antenuptial agreement between petitioner and decedent. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that the application for the writ was premature since the lower court had not yet ruled on the res judicata plea.

Alternative writ discharged and peremptory writ denied.

Opinion, 280 P.2d 20, vacated.

1. Prohibition $\Rightarrow$ 17

Ordinarily, a reviewing court will not grant prohibition until an objection to jurisdiction has been made and overruled in lower court, since it is assumed that any valid objection properly brought to attention of that court will prevail and that writ will be unnecessary.

2. Prohibition $\Rightarrow$ 17

In proceeding, brought by testamentary trust beneficiaries to determine heirship, wherein testator's widow answered (1) that will had been revoked as to her by reason of her subsequent marriage to decedent and (2) that her rights as an heir had been determined in proceeding upon her application for family allowances (wherein antenuptial agreement had been held invalid), and requested judge sitting in probate to terminate heirship proceeding and to hold that order for family allowances was a final judgment binding upon all parties interested in estate, probate judge's refusal to rule upon question of effect of prior order and his action in transferring heirship proceeding to master calendar department for setting and trial did not constitute a decision on the plea of res judicata within rule requiring reviewing court to refuse prohibition until objection to jurisdiction has been made and overruled in lower court.

3. Judgment $\Rightarrow$ 958(1)

While res adjudicata may be a complete defense and a bar to an action, court in which case is pending has jurisdiction to pass upon question of whether or not plea is well taken.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

Petitioner, the widow of Gabriel N. Sayegh, seeks a writ of prohibition to restrain respondent court from trying a petition to determine heirship in the estate of her deceased husband.

On February 18, 1952, petitioner entered into an antenuptial agreement with Mr. Sayegh which provided, among other things, that the survivor of them should have no interest in the property of the estate of the other by way of inheritance, succession, family allowance or homestead. They were married a few hours after the agreement was executed, and Mr. Sayegh died six days later, leaving a will dated February 16, 1948. The will, which was admitted to probate, named decedent's two brothers as executors and, after making some specific bequests, provided that the residue of the estate be held in trust for decedent's nieces and nephews, the children of his two brothers, who are the real parties in interest in the present proceeding.

Petitioner applied for a family allowance, which was opposed by the executors on the ground that she had waived such an allowance in the antenuptial agreement. After trial, it was found that her consent to the agreement had been obtained by duress, fraud and undue influence and she was granted a family allowance. This order was affirmed on appeal. In re Estate of Sayegh, 118 Cal.App.2d 327, 257 P.2d 995. The beneficiaries of the trust subsequently commenced a proceeding to determine heirship, claiming that they are entitled to distribution of all the estate except for certain specific bequests. Petitioner answered asserting that the will was revoked as to her by reason of her subsequent marriage to decedent and that her rights as heir had been determined by the order for family allowance. She requested the judge sitting in probate to terminate the heirship proceeding and to hold that the order for family allowance was a final judgment binding upon all parties interested in the estate. The judge refused to rule upon the question of the effect of the prior order and transferred the case to the master calendar department for setting and trial. Petitioner now seeks a writ of prohibition to restrain trial of the heirship proceeding, asserting that the issues are res judicata.

[1-3] Ordinarily, a reviewing court will not grant prohibition until an objection to jurisdiction has been made and overruled in the lower court, since it is assumed that any valid objection properly brought to the attention of that court will prevail, and the writ will be unnecessary. Baird v. Superior Court, 204 Cal. 408, 415, 268 P. 640; Have-meyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 406, 24 P. 121, 10 L.R.A. 627; Hanrahan v. Superior Court, 81 Cal.App.2d 432, 434-435, 184 P.2d 157; see Rescue Army v. Municipal Court, 28 Cal.2d 460, 464, 171 P.2d 8. It seems obvious that the refusal of the judge to rule on the effect of the order for family allowance and his action in transferring the heirship proceeding to the master calendar department for setting and trial did not constitute a decision on the plea of res judicata. While res judicata may be a complete defense and a bar to an action, the court in which the case is pending has jurisdiction to pass upon the question of whether or not the plea is well taken. Reidy v. Superior Court, 220 Cal. 111, 112, 29 P.2d 780; Baird v. Superior Court, 204 Cal. 408, 412-414, 268 P. 640; Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court, 62 Cal.App.2d 601, 610-611, 145 P.2d 344; Goodman Bros. v. Superior Court, 51 Cal. App.2d 297, 304-306, 124 P.2d 644; see *Vitimin Milling Corp. v. The alternative writ of prohibition is discharged and the peremptory writ is denied.

Consolidated actions against owners of bulldozer for personal injuries and property damage resulting when vandals started bulldozer and bulldozer ran wild. The Superior Court, San Diego County, John A. Hewicker, J., entered orders granting plaintiffs new trial after judgments in favor of defendants on verdicts of the jury, and the defendants appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that trial court was authorized under the evidence to grant plaintiffs new trial on ground of insufficiency of evidence.

Orders affirmed.

Opinion, 275 P.2d 532, vacated.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐1015(3)

In passing a motion for new trial based on alleged insufficiency of evidence, it is exclusive province of trial court to judge credibility of witnesses, determine probative force of testimony, and weigh the evidence.

2. New Trial ⇐70, 71

The trial court, in considering sufficiency of evidence on motion for new trial based on alleged insufficiency of evidence to sustain verdict, may draw inferences opposed to those drawn at trial, and where only conflicts consist of inferences deduced from uncontradicted probative facts, court may resolve such conflicts in determining whether the case should be retried.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐1015(1)

An appellate court will reverse trial court's order granting a new trial for insufficiency of evidence to sustain verdict only where it can be said as a matter of law that there is no substantial evidence to support a contrary judgment.

4. Automobiles ⇐173(8)

The extreme danger created by a bulldozer in uncontrolled motion and the foreseeable risk of intermeddling fully justify imposing a duty on owner to exercise reasonable care to protect third parties from injuries arising from its operation by intermeddlers.

5. Negligence ⇐10

If the realizable likelihood that third person may act in a particular manner is the hazard or one of the hazards which makes the actor negligent, such an act whether innocent, negligent, intentionally tortious or criminal does not prevent actor from being liable for harm caused thereby.

6. Automobiles ⇐173(8), 201(9)

Duty of owners of bulldozer to protect plaintiffs from injury caused by the uncontrolled and unauthorized operation of bulldozer included duty to protect plaintiffs from intentional misconduct of young men, and such misconduct did not therefore constitute a superseding cause of plaintiffs' harm.

7. New Trial ⇐70

In actions against owners of bulldozer to recover for injuries and property sustained when vandals started up bulldozer and bulldozer ran wild, trial court was authorized under evidence to grant plaintiffs new trials on ground of insufficiency of evidence.

McInnis, Hamilton & Fitzgerald, William T. Fitzgerald, Franklin B. Orfield, Thomas P. Golden and Hubert L. Rose, San Diego, for respondents.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Defendants, members of a construction contracting partnership, were engaged in earth moving operations in the development of a new subdivision located on top of a mesa in San Diego county. In their work they used two 26-ton Allis-Chalmers bulldozers, which were operated by two of their employees. The bulldozers did not have electrical ignition systems, and they could be started by pushing the compression lever in and stepping on the starter. The engine was stopped by pulling the compression lever out. They were equipped with fluid drives and could be started in gear, in which case they would commence to move as soon as the engine started. No locks were supplied with the bulldozers by the manufacturer, but the local dealer had improvised a lock that would prevent starting. It consisted of a metal sleeve welded to a padlock that locked around the starter rod thereby preventing the starter from operating. The lock provided by the dealer for one of the bulldozers was lost, and defendants improvised a substitute. At the close of the working day on Saturday, July 5, 1952, the operators of the bulldozers parked them near one another on top of the mesa. One of them was locked by the dealer's lock, and there is evidence that as to the other, only the padlock, but not the sleeve of the improvised lock, was put around the starter rod. The padlock alone would not prevent the starter from operating. The following evening three young men, aged 17, 18, and 20, after drinking intoxicants, decided to go for a drive with the wife of one of them. While driving, one of them mentioned having seen the bulldozers, and they decided to go to the mesa for the purpose of racing them. On their arrival, two of the young men left the car and attempted to start the bulldozers. They were unable to start the bulldozer equipped with the dealer's lock but succeeded in starting the other bulldozer. They drove it around the mesa for 15 to 30 minutes causing considerable damage, and then, being unable to stop it, headed it toward a canyon to the east of the mesa and abandoned it. It went off the edge of the mesa, down the hill, across a freeway, and traveled for about a mile before it was halted by a retaining wall and a utility pole. During the course of its journey it traveled through a house and seriously injured the occupants. It also collided with a house-trailer and an automobile causing further property damage and personal injuries. Plaintiffs, whose persons or property were in the path of the bulldozer, brought these actions for damages against defendants alleging that they were negligent in leaving the bulldozer unattended and unlocked. The actions were consolidated for trial, and the jury returned verdicts for defendants. The trial court granted motions for a new trial on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence and misconduct of the jury. Defendants appeal.

898, 230 P.2d 679, and cases cited; 3 Witkin, California Procedure 2061.

Defendants contend that there is no substantial evidence that would support a judgment against them. They rely on the recent decision of this court in Richards v. Stanley, 43 Cal.2d 60, 271 P.2d 23, holding that, in the absence of special circumstances, the duty of an owner of an automobile to exercise reasonable care in the management thereof does not include a duty to remove the ignition key to protect persons on the highway from the negligent driving of a thief. Since, however, the kinds of foreseeable intervening conduct by third parties as well as the risks created by such conduct in this case are materially different from those considered in the Richards case, that case is not controlling here.

Automobiles do not arouse curiosity, and ordinarily the only appreciable risk that they will be set in motion if they are left unattended arises from the possibility of their being stolen. The record in the present case, on the other hand, shows that defendants' bulldozers aroused curiosity and attracted spectators, while they were in operation as well as while they were parked for the night. Moreover, curious persons had been known to climb on them, and it could reasonably be inferred that they were attractive to children when left unattended at the end of the working day. The evidence is therefore sufficient to justify the conclusion that there was a reasonably foreseeable risk that defendants' bulldozers might be tampered with when left unattended.

[4] Given this foreseeable risk of intermeddling, the question is presented whether defendants were under a duty to exercise reasonable care to prevent intermeddlers from putting their bulldozers in operation. In the Richards case it was concluded that even if theft was reasonably to be foreseen, the owner was under no duty to persons on the highway to exercise reasonable care to keep his car out of the hands of a thief. It was pointed out that the owner will ordinarily have no reason to foresee that a thief will be an incompetent driver, that the risk of negligent driving arising from possible theft is less than the risk that the owner might intentionally create without negligence by lending his car to another, and that it would be anomalous to impose greater liability when the car is being driven by a thief than that provided by statute when the owner voluntarily entrusts his car to another. The risks arising from intermeddling with bulldozers, however, are entirely different from those arising from the driving of an automobile by a thief. Bulldozers are relatively uncommon, and curious children or others attracted by them ordinarily will not know how to operate them. An intermeddler who starts a bulldozer accidentally or otherwise may not be able to stop it, and the potentialities of harm from a 26 ton bulldozer in uncontrolled motion are enormous, particularly when it is left on top of a mesa from which it can escape and injure persons and property located below. The extreme danger created by a bulldozer in uncontrolled motion and the foreseeable risk of intermeddling fully justify imposing a duty on the owner to exercise reasonable care to protect third parties from injuries arising from its operation by intermeddlers. See Jensen v. Minard, 44 Cal.2d 325, 282 P.2d 7; Warner v. Santa Catalina Island Co., 44 Cal.2d 310, 282 P.2d 12, and cases cited.

In the absence of an effective lock the bulldozer engine could be started by pushing in a lever and stepping on the starter. Moreover, the engine could be started with the bulldozer in gear, and if so started, the bulldozer would commence to move immediately. Although this risk could be avoided by the use of a simple but effective lock, there is evidence that no such lock was used. Accordingly, there is substantial evidence that defendants did not exercise reasonable care to prevent intermeddlers from setting their bulldozer in motion.

[5,6] It is contended, however, that even if defendants were under a duty to protect plaintiffs from injuries from operation of the bulldozer caused by ordinary intermeddlers, they were not under a duty to protect plaintiffs from intermeddlers who deliberately undertook to operate the bulldozer, or, in other words, that the intentional misconduct of the young men constituted a superseding cause of plaintiffs' injuries. See Restatement, Torts, § 448. It is settled, however, that "If the realizable likelihood that a third person may act in a particular manner is the hazard or one of the hazards which makes the actor negligent, such an act whether innocent, negligent, intentionally tortious or criminal does not prevent the actor from being liable for harm caused thereby." Restatement, Torts, § 449; McEvoy v. American Pool Corp., 32 Cal.2d 295, 298-299, 195 P.2d 783; Benton v. Sloss, 38 Cal.2d 399, 405, 240 P.2d 575. The possibility of the intentional, wrongful misconduct that occurred in this case was not so remote as not to constitute "one of the hazards" that would justify the conclusion that defendants' failure to lock the bulldozer was negligent. Accordingly, defendants' duty to protect plaintiffs from injuries caused by the uncontrolled and unauthorized operation of their bulldozer included a duty to protect plaintiffs from the intentional misconduct of the young men, and such misconduct did not therefore constitute a superseding cause of plaintiffs' harm.

[7] Since the evidence was sufficient to support the trial court's granting of plaintiffs' motions for a new trial, it is unnecessary to decide whether the orders might also be sustained on the ground of the alleged misconduct of the jury.

The orders are affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK and SCHAUER, JJ., concur.

SPENCE, Justice.

I concur in the affirmance of the orders granting a new trial, as there was ample evidence to sustain a finding that defendants were negligent, and that such negligence was a proximate cause of plaintiffs' damage. I also agree that this case is distinguishable from Richards v. Stanley, 43 Cal.2d 60, 271 P.2d 23, but I still adhere to the views expressed in my dissenting opinion in the Richards case.

CARTER, Justice.

I concur in the judgment of affirmance, but as I read the majority opinion it seeks to establish a standard of conduct based upon the view of those members of the court joining in said opinion without regard to considerations of public policy and the experience of people generally in the ordinary walks of life. It does not appear that the Legislature has established a standard of conduct for those owning, possessing and operating heavy equipment of the character here involved, and such standard must, therefore, be determined under the rules of the common law which accepts as its criterion the conduct of a reasonably prudent person. The determination of this standard, is, of course, in the first instance, for the trier of fact; that is, it is for the trier of fact to determine from the evidence presented whether or not the conduct of the defendant in the instant case was that of a reasonably prudent person. If the trier of fact determines that such conduct was not that of a reasonably prudent person under all the circumstances, the deduction to be drawn from such determination is that the defendant was negligent. There can be no question but that the defendant owed a duty to the plaintiffs here to exercise ordinary care in the control and management of its equipment so that it would not inflict injury upon plaintiffs without fault on their part. Here, the trial court by granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence has determined in the first instance that defendant's conduct was not that of a reasonably prudent person and that it violated its duty when it so managed and controlled its equipment as to inflict injury upon plaintiffs. The District Court of Appeal by unanimous decision agreed with this determination of the trial court. Richardson v. Ham Bros. Construction Co., Cal.App., 275 P.2d 532. This determination was based upon the evidence presented to the trial court, and that court in the exercise of its fact finding power determined that defendant had deviated from the standard of conduct of a reasonably prudent person. This is the process by which the common law has been developed and it has never been the function of an appellate court in cases of this character to arbitrarily establish standards of conduct upon which liability may or may not be predicated.

In discussing the development of the common law with respect to negligence Mr. Justice Holmes in his work entitled The Common Law makes the following illuminating observation:

"The cases which have raised difficulties needing explanation are those in which the court has ruled that there was prima facie evidence of negligence, or some evidence of negligence to go to the jury.

"Many have noticed the confusion of thought implied in speaking of such cases as presenting mixed questions of law and fact. No doubt, as has been said above, the averment that the defendant has been guilty of negligence is a complex one: first, that he has done or omitted certain things; second, that his alleged conduct does not come up to the legal standard. And so long as the controversy is simply on the first half, the whole complex averment is plain matter for the jury without special instructions, just as a question of ownership would be where the only dispute was as to the fact upon which the legal conclusion was founded. But when a controversy arises on the second half, the question whether the court or the jury ought to judge of the defendant's conduct is wholly unaffected by the accident, whether there is or is not also a dispute as to what that conduct was. If there is such a dispute, it is entirely possible to give a series of hypothetical instructions adapted to every state of facts which it is open to the jury to find. If there is no such dispute, the court may still take their opinion as to the standard. The problem is to explain the relative functions of court and jury with regard to the latter.

"When a case arises in which the standard of conduct, pure and simple, is submitted to the jury, the explanation is plain. It is that the court, not entertaining any clear views of public policy applicable to the matter, derives the rule to be applied from daily experience, as it has been agreed that the great body of the law of tort has been derived. But the court further feels that it is not itself possessed of sufficient practical experience to lay down the rule intelligently. It conceives that twelve men taken from the practical part of the community can aid its judgment. Therefore it aids its conscience by taking the opinion of the jury." The Common Law, by Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr., pp. 122-123.

As stated above, the standard of conduct applicable to a particular factual situation—whether it was that of a reasonably prudent person—must be derived from daily experience, and a jury or trial judge is in a better position than an appellate court to make such determination. It seems clear that the only test the courts can apply in determining whether the conduct complained of was that of a reasonably prudent person is the reasonable minds test. Johnson v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 154 Cal. 285, 97 P. 520; Seller v. Market St. Ry. Co., 139 Cal. 268, 72 P. 1006; Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co., 121 Cal. 227, 53 P. 651; Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 116 P. 513; see dissenting opinion, Gray v. Brinkerhoff, 41 Cal.2d 180, 186, 192, 258 P.2d 834. That reasonable minds differ as to whether defendants' conduct was that of a reasonably prudent person is demonstrated by the record before us which discloses that the trial judge, the three members of the District Court of Appeal and a majority of this court agree that their conduct was such that negligence may be inferred therefrom. A question of fact is therefore presented, and the ruling of the trial court in granting a new trial on insufficiency of the evidence must be upheld unless settled rules of law are disregarded.

Just to show that a conflict existed in the evidence, and in the inferences to be drawn therefrom, let us look at the facts and the inferences which may have motivated the trial court in its action in granting plaintiffs a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence:

The bulldozer in question was parked at the top of a mesa. After the intoxicated youths found they were unable to stop it, they abandoned it and it went off the edge of the mesa, down the hill, across a freeway causing personal injuries and property damage on its way. The inference to be drawn from the evidence relating to its position was that it was at the top of a hill and that the only place for it to go was down. The plaintiffs' injuries themselves carry the inference that it was left unattended in a place where it could cause injury if molested by untrained persons. Herbert Ham, one of the defendant owners, testified (by deposition) that he remembered seeing people drive up to look at the bulldozers; that he may have seen strangers get on the machines; that he had chased people away from the bulldozers mostly when they were not running; that all employees had verbal instructions to chase onlookers away from the machines; that he was afraid someone might be hurt if strangers got on the bulldozers; that the bulldozers were supposed to be locked with a sleeve and padlock which had been improvised to keep the machines immobilized. The inferences to be drawn, or which may have been drawn by the trial court, from this evidence were that defendants were aware that the bulldozers attracted the curious, "mostly" when they were not running; that defendants were aware that injury might result if strangers got on the machines; that the locks therefor were necessary to prevent just such an occurrence as the one here involved, and that if any untrained person started the machine it would be a danger both to themselves and others. Finney, an oiler, whose duty it was to lubricate the machines, testified that he had seen people in and about the general area where the bulldozers were parked; that these people were watching the bulldozers operate; that he had seen people there when he left at night; that he did the oiling after the drivers (or cat skimmers) left for the night; that he was supposed to lock the machines when he was through work. A logical inference from this is that the defendants knew people were around in the vicinity of the parked bulldozers after all employees had left and that he was to lock the machines so that they would not be meddled with by curious strangers. Schlickelman, a cat skinner for defendant, testified that there was no guard on duty to watch the equipment; that when he had been there at closing time he had seen people from 50 to 100 feet away watching the bulldozers; that he had seen people of all ages watching the machines; that he didn't remember whether any had gotten in the tractor while he had been around. It could be reasonably inferred from this that defendants knew that numbers of people of all ages were around the area where the bulldozers were parked at closing time.

Finney, the oiler, testified that to start the machines, a lever was pushed and a starter stepped on; that the machine could be started in gear and would move right off without pressing an accelerator; that it was similar to fluid drive except that it would start in gear. It could be inferred from this that it would be a simple matter for a curious person to start the machine without knowing how to stop it.

Summing up this evidence together with the inferences therefrom, we see an unlocked piece of heavy equipment which had a fascination for people of all ages parked unattended at the top of a hill with the possibility of causing untold damage to human life and property. We also see that the defendants knew curious onlookers were around the parking area at closing time; that orders were given to drive these onlookers away; that the machines were supposed to be kept locked because of the fear that some of the curious might get on the machines and "hurt" somebody. It is reasonable to infer that the machine itself, weighing twenty-six or seven tons, would have a fascination which an ordinary automobile would not have for the average person. It is also reasonable to note that a bulldozer is a machine capable of doing great bodily injury as well as property damage if in the hands of one not skilled in its operation. From its very size and complexity, it is reasonable to infer that once started in a downward direction it could not be stopped until it came to rest against an object sturdy enough to withstand its momentum. It should also be noted that in its downward course it would gain momentum and speed and that the force with which it would strike anything in its path would be greatly increased because of the added momentum and speed. This evidence is most certainly sufficient to sustain a verdict for the plaintiffs had one been had; hence it was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to grant plaintiffs a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence.

All persons are required to use ordinary care to prevent others being injured as the result of their acts. Ordinary care has been defined as that degree of care which people of ordinarily prudent behavior could be reasonably expected to exercise under the circumstances of a given case. In other words, the care required must be in proportion to the danger to be avoided and the consequences that might reasonably be anticipated. Crowe v. McBride, 25 Cal.2d 318, 321, 153 P.2d 727; Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co., 197 Cal. 82, 98, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027; 19 Cal.Jur. 579; Warner v. Santa Catalina Island Co., 44 Cal.2d 310, 282 P.2d 12. Section 447 of the Restatement of Torts sets forth the rule with respect to the intervening act of a third person as follows: "The fact that an intervening act of a third person is negligent in itself or is done in a negligent manner does not make it a superseding cause of harm to another which the actor's negligent conduct is a substantial factor in bringing about, if (a) the actor at the time of his negligent conduct should have realized that a third person might so act. * * *" This rule is applicable in California. Stasulat v. Pacific Gas and Elec. Co., 8 Cal.2d 631, 67 P.2d 678; Mosley v. Arden Farms Co., 26 Cal.2d 213, 219, 157 P.2d 372, 158 A.L.R. 872; Sawyer v. Southern California Gas Co., 206 Cal. 366, 274 P. 544. The evidence here shows without conflict that defendants feared intermeddling by unauthorized persons; that they feared the tractors would be started by unauthorized persons; that they feared harm would come to others because of such intermeddling. It seems too clear to even warrant comment that the action taken by the intoxicated youths was reasonably foreseeable by defendants and hence not a supervening, independent cause of plaintiffs' injuries and property damage. Gall v. Union Ice Co., 108 Cal.App.2d 303, 313, 239 P.2d 48; Northwestern, etc., Ins.

Zuber v. Clarkson Const. Co., 363 Mo. 352, 251 S.W.2d 52, is a case very similar to the one presently under consideration. Defendant construction company owned large motor-driven, earth-moving tractors which it left parked, at the end of the day, on a levee with the machinery in gear and the switches and ignitions unlocked with fuel in the tanks and the brakes off ready to be easily put in operation. The plaintiffs alleged that each evening curious spectators were gathered around watching the machines; that some of these persons had, to the defendant's knowledge, or the knowledge defendant should have had, theretofore started the tractors; that the tractors were left unattended at the close of the working day. It was alleged further that plaintiffs' decedent was killed because of injuries sustained by the unauthorized operation of one of defendant's unattended tractors. The court there said:

"It has been said a person who is responsible for an instrumentality which is dangerous and likely to cause injury to persons rightfully in its proximity is charged with taking appropriate precautions to avoid injury to such persons, and his failure to take such precautions constitutes negligence. * * * It has also been stated that a negligent act may be one which creates a situation which involves an unreasonable risk to another because of the expectable action of a third person. Restatement, Torts, § 302.

"Relating to those dangers to be reasonably anticipated—if there is some probability or likelihood, not a mere possibility, of harm sufficiently serious that ordinary men would take precautions to avoid it, then the failure to do so is negligence. While the likelihood of a future happening is the test of a duty to anticipate, this does not mean the chances in favor of the happening must exceed those against it. The test is not the balance of probabilities, but of the existence of some probability of sufficient moment to induce the reasonable mind to take the precautions which would avoid it." 251 S.W.2d 52, 55.

The court held that the machines, left as they were, ready for operation were "potentially dangerous, and, if one were started by some reckless person or by some intermeddler probably unskilled in the technique of its operation, it would (and did) become a monstrous instrumentality of destruction. It seems to us it could be reasonably said the person, defendant, the owner and responsible for these machines, with knowledge that curious intermeddlers were making the practice of operating the machines, had reason to anticipate or foresee that other intermeddlers would start the machines and that, among those who operated the machines, some person, though an adult, starting a machine would be reckless or unskilled. It is not too much to say that, in the circumstances averred, a reasonably prudent person should take into account these probabilities, and would foresee that some injury was likely to ensue." 251 S.W.2d 52, 56. There are two distinguishing features to the Zuber case: it was alleged that defendant knew or in the exercise of reasonable care should have known that strangers had intermeddled with the machines and that the machines were parked in a public place. Plaintiffs here may, on a new trial, be able to produce additional evidence and show that defendants knew, or in the exercise of reasonable care should have known, that strangers had theretofore tampered with the machines or might tamper with them. As I have previously pointed out, a logical inference from the instructions given to the employees by defendants to lock the machines and chase the curious away is that defendants had reason to fear the unauthorized actions of third persons. Plaintiffs did allege that "said defendant well knew that said tractor in its unlocked condition was a dangerous instrumentality." The trial judge in his wisdom, in the exercise of his discretion, in the performance of his duty granted plaintiffs a new trial believing, as he must have believed, that the evidence was against the verdict and that plaintiffs should have the further opportunity to produce additional evidence in support of their allegations.

In Richards v. Stanley, 43 Cal.2d 60, 271 P.2d 23, 25, it was said in the majority opinion that "In the absence of such a statute, however, it has generally been held that the owner of an automobile is under no duty to persons who may be injured by its use to keep it out of the hands of a third person in the absence of facts putting the owner on notice that the third person is incompetent to handle it." (Emphasis added.) While I do not agree with the last quoted statement or with the majority opinion in the Stanley case, it needs no citation of authority here to say that defendants had knowledge that their machines were destructive forces if driven, or meddled with, by persons not specially trained. The record shows, without contradiction, that defendants knew, and feared, that harm would come to others if the machines were meddled with by untrained strangers. Section 449 of the Restatement of Torts states the rule as follows: "If the realizable likelihood that a third person may act in a particular manner is the hazard or one of the hazards which makes the actor negligent, such an act whether innocent, negligent, intentionally tortious or criminal does not prevent the actor from being liable for harm caused thereby." McEvoy v. American Pool Corp., 32 Cal.2d 295, 298-299, 195 P.2d 783, 786.

In order that an appellate court may reverse an order of a trial court granting a new trial, it must be found that the trial judge in so doing was guilty of a gross, manifest and unmistakable abuse of discretion; it must also be found that the trial judge violated his duty because it is his duty to grant a new trial whenever in his opinion (not that of the reviewing court) the evidence on which a decision rests is insufficient to justify the decision. Under the facts as presented by this case, and the law as it stands in this state, how can it possibly be said that the trial court abused its discretion?

Woody GIBSON, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY, a corporation, Defendant and Respondent.
No. 16295.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

June 24, 1955.

Rehearing Granted July 21, 1955.*

Action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when struck by defendant's train while walking along pathway adjacent to tracks. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Daniel R. Shoemaker, J., granted defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict for plaintiff and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that plaintiff as user of pathway constructed by railroad close to its tracks was not relieved from necessity of watching for approaching trains, and where he walked close enough to tracks to be struck by overhang of train, he was contributorily negligent.

Judgment affirmed.

Peters, P. J., dissented.

1. Carriers ⇐327

Where prospective passenger places himself so near edge of railroad platform as to be within line of ordinary overhang of train, he contributes to injury, and other things being equal, cannot recover.

2. Negligence ⇐136(9, 26)

Question of contributory negligence is normally one for jury and it is only where no fact is left in doubt, and no deduction or inference other than negligence can be drawn by jury from evidence, that court can say, as matter of law, that contributory negligence is established.

3. Railroads ⇐383(1)

Pedestrian using pathway constructed by railroad close to its tracks was not relieved from necessity of watching for approaching trains, and where he walked close enough to tracks to be struck by overhang of train, he was contributorily negligent.

4. Railroads ⇐397(1)

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when struck by defendant's train while walking along pathway adjacent to tracks, evidence of suction power of train when passing plaintiff was properly excluded, where such evidence was offered not to prove that plaintiff was pulled into train, but was proposed to relate only to what occurred after plaintiff was first struck.

5. New Trial ⇐164

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when struck by defendant's train while walking along pathway adjacent to tracks, action of court in denying defendant's motion for new trial but granting its motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict was not inconsistent, where effect of such action was finding that if court was wrong in determining that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law, it saw no reason for disturbing jury's verdict and judgment on that verdict would stand as judgment in case. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 629.

Fitz-Gerald Ames, Sr., San Francisco, for appellant.

R. Mitchell S. Boyd, Dunne & Phelps, San Francisco, for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

Action for damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when struck by defendant's train. Motions for nonsuit and directed verdict were denied. The jury awarded plaintiff $75,000. Defendant moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for new trial. The court granted the former and denied the latter. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

Questions presented.

1. Was plaintiff contributorily negligent in assuming that all portions of the railroad pathway were safe from overhang of passing trains?

2. Should evidence of suction power of the train have been admitted?

3. Was the court inconsistent in denying defendant's motion for new trial but granting its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict?

Facts.

Except as to just when the train's whistle was blown there appears little, if any, conflict in the evidence. Westerly, opposite Bay Meadows race track, defendant's railway tracks run north and south. On the West side of the West rail and distant 1 foot 9 inches therefrom, defendant maintains an asphalt walk or pathway 8 feet wide, about at the level of the ties except at the Hillsdale station and Bay Meadows crossing platforms, where the asphalt is level with the tracks. This pathway connected the much wider platform at the Hillsdale station with that at the Bay Meadows crossing. It was used both for walking between those platforms, and for boarding trains which stopped there on occasion to pick up race track patrons. The engine which struck plaintiff had an overhang which extended 1 foot 2½ inches over the walk.¹ The edge of the pathway was 1 foot 9 inches from the nearest rail. The walk extends southerly from the Bay Meadows crossing (an infrequently used commuter stop) some 1200 feet to the Hillsdale station. The tracks here and for a considerable distance southerly are straight. The pathway is used by passengers and other pedestrians. This fact was well known to defendant. (Defendant concedes it owed a duty of due care to persons using the pathway.) Near the station for a distance of 380 feet and near the crossing for a distance of 230 feet a white line extends along the pathway sufficiently far from the rails to clear the engine's overhang. In the intervening distance of approximately 600 feet there is no white line. Near sundown, with the weather clear and light, a slight breeze blowing about 5:50 p.m., plaintiff had walked across the crossing intending to go to Bay Meadows track. As he got to the gate of the track, the crowd started coming out. He noticed a train standing to the north. He assumed it was headed north. Assuming that the races were over, he retraced his steps to the west side of the tracks. While on the crossing he seemed to hear a couple of train whistles. He made no assumption as to their source. He walked south on the pathway. He heard a train whistle, probably a little deeper in tone than the whistle or whistles he heard at the crossing. (This was 10 to 15 seconds before he was struck.) He continued walking forward and "took probably a half step to the right" (away from the track). He heard no sound of grinding such as would be caused by the application of locomotive brakes. The half step to the right placed his left foot about 22 inches away from the track edge of the asphalt. He has a faint recollection of being "spun," feeling heat in his face and seeing a wheel of the engine. The next thing he remembered he was talking to a San Mateo policeman after the accident. He was then lying to the west of the pathway at a point about half way between the crossing and the station. This was plaintiff's first time on the pathway. He did not know that a locomotive would overhang the pathway. Plaintiff suffered serious injuries to his shoulder, arm, elbow and his leg was "mashed."

The engineer died prior to trial so his story is unknown. The fireman, whose view was obstructed by the engine for the last 300 feet before the impact, at that point observed a group of people walking southerly along the pathway, their backs towards the train. He could not tell how close they were to the edge. People "too often" walk alongside the track there, fairly close. The usual speed at this point is 50 miles per hour. No stop at either Hillsdale station or Bay Meadows crossing was intended. Immediately north of the crossing there is a whistle post. Admittedly the whistle was blown there. There was evidence that the whistle was not sounded after the engine reached the crossing. One Harland,

1. It is interesting to note that although the witnesses referred to the area in question as a walk or pathway, counsel for both parties in their briefs and on oral argument refer to it as a "platform." We are accepting the witnesses' designation rather than that of counsel. As hereafter shown the duty of a railroad company at a station platform seems well determined. We have been unable to find any case involving a pathway between platforms.

walking north on the pathway, passed plaintiff walking south. He heard a whistle, turned around and started walking south. At that time the train was about 600 yards away. When he was about 10 to 20 feet behind plaintiff he heard the whistle again. The train was then possibly 300 yards away. He did not have too much of an idea on that. Harland turned over to the right and stopped. When the train passed him he saw some part of the front part of the engine strike plaintiff. Plaintiff was then about 2½ feet from the edge of the pathway nearest the rail. Harland had the impression that plaintiff was sucked into the train. Harland then stated that the whistle was going continuously until the time of the accident.

A railway "red cap" walking on the pathway saw plaintiff about 350 feet ahead of him. Plaintiff was walking close to the track edge of the asphalt. The whistle was blowing continuously. The train hit plaintiff and spun him to the right.

Defendant's maintenance official testified that prior to May, 1946, there had been a gravel path which was 3 feet 6 inches in from the point where the track edge of the asphalt now is. The old path was completely clear of the engine overhang.

1. Contributory negligence.

The judgment notwithstanding the verdict was granted on the theory that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. The evidence shows without conflict that plaintiff walked some 600 feet down the pathway close to the railside edge of the pathway. Although he admittedly heard a train whistle when he was at the crossing before starting down the pathway he made no effort to locate it or to learn if there was any train approaching from his rear. At no time during his movement down the pathway did he glance behind to observe if there were any trains approaching. About 10 to 15 seconds prior to the accident he heard another whistle which "probably sounded a little deeper in tone" than the previous one. He then continued walking forward and took a half step away from the rails "to be safe." This placed his foot nearest the track approximately 22 inches from the edge of the asphalt and approximately 3 feet 7 inches from the nearest rail. He continued on in this location until hit. Although he heard a whistle and felt it necessary to do something "to be safe," he did not look around to determine where the whistle came from or to see if he were in a safe position.

If defendant owed plaintiff the duty of maintaining the pathway free from danger from overhang of trains and suction, then plaintiff could not have been guilty of contributory negligence* for if plaintiff had the right to assume that all portions of the pathway were safe, then under the facts of this case he was under no duty to look for approaching trains.

The question here is, by the constructing of a pathway close to its tracks does a railroad impliedly represent to users thereof that all portions of the pathway are safe, thereby relieving the user from the necessity of watching for approaching trains, when walking close enough to the tracks to be struck by the overhang of the train, or to be drawn into the train by suction? In McKeown v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co., 20 Cal.App.2d 324, at pages 326-327, 66 P.2d 1250, at page 1251, the court said: " * * * it is the uniform rule that where a passenger places himself so near the edge of a railroad platform as to be within the line of the ordinary overhang of a train, he contributes to the injury, and other things being equal, cannot recover. [Citations.]"

[1] While the facts in our case are distinguishable from those in the McKeown case, that difference would not change the apparent universalness of the rule, see cases cited in the McKeown case, 20 Cal.App.2d at page 327, 66 P.2d at page 1251, and the cases hereafter discussed, nor the application of the principle to the facts of our case. In the McKeown case, the plaintiff was familiar with the station platform and with the way) the jury's implied finding of negligence.

2. Defendant, although not conceding its correctness, is not attacking (except as it relates to the maintenance of the path-

normal overhang of engines, while here plaintiff was using the pathway for the first time and knew nothing of engine overhang. In the McKeown case, although denied by the plaintiff, there was testimony that as the train approached she deviated from her course to approach nearer the edge of the platform. In our case, after hearing a whistle, plaintiff took a half step away from the track. In the McKeown case the engine overhang was either flush with the edge of the concrete platform, or overhung it an inch; thus the plaintiff's arm must have extended either beyond the platform or within an inch of its edge. In our case the engine overhung the pathway $14\frac{1}{2}$ inches. Plaintiff's feet were probably $2\frac{1}{2}$ feet from the pathway's edge. Only his elbow extended into the space occupied by the engine's overhang. The other differences between the two cases bear on defendant's negligence rather than on plaintiff's duty.

In Holmes v. South Pac. C. Ry. Co., 97 Cal. 161, 31 P. 834, the railroad tracks were in the street. There was a space of 3 feet between the sidewalk at the station and the nearest rail. The plaintiff was walking in this space. When the whistle sounded the plaintiff stepped partly upon the track and was hit. Again, here, the facts are not similar to ours but the court pointed out that there are many cases supporting the principle, 97 Cal. at page 167, 31 P. at page 835: "A railroad track upon which trains are constantly run is itself a warning to any person who has reached years of discretion, and who is possessed of ordinary intelligence, that it is not safe to walk upon it, or near enough to be struck by a passing train, without the exercise of constant vigilance in order to be made aware of the approach of a locomotive, and thus be enabled to avoid receiving injury; and the failure of such a person, so situated with reference to the railroad track, to exercise such care and watchfulness, and to make use of all his senses in order to avoid the danger incident to such situation, is negligence per se."

overhung the platform varying from $1\frac{1}{4}$ to 10 inches and at the point where the plaintiff was struck it was $6\frac{1}{2}$ inches. The plaintiff knew that the train was approaching. Of a person's duty at a railroad platform the court said, 46 S.E. at page 472: "It is manifest that this duty requires the railroad company to construct its platform sufficiently near to the rails that it will afford to passengers, including the aged and infirm, a safe exit to and from the trains. And it is a matter of common knowledge that in performing this duty the platforms along the best-regulated railroads are built so near the rails that the projections from the engines and cars will overlap, to some extent, the edge of the platform. While the extreme edge of the platform is perfectly safe for passengers when occupying it for the purpose to which it is manifestly adapted, it is a matter of common knowledge that it is a place of danger when occupied while trains are passing or are likely to pass."

In Higgins v. Erie R. Co., 89 N.J.L. 629, 99 A. 98, the plaintiff was familiar with the platform and the coming and going of trains there. He was drawing a hand truck on the platform and either drew it so near the platform's edge that it was struck by the engine tender's overhang or in turning he brought the truck against the tender. "The law is well settled in this state that where a person places himself so near the edge of a railroad platform as to be within the line of the ordinary overhang of a properly constructed platform and engine he contributes to the injury, and the company is not liable for the injuries he may suffer from such negligent exposure to danger." 99 A. at page 99.

In Long v. Delaware L. & W. R. Co., 1941, N.J.L. 207, 21 A.2d 824, the court quoted the above statement in holding negligent a plaintiff who was struck by a hand-rail of a passing car, while standing on a platform 19 feet 2 inches wide between two sets of tracks.

In Ratliff v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 6 Cir., 1940, 116 F.2d 155, the plaintiff standing on the station platform was trying to flag the approaching train so that she could board it. She was struck by a cross-beam on the front of the engine which overhung the platform $1\frac{1}{2}$ or 2 feet. It was claimed, as here, that the platform as constructed was an implied assurance that any portion of it was safe from passing trains. The court said 116 F.2d at pages 156-157: "None of the cases cited by appellant holds that such a facility as is here involved,—entirely adequate and safe when used as ordinary persons would use it,—is unsafe merely because it does not prevent careless persons from putting themselves in positions of danger."

In Ferran v. Southern Pac. Co., 3 Cal.2d 350, 44 P.2d 533, the court referred to the general rule quoted above in Holmes v. South Pac. C. Ry. Co., 97 Cal. 161, 31 P. 834, but held it did not apply to persons required to cross intervening tracks to board cars who are injured while doing so.

As contra to the principle enunciated in the foregoing cases, plaintiff cites the following: Chunn v. City & Suburban Railway, 207 U.S. 302, 303, 28 S.Ct. 63, 52 L.Ed. 219. There the platform which was customarily used by passengers intending to use the Washington car was one between two sets of tracks and was 7 feet 10 inches wide. The steps of defendant's cars projected 2 feet 2 inches over the platform, so that when two cars passed each other at this point (which was the situation when the plaintiff was hurt) the clear space left for the passenger to stand in was only 3 feet 6 inches. The court held that "the margin of safety was narrow and left little allowance for the infirmities of mankind. In the confusion of two cars approaching from opposite directions it is too much to expect nice calculations of distances. It is not to be wondered at that in the attempt to escape the one the plaintiff fell foul of the other." 207 U.S. at page 308, 28 S. Ct. at page 65. "Nor was the plaintiff necessarily wanting in due care by taking her place between the tracks. It was the usual place from which entrance to the Washington car was made. It was safe enough under ordinary circumstances. It was made unsafe only by reason of the defendant's negligent act in running another car rapidly by. The plaintiff had the right to assume * * * that when it [the defendant] stopped one car and thereby invited her to enter it, it would not run another rapidly by the place of her entrance and put her in peril." 207 U.S. at pages 308, 309, 28 S.Ct. at page 65. The court did not discuss the general rule of passengers on station platforms, nor even the exception stated in Ferran v. Southern Pac. Co., supra, 3 Cal.2d 350, 44 P.2d 533 (passengers crossing tracks) but rested its decision primarily on the narrowness of the platform provided for its patrons. In many details the facts in Lagomarsino v. Market Street Ry. Co., 69 Cal.App.2d 388, 158 P.2d 982, were similar to those in the Chunn case, and the ruling was the same. A somewhat similar case to the Chunn case is Edwards v. Union Pac. R. Co., 1913, 90 Kan. 183, 133 P. 728. There the court's decision was based principally upon the fact that the station platform where the plaintiff was required to go because of the crowded condition of the rest of the platform, and where she was struck by a locomotive overhang of about 27 inches, was less than 5 feet wide between the rails and a depot bow window. The trial court had given an instruction on contributory negligence embodying the general rule. In holding that the instruction was improper under the circumstances of the case, the court said 133 P. at page 729: "Had the evidence shown that the platform space about the window had been comparatively free and unobstructed, and that plaintiff, with ample opportunity to choose a safe place to walk, had put herself or remained in a position of obvious danger from incoming trains, the instruction would have stated the law correctly. Her testimony, however, is that she was endeavoring to get past the narrow space in front of the window, and because of the crowd of persons about her she was prevented from realizing her danger * * *." Thus, the decision cannot be construed as applying to the facts of our case.

Nor is Jaques v. Southern Pac. Co., 8 Cal.App.2d 738, 48 P.2d 63, in point here. There two sets of railroad tracks were maintained in the street, each set operated by a different company. Between the tracks there was a safety zone 3 feet 10 inches wide. However, the defendant's cars overhung this zone so that there was less than 22 inches left for a person to stand in. While the plaintiff was standing in the safety zone awaiting an approaching car of the other company, defendant's train passed by. Its great speed drew the coat which she was wearing into contact with the train so that she lost her balance and was thrown or fell under the wheels. The court in upholding a judgment in the plaintiff's favor did not discuss the law of contributory negligence involved other than to say, 8 Cal. App.2d at page 740, 48 P.2d at page 64: "It is then argued that the respondent should have anticipated the danger from suction to a person standing near a railway track and that she was therefore guilty of contributory negligence. Manifestly, if the engineer, who had operated trains for more than thirty years, was not chargeable with knowledge of this particular danger, it cannot be said as a matter of law that an eighteen year old school girl should be deemed to have anticipated the same danger." It then stated that the question of contributory negligence was one of fact properly left to the jury—an entirely different situation from the one in our case, where on a sufficiently wide pathway plaintiff by walking dangerously near to the track, and without any effort to determine whether he was safe from train overhang or suction, chose to violate the rule which the cases hold is well settled, namely, that a person on a station platform must look out for a train's overhang.

In Becker v. City & County of San Francisco, 121 Cal.App.2d 723, 264 P.2d 133, while standing on a street curb at a regular bus stop the plaintiff leaned forward and his head came in contact with the side of a moving bus. Judgment for the defendant was affirmed. Apparently the case is cited by plaintiff here because the court approved an instruction to the effect that it would be negligence for the bus to be operated in such manner that any portion of it extended over the curb. Such a ruling, however, in no way minimizes the railroad platform rule heretofore mentioned.

In Campbell v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 1909, 95 Miss. 309, 48 So. 618, the plaintiff stood on the concrete platform between the waiting room and tracks, his back to the tracks. He was struck by the engine bumper which overhung the platform 2 inches. It was held that " * * * being in a place where he is invited to be by the company, he has a right to suppose that he will be safe from collision with a train running on the track so long as he occupies a place on the platform, and the mere fact that plaintiff, while on the platform, did not look behind him for an approaching train, cannot be held evidence of contributory negligence * * *. Negligence is not imputable to a person for failing to look out for danger, when, under the surrounding circumstances, the person sought to be charged with it had no reason to suspect that danger was to be apprehended." 48 So. at page 619. This case does not refer to the before-mentioned "uniform rule." McKeown v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co., supra, 20 Cal.App.2d 324, 66 P.2d 1250.

In Archer v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 1887, 106 N.Y. 589, 13 N.E. 318, the plaintiff while on the station platform was struck by a car which overhung the platform 2 or 3 inches. It was held that the plaintiff could not be chargeable with negligence as a matter of law in "assuming there was nothing to make his position dangerous." 13 N.E. at page 321. No reference is made to the uniform rule. Moreover, it appears that the platform in the Archer case was one between railroad tracks and there was evidence that the plaintiff did not know and because of the peculiar situation was justified in not knowing that there existed the track upon which the train which injured him came.

Except as to situations of platforms between tracks where the rule is different than the one applicable here, plaintiff has cited and we have found no case holding that a person has the right to assume that a platform or pathway is safe from overhang of passing trains, except Edwards v. Union Pac. R. Co., supra, 90 Kan. 183, 133 P. 728, where it was held that the plaintiff forced by the crowd upon the platform to place herself in a position of danger would have been negligent had she not been forced to do so; and Campbell v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., supra, 95 Miss. 309, 48 So. 618, which does not refer to the platform rule. Moreover, these cases were decided many years before the court in the McKeown case, supra, stated that the rule was "uniform."

Defendant's Engineer of Maintenance of Way and Structures testified that it is a general policy of defendant to paint lines on a pathway to mark danger points. This fact, however, does not change the rule regarding the fact that parties using such pathway may not assume that all portions are safe. While in this case there were white lines on the Hillsdale station and Bay Meadows crossing platforms, plaintiff at no time testified that he was misled by the absence of white lines between. Prior to the construction of the present pathway there had been a gravel pathway, all portions of which were clear of the engine overhang. There is no evidence that plaintiff knew of the white lines where they existed nor of the previous pathway. We can see no practical difference between a station platform and a pathway between platforms, so far as the duty of a railroad company to its users is concerned. Actually, it would appear that its duty at a station platform would be at least as high, if not higher, than on a pathway. Station platforms are places where many people gather, where there can be confusion and milling around. A pathway ordinarily has no such congestion.

[2,3] Usually, of course, the question of contributory negligence is one for the jury and it is only where no fact is left in doubt, and no deduction or inference other than negligence can be drawn by the jury from the evidence, that the court can say, as a matter of law, that contributory negligence is established. Zibbell v. Southern Pac. Co., 160 Cal. 237, 240, 116 P. 513. In view of the well settled rule as to station platforms, plaintiff's conduct under the circumstances leaves no possible inference other than that he was guilty of contributory negligence.

3. If there were error in excluding it for this purpose, it was error without prejudice as there was ample evidence of de-

2. Train suction.

[4] Plaintiff offered a qualified expert who would have testified to the "suction pounds pressure" developed by a train traveling at 50 miles per hour (the speed maintained by the train which struck plaintiff) and which would have been exerted upon plaintiff, "taking into consideration the fact that * * * [plaintiff] was first hit and then spun facing back with his back to the train and then the amount of pressure that was exerted upon him to throw him into the train, together with his off-balance condition and together with his spinning motion would have been sufficient to pull him into the train." The court refused to admit the testimony. It is not clear to what issue this testimony would have related. Were it to the effect that suction initially might have pulled him into the train, it would be relevant on the question of defendant's negligence in driving a train at great speed alongside a platform on which there were a number of people.³ But the evidence was offered not to prove this, for it was proposed to relate only to what occurred after plaintiff was first struck. There could be no error in excluding it for this purpose, as there was no contention that plaintiff's injuries were not caused by the accident, so that just what occurred after he was first struck is not too important on the question of the negligence of either party.

3. Inconsistency of rulings.

[5] Plaintiff contends that in denying defendant's motion for new trial but granting its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the court acted inconsistently, in effect, holding on the motion for new trial that the evidence was sufficient to support the jury's verdict, and on the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict that it was not, because as a matter of law the jury's finding that plaintiff was not contributorily negligent was not supported.

Section 629, Code of Civil Procedure, dealing with both of these motions, does not defendant's negligence and the jury found defendant negligent.

appear to meet the situation here. It provides what happens if the court (a) grants a new trial and denies judgment notwithstanding the verdict, (b) where both motions are denied. It appears to us that the effect of the trial court's action is a finding that if it was wrong in determining that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, then it sees no reason for disturbing the jury's verdict and the judgment on that verdict would stand as the judgment in the case. We see no inconsistency in the court's action.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

I dissent.

The majority hold that, under the law as stated in McKeown v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co., 20 Cal.App.2d 324, 66 P.2d 1250, it must be held that plaintiff, as a matter of law, was contributively negligent. I cannot agree with this conclusion.

The jury decided that defendant was negligent and that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence. Those are, of course, normally, fact questions. But the trial judge granted a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, holding that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Such a judgment is proper when and only when it can be said that there is no evidence or no reasonable inference from the evidence that would support a verdict for the plaintiff. The majority purport to follow these rules, but, in my opinion, violate them.

There can be no doubt that the implied finding of the jury that defendant was negligent is amply supported by the evidence. The majority assume that this is so, and defendant, in its briefs, does not argue to the contrary. The nature of that negligence is most important. In determining whether plaintiff acted as a reasonable man, it is important to know what defendant's duty was towards plaintiff and how, and under what circumstances, defendant violated that duty. The jury could have found that defendant was negligent not only in operating its train at 50 miles an hour under the facts, in failing to apply the brakes after defendant's engineer should have known of plaintiff's danger, and in possibly failing to sound the warning whistle properly, but the jury could also have found that defendant was negligent in building the pathway between the crossing and the station platforms in the manner it did.

What are the pertinent facts? Here was an area customarily used by large numbers of persons. At the Bay Meadows crossing, for the convenience of its patrons and others, a large area, flush with the rails, was constructed, with a white line painted on it that indicated the danger zone near the rails. This area could properly be designated a platform. A similar but larger platform, with a similar white line, was installed at the Hillsdale station. Between these two platforms, for a distance of approximately 600 feet, the defendant constructed what properly was called by many witnesses an asphalt "pathway" or "walkway." This was constructed below the level of the rails at the level of the ties. It was 8' wide and its closest edge was 1 9" from the rails. The engine here involved overlapped the rails 2' 11½", and overlapped the path 1' 2½". The real issue in this case is whether, by so constructing the path, did the defendant impliedly represent to persons rightfully using it, that it was a safe place on which to walk? The plaintiff, as a reasonable man, saw the pathway and used it as it was intended to be used, as a pathway between the two platforms. It should also be mentioned that the railroad right-of-way was quite wide in the area in question so that the path could have been constructed so as to be perfectly safe. The pathway, constructed as it was, to a reasonable man, amounted to an implied invitation to use it to walk between the two platforms. Included within that invitation was the implied representation that the entire pathway was a safe place to walk. Because of the nature of the construction, defendant invited plaintiff to use the pathway, and owed a duty to persons rightfully using it to maintain it in a safe condition. It violated that duty by allowing trains to travel over the area that substantially infringed on the paved portion of the pathway.

Now what does all this have to do with the issue of contributory negligence? Plaintiff, according to the majority, was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law because he walked too close to the edge of the path, in an area that he should have known was dangerous. The other facts in reference to contributory negligence were so clearly factual matters for the jury that they need not be further discussed. Now just where was plaintiff walking? Plaintiff's feet were nearly 3 feet from the tracks when he was hit. He was at least a foot and a half inside the path. How many people know that an engine overhangs the track for a distance of 3 feet? Until I read this record I had no idea that the overhang of an engine was 3 feet. Until I read this record I would have assumed that in walking 3 feet from the rails I was in a safe position. But, in addition to that reasonable assumption, here the railroad built the pathway 1' 9" from the tracks. As a reasonable man, the plaintiff could assume that this was a representation that trains did not overhang the rails more than 1' 9". Thus, in walking about 3 feet from the rails he could reasonably assume that he was safe. That is the end of the case so far as contributory negligence as a matter of law is concerned.

The majority, however, hold that the decision in McKeown v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co., 20 Cal.App.2d 324, 66 P.2d 1250, compels a finding of contributory negligence. That case dealt with an accident on a platform in the literal sense. Here we are dealing with a pathway. It may be that people know or should know that a platform, for the convenience of passengers in getting on and off trains and in loading and unloading baggage, must be constructed close to the rails and within the danger zone of overhanging equipment. In that sense a platform, of itself, may be a warning of danger. On that issue I express no opinion because it is not involved. A pathway is not a platform—in fact, it is an implied invitation to use it for the purposes it apparently was intended—to walk on. There are other factual distinctions with the McKeown case. These distinctions are fairly and fully set forth in the majority opinion, and need not be repeated here. When added to the basic distinction that the McKeown case was dealing with a loading platform while here we are dealing with a pathway, the conclusion seems inevitable that the issue of contributory negligence was a factual one. For this reason I would reverse the judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

W. F. DREHER, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Geo. J. ROHRMOSER, also known as George J. Rohrmoser, and Marjorie B. Rohrmoser, husband and wife, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 20900.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

June 28, 1955.

Action to quiet title to two lots purchased by plaintiff, who had title taken in name of defendant husband, who also signed notes and deeds of trust securing two building loans at plaintiff's request. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Edwin L. Jefferson, J., the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that the evidence sustained finding that naked title only was placed in name of defendant husband for convenience of plaintiff, that husband never had any beneficial interest in property and that neither husband nor wife had at any time any community or other interest therein.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Husband and Wife ⇨249

Statute providing that all property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, or both, including real property is community property does not include property held in trust by a spouse for a third person. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 164.

2. Quieting Title ⇨43

In action to quiet title to two lots which plaintiff had purchased but title to which had been taken in name of defendant husband, who also signed notes and deeds of trust for building loans for convenience of plaintiff, plaintiff had right to interpose any equitable claim which he possessed directed to the issues raised by the pleadings.

3. Trusts ⇨87

In action to quiet title to land which had been purchased by plaintiff but title to which had been taken in name of defendant husband for convenience of plaintiff, evidence showing circumstances under which property was deeded to defendant husband was properly admitted. West's Ann.Civ. Code §§ 162-164.

4. Husband and Wife ⇨264Trusts ⇨89(3)

In action to quiet title to two lots purchased by plaintiff but title to which was taken in name of defendant, who also signed notes and deeds of trust securing two building loans, evidence sustained findings that naked title only was placed in defendant husband for convenience of plaintiff, that husband never had any beneficial interest in property and that neither defendant husband nor wife had at any time any community or other interest in the property.

Albert A. Dorn, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Everett H. Mills, North Hollywood, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

Defendant, George J. Rohrmoser, was employed by plaintiff, who was a general contractor and builder of homes.

Through a real estate broker, plaintiff bought two lots in Wilmington for $2,000, which amount he paid into escrow. At that time he told defendant George that he wanted to put the lots in his (defendant's) name "for convenience sake, so that he could get the permits and the titles and the loan" and thus expedite the construction of two houses on the lots. Defendant agreed to this arrangement.

Accordingly, a grant deed to "Geo. J. Rohrmoser, a married man" was executed by Charles V. Huck, et al., owners of the lots. Defendants had no dealings with either the real estate broker or the owners. Thereafter, plaintiff arranged for two building loans of $6,000 each and, at his request, defendants signed the notes and deeds of trust securing the same.

On October 21, 1953, when the houses were completed and sales thereof to third parties were pending, defendant George J. Rohrmoser executed a grant deed conveying the property to the plaintiff. When plaintiff presented the deed to Mrs. Rohrmoser, she refused to sign it. This action to quiet title followed.

The answer alleged ownership in defendants under the deed from Huck, et al. It also alleged execution of the trust deeds and an oral agreement pursuant to which plaintiff constructed the two houses and was paid $12,000 therefor.

Defendant George J. Rohrmoser admitted he had made no payments on the notes; that he never paid any portion of the purchase price and did not know what it was until he heard plaintiff's testimony at the trial. He also testified that on several prior occasions he had taken title to lots for plaintiff and had thereafter executed deeds to the new purchasers; also that he took title to the instant property to protect plaintiff from his creditors.

From the judgment quieting title to the property in plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Appellants take the position that:

1. They acquired the lots in question as community property by the deed from Huck, et al.

2. The deed from appellant husband conveyed nothing to respondent.

3. Respondent did not have legal title to the property when he initiated the instant action of quiet title.

4. Under the pleadings, it was error to admit evidence tending to prove an equitable title in respondent.

"The relief awarded in an action to quiet title may vary according to the circumstances of the case. * * * And * * * while an action to quiet title cannot be maintained by the owner of an equitable estate against the holder of the legal title upon a complaint containing only the averments commonly made therein, yet appropriate remedies, such as cancellation, reconveyance, or decrees establishing or enforcing trusts, or determining the priorities of opposing equities, may be had, as between the proper parties, whenever they are required upon equitable considerations and are justified by the pleadings and proof." 22 Cal. Jur. 129, 130, section 18, citing De Leonis v. Hammel, 1 Cal.App. 390, 394, 82 P. 349.

In Jeffords v. Young, 98 Cal.App. 400, 406, 277 P. 163, 166, in which it was contended that a suit to quiet title by one holding an equitable title to realty would not lie against the holder of the legal title, the court stated:

"While it is true that the complaint of the appellants stated facts constituting only a suit to quiet title, the answer of the grantee Lorenz set up new matter and asked for affirmative relief, praying that the title be quieted in him. The new matter in the answer is deemed to have been denied, and, in spite of the nature of plaintiffs' original action, they have a right to interpose, against the defendants' claim of legal title, any equitable claim which they may possess, and upon a proper showing the grantee's title should be quieted subject to the valid equitable claim of the appellants."

Again in Bacon v. Bacon, 21 Cal.App.2d 540, 545, 69 P.2d 884, 886, it is stated, quoting from Wilson v. Anderson, 109 Cal.App. 467, 293 P. 627, 630:

"The authorities cited abundantly show that under the provisions of section 738, Code of Civil Procedure, the court, in an action involving adverse claims to real property prosecuted upon a complaint seeking to quiet title of the plaintiff, may enter such judgment as the equities of the case require, and provide for the establishing and enforcing of such trusts in relation to the property involved as the equities of the case justify or demand."

[1] Following sections 162 and 163 of the Civil Code which define separate property of the spouses, section 164 of the same code reads: "All other property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, or both, including real property situated in this State * * * is community property".

This does not, however, include property held in trust by a spouse for a third person. 10 Cal.Jur.2d 670, section 7, citing Anderson v. Broadwell, 119 Cal.App. 130, 6 P.2d 260. See, also, 41 C.J.S., Husband and Wife, § 471, subd. i, p. 1006; and 54 Am.Jur. 152.

[2, 3] Accordingly, respondent had the right to interpose any equitable claim which he possessed directed to the issues raised by the instant pleadings. And there was no error in admitting evidence showing the circumstances under which the property here was deeded to appellant husband.

[4] The admissions of appellant husband, standing alone, were amply sufficient to support the trial court's findings: that the naked title only was placed in the name of said husband for the convenience of respondent; that said husband never had any beneficial interest in the property; and that neither appellant husband nor wife had at any time any community or other interest therein.

The judgment is affirmed.

Rehearing Denied July 29, 1955.

Hearing Denied Sept. 1, 1955.

Action against a physician's administratrix for alleged malpractice of physician in performing surgery upon plaintiff's nose and chin. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, H. Burton Noble, J., entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held, inter alia, that physician's administratrix was entitled to presumption that physician had not been negligent.

Judgment reversed.

1. Physicians and Surgeons ⇨18(6, 8)

In action against physician's administratrix for alleged malpractice of physician in performing plastic surgery upon plaintiff's chin, it was not necessary for plaintiff to produce direct evidence as to technique used by doctor or as to particular manner in which surgery was performed, and if in the opinion of experts, undesired result which they observed would have been avoided if proper degree of skill, judgment and care had been used, this alone would have been a sufficient reason for opinion that such had not been used.

2. Physicians and Surgeons ⇨18(9)

In action against physician's administratrix for alleged malpractice of physician in performing plastic surgery upon plaintiff's chin, evidence consisting of expert testimony, on issue, on whether surgery had been performed in negligent manner, was sufficient for jury.

3. Evidence ⇨53

A "presumption" is a form of evidence which jury is required to consider along with all other evidence in case, and is to be weighed with other evidence, and unless it is overcome by contrary evidence, it requires a verdict in favor of presumption.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Presumption".

4. Negligence ⇨121(1)

Where party to negligence action has died or for some other reason is unable to testify as to his acts which it is claimed were negligently performed, there is presumption that his acts were performed with degree of skill and care which was commensurate with his duty, provided that party claiming benefit of presumption has not introduced evidence of conduct wholly irreconcilable with exercise of due care.

5. Physicians and Surgeons ⇨18(6)

A physician's administratrix defending malpractice action was entitled to benefit of presumption that physician's acts were performed with degree of care and skill commensurate with duty.

DeForrest Home, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Louis C. Blau, Beverly Hills, and David L. Mohr, Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Defendant Edris Gaynor, as Administratrix of the estate of Joseph Gaynor, deceased, appeals from a judgment entered on a verdict rendered in favor of Frank Kellogg, plaintiff, in an action for alleged malpractice of her intestate.

Kellogg sustained injury to his nose in an accident some 23 years before this action was instituted. He underwent slight corrective surgery for a deviation of the right septum, after which he experienced no difficulty in breathing. In 1949, Joseph Gaynor, a medical doctor specializing in plastic surgery, performed corrective surgery on respondent's nose and chin. The purpose of the operation was to narrow the nose, to remove a hump from it, and to accentuate the chin. Because of unsatisfactory results, Dr. Gaynor performed a second operation on respondent's nose in 1951, followed by postoperative aftercare as in the first surgery. Plaintiff remained unsatisfied as to the results on his nose and chin. Dr. Gaynor did not perform a second operation on the chin, having advised plaintiff that it would resume its normal shape after a period of time. The chin was characterized by mobile pieces of cartilage, and the nose, even after the second operation, was concave with a bulbous tip, and the passage of air was impaired. Plaintiff instituted this action shortly after the death of Dr. Gaynor in 1951, his claim having been rejected by defendant.

In the first cause of action plaintiff alleged damage to his nose and in the second cause of action, damage to his chin. Defendant's motion for nonsuit as to the first and second causes of action was denied and her motion for a new trial also was denied.

Appellant contends (1) that the court erred in denying her motion for nonsuit as to the second cause of action and (2) that it was error to refuse her requested instruction that it was to be presumed that Dr. Gaynor exercised due care in rendering his services.

Dr. McDowell, plaintiff's expert, testified that in his opinion the services were not rendered in a manner consistent with the care and skill usually employed by qualified plastic surgeons in this community. He gave as his reasons for his opinion that too much tissue was removed from the nose, uneven implants had been placed in the chin, and scars placed in improper directions and locations and he stated: "The results I feel are certainly below the results that you ordinarily expect from a capable plastic surgeon." He further testified that further surgery would be recommended, but that good results could not be assured because the condition of plaintiff's nostrils was such that normal passage of air through them could not be guaranteed.

[1,2] In presenting her first point defendant urges insufficiency of the evidence of negligence in the operation upon the chin. She says: "It will be noted that Dr.

McDowell did not testify to a single act which he considered unskillful or negligent." No support for this contention is to be found in defendant's quoted excerpts from Costa v. Regents of Univ. of California, 116 Cal.App.2d 445, 461, 254 P.2d 85, to the effect that the fact that the result of treatment is less favorable than in a great majority of cases may result from individual differences or less favorable circumstances of the case and need not indicate that the treatment was negligently performed, nor in the statement quoted from Nicholas v. Jacobson, 205 Cal. 577, 271 P. 1057, to the effect that there was in that case no evidence whatever of the commission of any negligent or unskillful act. It was not necessary for plaintiff to produce direct evidence as to the technique used by the doctor nor as to the particular manner in which the surgery was performed. The circumstances of the case were such that in the opinion of experts the results would speak for themselves. They could see what had been done and it was competent for them to base their opinions upon their belief that the work should not have been done as it was done and that a better result would have been reached if the surgeon had employed a standard degree of skill and judgment. If in the opinion of experts the undesired result which they observed would have been avoided if the proper degree of skill, judgment and care had been used, this alone would have been a sufficient reason for an opinion that they were not used. There was sufficient expert testimony on behalf of plaintiff to justify a conclusion that the surgery on the chin was performed in a negligent manner. It was not error for the court to deny defendant's motion for a nonsuit as to the second cause of action.

[3,4] Defendant requested and the court refused an instruction reading as follows: "Where a party to an action has died, and therefore is not available to testify in his own behalf, there is a presumption of law that the deceased exercised reasonable care and was not guilty of negligence. A presumption is a form of evidence which the jury is required to consider along with all other evidence in the case, and is to be weighed with the other evidence, and unless it is overcome by contrary evidence would require a verdict in favor of the presumption; that is to say, the presumption that the deceased was not guilty of malpractice." The court was clearly in error in refusing this instruction. Where a party has died or for some other reason is unable to testify as to his acts which it is claimed were negligently performed, there is a presumption that his acts were performed with a degree of skill and care which was commensurate with his duty, provided that the party claiming the benefit of the presumption has not introduced evidence of conduct wholly irreconcilable with the exercise of due care. In Westberg v. Wilde, 14 Cal.2d 360, 94 P.2d 590, and Scott v. Burke, 39 Cal.2d 388, 247 P.2d 313, these principles were thoroughly examined and expounded with full citation of authorities. Anything further said on the general subject would be useless repetition.

[5] Plaintiff answers this assignment of error by claiming that the rule has no application in an action against a physician or surgeon for malpractice. No case has been cited and we have found none which tends to support this contention. A physician is entitled to the benefit of the presumption since negligence is a fact to be proved. Engelking v. Carlson, 13 Cal.2d 216, 88 P.2d 695; Simone v. Sabo, 37 Cal.2d 253, 257, 258, 231 P.2d 19. It is argued that the question of negligence was one that could have been resolved only through the opinions of experts and it appears to be contended that a mere presumption of the exercise of care should not be accorded the dignity or quality of an expert opinion. But there is a general presumption of the use of the proper degree of care and it applies to all men. It means only that the trier of fact must accept as a fact absence of negligence unless and until evidence of negligence is produced which outweighs the presumption of the exercise of due care. We think there were compelling reasons for application of the presumption to the facts of the present case. The jury were properly instructed that the results obtained by Dr. Gaynor, considered alone, did not create an inference that he was guilty of malpractice but that the results might be considered by expert witnesses in determining whether he had exercised knowledge and skill in accordance with his duty. Where it was impossible for the defendant to produce evidence with respect to the methods and technique employed in the problem which confronted Dr. Gaynor, to withhold from the defendant the benefit of the presumption would not only have been unreasonable but unjust as well. Application of the presumption was consistent with the testimony of defendant's expert that due care and skill had been employed. There is no merit in the contention that the presumption was inapplicable because it was opposed to the testimony of the plaintiff's expert. Expert testimony was required in order to establish negligence. If plaintiff's expert testimony had not been deemed by the jury to be satisfactory and sufficient, a finding against the claim of negligence would have been required, even though the defendant produced no expert testimony that due care and skill had been employed. This would result from the presumption against negligence. Plaintiff's argument that the problem of weighing a presumption against other types of evidence "inevitably results in creating a morass of confusion and uncertainty in the minds of the jurors" is not a new one. It has been settled in a long line of cases that triers of fact have that problem and must make the best of it. The logical effect of refusal of the instruction was to permit the jury to weigh the evidence as if no presumption of the exercise of due care existed. Refusal of the instruction was clearly erroneous and could not have failed to be prejudicial to the defense.

The judgment is reversed.

In action to recover treble the amount of usurious interest paid to lender, borrower had burden of proving usury by mere preponderance of the evidence. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1916-3.

4. Appeal and Error ☞931(1)

On appeal, that part of the evidence which supports judgment must be accepted, not that part which would defeat, or tend to defeat, judgment.

5. Appeal and Error ☞1010(1)

If, upon any hypothesis whatever, there is substantial evidence to support finding of facts, finding cannot be set aside on appeal.

6. Witnesses ☞275(6)

In action to recover treble the amount of interest paid to lender, trial court did not err in limiting cross-examination of borrower concerning his alleged contemplation of selling his premises for sum in excess of amount borrowed, since such testimony could in no way affect judgment.

7. Appeal and Error ☞1056(1)

In action to recover treble the amount of usurious interest paid to lender, even if trial court did err in striking out portion of transcript on borrower's motion, where lender's witness testified to substantially the same effect and lender failed to show any prejudice resulting therefrom, exclusion of that evidence did not result in miscarriage of justice.

8. Appeal and Error ☞1057(1)

In action to recover treble the amount of interest paid to lender wherein lender, at time of motion for continuance, made request to show by his wife's testimony that borrowers had negotiated with him weeks before loan was actually made, trial court did not prejudice lender's cause in rejecting his request where like evidence was already in the record.

9. Appeal and Error ☞970(1, 4)

Limiting introduction of evidence and allowing party to reopen his case in chief are matters peculiarly within discretion of trial court and do not constitute grounds for reversal unless manifest abuse of discretion is shown.

Clewe & Blade, Oroville, for appellant.

Pardee & Cady, by Donald P. Cady, Susanville, for respondents.

PEEK, Justice.

This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment in the sum of $9,793.23 in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover treble the amount of interest collected on an alleged usurious transaction.

By this action plaintiffs sought to recover treble the amount of interest paid by them to defendant for a loan of $4,000 dated June 30, 1947. Their complaint alleged that they borrowed $4,000 from defendant for which he demanded and received a promissory note in the sum of $6,000 to bear interest at 6% per annum due six months from the date thereof and secured by a mortgage upon certain real property situated in Plumas County; that defendant had actually collected from plaintiffs the sum of $7,264.41, or interest in the sum of $3,264.41 on the alleged $4,000 principal. Defendant's answer admitted the execution of the mortgage and affirmatively alleged that plaintiffs borrowed $4,500 on June 30, 1947; that plaintiffs were indebted to him in the further sum of $1,000 on a prior note and the accrued interest thereon. During the hearing defendant testified to having advanced additional sums to plaintiffs.

It is defendant's first argument that in any event the amount of the judgment is excessive as a matter of law, and in this regard reliance is placed solely upon the case in Penziner v. West American Finance Co., 10 Cal.2d 160, 74 P.2d 252. His argument in this regard is that the cited case requires a defendant in a usury action to be given credit for interest upon the true amount of the debt at the stipulated rate from the maturity date of the usurious obligation to the date of its payment, plus the principal amount of the loan; and that therefore plaintiffs in this case can recover only treble the difference between that amount and the amount actually paid by them, which, assuming plaintiffs' allegations are true, would amount to $8,029.77, or $1,763.46 less than the judgment as entered.

The court in the Penziner case apparently rested its opinion upon the conclusion that as originally conceived, the transaction was not necessarily usurious; that the agreement of the parties contemplated advances from time to time up to an amount equal to the principal of the loan as it appeared on the face of the note plus interest thereon at a rate clearly within the statute; that the note did not provide for further charges; that it was only when the proceeds of the foreclosure sale were applied toward the payment of certain brokerage fees and interest that the element of usury was injected into the transaction. Here the evidence introduced by plaintiffs established an entirely different transaction. The contract between the parties at its inception was tainted with usury, providing as it did that the plaintiffs should pay for the use of $4,000 the sum of $2,000 plus interest on the stated principal of the note which was $6,000 at the rate of 6% per annum.

[1,2] By the provisions of the Usury Law, Deering's Gen. Laws, Act 3757, Stats. 1919, West's Ann. Civ. Code, § 1916-1 et seq., it is established that the contract rate shall not exceed "twelve dollars on the one hundred dollars for one year", section 1, but if the lender contracts for more than the maximum allowed, then he is subject to the penalty that the particular portion of his contract calling for the payment of interest is null and void and that "no action at law to recover interest in any sum shall be maintained." Section 2. And, finally, if the lender goes one step further by demanding and receiving interest at the rate provided for in his contract in violation of the preceding sections of the Act, the borrower from whom the usurious interest was taken has a right of action to recover treble the amount of the money so paid. Section 3. It would seem to follow then that the recovery to which a borrower-plaintiff is entitled is an amount equal to three times the amount by which the sum actually collected exceeds a loan actually made. In other words sections 1 and 2 disallow the lender any amount over and above the loan made and fees properly charged, and hence when he collects a further sum, he is liable in treble the amount thereof notwithstanding his forbearance beyond the maturity date of the note. Thus it was held in Haines v. Commercial Mortgage Co., 200 Cal. 609, at page 625, 254 P. 956, 255 P. 805, 807, 53 A.L.R. 725, that parties may freely contract within the 12% per annum limit, but, said the court, "This means, also, that commissions and bonuses may be charged by the lender, but all such charges must, when added to the interest specified and spread over the whole period of forbearance, be kept within the limit set by law." Furthermore, interest at the stipulated rate during the period of forbearance beyond the maturity date of the note would seem to be but "a part of the enterprise evidenced by the first note and bears all the markings of an illicit deal." Martin v. Ajax Construction Co., 124 Cal. App.2d 425, 431, 269 P.2d 132, 135. Therefore to allow a lender who has violated the Usury Law to be credited with the same when computing the amount of recovery to which a borrower suing under section 3 is entitled, would be violative of the legislative purpose and intent in the enactment of such a statute.

[3] Defendant next contends that to sustain a charge of usury the evidence not alone must be clear and convincing, but since usury laws are quasi penal by nature, plaintiffs must establish defendant's guilt with the same degree of certainty as if the action were criminal and not civil. The case relied upon in support of such argument, Merk v. Gelzhaeuser, 50 Cal. 631, has only been cited once and then only to be impliedly if not expressly overruled. See opinion by Garoutte, J., on denial of petition for hearing en banc in Hearne v. De Young, 119 Cal. 670, 682, 52 P. 150, 499. There can be no question that here as in any other civil case the plaintiff who charges the exaction of usurious interest has the burden of proving the charge by a mere preponderance of the evidence. Knoll

v. Schleussner, 112 Cal.App.2d 876, 247 P.2d 370.

[4, 5] Additionally defendant would have this court reweigh the evidence and pass upon the credibility of the witnesses from the standpoint of their numerical weight and the inherent improbability of their testimony. As the court stated in Murphy v. Ablow, 123 Cal.App.2d 853, at page 858, 268 P.2d 80, 83:

"On appeal that part which supports the judgment must be accepted, not that part which would defeat, or tend to defeat, the judgment. Unless it clearly appears that upon no hypothesis whatever is there substantial evidence to support a finding of the trier of fact, it cannot be set aside on appeal."

[6] Appellant next contends that the court erred in limiting cross-examination of the plaintiff Robert Brocke concerning plaintiffs' alleged contemplation of selling their premises for a sum substantially in excess of the amount borrowed. This contention is made without benefit of authority and it is difficult for us to determine the basis thereof since in any event the evidence was wholly immaterial and could in no way have affected the judgment of the court.

[7] Appellant further contends that the court erred in striking out without motion therefor an unspecified portion of the transcript. The record, however, shows that plaintiffs' counsel objected to the evidence in question and moved to strike. If there was any error in the court's granting of plaintiffs' motion, appellant has wholly failed to sustain his burden of showing any prejudice resulting therefrom. Furthermore a subsequent witness called by defendant testified to substantially the same effect, and hence it is difficult to perceive how the exclusion of that particular evidence resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

[8, 9] Defendant's final contention attacks the action of the trial court in denying his motion to reopen his case and rejecting certain offers of proof made at that time. At the time of the hearing on the first motion for a continuance, defendant sought to prove by the testimony of his wife that plaintiffs had negotiated with him some two weeks prior to the actual loan. Again we fail to see how the court's denial of such request in any way prejudiced his cause since the evidence sought to be elicited related to like evidence concerning which the court had already received multitudinous testimony. Limiting the introduction of evidence and allowing a party to reopen his case in chief are matters peculiarly within the discretion of the trial court and do not constitute grounds for reversal unless a manifest abuse of discretion is shown. People v. Berryman, 6 Cal.2d 331, 57 P.2d 136.

The judgment is affirmed.

Action against labor union and union steward for injuries sustained by plaintiff, who was struck on head with board by steward following exchange of words over statements by plaintiff to union members as to inadvisability of a strike. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Frank G. Swain, J., the union appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that the evidence sustained finding that assault was committed within scope of union steward's employment.

Judgment affirmed.

2. Master and Servant ☞306

3. Master and Servant ☞330(3)

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff who was struck on head with board by union steward following exchange of words over statements made by plaintiff to union members concerning inadvisability of a strike, evidence sustained finding that assault was committed within scope of steward's employment, even though it occurred at time when men were congregating for work but before time for beginning day's work had arrived. *West's Ann.Civ. In action against labor union and union steward for injuries sustained by plaintiff, who was struck on head with board by union steward following exchange of words over statements by plaintiff to union members as to inadvisability of a strike, steward's testimony to effect that he was not acting within scope of his agency was merely a legal conclusion and was not conclusive on reviewing court, but even if it had been a pure statement of fact, court was free to reject it.

8. Master and Servant ⇨330(3)

In action against labor union and union steward for injuries sustained by plaintiff, who was struck over head with board following exchange of words with steward over statements by plaintiff to union members as to inadvisability of a strike, evidence warranted finding that union ratified acts of steward, who was not removed from his position.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

The sole question for decision is whether there is sufficient substantial proof to support the finding that the tortious act of a labor union's agent was committed within the scope of his employment. Respondent sued appellant and its job steward Farley for damages on account of Farley's striking respondent with a club on the head without justifiable cause. Judgment was entered on the court's findings. The Union appeals.

On May 14, 1952, one Eugene Farley was the steward of appellant, an unincorporated association. Respondent was, at the same time and place, a member of the plasterer's union and was present for the purpose of plying his trade on the same structure on which the members of appellant were at work. At lunch time of the day preceding, respondent expressed his opinion upon the inadvisability of a strike by appellant. The substance of such expressions was communicated by McDaniel of appellant union to defendant Farley about 7:15 a. m. of May 14. On receipt of such intelligence, Farley located respondent and engaged him in a discussion concerning the reaction of respondent's reported remarks upon the members of appellant. Bitter words were exchanged. Farley said he wished respondent would be quiet and peaceful; "you are causing friction and agitating and needling union members and they have reported it to me * * * You keep your damned mouth shut or you will get your head busted in." As respondent turned and started to walk away, Farley struck his head with a 1" x 4" board, causing serious bodily injuries.

Appellant contends that (1) Farley, as steward, was restricted to such duties as were prescribed in "Wage Scales and Working Rules of the Southern California District Council of Laborers"; (2) the assault upon respondent occurred "before work began"; (3) the discussion preceding the battery in no way concerned labor disputes or grievances, but concerned respondent's personal dislike for hod-carriers; (4) the discussion terminated amicably; (5) Farley was angered by remarks directed against him by respondent, and reacted impulsively in committing the battery; (6) appellant at no time authorized Farley to conduct any of his expressly defined duties by the exercise of force and violence; (7) no evidence warranted a conclusion of liability under the rule of respondere superior. Such contentions may be briefly summarized with one sentence: Farley's assault was outside the scope of his authority.

[1,2] That the battery upon respondent was within the scope of the steward's agency will readily appear. Scope is defined as range or extent of view; intent, or sweep. (Webster's International Dictionary.) An employer is liable for the malicious tort of his employee done in the scope of his employment. His responsibility extends beyond his actual control over the conduct of his employee. He is liable for the wrongful acts of his agent where such acts are a part of the business which the agent was employed to do. Carr v. Wm. C. Crowell Co., 28 Cal.2d 652, 654, 171 P.2d 5, 7. In that case the employee of the company threw a hammer at another workman and injured him. Defendant's enterprise required the association of employees with third parties, attended by the risk that someone might be injured. "The risks of such associations and conditions were risks of the employment." In Stansell v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 44 Cal.App.2d 822, 824, 113 P.2d 264, the manager of the grocery was acting within the scope of his employment when he struck a customer after they had quarreled over an order and exchanged vile epithets.

Where the driver of an oil company's truck disputed with a motorist after the latter's car had been run off the highway by the truck and concluded his argument by striking the motorist with a "large instrument," the trial court properly instructed the jury that the assault by the truck driver was the conduct of the oil company. The court held that "the fact that the questioned act was unauthorized or, if wrongful, that it was not committed in order to further the interests of the principal, will not show such a departure from the service of the principal as will absolve the latter if the act was committed while the agent was still occupying himself with the principal's business within the scope of his employment. * * * Sanders' entire association with plaintiff arose out of his use of the public highway on his employer's business." Fields v. Sanders, 29 Cal.2d 834, 839, 840, 180 P.2d 684, 688, 172 A.L.R. 525.

[3] The finding herein was that the battery was not only committed within the scope of the employment, but also, that the moment of its occurrence was within its course even though the time for beginning the day's work had not arrived. The hearing of disputes and grievances was opportune whenever the Union's members were assembled at the situs of construction and the steward was present. It is unreasonable to conceive that a steward whose duties required him to report grievances should remain silent and refuse to inquire in order to ascertain the origin or quality of grievances or disputes until the men have commenced the daily task for which they are employed. If Farley was the person to whom complaints should be made, Mr. McDaniel was in order in narrating grievances at seven a. m. instead of waiting until eight o'clock. Also, if it was Farley's duty to quiet agitators, 7:30 a. m. was a wholesome hour to proceed with such duty. Farley's discussion with McDaniel and his reproval of respondent were both concerned with appellant's business. The propriety of his admonition to respondent was as correct as if he had waited until the noon hour or the close of the day. Farley's first words to respondent were that the Union had reacted unfavorably to the report of respondent's agitating its members. His last words were his threat which was followed by "busting" respondent's head.

If Farley's words and act were not within the scope of his employment, it is not conceivable in what scope they were. The men were holding neither a formal party nor a picnic. The workers were congregating to enter upon their duties. Farley's words concerned only the affairs of his Union and the grievances of its members toward respondent. While the evidence was such that an inference might have been drawn that the blow was dealt at a time after the reprimand to respondent and was the result of respondent's work, yet the court found that "Farley, with the desire to hurt and injure the plaintiff, did assault and strike the plaintiff on and about the head and shoulder with a board * * * it is not true that the aforesaid acts of Eugene Farley were committed in his own defense * * * at the time said blow was struck, defendant Eugene Farley was the agent of * * * Local 802 and was acting within the scope of said agency."

The contention is made that the battery was motivated by personal anger and did not advance the interests of the Union and was therefore outside the scope of his employment and fixed no liability on appellant. Liability followed if the injury resulted from a dispute arising out of Farley's pursuit of his duty. It is not indispensable to a liability that the assault should have been made for the purpose of performing the work the employee was employed to do. Civ.Code, sec. 2338; Hiroshima v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 18 Cal.App.2d 24, 28, 63 P.2d 340. From the words used and threat made by Farley in his reprimand of respondent, it was a fair deduction that the clubbing administered by the steward was to terrorize all workers of other unions and to dissuade them from criticizing the internal workings of his Union. Such inference was reasonable notwithstanding the lapse of a moment from the termination of the reprimand until the assault.

[4-6] Contention is made that Farley's testimony to the effect that he was not acting within the scope of his agency should be conclusive on a reviewing court. Such contention has no basis in law. His testimony was a legal conclusion. But if it had been a pure statement of fact, the court was free to reject it and to be guided by the testimony of other witnesses and the inferences from all the evidence. It is the exclusive function of the trial court to adjudge the credibility of witnesses and the weight of their testimony. Travis Glass Co. v. Ibbetson, 186 Cal. 724, 727, 200 P. 595. Even though contrary inferences could reasonably have been drawn, the appellate court cannot make contrary findings where the trial court is supported by substantial proof. Fischer v. Keen, 43 Cal.App.2d 244, 250, 110 P.2d 693. Sufficient evidence was admitted to justify the findings above quoted.

[7] The contention that the intermission between the reprimand and the assault destroyed the connection of the two events is not meritorious. In making findings, the court was familiar with all the circumstances. Its exclusive function was to determine whether the lapse separated the reprimand from the clubbing. Where a series of events began with a discussion and concluded with an act of violence fifteen minutes later, the passing of time did not defeat plaintiff's right of recovery. Carr v. Wm. C. Crowell Co., 28 Cal.2d 652, 653, 171 P.2d 5. The finding that the battery was a part of Farley's interview with respondent was warranted by the evidence.

[8] But respondent is not without other support for his judgment. The act of Farley was ratified by appellant. Two days after the assault, respondent was invited to Union headquarters where he was interviewed by appellant's financial secretary McClain. The contents of that conversation establish the Union's ratification of Farley's acts. McClain said, "Well, you guys from No. 2 have given us a lot of trouble. I don't mean you; I mean your union. You guys are trying to shove those boys any way you want to. We are here and we are going to stop you * * * a lot more of you guys are going to get your heads busted in." McClain testified that he knew Farley was the steward of appellant at the time and place in question; also that he had authority to remove Farley from that office. Despite such authority, Farley was not removed. McClain effectually approved and ratified the acts of his steward by his language. The officials of the Union knew that Farley, pursuant to his duties as prescribed in the "Working Rules" had tried by his interview with respondent to minimize the dissention between the hod carriers and the plasterers. From such knowledge, and his continued employment as steward, it is fairly inferable that the Union ratified his acts in dealing out punishment to respondent. Since it was Farley's duty to report all disputes to his local representative and since he had first to ascertain or inquire into them, his total behavior must have been approved by the Union. At least the evidence warranted such finding.

If Farley was hired to represent the Union to settle minor disputes as the trial judge observed, then "what he did in the scope of that authority, he did not merely as an individual, but as a representative of the union."

The numerous authorities cited by appellant to the effect that its agent's tortious act was done without the scope of his authority, Godchaux v. Texas & Pacific Railway Company, 144 La. 1041, 81 So. 706; McDermott v. American Brewing Co., 105 La. 124, 29 So. 498, 52 L.R.A. 684; Chase v. Knabel, 46 Wash. 484, 90 P. 642, 12 L.R.A., N.S., 1155; Home Telephone &

Electric Company v. Branton, Tex.Civ. App., 7 S.W.2d 627; Copelin v. Berlin Dye Works, 168 Cal. 715, 144 P. 961, L.R.A. 1915C, 712; Figone v. Guisti, 43 Cal.App. 606, 185 P. 694, etc., are not pertinent for two reasons. (1) The court found on substantial evidence that Farley's act was committed within the scope of his authority. (2) The cited decisions involved factual situations not akin to that at bar.

The judgment is affirmed. The purported appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

The five defendants were charged in one information with pandering, Section 266i of the Penal Code, Added by Stats.1953, ch. 32, § 4, and conspiring to contribute to the delinquency of a girl of 14 years. Defendants Duarte and Brooksher were both charged with statutory rape. All defendants were tried jointly to a jury. Separate verdicts were returned. Brooksher pleaded guilty on the charge of rape and on the charge of pandering not guilty. He was found guilty on the conspiracy charge. Duarte was found guilty of rape. He and the remaining defendants were all found guilty of both pandering and contributing to the minor's delinquency. Wel. & Inst. Code Section 702. Defendants Humphrey and Ferreira alone have appealed.

Defendant Humphrey, referred to in the testimony as "Babe", and Ferreira were living together in adultery while she was either practicing prostitution or engaged in procuring for the benefit of others. They were introduced to the prosecutrix by Brooksher who gave "Babe" $25 with which she took the prosecutrix to an out of town store and purchased for her a complete outfit of underclothes and a dress. On this occasion "Babe" gave the young girl pertinent advice as to how she could best carry on the trade as a prostitute. The testimony of the prosecutrix as to the interest and the activities of these two appealing defendants was clear and directly to the issues. Neither one of these defendants took the stand as witnesses, and neither one offered any competent evidence in their defense. The case, therefore, as it comes to us, is one where the verdict is supported by competent substantial evidence.

[1] The first ground urged by these appellants is that the trial court erred in permitting a police witness to testify as to matters he had learned from a microphone installed in the Pagliaro home. The testimony was not detrimental to these appellants. It concerned matters relating to another distinct crime in which the police thought that Pagliaro was involved. The recordings were so incomplete and unintelligible that the trial court refused to admit them in evidence and instructed the jury to disregard them. The witness was permitted to give some conclusions based partly on these recordings—but not in any sense detrimental to, or involving these appealing defendants. Possibly for that reason neither of these defendants objected to the testimony. In any event, having failed to object, they cannot claim error for the first time on appeal. People v. Millum, 42 Cal.2d 524, 526, 267 P.2d 1039; People v. Dessauer, 38 Cal.2d 547, 552, 241 P.2d 238; People v. McMonigle, 29 Cal.2d 730, 743, 177 P.2d 745. The rule of these cases has not been changed by the recent decisions in People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, and People v. Berger, 44 Cal.2d 459, 282 P.2d 509. In those cases timely objection was made to the admission of the evidence allegedly obtained illegally. Here no such objection was made. The rule of the Millum and similar cases is fully established and followed in the United States Courts. See Segurola v. United States, 275 U.S. 106, 112, 48 S.Ct. 77, 72 L.Ed. 186, 190.

The second ground urged is that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct in his closing argument to the jury—particularly in his reference to all the defendants as “wolves”. The expression referred to and was applicable to all defendants—to those who had engaged the fourteen year old girl in intercourse, and to those who were advising her how to become a common prostitute.

Objection is also made to the remarks of the district attorney as to what the big brothers of the girl might do to the defendants. The remark was invited by the argument of defense counsel. But, in any event, these defendants did not object to the remarks and cannot claim error at this time. People v. Sampsell, 34 Cal.2d 757, 763, 214 P.2d 813; People v. Sutic, 41 Cal.2d 483, 496, 261 P.2d 241.

[2] Reference is made to the statement of the district attorney commenting on defendants’ failure to testify. He said: “That is the strongest confession.” The statement obviously was error and the trial court immediately instructed the jury that such silence was not a confession. In the formal instructions the trial court again referred to this subject and advised the jury that defendants had a constitutional right not to testify and that no presumption or inference of guilt could be drawn from their failure to do so alone.

Other criticisms of the instructions are inconsequential and do not require special treatment. Reading the whole charge to the jury we are satisfied that the instructions covered all essential elements of the crimes charged. The defendants were fairly tried and convicted and no other verdict could have followed the uncontroverted evidence of their guilt.

The judgments and the orders are affirmed.

KAUFMAN, J., concurs.

DOOLING, Justice.

I dissent from the portion of the opinion which states that the testimony of the officer as to what he heard on the microphone was “not in any sense detrimental to, or involving these appealing defendants.” Statements of both were testified to by the officer which reasonably would bear the construction that they were parties to a scheme to use the girl for prostitution.

District Court of Appeal, First District,

June 28, 1955.

Landlord brought action in the Municipal Court for unlawful detainer, and tenant filed what was labeled a cross-complaint, but what was in reality a counterclaim, for alleged libel. The action was then transferred to the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco. The Superior Court, Herman A. van der Zee, J., entered an order striking the cross-complaint, and the tenant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that cross-complaint alleging that landlord had written Fair Rent Committee that tenant had said that he would refuse to vacate apartment and that it would be a difficult process to get an attorney out of the apartment, did not state, and could not be amended to state, a cause of action for libel.

Order affirmed.

1. Courts ☞486

Where plaintiff brought action in municipal court for unlawful detainer, and defendant filed what was labeled a cross-complaint, but what was in fact a counterclaim, seeking to recover $25,000 general damages and $25,000 exemplary damages for alleged libel, cause was properly transferred to Superior Court. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 396.

2. Appeal and Error ☞78(3), 103, 870(5)

Generally, where complaint and cross-complaint are both filed in superior court, order striking cross-complaint is a nonappealable order, and is reviewable only on appeal from final judgment, but, if cross-complaint joins new parties, or names a codefendant a cross-defendant, the general rule is not applicable, and dismissal of cross-complaint is a final adverse adjudication, and order of dismissal is an appealable judgment.

3. Appeal and Error ☞78(3)

Where defendant filed a cross-complaint against plaintiff and joined certain Does not parties to the complaint, but the Does were not served and did not appear, the case did not fall within rule that if cross-complaint joins new parties or names a codefendant as a cross-defendant, dismissal of cross-complaint is a final adverse adjudication and order of dismissal is an appealable judgment.

4. Courts ☞488(4)

Where plaintiff brought action in municipal court for unlawful detainer, and defendant cross-complained for alleged libel, and action was then properly transferred to superior court because of the cross-complaint, and cross-complaint was properly stricken by the superior court, the case was required to be returned for trial to the municipal court. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 396.

5. Appeal and Error ☞78(3)

Where plaintiff brought action in municipal court for unlawful detainer, and defendant filed a cross-complaint for alleged libel, and case was properly transferred to superior court, order of superior court striking the cross-complaint, on ground that superior court had no jurisdiction was a final judgment and appealable. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 396, 581a.

6. Action ☞45(3)

A cause of action for libel cannot be set up in an unlawful detainer action.

7. Landlord and Tenant ☞288

Where leased premises were surrendered prior to filing of unlawful detainer action, issue of possession was removed from the case, and the action became one for money damages.

8. Pleading ☞4

Courts will disregard label given a pleading by the parties and will determine the real nature of the pleading from its allegations.

9. Pleading ⚡4

Where plaintiff brought action for unlawful detainer, and defendant filed what he labeled a cross-complaint charging plaintiff with libel, the pleading which was labeled a cross-complaint would be treated as a counterclaim. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. §§ 438, 442, 666.

10. Courts ⚡488(1)

Where plaintiff brought action in municipal court for unlawful detainer, and defendant filed what was labeled a cross-complaint, but what was in fact a counterclaim, for damages for alleged libel, and case was properly transferred to the superior court, superior court erred in striking the cross-complaint, on ground that it had no jurisdiction. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 438, 442, 666.

11. Appeal and Error ⚡854(3)

Where plaintiff made motion to strike cross-complaint on two grounds, fact that trial court improperly granted motion on the first ground did not preclude plaintiff, on appeal by defendant, from urging the second ground in support of the order striking the cross-complaint.

12. Pleading ⚡354(2)

Motion to strike cannot be used to serve the purpose of a special demurrer.

13. Appeal and Error ⚡1042(1)

If cross-complaint not only did not state a cause of action, but could not be amended so as to state a good cause of action, it would be an idle gesture for District Court of Appeal on appeal to reverse order striking the cross-complaint merely because it was allegedly error to use motion to strike as a general demurrer, since alleged error would be nonprejudicial.

14. Libel and Slander ⚡85

In unlawful detainer action, cross-complaint of tenant alleging that landlord had written Fair Rent Committee that tenant had said that he would refuse to vacate apartment and that it would be a difficult process to get an attorney out of the apartment did not state, and could not be amended to state, a cause of action for libel.

15. Libel and Slander ⚡86(1)

Unless words used can reasonably be understood in a defamatory sense, innuendo pleaded in libel action cannot aid the pleader.

J. Joseph Sullivan, San Francisco, for appellant.

Vincent H. O'Donnell, Fredrik S. Waiss, San Francisco, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Defendant appeals from an order striking his cross-complaint from the files.

The record shows the following: Plaintiff brought an action in the Municipal Court against defendant for unlawful detainer, praying for restitution of certain leased premises and for $205 in unpaid rent. This complaint was signed October 22, 1953, but was not filed until July 8, 1954. Defendant, by answer, alleged that on March 31, 1954, he had offered, and plaintiff had accepted, a surrender of the premises. Defendant also cross-complained against plaintiff and certain unidentified Does for libel, alleging that on September 10, 1953, plaintiff, through her attorney, had written to the Fair Rent Committee in regard to a hearing involving the raising by plaintiff of defendant's rent and his refusal to vacate that Dean had said "that he would refuse to vacate the apartment and that it would be a difficult process to get an attorney out of it"; that on October 6th and 7th of 1953, plaintiff caused to be written and published in a daily newspaper covering the Fair Rent Committee hearings that Dean refused to vacate the premises with the comment that "it would be very difficult to force a lawyer to move out"; and that plaintiff meant thereby that defendant "would, and did, in violation of his duty as an attorney-at-law, employ means not consistent with the truth; would and did, mislead a judge * * * by artifice and by false statements of law; would, and did, engage in methods of the practice of the law in other than ethical methods"; and that said publication was false and defamatory. It is averred that defendant's reputation had been injured thereby and that he had suffered shame, mortification, and hurt feelings for which he asked $25,000 general damages and $25,000 exemplary damages.

[1] Pursuant to the provisions of section 396 of the Code of Civil Procedure the cause was properly transferred to the Superior Court. No appearance or service was made by or on the fictitious parties. The plaintiff moved to strike the cross-complaint from the files, on the ground that the cause of action was not a proper ground of cross-complaint in this action, and because the cross-complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. This motion was granted by the trial court on the first ground. Defendant appeals from this order.

[2] The first question to be determined is whether the order involved is an appealable order. In the normal situation where the complaint and cross-complaint are both filed in the Superior Court an order striking a cross-complaint is a non-appealable order, being like most orders relating to the pleadings, interlocutory in nature and, as such, reviewable only on the appeal from the final judgment.

This rule is well settled in this state. Yandell v. City of Los Angeles, 214 Cal. 234, 4 P.2d 947; Sjoberg v. Hastorf, 33 Cal.2d 116, 199 P.2d 668; Evans v. Dabney, 37 Cal.2d 758, 235 P.2d 604; Wood v. Metzenbaum, 90 Cal.App.2d 533, 203 P.2d 105; Pritchard v. King, 104 Cal.App. 460, 285 P. 1086; Stockton Combined Harvester & Agricultural Works v. Glen Falls Ins. Co., 98 Cal. 557, 33 P. 633; see also 3 Witkin on California Procedure, p. 2154, § 13. This rule is also applicable to an order striking a counterclaim. Merchants Nat. Bk. v. Clark-Parker Co., 97 Cal.App. 757, 276 P. 387. If, however, the cross-complaint joins new parties, or names a co-defendant a cross-defendant, the general rule is not applicable. In such a situation "the dismissal of the cross-complaint is a final adverse adjudication of the cross-complainant's rights against a distinct party, and the order is an appealable judgment." 3 Witkin on California Procedure, p. 2154, § 13; see Herrscher v. Herscher, 41 Cal.2d 300, 259 P.2d 901; County of Humboldt v. Kay, 57 Cal.App.2d 115, 134 P.2d 501; Howe v. Key System Transit Co., 198 Cal. 525, 246 P. 39; Young v. Superior Court, 16 Cal.2d 211, 105 P.2d 363; Halterman v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 22 Cal.App.2d 592, 71 P.2d 855.

[3] The instant case does not fall within this exception to the general rule because the cross-complaint involves only the defendant and plaintiff. While the defendant joined in his cross-complaint certain Does not parties to the complaint, these Does were not served nor did they appear. Obviously, the order striking the cross-complaint decided nothing between defendant and the parties who were not served or did not appear. This was the precise holding in Kennedy v. Owen, 85 Cal.App.2d 517, 193 P.2d 141.

The general rule is based on the theory that the order striking the cross-complaint can be reviewed on appeal from the final judgment. The exception to the rule is based on the theory that as between the defendant and new parties brought in by the cross-complaint the order striking the cross-complaint finally determines the rights between defendant and the new parties. Although, as pointed out, that exception does not here apply, the basic reason for it here exists.

[4, 5] In the instant case the action was commenced in the Municipal Court and then was properly transferred to the Superior Court solely because of the cross-complaint. That cross-complaint now has been stricken. All that remains to be tried is the original action properly filed in the Municipal Court. When that fact is called to the attention of the Superior Court, under the mandatory provisions of section 396 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it will have to return the case for trial to the Municipal Court. Neither that court, nor the Appellate Department of the Superior Court has power to review the propriety of the ruling of the Superior Court striking the cross-complaint. Thus, in a very real sense the order striking the cross-complaint was a final order or judgment. The Superior Court has finally determined that it has no jurisdiction of the proceeding. Unless the propriety of that order can be reviewed on this appeal its propriety cannot be reviewed at all. The order to strike was tantamount to a dismissal of the action on the cross-demand, Herrscher v. Herrscher, 41 Cal.2d 300, 259 P.2d 901, and, under the circumstances, was a judgment within the meaning of section 581a of the Code of Civil Procedure. See Costa v. Regents of the University of Cal., 103 Cal. App.2d 491, 229 P.2d 867. Since the propriety of such judgment cannot otherwise be reviewed it is necessarily a final judgment and therefore appealable.

[6,7] On the merits, the first question presented is whether the cause of action for libel constituted a proper ground of cross-complaint. Of course, a cause of action for libel cannot be set up in an unlawful detainer action, and the parties are agreed that this is so. But it is equally clear, under the allegations of the answer, that since the premises were surrendered prior to the filing of the action, the issue of possession was removed from the case and the action became one for money damages. Servais v. Klein, 112 Cal.App. 26, 296 P. 123; Heller v. Melliday, 60 Cal.App.2d 689, 141 P.2d 447. Plaintiff concedes that this is so.

Section 442 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides in part: "Whenever the defendant seeks affirmative relief against any party, relating to or depending upon the contract, transaction, matter, happening or accident upon which the action is brought, * * * he may, in addition to his answer, file at the same time, * * * a cross-complaint." It is argued with some merit that the libel cause of action does not "relate" to or "depend" upon the "transaction" set forth in the complaint, in that there is not the necessary relation between the two causes of action, and therefore that the trial court properly ruled that the cause of action set forth in the cross-complaint was not a proper ground of cross-complaint. See generally California Trust Co. v. Cohn, 214 Cal. 619, 7 P.2d 297; Hanes v. Coffee, 212 Cal. 777, 300 P. 963; Morris v. Warner, 207 Cal. 498, 279 P. 152. But even if it be so held, such holding would not necessarily be determinative of this appeal. If the pleading of defendant can be construed as a proper counterclaim then it was error to strike it from the files. The counterclaim statute is much broader than the cross-complaint statute. Section 438 of the Code of Civil Procedure simply requires that the "counterclaim * * * must tend to diminish or defeat the plaintiff's recovery and must exist in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff between whom a several judgment might be had in the action; * * *." Under section 666 of the Code of Civil Procedure "If a counterclaim, * * * exceed the plaintiff's demand, judgment for the defendant must be given for the excess; * * *." Certainly it cannot be doubted that the libel cause of action, if established, would tend "to diminish or defeat the plaintiff's recovery". On this there can be no doubt. Therefore, even if it be assumed that the pleading is not a proper cross-complaint, defendant's pleading was proper as a counterclaim unless his designation of it as a "cross-complaint" prohibits him from now urging the point.

[8,9] It is well settled law that the courts will disregard the label given a pleading by the parties, and will determine the real nature of the pleading from its allegations. In Robertson v. Maroevich, 42 Cal.App.2d 610, 616, 109 P.2d 708, 711, it was stated: "Respondent designated his pleading as, 'Answer to Complaint, and Cross-Complaint'. -However, the nature of a pleading will be determined from its allegations regardless of its designation. Terry Trading Corp. v. Barsky, 210 Cal. 428, 292 P. 474; Cornblith v. Valentine, 211 Cal. 243, 294 P. 1065. This pleading, although designated a cross-complaint, is probably a counterclaim, since it, like the complaint, prays for a money judgment. Luse v. Peters, 219 Cal. 625, 28 P.2d 357. The only importance, so far as this proceeding is concerned, as to whether the pleading is a counterclaim or cross-complaint is that a cross-complaint must relate or depend 'upon the contract, transaction, matter, happening or accident upon which the action is brought', Code Civ.Proc., sec. 442, while a counterclaim, under section 438 of that code, need only 'tend to diminish or defeat the plaintiff's recovery and must exist in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff between whom a several judgment might be had in the action'. A counterclaim no longer need be related to, or connected with, the cause of action set up in the complaint. Terry Trading Corp. v. Barsky, supra; Luse v. Peters, supra. This becomes important because section 439 of the Code of Civil Procedure as amended in 1939, supra, requires the cause to be transferred to the superior court when any counterclaim in excess of the jurisdiction of the municipal court is filed. It is not required under that section, as it is by section 396 of the Code of Civil Procedure quoted, supra, that the counterclaim arise 'out of the transaction set forth in the complaint'. If the questioned pleading is a counterclaim, then under section 439 of the Code of Civil Procedure the municipal court properly transferred the cause to the superior court, and the latter court clearly had jurisdiction of the subject matter, whether or not the transaction set forth in the counterclaim arose out of, or was connected with, the transaction set forth in the complaint." See also Farish v. Brown, 111 Cal.App.2d 306, 244 P.2d 484; Schrader v. Neville, 34 Cal.2d 112, 207 P.2d 1057; Tomales Bay Oyster Corp. v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 389, 217 P.2d 968.

[11] The motion to strike was also predicated on the ground that the "cross-complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." Although the trial court did not grant the motion on this ground, that does not preclude the plaintiff from urging it in support of the order appealed from. Campbell v. Bauer, 104 Cal. App.2d 740, 232 P.2d 590; Evarts v. Jones, 104 Cal.App.2d 109, 231 P.2d 74; Sears v. Rule, 27 Cal.2d 131, 163 P.2d 443.

[12, 13] While it is true that a motion to strike cannot be used to serve the purpose of a special demurrer, 2 Witkin on California Procedure, p. 1504, § 511, and while there is a dicta, at least that it cannot be used in place of a general demurrer, Allerton v. King, 96 Cal.App. 230, 274 P. 90, it is obvious that if this pleading not only does not state a cause of action, but cannot be amended so as to state a good cause of action, it would be an idle gesture to reverse the order appealed from. Under such circumstances, if it was error to use the motion to strike as a general demurrer, such error would be non-prejudicial.

[14, 15] It is quite apparent that this "cross-complaint," which we have held is in fact a counterclaim, as a matter of law, does not state, and cannot be amended to state, a cause of action for libel. The charge is that defendant stated on two occasions that he would refuse to vacate and that it would be very difficult to force a lawyer to move out. Certainly those words, standing alone, cannot be interpreted to mean that plaintiff was charging that defendant had stated that he would use unprofessional tactics. In the first instance, it is a question of law as to whether the words used are susceptible reasonably of a defamatory meaning. Unless the words used can reasonably be understood in a defamatory sense, the innuendo pleaded cannot aid the pleader. Des Granges v. Crall, 27 Cal. App. 313, 149 P. 777; Mellen v. Times-Mirror Co., 167 Cal. 587, 140 P. 277; Vedovi v. Watson & Taylor, 104 Cal.App. 80, 285 P. 418.

In the instant case the only reasonable interpretation of the words used is that defendant had stated that he would use all legal means in resisting the eviction. Reasonable men could not interpret the words in any other way. This being so, the order striking the pleading should not be reversed.

The order striking the "cross-complaint" is affirmed.

PACIFIC GAS AND ELECTRIC COMPANY, a corporation, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION, an agency of the State of California, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 16297.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

June 27, 1955.

Hearing Denied Aug. 17, 1955.

Action by corporate taxpayer upon claim for tax refund. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Daniel R. Shoemaker, J., entered judgment denying the action on the ground it was barred by limitation. The taxpayer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. J., held that under applicable statutes, the mailing of notice by the State Board of Equalization of its disallowance of the claim for refund had been properly made by mail addressed to the corporate taxpayer at its principal place of business, and that mailing of such notice to outside counsel of record was unnecessary.

Affirmed.

1. Licenses ⇨34

Under statute providing that State Board of Equalization may serve notice of its determination by mail addressed to retailer or person storing, using or consuming tangible personal property at his address as it appears on records of Board, notice was properly addressed to corporation rather than to designated representatives, i. e., its counsel of record. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 1013; Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 6486, 6906.

2. Corporations ⇨52

Residence of a corporation is generally deemed to be where its principal place of business is.

3. Corporations ⇨507(12)

Rules relating to personal service on a corporation have no application to statutory substituted service by mail. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1013; Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 6486, 6906.

4. Licenses ⇨34

Under statute providing that State Board of Equalization may serve notice of its determination by mail addressed to retailer or person storing, using or consuming tangible personal property at his address as it appears on records of Board, when notice is mailed correctly directed to corporation as such at its own address, service is completed, and whether it reaches specific agent or division which must act upon it is risk of addressee corporation and depends upon its care. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 6486, 6906.

5. Licenses ⇨34

Word "claimant" in statute providing for notice to claimant of disallowance of claim by State Board of Equalization, and word "retailer" in statute providing that board might serve notice of its determination by mail addressed to retailer or person storing, using or consuming tangible personal property at his address as it appears on records of Board, were descriptive of same party in interest. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 6486, 6906.

6. Licenses ⇨34

Whether or not section of Code of Civil Procedure providing for service by mail was applicable, notice of disallowance of corporate taxpayer's claim by State Board of Equalization was properly addressed to corporation at its address as shown on documents filed with board, which address was also its residence, i. e., principal place of business, and mailing of notice to outside counsel at his address as shown on claim was unnecessary. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1013; Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 6486, 6906.

7. Licenses ⇨34

Section of Code of Civil Procedure providing that where party has attorney in action or proceeding the service of papers must be upon attorney instead of party, with exceptions, was inapplicable to notice by State Board of Equalization of its disallowance of claim for refund.

West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1013, 1015; Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 6486, 6906.

8. Licenses ⚡34

Notice of disallowance by State Board of Equalization of claim for refund, which notice contained name and address of claimant and exact amount of refund claimed and notified claimant that on certain date its claim for refund under Sales and Use Tax Law in such amount was denied, was sufficient to meet statutory requirements, though notice itself was not dated. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 6486, 6906.

9. Constitutional Law ⚡318

Statutory method of service of notice of disallowance of claim by State Board of Equalization, by mail addressed to claimant taxpayer, is just and reasonable and satisfies due process, and due process does not require mailing to counsel. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 6486, 6906.

10. Constitutional Law ⚡42

With respect to content of notice by State Board of Equalization of its disallowance of claim for tax refund, taxpayer was not entitled to raise constitutional question of due process where its rights were not injuriously affected by alleged defect in content, but only by fact that, because of lack of care of its employees, notice did not reach its counsel. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 6486, 6906.

11. Estoppel ⚡119

Existence of an estoppel is a question of fact.

12. Appeal and Error ⚡1010(1)

Finding of trial court, in action upon claim for tax refund, that facts did not estop State Board of Equalization from relying on limitation of 90 days from mailing of its notice, was binding upon reviewing court unless contrary finding was only one which could reasonably be drawn from facts.

13. Estoppel ⚡62(2)

Fact that State Board of Equalization had once sent copy of a notice to taxpayer's outside attorney, mentioning on notice to taxpayer that such was being done, did not give taxpayer right to rely on sending of copy of notice of denial of claim for refund where taxpayer's copy of such notice of denial did not mention sending of such copy to outside counsel, and facts did not estop Board from relying on limitation of 90 days from mailing of its notice of denial. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 6933.

14. Estoppel ⚡118

Evidence in action upon claim for tax refund, including evidence of informal utterances by members of State Board of Equalization, did not require reversal of trial court's finding that board was not estopped to rely upon limitation of 90 days from mailing of its notice of disallowance of claim, even if estoppel doctrine could be applicable. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 6933.

15. Appeal and Error ⚡1010(1)

Where trial court found, in action upon claim for tax refund, that facts did not estop State Board of Equalization from relying on limitation of 90 days from mailing of its notice of disallowance of claim, and where reviewing court could not say that no other conclusion from facts was possible than that facts caused estoppel, finding was binding upon reviewing court. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 6933.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

The Pacific Gas and Electric Company, hereinafter called the Company, appeals from a judgment denying its action for refund of sales tax paid in the amount of $324,953.94 plus interest, on the ground that said action was barred by the provisions of Section 6933 of the Revenue and Taxation Code. Said section requires the court action to be brought by the claimant within 90 days after the mailing of the notice of the State Board of Equalization's action upon the claim and provides further: "Failure to bring action within the time specified constitutes a waiver of any demand against the State on account of alleged overpayments." It is undisputed that a notice of disallowance of claim for refund was mailed by the State Board of Equalization, hereinafter called the Board, on May 7, 1951, that it was received at the Company's principal office at 245 Market Street in San Francisco on May 8th and that on May 8th and 9th the general auditor, the comptroller and two other employees of appellant took notice of it. It was, however, not communicated to appellant's tax department or outside counsel. This suit was filed on November 2, 1951.

Appellant contends that the notice was not valid and effective to start the running of the above limitation period of 90 days because it did not comply with the requirements of the applicable statutes and of constitutional due process and moreover that the Board was estopped to assert the bar of the above 90 days limitation. Section 6906 Revenue and Taxation Code provides: "Within 30 days after disallowing any claim in whole or in part the board shall serve notice of its action on the claimant in the manner prescribed for service of notice of a deficiency determination."

Section 6486 of said code reads: "The board shall give to the retailer or person storing, using, or consuming tangible personal property written notice of its determination. The notice may be served personally or by mail; if by mail, service shall be made pursuant to Section 1013 of the Code of Civil Procedure and shall be addressed to the retailer or person storing, using, or consuming tangible personal property at his address as it appears in the records of the board. In case of service by mail of any notice required by this part, the service is complete at the time of deposit in the United States post office."

Section 1013 Code of Civil Procedure provides in part: "In case of service by mail, the notice or other paper must be deposited in the United States post office, or a mail box, sub-post office, substation, or mail chute, or other like facility regularly maintained by the Government of the United States, in a sealed envelope, with postage paid, addressed to the person on whom it is to be served, at his office address as last given by him on any document which he has filed in the cause and served on the party making service by mail; otherwise at his place of residence. The service is complete at the time of the deposit * * *."

[1-4] Appellant first contends that the above sections require the notice to be addressed to the designated representatives of the Company, its counsel of record. It is argued that to serve notice on a corporation it must be brought to the attention of a specific natural person authorized to receive the notice, in this case the counsel mentioned on appellant's petition for redetermination and its claim for refund. The above sections do not so provide. They permit service by mail "addressed to the retailer or person storing, using or consuming tangible personal property at his address as it appears in the records of the board." The meaning of one's address is the place to which mail can be sent to one, the place where one lives. Webster's New World Dictionary. It is normally the actual residence. A corporation's residence is generally deemed to be where its principal place of business is. Patch v. Adams, 55 Cal.App.2d 1, 6, 130 P.2d 244. Thus the corporation as such has an address and a provision for service by mail addressed to the address of the one to be served can be literally applied to a corporation in the same manner as to a natural person. Rules relating to personal service on a corporation have no application to such statutory substituted service by mail. The address of the corporation to which the notice is to be directed is complete without the name of the agent who acts for the corporation in the specific matter involved. When the notice is mailed correctly directed to the corporation as such at its own address, the service is completed and whether it reaches the specific agent or division which must act on it is the risk of the addressee corporation and depends on its care. In this case it is conceded that the address to which the notice was addressed was that of appellant's principal office.

[5,6] Appellant next contends that because Section 6906, supra, requires service of notice "on the claimant" this means on the claimant as such at the address which appears in the records of the Board on the claim for refund. The contention is wholly without merit. The "claimant" in Section 6906 and the "retailer" etc. in Section 6486 are descriptive of the same party in interest, here the Company. Appellant's claim for refund states, at the top, names and addresses of counsel, as pleadings often do, but such addresses of counsel do not normally constitute the address of the party, if they are not expressly designated as such. The facts in this case make it especially clear that appellant did not designate another address as its own, than its main office address at 245 Market Street. The names and addresses of counsel at the head of the claim for refund read:

"Chaffee E. Hall
351 California Street
San Francisco 4, California
GARfield 1-2470
Robert H. Gerdes
Richard H. Peterson
John A. Sproul
245 Market Street
San Francisco 6, California
SUtter 1-4211"

The claim for refund was transmitted to the Board by a letter signed by Robert H. Gerdes which letter bears the letter-head:

"Pacific Gas and Electric Company
245 Market Street
San Francisco, California"

It also contains in small print the name of Mr. Gerdes as General Counsel and of ten associate attorneys among whom are Messrs. Peterson and Sproul. From the above the only sensible conclusion the Board could make was that 245 Market Street was the address of the Company and of the members of its legal staff which acted as counsel and that 351 California Street was the address of the outside counsel Mr. Hall. If the matter presented any question of fact it was resolved against appellant by the finding: "The Notice of Denial of Refund was mailed on May 7, 1951, to the retailer, the Company, at its main office and its address as shown on the records of the Board, 245 Market Street, San Francisco, California." As Sections 6906 and 6486 provide for notice by mailing addressed to the party and not to its counsel, the above manner of addressing was the correct one. The sections do not contain any indication of a duty to mail to more than one address for one party, as also contended by appellant.

Appellant further relies on the words in Section 1013 Code of Civil Procedure: "addressed to the person on whom it is to be served, at his office address as last given by him on any document which he has filed in the cause and served on the party making service by mail; otherwise at his place of residence." As we have held that appellant did not give on any document as its office address an address other than 245 Market Street, and that that address is also the place of appellant's residence (principal place of business) and its address as shown on the records of the Board, the point is without importance and we need not decide what relation exists between the quoted provision of Section 1013 Code of Civil Procedure and the provision of Section 6486 Revenue and Taxation Code that the notice should be addressed to the party "at his address as it appears in the records of the board".

[7] Appellant next contends that to the notice in this case is applicable the provision of Section 1015 Code of Civil Procedure which provides that in all cases where a party has an attorney in an action or proceeding, the service of papers, when required, must be upon the attorney instead of the party, except certain papers not here involved. This is not so. Section 6486 Revenue and Taxation Code provides for service by mailing to the address of the party and refers to Section 1013 Code of Civil Procedure, which also provides for service by mailing to the address of the party, but it does not refer to Section 1015 Code of Civil Procedure, which provides for service on the attorney of record. The latter provision inconsistent with the provision specifically governing the service of notice in this case cannot be applicable. In Lyydikainen v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 36 Cal.App.2d 298, 97 P.2d 993, which case held Section 1015 applicable to mailing of papers in proceedings before the Industrial Accident Commission, there were references to the whole chapter in which Section 1015, supra, is contained so that it was made directly applicable, and there were no conflicting provisions.

We find nothing unreasonable or against common sense or good faith in a construction of the statute which upholds the addressing of an important paper to the address of appellant's main office, which is also the office of its legal staff. That the notice did not reach that staff or appellant's outside counsel although it was correctly delivered, seems the fault of appellant and its employees only.

[8] Appellant predicates the invalidity of the notice also on alleged defects in its content, to wit that it did not contain a proper designation of the transaction to which the Board's decision related as contained in the caption of the claim for refund, and because the notice was not dated. There is no statutory provision regulating requirements of form or content of such notice. With respect to the comparable notice of entry of judgment it has been held that any notice in writing which will convey to a losing party that the judgment has been entered is sufficient. Bank of America, etc., Ass'n v. Superior Ct., 115 Cal. App. 454, 457, 1 P.2d 1081. The notice identified the matter as "the claim for refund filed by Pacific Gas and Electric Company, 245 Market Street, San Francisco, California in the amount of $324,953.94," and notified appellant that on Wednesday, April 18, 1951, its claim for refund under the Sales and Use Tax Law, in said amount, was denied. There can be no doubt that for appellant the amount set forth clearly and specifically identified the claim which was denied and that in that respect the notice was sufficient in law. Insofar as in this respect any matter of fact was presented the court below found in substance that the notice was reasonably certain to give the Company the required information, which finding is supported by the text and circumstances of the communication.

There is no statutory requirement that the notice be dated and the failure to start the action timely was evidently not caused by the lack of a date.

[9, 10] We hold that the statutory method of service of a notice of disallowance of claim by mailing addressed to the party, as here applied to the Company, is just and reasonable and satisfies due process and that, although addressing a notice to counsel contrary to or in excess of the statutory requirements might in this case have prevented the injury, due process did not require respondent to take such a measure, the less so because the manner in which the injury occurred was not readily foreseeable, and was caused by the lack of care of appellant's employees. With respect to the content of the notice appellant is not entitled to raise the constitutional question of due process because its rights were not injuriously affected by any alleged defect in the content, but only by the fact that the notice did not reach its counsel. American Distilling Co. v. Johnson, 132 Cal.App.2d 73, 281 P.2d 598; 11 Cal.Jur. 2d, Constitutional Law, § 68.

[11-13] Appellant contends that the Board was estopped from relying on the 90 days limitation from the mailing of its notice, because the notice was not given according to the precedent established by the Board of sending a copy of a notice, properly dated and informative, to appellant's outside counsel Mr. Hall. There is no merit whatever in this contention. The existence of facts constituting an estoppel was rejected in the findings. "The existence of an estoppel is a question of fact." Parke v. Franciscus, 194 Cal. 284, 297, 228 P. 435, 441. Unless the opposite conclusion is the only one which can reasonably be drawn from the facts, the finding of the trial court is binding on this court. The evidence does not show conclusively or at all the establishing by the Board of a precedent as to the giving of notice on which appellant was entitled to rely and on which it relied to its detriment. The Board had sent the notice of deficiency determination, which gave rise to the controversy, to the Company at its Market Street address; it had acknowledged receipt of the Company's petition for redetermination addressed to Richard H. Peterson, Associate Attorney, Pacific Gas and Electric Company at the Market Street address; it had sent the notice of hearing on said petition to the Company at its Market Street address; it had addressed the ribbon copy of the notice of redetermination denying said petition to the Company, at its Market Street address, indicating on it that a carbon copy was being sent to the attorney Mr. Hall at his address and the carbon copy had been sent to Mr. Hall with an explanatory letter; the Board had acknowledged receipt of the Company's claim for refund to the Company at its Market Street address. It cannot be said that, because the Board had once sent a copy of a notice to the Company's outside attorney, mentioning on the notice to the Company itself that such was being done, the Company could rely on such copy being sent also when the notice of denial of claim for refund which the Company received at its office did not mention the sending of such copy. There is, moreover, no evidence that the high employees of the Company who took notice of the denial of the claim of refund failed to communicate it to the Company's attorneys because of their reliance on the sending of such copy. We held earlier that the alleged defects in the content of the notice could not be held responsible for said failure.

[14,15] As another ground of estoppel appellant proposes the following facts:

When in July, 1951, Mr. Carr, the Manager of the Company's Tax Department, not knowing of the disallowance having been decided and noticed, inquired from the secretary of the Board, Mr. Pierce, whether he had any objection to Mr. Carr's speaking to the members of the Board concerning the placing of the claim for refund on the calendar, so that it would be taken up immediately, Mr. Pierce said that he had no objection. When thereafter on July 16, 1951 Mr. Carr informally met three members of the Board in a hotel in Sacramento, Mr. Bonelli, one of the members of the Board, who had not been present at the denial of the claim for refund, stated that at any time the Company wanted the Board to exhaust the administrative remedy in order that the Company could go to Court, the Board would be glad to do so. The other two members of the Board present acquiesced in Mr. Bonelli's statement. Mr. Carr did not discuss the status of the claim for refund with the Sales Tax Administrator or any other member of the staff of the Sales Tax Division of the Board. The rejection of any estoppel by the trial court is conclusive of this point as well as of the prior one. It cannot be said that no other conclusion from the above facts is possible than that they cause an estoppel. Litigants normally do not rely and are not necessarily entitled to rely for the time of exercising their remedies on implications of informal conversations with Board members. The trial court could reasonably conclude that the failure to timely start the court action was not caused by any reliance on the stated conversation but by reliance of appellant's counsel on the fact that they had not received notice of disallowance of claim. It is also doubtful whether such informal utterances should be considered as acts of and binding on the Board as such.

As we are bound by the decision of the trial court that there was no factual basis for any estoppel, we need not decide whether facts which normally cause an estoppel could, if proved, have overcome the limitation provision of Section 6933 of the Revenue and Taxation Code.

William B. CIRIMELE, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

George SHINAZY and Ralph Shlnazy, Defendants,

George Shinazy, Defendant and Respondent.

No. 16449.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

June 24, 1955.

Landlord's action to recover rent due under lease. The Superior Court of San Mateo County, A. R. Cotton, J., awarded plaintiff the sum of $862.50 plus an attorney's fee in the sum of $100 for the trial of the action, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that the award for trial services had not been disproportionately small but held that an additional allowance should be made for legal services rendered upon the two appeals necessitated in the case.

Amended and affirmed.

1. Landlord and Tenant ⇨238

The "reasonable attorney fee" for which lease provided in case suit was brought for recovery of rent was not necessarily gauged by legal services actually rendered but was limited to reasonable compensation for legal services that were reasonably necessary under circumstances of case.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Reasonable Attorney Fee".

2. Landlord and Tenant ⇨238

Where issues in landlord's rent recovery suit were not complicated and trial was not prolonged, attorney's fee award of $100, which represented 40 per cent of amount which plaintiff recovered over and above amount which defendant admitted he owed and payment of which he had tendered by check when he filed his answer, was not disproportionately small.

3. Contracts ⇨233

A contract provision for a "reasonable attorney fee" in enforcing contract's provisions embraces an allowance for legal services rendered upon appeal as well as during trial.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨1122(2)

Where trial court, to which landlord's rent recovery action had been remanded for ascertainment of reasonable attorney's fee as a part of plaintiff's damages, had failed to allow fees in respect to appeal, District Court of Appeal could find reasonable value of such attorney's fees without remanding cause to trial court, and would make such an award for both first and second appeal.

5. Appeal and Error ⇨1099(10)

Whatever right plaintiff in rent recovery action may have had to interest prior to judgment should have been claimed not later than his first appeal, and his claim therefor came too late when not made until second appeal.

6. Landlord and Tenant ⇨238

In determining whether Code of Civil Procedure section, which (as it read in 1952) prohibited recovery of costs in Superior Court when judgment was one which could have been rendered by inferior court, was a bar to plaintiff's recovery of costs in rent recovery action, court could consider not only amount of rent recovery but also attorney's fee awarded for trial and appeal pursuant to lease provision. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 1032

W. L. A. Calder, Abraham Glicksberg, San Francisco, for appellant.

Fahey, Castagnetto & Gallen, Thomas B. Gallen, Daly City, for respondent.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

This is plaintiff's second appeal in this action for the collection of rent which accrued pursuant to the provisions of a written lease. Upon the first appeal we reversed the judgment with directions that the trial court "ascertain and determine the amount of a reasonable attorney fee as a part of plaintiff's damages, amend the findings of fact and conclusions of law in accordance with this decision, including an award of $862.50 (instead of $612.50 and in addition to the attorney fee) for moneys due plaintiff from the defendant, and thereupon to enter judgment in accordance with the findings and conclusions as thus amended." Cirimele v. Shinazy, 124 Cal.App.2d 46, 53, 268 P.2d 210, 214.

In carrying out these directions the trial court awarded plaintiff the sum of $862.50 plus an attorney fee in the sum of $100 "for the trial of the action."

[1, 2] Plaintiff complains that $100 is so disproportionately small that its award is an abuse of discretion. He asks this court to fix it in a larger sum. We cannot say, under the circumstances presented, that the trial court did abuse its discretion in this regard. $100 represented 40 per cent of the amount ($250) which plaintiff recovered over and above the amount ($612.50) which the defendant admitted he owed and payment of which he tendered by check when he filed his answer. The issues were not complicated nor was the trial prolonged. (The reporter's transcript upon the first appeal was only 51 pages in length.) Plaintiff stresses the fact that a good deal of legal work was caused by defendant's successful motion for change of venue from San Francisco to San Mateo. That work the trial court well may have considered plaintiff brought upon himself by filing the action in San Francisco despite the fact that the demised premises are situated in San Mateo County and both parties reside in that county. The "reasonable attorney fee" for which the lease provides in case suit is brought for recovery of rent is not necessarily gauged by the legal services actually rendered. It is limited to reasonable compensation for legal services that are reasonably necessary under the circumstances of a case.

[3, 4] Plaintiff claims that the trial court erred in denying his request for a reasonable attorney's fee in respect to the prosecution of the first appeal. A contract for a reasonable attorney's fee in enforcing its provisions embraces an allowance for legal services rendered upon appeal as well as during the trial. Hahn v. Hahn, 123 Cal. App.2d 97, 103, 266 P.2d 519. Upon the former appeal one of the causes for reversal was the refusal of the trial court to allow attorney fees as provided in the lease, that court acting apparently upon the erroneous theory that such fees would be "costs", not "damages". Neither in our discussion nor in our order upon the former appeal, 124 Cal.App.2d 46, 51-53, 268 P.2d 210, did we limit the allowance of fees to services for the "trial" of the action, nor did we make any differentiation between those services and legal services rendered upon appeal. Our direction to the trial court was not intended to be and was not limited in this regard. That court should have allowed fees in respect to the appeal. Subsequently, additional legal services have been rendered; i. e., upon the second appeal. "Under the rule of Kirk v. Culley, 202 Cal. 501, 261 P. 994, we may find the reasonable value of such attorneys' fees without remanding the cause to the trial court". Maurice Mercantile Co. v. American Emp. Ins. Co., 140 Cal.App. 354, 360, 35 P.2d 1047, 1049. See also Hahn v. Hahn, supra, 123 Cal.App. 2d 97, 103, 266 P.2d 519. Accordingly, we make the additional and supplemental finding of fact that $75 is a reasonable amount as attorney fee to award and it is awarded to plaintiff in respect to each of the two appeals, a total of $150 for the two appeals.

[5] Plaintiff further claims he should be allowed interest on the amount of rent due ($862.50) from and after December 15, 1950, as the latest possible date that it became due. Whatever right he may have had to interest prior to judgment should have been claimed not later than his first appeal. He did not mention this subject upon the former appeal. Indeed, it would appear that he did not do so even at the trial. This request for interest comes too late.

[6] With the revision upward which we are making, plaintiff's recovery¹ will exceed the $1,000 jurisdictional amount of the justice court. Accordingly, section 1032 of the

1. This includes $862.50 as rent due, $100 as attorney fee for the trial of the action and $75 as attorney fee for the first appeal, aggregating $1,037.50 without necessarily including the attorney fee for the second appeal in ascertaining whether section 1032 precludes costs.

Code of Civil Procedure (as it read in 1952) will no longer operate to preclude an award of costs to plaintiff and he will be entitled to his costs of suit.

The judgment as last amended is further amended by awarding plaintiff $150 additional as attorney fees ($75 for each of the two appeals) and allowance of his costs of suit. As thus amended, the judgment is affirmed. Plaintiff will also, of course, recover his costs upon this appeal.

Civ. 20899.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

June 29, 1955.

Divorce action. From interlocutory judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Walter S. Gates, J., in favor of wife but limiting period of alimony payments to 28 months, the wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J. pro tem., held that under statute authorizing court to modify its order for alimony from time to time, jurisdiction was automatically reserved to make an appropriate modification of alimony provision of decree before expiration of prescribed period, and no error resulted from court's failure to insert an express reservation of jurisdiction in interlocutory judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Divorce ⚡234, 245(1)

Statute providing that divorce court may compel husband to make suitable allowance to wife for her support during her life or for a shorter period and that court may from time to time modify its order does not give court power to make award after judgment becomes final without any mention of alimony or with an express denial of same, unless jurisdiction is expressly reserved for that purpose, nor does power survive expiration of limitation of time contained in decree awarding alimony, but when award has been made for limited period, court has, by virtue of statute, continuing jurisdiction to modify award without an express reservation of jurisdiction. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 139.

285 P.2d—20½

2. Divorce ⚡245(1)

Under statute authorizing court to modify its order for alimony from time to time, jurisdiction was automatically reserved to make an appropriate modification of decree awarding wife alimony for 28 months before expiration of that period, and there was no error in court's failure to insert an express reservation of jurisdiction in the interlocutory judgment. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 139.

3. Divorce ⚡245(2)

A showing of changed circumstances is necessary to the procuring of any modification of alimony provision of divorce decree.

Court has broad discretion in fixing period of time during which alimony shall be paid to wife. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 139.

5. Divorce ⚡235

Limitation of alimony payments to 28 months to wife, who had been an art teacher in public schools prior to her marriage and whose teaching credentials were in order, was not an abuse of discretion. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 139.

ASHBURN, Justice pro tem.

Divorce action. The wife appeals from an interlocutory judgment in her favor, confining her claim of error to the phase of the decree which limits to 28 months the period of alimony payments—with no express reservation of jurisdiction to modify the award.

All property matters were adjusted by a mutually satisfactory property settlement agreement, approved by the court, which gives appellant occupancy of the home worth $18,000 to $20,000 until her remarriage or death. The custody of a 13 year old boy is awarded to appellant and the husband ordered to pay to the wife for his support $100 a month. She is awarded alimony of $200 per month from April 1, 1954 to January 1, 1955, inclusive, and thereafter "the sum of $100 per month and continuing said payments until the payment of July 1, 1956 has been made. When said alimony payments have all been paid as herein provided the obligation of the cross-defendant [husband] to pay alimony shall terminate." This is ten months at $200 per month and eighteen more months at $100 each. Appellant does not complain of the amount awarded her for the ten months or for the eighteen month period. Her counsel says: "The sole issue presented on this appeal is the propriety of that part of the judgment terminating alimony at the end of twenty-eight months.

"The appellant respectfully contends that the failure of the trial court to retain jurisdiction to later modify or revoke alimony was not reasonable and was, in fact, an abuse of discretion." And: "Because jurisdiction is not reserved, the court will lose the power to award alimony after the twenty-eighth month unless the judgment is reversed. When the judgment becomes final, the wife can enforce no obligation against the husband not imposed by the court at the time of the judgment."

[1] Section 139, Civil Code expressly confers on the court discretion to limit the period of alimony payments and power to modify the award from time to time. It says: " * * * [T]he court may compel the party against whom the decree or judgment is granted to make such suitable allowance for support and maintenance of the other party for his or her life, or for such shorter period as the court may deem just, having regard for the circumstances of the respective parties * * *. That portion of the decree or judgment making any such allowance or allowances, and the order or orders of the court to enforce the same may be modified or revoked at any time at the discretion of the court except as to any amount that may have accrued prior to the order of modification or revocation." As construed by the courts this section does not extend the court's power to the making of an award after judgment becomes final without any mention of alimony or with an express denial of same, unless jurisdiction is expressly reserved for that purpose. Wilson v. Superior Court, 31 Cal.2d 458, 464, 189 P.2d 266; McClure v. McClure, 4 Cal.2d 356, 359, 49 P.2d 584, 100 A.L.R. 1257; Barry v. Barry, 124 Cal.App.2d 107, 111, 268 P.2d 147. Nor does the power survive the expiration of the limitation of time contained in the decree awarding alimony. Tolle v. Superior Court, 10 Cal.2d 95, 97, 73 P.2d 607; Long v. Long, 17 Cal.2d 409, 410, 110 P.2d 383. But when an award has been made for a limited period, the court has by virtue of the statute a continuing jurisdiction to modify the same in any respect; no express reservation of jurisdiction is necessary; and no attempted abnegation of the power is effective. Bechtel v. Bechtel, 124 Cal.App. 617, 618, 12 P.2d 970; Soule v. Soule, 4 Cal.App. 97, 100-101, 87 P. 205; Gates v. Gates, 54 Cal.App. 407, 410-414; 202 P. 151; Harrold v. Harrold, 100 Cal.App.2d 601, 605, 224 P.2d 66. The theory of these rulings is stated in the Soule case, supra, 4 Cal.App. at page 100, 87 P. at page 206, where, referring to section 139 Civil Code, it is said: "This statutory provision enters into every decree in an action for divorce which provides for the payment by the husband of an allowance for the support of the wife, as fully as though it should be incorporated into the terms of the decree. The authority of the court to modify its decree in this respect does not depend upon a reservation therefor in the decree itself, but exists by virtue of the statute, and, being conferred upon it by the Legislature, it is beyond its power to divest itself of such authority. Campbell v. Campbell, 37 Wis. 206." And in Gates v. Gates, supra, 54 Cal.App. at page 411, 202 P. at page 152, as follows: "That the interlocutory judgment had become final before the modification was made does not render said section 139 inapplicable. The provision rests upon the theory that the trial court has a continuing jurisdiction in reference to such award. Its authority is not exhausted by the original order, nor is it foreclosed by the expiration of the time for an appeal.

"It is equally plain that the court is not required by express provision to reserve the authority to modify the award in order to justify such action. The language of said section becomes a part of the original order as though written therein. The section itself reserves to the court the authority to modify the allowance."

The Bechtel holding is directly in point here. Alimony was awarded for a period of five years and plaintiff appealed from the interlocutory judgment containing that provision. Upon appeal it was claimed "that the court by limiting the alimony payments to the period mentioned abused its discretion," and appellant asked "that the error be corrected by this court." 124 Cal.App. at page 618, 12 P.2d 970. After reviewing the authorities the court concluded: "The award made was not in the circumstances unreasonable; and it is clear from the foregoing that the court may modify its order by requiring, if necessary, suitable payments to be made after the expiration of the five-year period notwithstanding the limitation contained in the decree. No abuse of discretion has been shown, and the decree should be affirmed."

The Bechtel case was distinguished in Tolle v. Superior Court, supra, 10 Cal.2d 95, 97, 98, 73 P.2d 607, and in Long v. Long, supra, 17 Cal.2d 409, 410, 110 P.2d 383, but not overruled. In both of those cases the application was made after the time for alimony payments had expired and after the court's power had been exhausted. Such was the holding in each instance. In the Tolle case, supra, it is said in 10 Cal.2d at page 98, 73 P.2d at page 609: "Two authorities strongly relied on by the respondents may be distinguished as not applicable to the cause here, for the orders there under consideration were not made after the judgments providing for alimony had been fully executed, as in this case." The reference is to Smith v. Superior Court, 89 Cal.App. 177, 264 P. 573, and Bechtel v. Bechtel, supra, 124 Cal.App. 617, 618, 12 P.2d 970. Concerning the latter case it is further said: "The decree was affirmed, but, in discussing the case, and without even referring to the period of limitation, the court held that the lower court might modify its order (for alimony) by requiring, if necessary, suitable payments to be made after expiration of the five-year period, notwithstanding the limitation contained in the decree. The question of whether or not such modification might be made after the termination of the five-year period was not considered." In Long v. Long, supra, 17 Cal.2d at page 410, 110 P.2d 383: "Appellant, relying on Smith v. Superior Court, 89 Cal.App. 177, 264 P. 573, and Bechtel v. Bechtel, 124 Cal. App. 617, 12 P.2d 970, contends that the above section confers on the court an express power to modify an alimony decree even though the alimony was awarded for a limited time, which has expired, and the decree did not contain a reservation of jurisdiction.

"This contention is answered adversely and the authorities relied on are distinguished in Tolle v. Superior Court, 10 Cal.2d 95, 73 P.2d 607, which holds that if the court provides for alimony payments for a definite term without reserving the right to change or modify the term, the court has no power to make further allowance for the wife's support after such alimony has been paid and the final decree has been entered." The effect of the Tolle and Long cases is to sustain the ruling of the Bechtel case so far as it applies to an application made before expiration of the limited period. This view is consistent with the statute and the numerous cases which have cited and applied the Soule decision¹ without any criticism of it or its logic. Indeed a recognition of a right to modify within the limited period is necessary in order to preserve vitality to the statutory phrase "That portion of the decree or judgment making any such allowance or allowances * * * may be modified or revoked at any time at the discretion of the court."

[2] It follows that there was no error in the court's failure to insert an express reservation in the interlocutory judgment in this case. Jurisdiction is automatically reserved to make any appropriate modification before the expiration of the prescribed period, namely, before July 1, 1956.

[3, 4] Of course a showing of changed circumstances is necessary to the procuring of any such modification. Ralphs v. Ralphs, 86 Cal.App.2d 324, 325, 194 P.2d 592. That may or may not occur in this instance within the time limit. Counsel for appellant seem to argue the possibility of a need of modification after July 1, 1956, perhaps years after, and from that standpoint seem to claim that an award limited to 28 months is per se an abuse of discretion. This is a difficult position to sustain, for the statute, § 139, expressly authorizes an award for a period less than life and it is firmly established that the court has a broad discretion in the matter. Newbauer v. Newbauer, 95 Cal.App.2d 36, 39-40, 212 P.2d 240, 242: "However it is the settled rule that in making an award of alimony the trial court has a wide discretion. 'Before the appellate courts will interfere, it must be made clearly and affirmatively to appear upon the face of the entire record in the case that this discretion has been abused.' Baldwin v. Baldwin, 28 Cal.2d 406, 413, 170 P.2d 670, 674; 1 Cal.Jur. 1012. The code itself recognizes the right of the trial court to award alimony to an innocent wife 'during her life or for a shorter period as the court may deem just'. Section 139, Civ.Code. * * *

"That the members of this court might have been more liberal is not the test. The discretion was the trial judge's, not ours; and we can only interfere if we find that under all the evidence, viewed most favorably in support of the trial court's action, no judge could reasonably have made the order that he did. Fillmore v. Fillmore, 74 Cal.App.2d 418, 168 P.2d 725; Cozzi v. Cozzi, 81 Cal.App.2d 229, 183 P.2d 739; Furniss v. Furniss, 75 Cal.App.2d 138, 170 P.2d 486."

[5] A brief resumé of the facts will disclose that there was no abuse of discretion here. Appellant suffers and long has suffered from a congenital low back condition that causes fatigue and pain after prolonged exertion. She is an art teacher, and worked at her vocation in the public schools for about nine years and until three months before her son was born in 1940; having married respondent in June 1938. She earned about $2,000 yearly. Her teaching credentials are in order and she had a temporary teaching position at the time of trial, working four hours a week, and making $49.25 a month "take home" pay. A hysterectomy in July 1952 improved her general health somewhat. She works some in the yard; took golf lessons about a year before the trial; has her time to herself from 8:00 a. m. to 3:00 p. m. Her present teaching does not bother her back. She testified she would not sign a contract to teach full time because she feels she has a job to do with respect to the boy,—“to make a home for him and carry on as normally as possible.” At the conclusion of the evidence the trial judge stated reasons for limiting the alimony to 28 months, as follows: "I think in view of the background of the Defendant and her education, she can at least get a part-time job teaching school, and after this thing is over, and the memories about it are more or less dim, she'll be in a better frame of mind to go out for herself, and, of course, school teachers are paid much better now than they were some ten or twelve years ago. It seems to me she probably could earn $2,000.00, or better, per year." This court cannot say that there was any abuse of discretion.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

Wendell HAVEL and Francis Gordon Robinson, Defendants and Appellants.

Cr. 987.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

June 28, 1955.

Prosecution of both defendants for conspiracy and one of them for assisting the other in attempting to escape from jail. The Superior Court, Riverside County, O. K. Morton, J., entered judgment of conviction and sentenced both defendants to imprisonment, and they appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that arraignment of defendants and pronouncement of judgment in absence of their counsel was violation of their constitutional right to have counsel in criminal prosecution.

Judgment reversed and remanded for re-arraignment of defendants for judgment and pronouncing of judgment.

Wendell Havel, in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Elizabeth Miller, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Both defendants, in propria persona, appealed from their "conviction and sentence". Defendant Havel alone has filed a brief on appeal. He was convicted and sentenced as charged in count one, with violating section 4534 of the Penal Code in that he did, on September 6, 1954, and September 11, 1954, unlawfully assist defendant Robinson, a paroled prisoner whose parole had been revoked, in attempting to escape from jail. And in count two, he was charged with defendant Robinson with the crime of violating section 182 of the Penal Code, i. e., that on said dates they conspired together in violating section 4534 of the Penal Code. Several overt acts are set forth, namely, that they solicited one Easley to procure hack-saw blades and he did bring them into the jail; that defendants used said blades to cut the bars; and that they solicited one O'Connor to procure, and he did procure a piece of cotton rope to effect said escape.

Defendants, appearing with counsel, pleaded not guilty to the charges and a jury convicted them all on charges indicated. The trial court set a date for the hearing of the report of the probation officer and to sentence defendants. This date was subsequently continued to December 13, 1954, with the consent of defendants' counsel. Apparently, on that date the matter was continued to December 15, at the request of the probation officer. On December 15, according to the minutes of the court, the defendants were present without their counsel. The court considered the probation officer's report and probation was denied. Defendants, without the presence of their counsel, were arraigned for judgment, and the minutes show: "No legal cause" why judgment should not be pronounced. Havel was sentenced to prison on both counts, sentences to run consecutively, and Robinson's term was to run "consecutively to any unserved sentence heretofore pronounced".

It appears that in November, 1953, defendant Havel was picked up in El Centro on a warrant for escape from the Riverside jail. At that time he was questioned about it and he said to the officers that he got within a few miles of the border this time and "next time I will make it."

On August 28, 1954, he was confined in the Riverside County jail with defendant Robinson, whose parole had been revoked, together with other prisoners, including one Rippey, who was a painter and barber who had trusty working privileges throughout the jail.

Rippey testified generally that on or about that date Havel and Robinson, trustees in the jail, discussed with him plans about escaping from the jail, i. e., that they were going to get the guards separated, overpower them, tie them up, obtain the key to the penthouse on the roof, secure a rope used as a clothesline to dry clothes, obtain civilian clothes from Robinson, who was the trusty having charge of the prisoners' civilian clothes, and escape by means of a rope suspended from the roof. Rippey stated he did not agree to this plan because he was not in favor of any violence in reference to the guards; that thereafter they approached him again and told him of their arrangements to obtain some hack saws and saw the bars in the "recreation tank"; that when they later, on September 7, produced the three blades, he said he would go along with the plan; that at night Havel awakened him and said they were ready to commence sawing and the three of them took turns in sawing the bar and standing watch; that when the sawing of one bar was about completed (photographs of the sawed bar were received in evidence) Robinson thought they were making too much noise and proposed another plan, i. e., that he and Rippey would induce another prisoner (O'Connor) to drink some floor soap which would make him sick and he would be taken to the county hospital; that he would then size up the situation as to escaping from the hospital and then they would do the same thing, be taken to the hospital, and then escape according to the plans agreed upon.

O'Connor testified about their plans for drinking the soap and said both Havel and Robinson asked him to obtain two pieces of rope which he secured and gave to defendants; that they later asked him to obtain two pair of barber shears from Rippey without Rippey knowing it, and he did this and kept them on his person until either Robinson or Havel asked for them; that when he offered them to defendants they said it was too late to do anything, so he gave them back to Rippey. It appears that O'Connor did drink the soap but it failed to make him sick enough to take him to the hospital. Apparently, some other plans were made involving two pairs of scissors which Rippey used for barber purposes, because they were missing from his kit on September 11th. Rippey said he heard defendants say something about more drastic action in reference to their escape and the possible use of some weapon such as barber shears; that he did not believe in any such violence and accordingly told one of the deputies of his suspicion of the contemplated plans of escape; and that Havel had said he hoped a deputy by the name of Rhymer would be the one involved as he had had some trouble with him on some other occasion and did not like him.

Easley testified he discussed escape plans with defendants, and Robinson asked him to obtain some saw blades for him and promised Easley some packages of cigarettes for his service; that he did bring the blades into the jail in the sole of his shoe, according to the method he related to Robinson the night before, and left them at the door of the "tank"; and that two days later he received some packages of cigarettes from Robinson. The shoe with the loosened sole was identified by Easley.

A deputy sheriff testified that after talking to Rippey he found the bar sawed, as indicated by him; that he questioned Robinson, who, after denying any knowledge of such plans, finally stated he was afraid he was being involved in this plan by other prisoners and he wanted to admit removing the saw blades from the shoe; that there was a length of rope ordinarily kept in the exercise area for drying clothes, and a disaster rope, about 150 feet in length, was kept on the roof of the jail under lock and key; that the jailer on duty on the floor where defendants were kept had the key to this door as well as the door leading to the roof; that he remembered O'Connor being reported as sick; and that the shoes in evidence were found in the prisoners' clothing storage room over which Robinson had charge.

One Wheelis, who worked as a trusty at the training center, testified that Rippey asked him to obtain some saw blades but he refused; that he saw Easley place hack-saw blades in his shoe at the center; that Easley told him he was taking them into the jail to give them to Robinson; that Havel, about that time, asked him if he wanted to escape at night with him from the jail and he told Havel that he was not interested because he was going ahead and serve his time.

Havel testified he asked Wheelis about taking part in an escape but that it was just talk and he forgot about it because he decided to try and obtain parole and never would take part in any attempted escape of Robinson. Other prisoners implicated Rippey as being involved in the attempted escape.

Robinson denied any attempt to escape and admitted he told officers, when being questioned about the saw blades, that "For the moment we will say I am guilty, that I did have hack saws. I still don't see what a statement on my part concerning that, how that would affect Mr. Havel.

That is only an admittance of guilt on my part."

[1] The first contention made on this appeal is that Havel was improperly convicted of both a violation of Penal Code section 4534 and a conspiracy to violate that section because the same acts and intent were involved in both charges. It has been repeatedly held in this state that a prosecution may be had for either a conspiracy or a crime committed in pursuance thereof, and a conviction thereon may be had for both the conspiracy to commit a crime and the consummated crime committed in pursuance of its purpose.

In People v. Martin, 114 Cal.App. 392, 396, 300 P. 130, defendant was charged with bribery and conspiracy to commit bribery. It was there held that the crime of conspiracy is a distinct offense from the actual commission of the crime forming the object of the conspiracy, and the fact that the parties to the conspiracy succeeded in perpetrating the acts which of themselves constitute the crime they conspired to commit, in no wise relieves them from liability under section 182 of the Penal Code. In such prosecution the parties may be legally convicted of both crimes and the conviction does not constitute double jeopardy. See also People v. Hoyt, 20 Cal.2d 306, 317, 125 P.2d 29, and People v. Gordon, 71 Cal. App.2d 606, 629, 163 P.2d 110.

[2] The claim that Robinson was guilty of the charges set forth in the first count, and accordingly the failure to charge and convict him on that count rendered Havel's conviction on that count void is without merit. Robinson was not charged with nor acquitted of this offense.

[3] The next argument is that the trial court "faked and falsified" the transcripts; that the records were false, and that Havel was convicted on perjured testimony. The transcripts were duly certified as correct, and there is no showing to the contrary nor that the finding of the jury was predicated on perjured testimony. Accordingly, there is no merit to this contention. People v. Stinchcomb, 92 Cal.App.2d 741, 746, 208 P.2d 396; People v. Mooney, 178 Cal. 525, 529, 174 P. 325.

[4] The evidence was sufficient to support the verdicts. The corpus delicti was sufficiently established and the testimony of the accomplices was sufficiently corroborated by other evidence. People v. Henderson, 34 Cal.2d 340, 342, 209 P.2d 785; People v. Trujillo, 32 Cal.2d 105, 110, 194 P.2d 681.

[5-7] The claim that defendants were not represented by their attorney at the time of the probation hearing and when judgment was pronounced upon them is supported by the evidence. The minutes of the court show that only the attorney for the prosecution was present and that defendants were "without counsel". The reason for proceeding in the absence of defendants' counsel is not shown and no waiver of that right is indicated by the record. The trial court, after denying probation, asked the defendants if they had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced, and the only entry indicated is "No legal cause". Defendant, in his brief, states that defendants were "denied the right to counsel" by the actions of the trial court. It is a fundamental principle that persons charged with and convicted of public crimes are entitled to the services of their attorneys at all stages of the proceedings, and this includes arraignment for judgment when defendants are asked if they have any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced. A defendant does have certain substantial rights at that time and it may be only a trained legal mind that would understand the significance of this query. In re Levi, 39 Cal.2d 41, 45, 244 P.2d 403, involved a similar occurrence. It was there held that the constitutional right of the accused to have counsel in "criminal prosecutions" (Const. Art. I, sec. 13) is not applicable to a hearing preceding revocation of probation, since a probation proceeding is not part of a "prosecution", but an arraignment for judgment is a "criminal prosecution" within the meaning of that article, and an accused therefore has the right to counsel at the time of pronouncement of judgment; and that a judgment pronounced against the accused in the absence of counsel is vulnerable to attack by habeas corpus. It is therein stated that defendant's failure to request counsel could not be amplified into a waiver of his right to counsel. See also People v. Fields, 88 Cal.App.2d 30, 198 P.2d 104.

[8,9] Under the authority of these cases and those cited therein, it was error to arraign defendants and pronounce judgment in the absence of their counsel. Since there appears to be no other error and the judgment is fully supported by the evidence, defendants should again be arraigned for judgment and if again sentenced to prison, their confinement, based upon the invalid judgment, should be credited upon the new commitment. Penal Code sec. 2900.1.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, but for the sole purpose of re-arraigning the defendants for judgment and the pronouncing of judgment. People v. Fields, supra.

Division 1, California.

Rehearing Denied July 20, 1955.

Hearing Denied Aug. 17, 1955.

Personal injury actions, consolidated for purpose of trial, by employees of painting subcontractor against the general contractor. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Thomas J. Cunningham, J., granted motion for nonsuit in each case and each plaintiff appealed. Appeals were presented on a consolidated record. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that the ruling on a prior appeal by one of the plaintiffs, that the general contractor owed no non-delegable duty to provide safe scaffolding for subcontractor's employees, was law of case on the instant appeal where the offers of proof on the second trial would have added little, if anything, of consequence to facts which were of record on the first appeal, and that, the facts being identical as to each plaintiff, there was no evidence sufficient to support a verdict in favor of the second plaintiff had it been returned.

Judgments affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ◊1097(1), 1195(1)

Rule of "law of the case" is the rule requiring both trial and appellate tribunals to follow rules laid down upon former appeal whether such rules are right or wrong.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Law of the Case".

2. Appeal and Error ◊1097(1)

Upon second appeal, the court, in determining applicability of rule of "law of case", will look not only to opinion rendered by court on previous appeal, but also to the record.

3. Appeal and Error ◊1097(3)

On second appeal, doctrine of "law of the case" applies even though the evidence may be different, unless evidence is substantially different in a material respect.

4. Appeal and Error ◊1097(1)

Ruling on first appeal, that general contractor owed no nondelegable duty to provide safe scaffolding for subcontractor's employee, was law of case on subsequent appeal where offers of proof on second trial of personal injury action would have added little if anything of consequence to facts which were of record on first appeal. Labor Code, §§ 7151, 7152.

5. Negligence Ⓒ55

General contractor may be liable for injuries resulting from defective appliances when he has privilege of selecting them or materials of which they are made, but he is not liable for injuries caused by defective scaffolds or other instrumentalities which he has not supplied. Labor Code, §§ 7151, 7152.

6. Trial Ⓒ139(1)

Where there was no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support verdict in favor of plaintiff in personal injury action if such verdict would be returned, motion for nonsuit was properly granted.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiffs Dan E. Hard and Harry Macofsky, were employees of Arenz-Warren Company, a subcontractor who did painting on a grandstand of the Hollywood Turf Club which was in the course of being reconstructed. Defendant L. E. Dixon Company, a corporation, was the general contractor on the project. Plaintiffs were engaged as painters, employed by Arenz-Warren Company. Both sustained serious personal injuries when a high scaffolding which was erected and the materials for which were furnished by the subcontractor Arenz-Warren Company, and upon which they were working, collapsed and dropped them to the floor.

Plaintiffs filed separate personal injury actions. Plaintiff Hard's action was tried first, resulting in an award in his favor of $55,000 damages by a jury against defendant Dixon Company. As to the defendant Hollywood Turf Club, a nonsuit was granted. Defendant Dixon Company's motion for a new trial was denied and the latter appealed. Division 2 of this court reversed the judgment and ordered a new trial. Hard v. Hollywood Turf Club, 112

Cal.App.2d 263, 246 P.2d 716. A hearing was denied by the Supreme Court. The case of plaintiff Hard was reset for trial and the action of plaintiff Macofsky, which had not theretofore been tried, was consolidated with it for the purpose of trial.

When the two cases were called for trial, the trial judge held a "pre-trial" hearing in his chambers, going over the various issues raised by the pleadings and by the prior opinion on appeal in the Hard case. At the pre-trial, all parties stipulated that all of the evidence, both oral and documentary, admitted in plaintiff Hard's first trial should be admitted in the consolidated trial for the purposes of the court's ruling upon plaintiffs' offers of proof and upon defendant's motion for a nonsuit. The court sustained defendant's objections to each and every one of plaintiffs' offers of proof. The court granted defendant's motions for a judgment of nonsuit in each case, and the judgments were accordingly entered against plaintiffs.

Motions for a new trial were denied and each plaintiff appeals from the judgment against him. By stipulation both appeals are presented on a consolidated record.

At the pre-trial hearing wherein it was stipulated that all of the evidence, both oral and documentary, admitted in plaintiff Hard's previous trial should be admitted in the second consolidated trial, the court stated that it was considering the opinion rendered in Hard v. Hollywood Turf Club, supra, to determine what was thereby established as the law of the case, and suggested that counsel for plaintiffs make offers of proof "as to any additional evidence they might have in addition to that that was presented to the trial court in the first instance", so that the court could rule whether these offers presented any additional matters of fact not introduced at the first trial. The suggested procedure was agreed to by stipulation. It was then further agreed that, "as evidenced by the transcript in the Hard case", the following constituted portions of the evidence.

"1. O. D. Malone was employed as foreman of the Arenz-Warren Company, Incorporated, being painting subcontractor, and acting in the scope of his employment, and he was not an employee of L. E. Dixon Company.

"2. Said O. D. Malone while in the scope of such employment helped to physically move and re-erect the scaffold on which plaintiffs were standing at the time of the accident.

"3. The scaffold had so been moved and re-erected within two or three hours before said accident occurred.

"4. Dan Hard was not present when such scaffold was re-erected, the plaintiff Harry Macofsky was present and observed O. D. Malone as above referred to remove and erect said scaffold; that said plaintiff Macofsky during said re-erection of said scaffold helped move one of the planks to the new location where said scaffold was re-erected; that except as hereinabove in this paragraph set forth all evidence relating to all issues of alleged negligence of said Defendant L. D. Dixon Company is identical in the two cases." (Emphasis added.)

So far as we are advised or have been able to discover, plaintiffs' offers of proof added nothing of consequence to the facts adduced at the prior trial other than, (1) that the foreman of Arenz-Warren built the scaffold, (2) Macofsky saw the scaffold-ing being moved, (3) Macofsky had nothing to do with its construction, except to help move one plank, and (4) both Macofsky and Hard suffered severe personal injuries. And, as pointed out by respondent, all of the foregoing, except the mention of injuries in subdivision (4), refers to and is in the record only as to plaintiff Macofsky, and as further pointed out, adds little if anything of consequence to the facts which were before the trial and appellate tribunals at the first trial.

For a consideration of what we regard as the determinative issues presented on these consolidated appeals, we consider the following as pertinent and uncontradicted facts adduced at both trials.

Defendant Dixon Company contracted with Hollywood Turf Club to perform services as a general contractor in the remodeling and renovating of part of the grandstand at the Hollywood Park Race Track. Dixon undertook this work on a "cost plus fixed fee" basis, and in order to fulfill the terms of the contract, it was necessary to engage the services of subcontractors. All subcontracts had to be approved by the architect and the Turf Club. About twenty-one subcontractors were employed on the job, one of which was Arenz-Warren, the painting subcontractor. Harry Moore, superintendent for Arenz-Warren, was in charge of all painting at the race track. Directly under Mr. Moore there were two foremen, Mr. Sheldon and Mr. Malone, who were in charge of rigging scaffolds and directing the painters on the job. Both of these foremen were employed by Arenz-Warren. Arenz-Warren carried its own payroll, Workmen's Compensation and social security for the men that they employed. They handled all of the details of the work themselves, although they were under the general direction and control of the architect—the owner's agent. Arenz-Warren received general instructions from Dixon Company, but these instructions only pertained to the work which was to be done. Dixon Company did not direct the details of the manner in which the work was to be done, nor did Dixon Company furnish Arenz-Warren with any equipment or material. The two foremen testified that they received their orders directly from Arenz-Warren, and not from Dixon.

Hard was an employee of Arenz-Warren. He received his instructions from the foreman, Mr. Malone. Mr. Hard had no discussion with the Dixon Company or the Turf Club with reference to his work. He knew that Arenz-Warren was the painting subcontractor and that he was working for Arenz-Warren. Macofsky, who was also injured in this accident and was working on the same scaffold with the plaintiff Hard, testified that he reported to foreman Malone who was supervising the job. Macofsky stated that he worked for Arenz-Warren and that no one told him what to do other than Mr. Malone, the Arenz-Warren foreman.

Plaintiffs introduced evidence to show that the scaffold upon which the men were working was defective. And although plaintiffs alleged in their complaints that defendant Dixon Company built and owned this scaffold, the undisputed evidence discloses that this scaffold, as well as all other scaffolds used for painting, was constructed by Arenz-Warren. Mr. Paul Kahn, a painter, testified that Arenz-Warren men hoisted the materials up to the scaffold; that all the men who constructed the scaffold were employees of Arenz-Warren; and that Arenz-Warren men moved the scaffold when it was necessary to do so. Plaintiff Macofsky testified that the scaffolding was built by Mr. Malone and that Mr. Malone moved the strip of steel which formed part of the construction of the scaffold. This testimony was corroborated by the evidence given by Benny Wieggers. Mr. Malone, an experienced rigger, admitted that it was he who designed and built the scaffold and was in charge of its erection.

Prior to the time plaintiff Hard ascended the scaffold, he was aware of its condition. His foreman, Mr. Malone, had told him that he would not need a safety belt. Hard thought that it was safe to work on the scaffolding without a safety belt, and he did not tell his foreman or anybody else that he was unwilling to work on the scaffolding without a safety belt. Hard knew that if he had demanded a safety belt he could have had one, and he readily admitted that it was customary for him to look pretty carefully before he climbed onto a scaffold.

And, as to plaintiff Macofsky, the evidence, without contradiction, establishes that he stood in the same relationship to defendant Arenz-Warren Company and defendant Dixon Company as did plaintiff Hard.

We shall first give consideration to the appeal of plaintiff Hard because we are satisfied that as to him this cause must be determined, as contended by respondent, by an application of the principle of the law of the case.

[1-3] The rule of the law of the case is the rule requiring both trial and appellate tribunals to follow the rules laid down upon a former appeal whether such rules are right or wrong. And, upon the second appeal the court will look not only to the opinion rendered by the court on the previous appeal, but also to the record for the purpose of determining whether or not the law of the case should control in the determination of the second appeal. On the second appeal, even though the evidence may be different, unless it is substantially different in a material respect, the doctrine of the law of the case applies.

[4] Appellants insist that the only question decided by the former appeal was that "the trial court had committed prejudicial error in instructing the jury that respondent was under a statutory duty to supply appellant (Mr. Hard), with scaffolding that conformed to standards set by Labor Code, sections 7151 and 7152." However, an examination of the decision rendered in the previous appeal does not support this claim. A clear statement of the facts involved in this case and an equally clear discussion of the law of the case may be found in the opinion rendered when this case was before the court after the first trial. Hard v. Hollywood Turf Club, supra. No good purpose would be served by repeating them here. Suffice it to say, that after considering the relationship existing between appellant Hard and the respondent Dixon Company, as hereinbefore narrated, the court on the former appeal said, 112 Cal.App.2d at page 269, 246 P.2d at page 720: "The Legislature could not reasonably have intended to operate a hardship upon employers by making one contractor liable for the neglects of another. If as the generalissimo of a construction job, the general contractor leaves holes in the floor or grease upon it whereby any invitee might suffer injury, of course he would be liable. But where he has agreed by subcontract with an experienced and reputable painter to paint the ceilings and walls of the building under repair and the reputable painter negligently constructs an inferior scaffold that cannot support his workmen, it is nothing short of oppression to require the general contractor to pay the total amount of damages suffered by the injured workman as the result of the painter's negligence and thereby relieve the subcontractor of all charges he might have been obliged to pay on account of the accident.

"* * * The lawmakers must have reflected that to impose the duty upon the general contractor directly to oversee all labor being performed and to inspect every device imported for use by the workmen on a particular construction and to impose nondelegable duties upon him to enforce all statutory safety provisions would be to place an extremely onerous burden upon him who has the general control over the ultimate result of the labor done yet without control or management of the means utilized to achieve the purpose planned. To adjudge appellant liable for errors of judgment on the part of 21 separate subcontractors and to hold him responsible for the enforcement of the safety statutes would be tantamount to making it an insurer of every subcontractor's activities. For appellant efficiently and effectively to direct the operations of 21 subcontractors essential to the successful consummation of so stupendous a task as the contract with the Turf Club demanded would have required such an outlay in time, labor and expense as to frustrate computation. At the same time it is doubtful that the undertaking of such manifold duties would have proved to be of greater safety or protection to the workers on the grandstand than they enjoyed under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation and Insurance Act whereby every immediate employer is in duty bound to furnish his employees with all necessary, safe appliances and safe working area. Certainly such employer is in the best possible position more effectively to guard his own employee's welfare. Because the Legislature adopted this view it did not direct the scaffolding legislation to apply to an owner or general contractor. Adequate provision was made for the benefit of an injured worker to recover from his own employer before the Industrial Accident Commission which was granted judicial power." And, from the foregoing and other reasoning contained in the previous opinion the court concluded that the respondent herein was under no statutory nondelegable duty to provide the safeguards required by the Labor Code sections 7151 and 7152, relied upon by appellant Hard herein. Since the former decision in the instant case resolved all the questions here presented adversely to the contentions of appellant Hard, the decision becomes the law of the case and is controlling here.

[5] Coming now to a consideration of the appeal of Harry Macofsky, we deem it unnecessary to pass upon the applicability of the doctrine of the law of the case in his appeal for the reason that under well known and firmly established rules governing the power of the court to grant a nonsuit, we are satisfied that the conclusion of the trial court was correct. The record reflects that appellant Macofsky, like appellant Hard, was the employee of the subcontractor Arenz-Warren Company, and not of respondent Dixon Company. The latter had no control, management or direction over appellants in the work they were doing, nor did respondent general contractor direct the details of the manner in which the work was to be done by the subcontractor or furnish any of the scaffolding or other equipment or materials with which the painting work was to be done. As stated by the court in the previous appeal, Hard v. Hollywood Turf Club, supra, 112 Cal.App.2d at page 274, 246 P.2d at page 724: "A general contractor may be liable for injuries resulting from defective appliances only when he has the privilege of selecting them or the materials out of which they are made [citing cases], but he is not liable for injuries caused by defective scaffolds or other instrumentalities unless he has supplied them [citing cases]."

[6] While appellant Macofsky, strictly speaking, may not come within the doctrine of the law of the case, nevertheless, he relies upon the identical evidence which was given at the first trial of appellant Hard, and which evidence, under the previous decision of this court, was held to establish that respondent Dixon Company was not the employer of appellant. From this it necessarily follows that respondent Dixon Company had no statutory duties to fulfill toward either of the appellants herein. Manifestly, it must be said that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of appellant Macofsky, if such a verdict was returned. Biondini v. Amship Corp., 81 Cal.App.2d 751, 754, 185 P.2d 94. The motion for a nonsuit was, therefore, properly granted as to appellant Macofsky.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgments, and each of them, from which these appeals were taken, are affirmed.

134 Cal.App.2d 250

Muriel S. LINEHAN, Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

Margaret Schuyler LINEHAN, Defendant and Appellant.
Civ. 20722.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
July 5, 1955

Hearing Denied Sept. 1, 1955.

Action charging defendant with libel, slander and invasion of plaintiff's right to privacy in making statements that defendant was still lawfully married to her ex-husband, whom plaintiff had married, and that plaintiff was living with him illegally and sinfully. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Kenneth C. Newell, J., the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that evidence was sufficient to sustain finding that defendant was guilty of slander and that she had invaded plaintiff's right to privacy.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Libel and Slander ☞112(1)

Torts ☞27

In action charging defendant, who claimed she was lawful wife of plaintiff's husband, with libel, slander, and invasion of plaintiff's right to privacy, in making numerous charges that plaintiff was not lawful wife of defendant's ex-husband and that she was consorting with him illegally and sinfully, evidence sustained finding that defendant was guilty of slander and of invasion of plaintiff's right to privacy.

2. Appeal and Error ☞989

Function of reviewing court is not to retry cause and it is not authorized to review evidence except where, on its face, it must justly be held that it is insufficient to support ultimate issues involved.

3. Appeal and Error ☞994(3), 1012(1)

Trier of facts is exclusive judge of credibility of witnesses, and is judge of effect and value of evidence addressed to him, except in those instances where it is declared by law that it shall be conclusive proof of the fact of which it relates. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1847, 2061.

4. Appeal and Error ☞931(1)

On appeal, every intendment is to be indulged in which tends to support the judgment, and every reasonable inference that may be drawn from facts which tends to support the findings must be accepted.

5. Appeal and Error ☞931(1)

On appeal by defendant from judgment in favor of plaintiff, construction of evidence is to be in support of findings, with all conflicts resolved in favor of plaintiff.

6. Appeal and Error ☞901, 1010(1)

Where appeal is based on claim that evidence is not sufficient to sustain determination arrived at by trial court, burden rests upon appellant to demonstrate that there is no substantial evidence to support challenged findings, and reversal may be ordered only when reviewing court can say as matter of law that there is a lack of substantial facts in record upon which trial court could have based any reasonable inference in support of his findings.

7. Appeal and Error ☞989, 996

When a verdict is attacked as being unsupported, power of reviewing court begins and ends with determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, which will support the conclusion reached by the jury, and when two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts, reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of trial court.

Margaret Schuyler Linehan, in pro. per.

George E. Lindelof, Jr., Herbert C. Meade, Los Angeles, for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

[1] In a complaint containing ten causes of action plaintiff charged defendant with libel in Counts I, II and III; Counts IV, V, VI, VII, VIII and IX charged slander, while Count X alleged invasion of plaintiff's right to privacy. Following a trial before the court without a jury judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff on Counts IV, V, VI and IX (slander), and Count X (invasion of privacy). Damages were assessed at $1,500 compensatory and $2,500 as punitive. Motion for a new trial was denied. Defendant prosecutes this appeal from the judgment.

After all briefs were on file and at the time the cause was called for oral argument, respondent presented a motion to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that " * * * no valid ground of appeal is presented by Appellant's Opening Brief and that said appeal is made frivolously and for the purpose of delay." Said motion was submitted for decision. Upon consideration of the record we have concluded to deny the motion to dismiss and to determine the appeal on the merits.

The following we regard as a fair epitome of the factual background surrounding this litigation as reflected by the record. At all times embraced within the pleadings defendant was a former wife of one Robert E. Linehan, having obtained a judgment of divorce from him on October 23, 1946, in the Second Judicial District of the State of Nevada, County of Washoe, and in which action she was the plaintiff and testified. Prior to the events about to be narrated, appellant was never re-married to Linehan. Respondent in this action married Linehan April 15, 1950, at Las Vegas, Nevada. There was evidence that following this marriage between respondent and Linehan, appellant held herself out publicly as the only lawful wife of Linehan. The record below discloses that pursuant to a design on her part, and over a period of some two years, appellant made repeated personal and telephone calls to the home of respondent and respondent's relatives, and stated to third persons that respondent was not the lawful wife of Linehan but was cohabiting with him knowing him to be the husband of appellant. The latter repeatedly engaged in public episodes of name-calling and vilification of respondent in connection with the latter's marriage. Appellant followed respondent from Whittier, California to Boston, Massachusetts, to Montreal, Canada, in each of which places respondent then resided, and repeated the foregoing charges to third persons. Appellant wrote relatives of respondent, repeating the above charges and accusing respondent of poisoning Linehan. In a divorce proceeding between respondent and Linehan, appellant appeared in the courtroom and repeated the above charges and characterized respondent's marriage as "bigamous." Appellant stated to another relative of respondent, and to a friend, that respondent was consorting with Linehan illegally and sinfully. In the presence of various persons, appellant stated respondent was a narcotics addict.

Until the time of trial of this action the divorce secured by appellant in 1946 had not been modified or set aside, and during such times was in full force and effect. Respondent secured an interlocutory decree of divorce from Linehan in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County on February 27, 1952. Thereafter, on June 28, 1952, appellant herein entered into a re-marriage with Linehan in Storey County, Nevada.

There was evidence that appellant asserted she was living intermittently with Linehan at various times following the foregoing 1946 Nevada divorce, and that she prepared and widely distributed documentary material purporting to show an intimate association with Linehan during the period he was married to respondent. The record however, is barren of any evidence to support appellant's claim that she was legally married to Linehan at any time subsequent to October 23, 1946, and the date of trial of this action.

The court made comprehensive and specific findings that respondent's marriage to Linehan was legal and lawful, and that appellant herein herself instituted the above action for divorce against Linehan, was personally present in the courtroom at the time the decree of divorce was granted and testified in the case. That, "It is true that continuously since the said April 15, 1950, the defendant has falsely and knowingly represented herself and held herself out to the whole world, orally and in writing, as the lawful wife of the said Linehan." That appellant herein spoke to other persons of and concerning respondent substantially as follows, "'Muriel is not Robert Linehan's legal wife. I am his only legal wife. Muriel was warned not to marry Bob, but instead she went through a fake marriage and now pretends to be Mrs. Linehan. She is living with Bob illegally and sinfully.' It is true that the aforesaid words of defendant were wholly false and were uttered by defendant with full knowledge of their falsity, and were uttered and published by the defendant maliciously." That appellant made other false statements, such as, "That woman (meaning respondent herein) is consorting illegally with my husband, and she has been warned of it repeatedly." Also the court found that appellant uttered statements of and concerning respondent such as, "Muriel has no right pretending to be Mrs. Linehan and keeping Bob (meaning Robert E. Linehan) here against his will. She is doing a shocking and immoral thing."

Upon competent evidence the court found that, "It is true that on or about the 15th day of April, 1950, the defendant conceived and formulated a design, the object of which was to harass the plaintiff by representing to the world, orally and in writing, that plaintiff was not the lawful wife of the said Robert E. Linehan but was associating with the said Linehan immorally and sinfully. It is true that in execution of the said design, defendant made repeated personal and telephone calls to the home of plaintiff and plaintiff's relatives, and stated to plaintiff, to plaintiff's mother, brother and sister-in-law, and to a friend of plaintiff's, and in the presence and hearing of other persons, that plaintiff was not the lawful wife of the said Linehan but was associating with him knowing him to be the husband of defendant, and was living with him in a sinful and unlawful state. It is true that in execution of the aforesaid design, the defendant followed plaintiff from plaintiff's home in Whittier, California to an apartment plaintiff maintained in Boston, Massachusetts, and later to a relative's home in Montreal, Canada, and that in each of the said places she made substantially the same statements of and concerning plaintiff. It is true that many of the aforesaid statements were made by defendant in a loud and boisterous tone of voice, and that defendant conducted herself loudly and boisterously. It is true that the defendant visited the police station in the City of Whittier, California, and there made certain allegations and complaints to authorities of and concerning plaintiff, and that the defendant visited the police station in the City of Boston, Massachusetts, and there made certain statements and complaints of and concerning the plaintiff. It is true that the defendant caused to be prepared certain writings and photographic and documentary materials in purported support of her aforesaid statements of and concerning plaintiff. It is true that the aforesaid words and conduct of defendant were uttered and performed pursuant to the aforesaid design to harass plaintiff. It is true that the aforesaid words and conduct of defendant were wholly false and were uttered and performed by defendant with full knowledge of their falsity, and were uttered and performed maliciously. It is true that the aforesaid course of conduct of defendant constituted a willful invasion of plaintiff's right of privacy, and that as a direct result of the said course of conduct the plaintiff suffered public humiliation and embarrassment."

Throughout the trial and on this appeal appellant advances the claim that she was repeatedly informed by Linehan that his marriage to respondent was invalid. That any and all of her acts, statements, utterances and writings were made "in the best of faith and upon the invitation of respondent and her mother, who constantly invited appellant to confer with them concerning the situation created by the association of Robert E. Linehan, appellant, respondent and her mother." As stated in appellant's brief, "Appellant takes the position, as brief as it may be, that any of the acts, statements, communications or actions done by her as related by testimony in the transcript of the lower court were not done with malicious intent, but were done in duty and good faith and for the purpose of clarification of a confused association of the individuals concerned, and such acts were brought about and induced by the utterances of the respondent, her mother and Robert E. Linehan." (Emphasis added.)

[2-6] We are confronted with an appeal wherein the appellant mistakes the powers and limitations of a reviewing tribunal. Our function is not to retry the cause and we are not authorized to review evidence except where, on its face, it may justly be held that it is insufficient to support the ultimate issue involved, in which case it is not a review of a question of fact but purely one of law. Reviewing judges are, obviously, in no position to determine the credit which should be accorded to witnesses or weigh their testimony. The trier of facts is the exclusive judge of the credibility of witnesses, Code Civ.Proc., sec. 1847, and is the judge of the effect and value of evidence addressed to him, except in those instances where it is declared by law that it shall be conclusive proof of the fact to which it relates, Code Civ.Proc., sec. 2061. No questions of law are presented on this appeal. It offers only questions of fact because, if the statements allegedly made by appellant were in fact uttered and published by her in the manner and form, and under the circumstances shown by testimony in the record, there can be no question but that they were actionable. Under well established and elementary principles of law, where an appeal is taken, every intendment is to be indulged in which tends to support the judgment, and every reasonable inference that may be drawn from the facts which tend to support the findings must be accepted. In re Estate of Bristol, 23 Cal.2d 221, 223, 143 P.2d 689. The construction of the evidence is to be in support of the findings, Patten & Davies Lumber Co. v. McConville, 219 Cal. 161, 164, 25 P.2d 429, with all conflicts resolved in favor of the respondent. And where as here, the contention is advanced that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the determination arrived at by the trial court, the burden rests on the appellant "to demonstrate that there is no substantial evidence to support the challenged findings", Nichols v. Mitchell, 32 Cal.2d 598, 600, 197 P.2d 550, 552. It is only when the appellate court can say as a matter of law that there is such a lack of substantial facts in the record upon which the trial court could have based any reasonable inference in support of its findings, that a reversal may be ordered. The scope of appellate review is thus stated in Crawford v. Southern Pacific Co., 3 Cal.2d 427, 429, 45 P.2d 183, 184:

[7] "It is an elementary, but often overlooked, principle of law, that when a verdict is attacked as being unsupported, the power of the appellate court begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support the conclusion reached by the jury. When two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts, the reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court. [Citing cases.]"

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied. The judgment is affirmed.

W. L. BRADEN et al., Defendants,

W. L. Braden, and Zipper Gun Club, an unincorporated association, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 8637.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

June 23, 1955.

Action by lessee against owners and lessees of adjoining land to recover damages for partial loss of growing crop of milo corn caused by alleged negligent flooding of land by defendants. The Superior Court, Sutter County, Warren Steel, J., entered judgment in favor of plaintiff and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that trial court did not err in giving plaintiff's requested instruction as to damages even though it did not instruct jury to deduct 25 per cent of gross value of crop which was lessor's share, where it appeared from record that plaintiff was paying a share of crop as rent and therefore had title to entire crop until plaintiff delivered to lessor his share, but cost of harvesting should have been deducted from damages.

Judgment affirmed as modified.

1. Waters and Water Courses $\S$ 179(5)

In action by lessee against owners and lessees of adjoining land to recover damages for partial loss of growing crop of milo corn caused by alleged negligent flooding of land by defendants, trial court did err in giving plaintiff's requested instruction that plaintiff was under no duty to anticipate flooding of his land by negligence of others and his failure to protect his land by dams did not constitute contributory negligence, since the plaintiff was under no duty to keep water from flooding his land.

2. Negligence $\S$ 68

Landowner may make any lawful use of his land and it is not contributory negligence to neglect to take precaution to avoid future injury which can only occur as result of another's negligence.

3. Waters and Water Courses $\S$ 179(1)

In action by lessee against owners and lessees of adjoining land to recover damages for partial loss of growing crop of milo corn caused by alleged negligent flooding of land by defendants, defendant's denial of negligence would be enough to place in issue the question of unavoidable accident.

4. Trial $\S$ 260(7)

In action by lessee against owners and lessees of adjoining lands for damages for partial loss of growing crop caused by alleged negligent flooding of land by defendants, instruction as to unavoidable accident, while not erroneous if given, was not erroneously refused where case was tried upon respective parties' theories of negligence occasioned by want of ordinary care of one or the other, and where all elements of defendants' liability were covered by other instructions, which also covered only basis upon which unavoidable accident could have been determined.

5. Appeal and Error $\S$ 882(12)

In action by lessee against owners and lessees of adjoining land to recover damages for partial loss of growing crop of milo corn caused by alleged negligent flooding of land by defendants, defendants could not complain of trial court giving plaintiff's requested instruction on damages, where defendants requested a similar instruction.

6. Waters and Water Courses $\S$ 179(5)

In action by lessee against owners and lessees of adjoining land to recover damages for partial loss of growing crop caused by alleged negligent flooding of land by defendants, trial court did not err in giving plaintiff's requested instruction as to damages which instruction did not instruct jury to deduct 25 per cent of gross value of crop which was lessor's share since it appeared from record that plaintiff was paying a share of crop as rent and therefore had title to entire crop until he delivered lessor his share and was entitled to recover all damages. West's Ann.Civ.Code, $\S$ 1926.

7. Waters and Water Courses §178(1)

In action by lessee against owners and lessees of adjoining land to recover damages for partial loss of growing crop of milo corn caused by alleged negligent flooding of land by defendants, cost of harvesting corn should have been deducted from award of damages.

Maurice H. Roach and Sea & Hanna, Oakland, for appellants.

Hewitt & McBride, Yuba City, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Plaintiff commenced an action against defendants to recover damages for the partial loss of a growing crop of milo corn caused by the alleged negligent flooding by defendants of land leased by plaintiff. Defendants denied any negligence on their part and also pleaded the defenses of contributory negligence and unavoidable accident. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $4,132.86, and defendants have appealed from the judgment entered on said verdict.

Before discussing the contentions urged by appellants for a reversal of the judgment we shall summarize the factual situation, as shown by the record.

From 1948 through 1952 plaintiff leased and farmed certain land in Sutter County in what is known as the Sutter By-Pass. The lease provided, among other things, that lessor should get one-fourth of the milo corn crop as rent and that plaintiff should bear all expenses of farming.

Plaintiff's land was bounded on the south and southwest by lands leased for a gun club. To the west was another gun club known as the Haley Club. To the east of plaintiff's land was a borrow pit, created by excavation of material to construct the original levees on the by-pass, and which was apparently a body of water existing the year around. Somewhere to the west of defendant's land and adjoining it, and apparently south and west of the Haley land, was the west borrow pit, also a year around existing body of water. The west borrow pit received run-off water from plaintiff's land which drained roughly south and west through the lands of the two gun clubs, and it also received both percolating and surface waters draining from the rice fields of Sutter County to the northeast. Within the west borrow pit the natural flow of the water was generally southerly.

Plaintiff obtained irrigation water from the east borrow pit and by a series of checks or small levees of about 18 to 20 inches in height controlled its flow through his crops until it reached the common boundaries with the Haley and Zipper lands. These boundaries were marked by the same type and sized levees, and plaintiff allowed the surplus irrigation water to drain from his fields through several openings made in these levees for that purpose.

Defendants had for a number of years obtained water to flood their land to provide a feeding area for water-fowl from the west borrow pit. Controlling the flow and level of water in the borrow pit and located therein was an earthen dam with a concrete spillway with removable flashboards. Defendants' employee, one Roy Addington, emplaced flashboards in the top of the dam in September, 1952. This caused water to back upon the lands of the two gun clubs and against the checks or levees marking the boundaries of the plaintiff's land with that of the two gun clubs. On the 8th of November, 1952, this water inundated about 110 acres of plaintiff's crop land. The water washed out several of the drain openings placed in the checks and also went over the top of the checks in several places. Witness Amarel, a neighboring farmer and former lessee of plaintiff's land, testified the water on plaintiff's land was over his hip boots in some places, and witness Murphy, also a neighboring farmer, testified the water was as deep as thirty inches in some places.

In September of 1952 Addington told plaintiff he was going to emplace the flashboards and flood defendants' land and that he was going to close the several drain openings on the boundary levees that day. Plaintiff told Addington he did not want the openings closed because he was not through irrigating, and that he would remove the board if put up then. Addington did not return that day, however. Plaintiff told Addington that he did not want the openings closed because he was not through irrigating, and that he would fill up the openings himself after he finished his irrigation, which was finished about one week later. Addington told plaintiff further at the time that he had "closed one of them already" and "closed the other partially," referring to the drain openings. When plaintiff finished this irrigation in September, he filled in the drain openings with soil and tamped it down with his feet.

Plaintiff had experienced trouble with defendants previous to 1952 when they had commenced the flooding of their land before he finished his irrigating and harvesting, but no actual flooding of his land had occurred.

Plaintiff learned of the flooding of his land from his neighbor, Amarel, on the 8th or 9th day of November and on the day following went to see for himself. He then found the water had washed out the levees in some places and had gone over them in some spots.

There was testimony in the record that after emplacing the flashboards in the dam, defendants made no effort to determine the effect thereof with regard to plaintiff's land or to inspect the condition of the levees.

Plaintiff testified he had about 233 acres of tillable land under lease and that in 1952 he put 220 acres of it to milo corn and this was supported by other testimony. The flooding inundated about 110 acres of planted land. Plaintiff's loss was about one-half of his crop. He computed his loss in this fashion: From the 110 acres that were not flooded he received a total harvest of 1566 sacks; from the 110 acres that were flooded he salvaged 253 sacks; and subtracting 253 from 1,566 he arrived at 1,313 sacks as the crop lost. Counsel for the respective parties stipulated the value of milo corn at Yuba City on November 8, 1952, was 3.3 cents per pound. Plaintiff estimated his loss to be 143,875 pounds of corn, but his counsel used the figure of 143,948 pounds in his argument to the jury, giving a gross figure for loss of $4,748.85. This larger poundage figure was obviously used by the jury in its computations of damage. Appellants, however, make no objection on this appeal to this relatively slight discrepancy and use the larger figure in their briefs for purposes of their own. In computing his net loss, plaintiff then deducted $287.74 as the probable expense of hauling to market the lost crop of 1,313 sacks of corn and the sum of $328.25 drying expense on the same. This left the net of $4,132.86, which is the figure the jury gave as its verdict.

Plaintiff made no deduction for harvesting on the lost crop, which he admitted would be about one-half cent per pound ordinarily. Plaintiff said he made no deduction for harvesting costs because the flooded area was "harder to harvest and harder than it would have been for the whole thing if dry." He later said that it cost more to harvest the wet ground than the "whole thing" if dry. There was testimony in the record that the harvesting machine bogged down in the flooded area, that the grain left standing was scattered here and there, and that the grain that was harvested had to be removed to the dry area because it could not be left in the wet fields.

In their opening brief appellants make only two contentions, the first being that the court erred in giving an instruction requested by respondent, and the second being that the court erred in refusing to give two instructions offered by appellants on unavoidable accident.

[1] At the request of respondent the court gave the following instruction:

"I instruct you that the plaintiff was under no duty to anticipate that his lands would be flooded by the negligence of another, or others, and he was not obliged to protect his lands by dams, checks or otherwise against such flooding, and failure on plaintiff's part so to do, does not constitute contributory negligence."

Appellants contend that this instruction was prejudicial error, in that it directed the jury to find for the plaintiff without any qualifications and removed the questions of contributory negligence from their consideration. They state:

"The evidence shows that plaintiff volunteered to do an act, the closing of the holes in the levees, and took this duty from the hands of the defendants. He would not permit the defendants to protect his property because he wanted to drain across their land. In so volunteering, in this circumstance he was under a duty to use ordinary care in performing the act. The defendants therefore had done all they could under the circumstances. The final acts of protection were no longer under their control. Certainly the issue of whether or not the plaintiff had exercised ordinary care should be left to the jury."

[2] Appellants appear to be under the impression that respondent was under some obligation to keep water which was backed up in the by-pass by appellants from flooding the land of respondent. But no such duty devolved upon respondent who was farming his leased land in a lawful manner. There was, however, a duty devolving on appellants to so conduct their operations that no water flowed upon respondent's land and crop. The fact that in the growing of his crops respondent made use of a small levee on his land did not require respondent to keep his levees in condition to keep out the water backed up by appellants. Respondent could have removed the levee altogether and appellants would still have been required to keep their water off of respondent's land. In giving the instruction complained of the court was following the rule laid down in Kleinclaus v. Marin Realty Co., 94 Cal.App.2d 733, at page 738, 211 P.2d 582, at page 584, as follows:

"The tenor of the vast majority of the decisions is that a landowner may make any lawful use of his land and that it is not contributory negligence to neglect to take precautions to avoid future injury which can only occur as the result of another's negligence.

* * * * *

"We are satisfied to hold that plaintiffs were not obliged to anticipate the negligent flooding of their land by defendants and that their permitting the drainage ditch to become clogged before the flooding started cannot constitute contributory negligence. If they had chosen to fill up the drainage ditch deliberately before the danger from flooding by defendants' negligence occurred they would only have been exercising the rights of an owner to use his land in any lawful fashion. The evidence is clear that the culvert was already clogged when the water first began to accumulate in the ditch."

We are satisfied that the court did not err in giving said instruction. Furthermore, there is abundant evidence that the water flowed over the top of the levee in a number of places so it is difficult to understand how appellants could have suffered any prejudice from the giving of said instruction even if it were held to be an erroneous statement of law.

[3,4] Appellants next contend that there was prejudicial error by the court in refusing to give the jury an instruction on unavoidable accident. Appellants tendered two proposed instructions on unavoidable accident. In defining the term "unavoidable accident" this court said in Tesone v. Reiman, 117 Cal.App.2d 211, at page 216, 255 P.2d 48, at page 51:

"* * * By this term is not meant an accident that could not be avoided at all. The term simply means an accident which is caused by something other than the actionable negligence of the parties involved. Parker v. Womack, 37 Cal.2d 116, 120, 230 P.2d 823. The so-called defense of inevitable or unavoidable accident amounts to nothing more than a denial by the defendant of actionable negligence."

'Appellants' denial of negligence would be enough to place in issue the question of unavoidable accident, Parker v. Womack, 37 Cal.2d 116, 230 P.2d 823, but here such defense was specifically pleaded. The Parker case, and another one cited by appellants, to wit, Sitkei v. Ralphs Grocery Co., 25 Cal.App.2d 294, 77 P.2d 311, both stand for the proposition that under a denial of negligence it is not error to give an instruction to the jury on unavoidable accident.

In Lloyd v. Southern Pacific Co., 111 Cal.App.2d 626, 245 P.2d 583, 589, a judgment for plaintiffs was affirmed on appeal where it was claimed, among other matters, that failure to give an instruction on unavoidable accident was error. Petition for rehearing and petition to the Supreme Court for hearing were denied. The court quoted the case of Jaeger v. Chapman, 95 Cal.App.2d 520, at page 523, 213 P.2d 404, at page 406, for the proposition that "while it would not have been error to have given such an instruction, it was not error to refuse to give it where all elements of defendant's liability were covered by other instructions." The case of Parker v. Womack was distinguished in that there the upper court held that it was not prejudicial error to give such an instruction and therefore a motion for a new trial after a verdict for plaintiffs was in error.

The Parker v. Womack case did reject the contention that the defense of unavoidable accident was limited to cases where the defendant relies upon evidence of a proximate cause beyond his control, and indicated it was available where there was no evidence that the accident was caused by factors other than the lack of care. The court pointed out in that case that the burden of showing unavoidable accident was not necessarily on the defendant; that a determination of unavoidable accident was also proper where the evidence merely shows that the plaintiff has failed in his proof.

The record in the instant case shows that the case was tried upon the respective parties' theories of negligence occasioned by want of ordinary care of one or the other, and the evidence adduced was entirely directed toward these theories and not upon any ground that the flooding was caused by any outside agency. Therefore, to have given the instructions offered by defendants would not have been error; but on the authority of the Lloyd and Jaeger cases, supra, it does not appear that the failure of the court to give one or both of the instructions was error unless the other instructions as given failed to cover the elements of defendants' liability. Instructions were given on negligence, contributory negligence, ordinary care, proximate cause, burden of proof, and duty to mitigate damages. No objection is raised as to the form and sufficiency of these instructions as given and they certainly cover all elements of defendants' liability and cover the only basis upon which unavoidable accident could have been determined under the record of this case, to wit, failure of plaintiff to prove negligence by defendants.

Appellants have filed a supplemental brief in which they contend that the damages awarded by the jury were excessive and incorrectly calculated.

[5] Appellants contend that the court committed prejudicial error in giving the following instruction offered by respondent:

"You are instructed that, in determining the amount of damage in this case, if you find from a preponderance of the evidence that any damage has been caused as a proximate result of the negligence upon which you base your findings of liability, you are first to determine from the evidence the market value of the probable yield of milo corn from the plaintiff's field, and you should then deduct therefrom the reasonable cost of producing and marketing such crop and also deduct therefrom the net market value of the crop actually produced, if any."

Appellants first contend that the giving of the instruction was prejudicial error because it did not direct the jury to deduct the 25 per cent of the gross value of the crop, which was the share of the landlord. Appellants chose to try their case on the same theory as respondent, inasmuch as they offered an instruction which is virtually identical to the one given and certainly their instruction does not even mention such reduction in damages as they now argue for. The said instruction offered by appellants, and not given by the court because covered by the instruction on damages offered by respondent, was as follows:

"If you find that the plaintiff is entitled to damages, they may be held to be the market value of the crop when matured less the cost of producing, harvesting and marketing it, deducting the value of any portion of the crop that may have been saved."

Furthermore, in his argument to the jury, which appears in the record, appellants' counsel made no mention of any such deduction of 25 per cent. So appellants would hardly be in a position to complain that the giving of said instruction on damages was error when they themselves requested a similar instruction, and when they at no time during the trial urged the point they are now making. For as stated in Yolo Water & Power Co. v. Hudson, 182 Cal. 48, at page 51, 186 P. 772, at page 774: "A party cannot complain of an instruction given at his own request, or of an error in an instruction given at the instance of his adversary, when he requests a substantially similar one. 14 R.C.L. 815, and cases cited." See also Collins v. Graves, 17 Cal.App.2d 288, 61 P.2d 1198; Story v. Nidiffer, 146 Cal. 549, 80 P. 692.

[6] But even if appellants were entitled to raise the issue upon appeal, their contention would still be without merit. For all that the record shows is that respondent as lessee was paying a share of the gross crop as rent of the land. In 14 Cal.Jur.2d, page 603, it is stated:

"If, however, a lease exists, creating a landlord and tenant relation, and even though it provides for payment of a portion of the crop, rather than money, as rent, the tenant has title to the entire crop until such time as he delivers to the landlord his share, unless the lease otherwise provides."

And as stated by this court in Cox v. Miller, 15 Cal.App.2d 494, at page 498, 59 P.2d 628, at page 630:

"It is true, as laid down in the case of Clarke v. Cobb, 121 Cal. 595, 54 P.

74, that where the relationship of landlord and tenant exists, and where the rent is to be paid by a share of the crop grown on the demised lands, and where there is no agreement to the contrary, the title to the crop is in the tenant and he is not a tenant in common in the crop with his landlord."

See also Imperial Valley Land Co. v. Globe G. & M. Co., 187 Cal. 352, 202 P. 129; Wolfsen v. Hathaway, 32 Cal.2d 632, 198 P. 2d 1; Holt Manufacturing Co. v. Thornton, 136 Cal. 232, 68 P. 708; Hicks v. Butterworth, 30 Cal.App. 562, 159 P. 224; Civil Code, § 1926.

We therefore conclude that upon the record here and the law applicable thereto, respondent as lessee of the land had title to the crops damaged or destroyed, and so was entitled to recover in this action all damages to his crops resulting from the acts of appellants.

[7] Appellants' final contention is that the amount of damages awarded respondent should be reduced by the sum of $719.74, for harvesting expense. This would be on the basis of one-half cent per pound on 143,948 pounds. It is apparent from the record that the jury took the figure of 1,313 sacks or 143,948 pounds at $3.30 per hundred pounds, making $4,748.85, and deducted therefrom $287.74 for hauling charges and $328.25 for drying charges, leaving a balance of $4,132.86, the amount of the jury's verdict. These were the figures used by counsel for respondent in his argument to the jury.

Appellants argue correctly that the jury should have followed the court's instructions on damages and deducted the cost of harvesting. Respondent testified that the reasonable cost of harvesting a crop of corn was one-half cent per pound, and this was the only testimony as to said cost. If the 143,948 pounds of corn for which respondent was allowed damages had been harvested the cost of said harvesting would have been $719.74. Respondent was not entitled to be awarded the full market price of the corn lost due to the acts of appellants without deducting therefrom the said sum of $719.74.

The judgment appealed from is hereby modified by reducing same in the amount of $719.74, and in all other respects the judgment is affirmed, the parties to bear their own costs on appeal.

v.

Robert E. MORGAN, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 5202.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

June 24, 1955.

Rehearing Denied July 20, 1955.

Prosecution for checking without sufficient funds with intent to defraud and for grand theft. Defendant was found guilty in Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clement D. Nye, J., and appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McComb, J., held that the record failed to show any prejudice in procedure whereby, after two continuances at the request of defendant, the trial court had denied his motion for further continuance on substitution of counsel.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ☞1166(8)

Record on appeal from conviction for checking without sufficient funds with intent to defraud and for grand theft failed to show prejudice in procedure whereby, after two continuances at request of defendant, trial court denied his motion for further continuance on substitution of counsel. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

2. Criminal Law ☞1035(1)

Where an accused neither objects to going to trial nor moves in trial court to dismiss under section providing for dismissal if defendant whose trial has not been postponed upon his application is not brought to trial within 60 days after signing of indictment or filing of information, error may not be predicated in appellate court upon failure of defendant to have an earlier trial. Pen.Code, § 1382.

3. Criminal Law ☞1115(2)

Error in criminal prosecution could not be predicated on court's allowing woman to remain as juror after it appeared her husband was employed by school board, where her husband's employment did not appear from record on appeal.

4. Criminal Law ☞1137(2)

When defendant in criminal prosecution was granted leave on request to file application for probation, he could not predicate error on court's referral of case to probation department and continuing time of sentence until after receipt of probation officer's report.

5. Criminal Law ☞619, 1152(1)

Motion for consolidation in criminal case is directed to discretion of trial court, and in the absence of showing of prejudice order granting motion will be upheld by an appellate court. Pen.Code, § 954, West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

6. Criminal Law ☞1166½(1)

Record on appeal from conviction for checking without sufficient funds with intent to defraud and for grand theft failed to show prejudice from consolidation of two informations for trial. Pen.Code, § 954; West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

McCOMB, Justice.

From a judgment of guilty on four counts of issuing checks without sufficient funds, with intent to defraud, and one count of grand theft, defendant appeals. There are also appeals from orders denying (1) a motion for a new trial, and (2) a motion in arrest of judgment.

Defendant does not question the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the judgment but claims that the court erred in:

[1] (a) Denying his motion for a continuance, thus forcing him to trial without allowing him an opportunity to consult with his counsel and prepare a defense;¹

[2] (b) That the court had no jurisdiction to try defendant since the trial did not commence within 60 days from the time that the informations were filed against him;²

1. This contention is devoid of merit. The case was originally set for trial November 25, 1953. On that date defendant's attorney requested a continuance upon the ground that defendant wanted to make restitution, and that possibly defendant would plead guilty to one of the counts with which he was charged. The court continued the trial to December 23, 1953, on which date at the request of defendant the case was continued until January 14, 1954. On the latter date defendant appeared in court and requested that attorney Lowell Lyons be substituted in place of his previous attorney, and that the case be continued for trial. The court granted the motion for substitution of attorneys but denied the motion for a continuance. On January 15, 1954, another motion for continuance by defendant was denied and the case was tried, attorney Lyons representing defendant at all stages in the proceedings. The record fails to show that defendant suffered any prejudice by this procedure. (People v. Dowell, 204 Cal. 109, 113, 268 P. 807; People v. Whinnery, 55 Cal.App. 2d 794, 798 et seq., 131 P.2d 33; People v. Shaw, 46 Cal.App.2d 768, 772 et seq., 117 P.2d 34.)

2. It is settled that where, as in the instant case, a defendant neither objects to going to trial nor makes a motion to dismiss the action under section 1382 of the Penal Code in the trial court, error may not be predicated in an appellate court upon failure of defendant to have an earlier trial. (People v. Scott, 74 Cal.App.2d 782, 783, 169 P.2d 970; People v. Newell, 192 Cal. 659, 669 [5], 221 P. 622.)

3. The record fails to disclose that Mrs. Farr's husband was employed by the City

[3] (c) That the court erred in allowing Mrs. Farr to continue as a juror after it appeared that her husband was employed by the Los Angeles City School Board;³

(d) That the trial judge erred in allowing the district attorney to state to the jury facts not shown by the evidence;⁴

[4] (e) The trial court erred in referring defendant's case to the probation department and continuing the time of sentence until after receipt of the probation officer's report;⁵

[5,6] (f) That the trial judge erred in ordering that two informations filed against defendant be consolidated for trial;⁶ and school board, therefore error may not be predicated upon a matter which is not within the record. (People v. Hirschler, 98 Cal.App. 499, 501 [3], 277 P. 170; People v. Jocelyn, 29 Cal. 562, 563.)

4. The record discloses that the matters objected to by defendant were predicated upon evidence duly received and in most instances introduced by defendant.

5. This contention is devoid of merit for the reason that defendant, when the verdicts of guilty were returned on January 18, 1954, expressly asked leave to file an application for probation which was granted.

6. A motion for consolidation is directed to the discretion of the trial court and in the absence of a showing of prejudice, of which there is none in the instant case, an order granting the motion will be upheld by an appellate court. (People v. Johns, 69 Cal.App.2d 737, 740 [1], 160 P.2d 102.) Section 954 of the Penal Code reads in part thus: "An accusatory pleading may charge two or more different offenses connected together in their commission, or different statements of the same offense or two or more different offenses of the same class of crimes or offenses, under separate counts, and if two or more accusatory pleadings are filed in such cases in the same court, the court may order them to be consolidated. * * *" The second information filed against defendant charged him with issuing a check without sufficient funds. This was obviously of the same class as that charged in the first information which charged one count of grand theft and three counts of issuing checks without sufficient funds. Therefore the trial judge's order was correct.

(g) That defendant was denied a fair and impartial trial for the reasons previously stated.⁷

Article VI, section 4½ of the Constitution of the State of California reads as follows: "No judgment shall be set aside, or new trial granted, in any case, on the ground of misdirection of the jury, or of the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for any error as to any matter of pleading, or for any error as to any matter of procedure, unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice." (Italics added.)

We have examined the record and are of the opinion the record sustains the verdict of guilty on each count and there has not been a miscarriage of justice in the present case. Hence, since it needs no citation of authorities to support the thesis that this court is bound by the mandate of the Constitution of the State of California, it follows the judgment and order must be affirmed. (People v. Scott, 112 Cal.App. 2d 350, 352 [1], 246 P.2d 122 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court.))

It is likewise apparent no useful purpose would be served by an extended discussion of the errors alleged by defendant, which would only be, as indicated in the cases cited in the footnotes, a repetition of principles of law well established in this state and repeatedly reiterated in opinions of the appellate courts. We therefore refrain from further discussion of the alleged errors. (Cf. Thatch v. Livingston, 13 Cal.App.2d 202, 203, 56 P.2d 549.

The judgment and orders are, and each is, affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., and FOX, J., concur.

7. An examination of the record fails to disclose that defendant was denied any constitutional right or that any prejudice resulted from the trial judge's action or

Joseph E. BIALLAS et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 16291.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

July 5, 1955.

Action on a common count for money had and received against security brokers and one of their salesmen, whom plaintiff claimed had induced him to buy worthless stock by false and fraudulent representations. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Alameda County, A. T. Shine, J., the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that evidence was sufficient to sustain finding that plaintiff was not induced to buy the stock by false representations.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨843(1)

When one sufficient finding supports judgment of trial court, it is not necessary for reviewing court to consider other findings or matters which have no relation to and cannot affect that finding.

2. Brokers ⇨106

In action on a common count for money had and received against security brokers and one of their salesmen, whom plaintiff alleged had induced him to buy worthless stock by false and fraudulent representations, evidence sustained finding that plaintiff was not induced to buy stock by fraudulent representations.

3. Trial ⇨382

In action tried to court without a jury, it is function of court to weigh the evidence.

conduct. On the contrary, the record discloses that defendant was afforded a full, fair and impartial trial,

4. Fraud — 58(1)

Proof of fraud must be clear and convincing.

J. Maxwell Peyser, San Francisco, for appellant.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, Stacy H. Dobrzensky, Oakland, for respondents.

DOOLING, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment against him in an action on a common count for money had and received. Respondents Biallas and Street had been security brokers and Schultz was one of their salesmen. The gist of plaintiff's action against them as developed at the trial was that they had induced him to buy worthless stock in three corporations by false and fraudulent representations.

[1, 2] The trial court found against appellant on the issue of fraud and since that finding is conclusive we need not consider any other findings discussed in the briefs, following the rule that "when one sufficient finding supports the judgment, it is not necessary to consider other findings or matters as to evidence which have no relation to and cannot affect this finding." 4 Cal.Jur.2d 382. From a reading of the record we are satisfied that the evidence reasonably supports this finding. It would be fruitless to go over the testimony item by item. Simply by way of example, in connection with the purchase of stock in Citizens Underwriters Corporation, which was incorporated to engage in the insurance business, appellant testified that before he bought this stock he attended a meeting with a Mr. Pettrick, who was the important figure in the company, at which Schultz was present and in which Pettrick promised appellant and Schultz a general agency. Schultz testified that he was not present at any meeting with appellant and Pettrick and that the question of a general agency was never suggested until after appellant had bought his stock. In similar fashion Schultz, who was the salesman who dealt with appellant and with whom of the three he had the most contacts, denied all of appellant's testimony with regard to false representations. The testimony of Biallas and Street was less specific, but they denied generally any recollection of discussing the purchase of any of the stock with appellant.

While it might be argued that appellant's testimony of certain representations which he testified were made by Street and Biallas was not expressly contradicted by them, none of it was admitted and the tenor of their testimony is that they made no false representations to him.

[3, 4] It is the function of the trial court to weigh the evidence. It is a rule for the guidance of the trial court that proof of fraud must be clear and convincing, 12 Cal.Jur. 832, and we are satisfied that the trial court's finding negating the making of any fraudulent representations finds adequate support in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

Civ. 20752.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

June 24, 1955.

Action on promissory note. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clarence M. Hanson, J., entered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J. pro tem., held that the evidence would sustain a finding that there had been no consideration for the note.

Affirmed.

1. Bills and Notes ⇨518(1)

Evidence would sustain finding that there had been no consideration for promissory note.

2. Joint Adventures ⇨4(4)

In absence of an agreement so to do, there is no obligation on the part of one joint adventurer to protect the other from loss of investment or to personally reimburse him for advances made in conduct of joint business.

3. Joint Adventures ⇨4(4)

Where one adventurer contributes service and other adventurer contributes property to the joint adventure, the one who contributed only services cannot recover upon dissolution (absent an express agreement on subject), compensation from co-adventurer for same; and likewise the one who has contributed capital must bear his own loss if assets are insufficient to return his investment in full.

4. Joint Adventures ⇨4(4)

Adventurer advancing more than his share of necessary expenses of joint adventure would have no claim against co-adventurer for reimbursement or contribution.

5. Contracts ⇨76

A mere moral obligation is sufficient to support an express promise only where a good and valuable consideration once existed, but not where there was no prior legal obligation. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1606.

6. Joint Adventures ⇨1.14

Joint adventure for an undefined term is terminable at will.

7. Bills and Notes ⇨92(3)

Abandonment of right and intention to terminate joint adventure and agreement to continue to render personal services to enterprise would constitute good consideration for promissory note from co-adventurer.

8. Appeal and Error ⇨931(3)

Where an omitted finding must be inferred from consideration of findings actually made, reviewing court will recognize necessary inference and consider finding in question as having, in effect, been made.

9. Appeal and Error ⇨1071(6)

Appellant cannot successfully complain of trial court's failure to find on issue when, in light of (1) evidence and reasonable inferences therefrom, (2) facts actually found and (3) judgment ordered, finding would have been adverse to him.

ASHBURN, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff Dugan sues John E. Pettijohn as administrator of the estate of Louis Luckel, deceased, upon a promissory note made by Luckel on February 9, 1950 payable to order of plaintiff on September 1, 1950 in the sum of $24,000. From a judgment for defendant plaintiff appeals. The case was tried without a jury. It appeared at the trial that plaintiff and Luckel, at the time the note was made and delivered, were engaged in a joint venture of operating the Noah Beery Paradise Trout Club located in the mountains near Palmdale. Luckel owned the land and the original arrangement was a 20 year lease to Dugan who was to bear all expenses and pay Luckel as rent one half of any net profits. Then a partnership was formed for operation of the trout club, the members being Dugan, Luckel and one Reitzler. It was soon dissolved and thenceforth Dugan and Luckel operated the enterprise as a joint venture.

After Luckel's death (on May 3, 1952) plaintiff filed a claim against his estate based upon the note, same was rejected, and he then brought suit upon the note. At the trial it developed that the note was given "as collateral security to protect plaintiff for moneys he had laid out in the past and was obligated to lay out, plus what he might have to lay out in the future, in connection with a joint venture between plaintiff and Louis Luckel, deceased, whereby they were attempting to promote what is known as the Noah Beery Paradise Trout Club." And the court held, among other things, that "plaintiff could not legally file a claim based upon the Promissory Note aforesaid because of the fact that said note was given merely as security, as set forth in Paragraph III of these findings; that plaintiff could have filed a claim for any indebtedness of Louis Luckel to him arising from said joint venture, supported by the note as collateral security, which he failed to do, and the time for filing a claim against said estate has expired, and the court further finds that there can be no recovery on said Promissory Note."

Appellant assails this finding, or conclusion, as erroneous, relying primarily upon Thompson v. Koeller, 183 Cal. 476, 480, 191 P. 927, 929, wherein the court said: "The plaintiff proved the note which was overdue by its terms, and that nothing had been paid on it. By so doing he made out a prima facie case. The defendants did not deny this or controvert it in any way. They showed merely that payment of the note was conditional because it had been given and accepted as security. This was a good defense, unless there had been a default in the obligation secured, and even then was a good defense, except to the extent of such default. The plaintiff then by way of proper replication to this defense showed that a default on the principal obligation had in fact taken place, and to an extent in excess of that sought to be recovered on the security. The effect of this proof was to show, not that the plaintiff was entitled to recover on a different cause of action from that pleaded in his complaint, but that the defense which the defendants pleaded was not a good defense, that the contingency upon which the defendants were liable upon the note sued upon had in fact occurred." The court held not only that there was no variance between pleading and proof, but also that the claim against the decedent's estate was not defective because confined to the note without mention of the principal obligation it secured. Appellant also relies upon the liberal rule concerning claims against estates which is established by Tabata v. Murane, 24 Cal.2d 221, 231, 148 P.2d 605 wherein some nine previous decisions are overruled. But this contention of appellant, though apparently well founded, requires no further consideration because it appears that, regardless of this point, he cannot recover.

Findings III and IV are now quoted in full: "III That the consideration for the signing of said Note was as collateral security to protect plaintiff for moneys he had laid out in the past and was obligated to lay out, plus what he might have to lay out in the future, in connection with a joint venture between plaintiff and Louis Luckel, deceased, whereby they were attempting to promote what is known as the Noah Beery Paradise Trout Club.

"IV That plaintiff paid out certain money in promoting said venture, the amount of which was not definitely shown by the evidence; that the said Louis Luckel advanced or paid out at least an equal amount on behalf of said venture, and the court further finds that there was no obligation on the part of plaintiff or Louis Luckel, deceased, to repay the other for any moneys so advanced or paid by either of them."

And finding VI: "In view of the above findings, it is unnecessary to find whether the allegations set forth in answer on file herein are true or untrue except that the court finds there was no consideration for the execution of said Note as hereinabove set forth in Paragraph III of these findings."

These findings of want of consideration are not challenged by appellant in either of his briefs. No point is made with reference to them. They are indirectly questioned, however, in arguing another point and to that matter reference will be made.

[1,2] The evidence amply sustains the quoted findings and the court correctly concluded that, as matter of law, there was no consideration for the note. For, in the absence of an agreement so to do, there is no obligation on the part of one joint venturer to protect the other from loss of investment or to personally reimburse him for advances made in the conduct of the joint business. This statement refers to an existing venture as to which the rights and obligations of the members have become fixed, by express agreement or implication of law, before any promise is made by one of them to protect the other from loss or to reimburse him for advances.

[3] Primarily plaintiff contributed services and Mr. Luckel property to the venture. The rule is settled that in such a venture, in the absence of an express agreement on the subject, the one who contributed only services cannot upon dissolution recover from the co-venturer any compensation for same and that the one who has contributed capital must bear his own loss if the assets are insufficient to return his investment in full. 48 C.J.S., Joint Adventures, § 11, p. 839: "Where, however, one member has supplied money and the other labor, it has been held that neither member is liable to the other for contribution for any loss sustained." See also Bowling v. Duvall, 270 Ky. 494, 109 S.W.2d 1200, 1201; Heran v. Hall, 1 B.Mon., Ky., 159; 35 Am.Dec. 178; Meadows v. Mocquot, 110 Ky. 220, 61 S.W. 28; Tiffany v. Short, 22 Cal.2d 531, 533, 139 P.2d 939; 30 Am.Jur. § 53, p. 705; 48 C.J.S., Joint Adventures, § 9, p. 836; 48 C.J.S., Joint Adventures, § 6, p. 830.

[4] It also appears that plaintiff made some cash advances to the enterprise as did Mr. Luckel. Finding IV upon this subject says that the amount of moneys advanced by plaintiff "was not definitely shown by the evidence" and that Luckel "advanced or paid out at least an equal amount on behalf of said venture." But plaintiff would have no claim on Luckel for reimbursement or contribution if perchance he had advanced more than his share of necessary expenses. Simpson v. Fulcher, Tex.Civ.App., 45 S.W. 2d 1012, 1014; *Baker v. 243 P.2d 95; In re Estate of McConnell, 6 Cal.2d 493, 58 P.2d 639. The last cited case is well summarized in the Dow opinion, 110 Cal.App.2d at page 409, 243 P. 2d at page 99, viz.: "In [Re] Estate of McConnell, 6 Cal.2d 493, 58 P.2d 639, X and Y had been partners for many years. X had devoted more time to the partnership affairs than had Y because of the latter's sickness. The partnership was dissolved, each sharing equally. Thereafter, X gave Y occasional beneficial business advice. Several years later Y gave X a $5,000 note in payment for these past services. There was no evidence that when these services were rendered Y expected to pay for them, or that X expected to be paid. The promise was held to be unenforceable, the court stating 6 Cal.2d at page 498, 58 P.2d at page 642: 'It is true that in some states a moral, as distinguished from a legal consideration, will under some circumstances be sufficient to form a valid and binding contract (citing a Minn. case [Rask v. Norman, 141 Minn. 198, 169 N.W. 704, 17 A.L.R. 1299]), but such has never been the rule in this state. California cases have construed said code section (§ 1606, Civ.Code) to mean that "a moral obligation is sufficient to support an express promise, where a good and valuable consideration has once existed." (Citing seven cases and two encyclopedias.)' (See cases collected 6 Cal.Jur. p. 181, § 124.)" Nor is a past consideration sufficient to support a contract. Simmons v. California Institute of Technology, 34 Cal.2d 264, 272, 209 P.2d 581; Dow v. River Farms Co., 110 Cal.App.2d 403, 243 P.2d 95.

[6, 7] Appellant's counsel argues that plaintiff told Luckel shortly before the note was given that the club was a failure and he had decided to quit; that Luckel offered and gave him the note (to secure him against any loss) as an inducement to continue in the venture and devote his time to it. This appears to have been a venture for an undefined term and hence terminable at will, Harris v. Hirschfeld, 13 Cal.App. 2d 204, 206, 56 P.2d 1252, and an acceptance of such an offer would constitute valid consideration for the note,—i. e. abandonment of right and intention to terminate and agreement to continue to render personal services to the enterprise.

There is some testimony of plaintiff which would support this claim of a new consideration. But there is a considerable amount emanating from the same witness which supports a contrary finding. Exemplified by the following extracts.

"Q. You don't have any distinct recollection—do you have any recollection of any conversation between you and Mr. Luckel at the time he gave you the note? A. No, except that he said 'Here is the note, it will take care of you.'

"Q. Did he give any reason for why he dated the note September 1, 1950? A. Well, for the simple reason that it was the outcome of talking about giving a note to me that brought the idea out that we could give notes to our creditors and thereby get by until the end of the season of 1950.

"Q. Did he give you any reason why he made that note come due on September 1, 1950? A. No, except that it was given at the same time all the others were.

"Q. Did you ask him why that came due on September 1, 1950? A. No, I did not, I just accepted it as, well, to take the place of something that he wanted to do for me, that is all."

Also,

"Did you at any time subsequent to the giving and delivery of this $24,000.00 note to you state to anyone that the consideration for the giving of that note was for protection and investment? A. Yes, I have already stated that.

"Q. That was the consideration? A. Yes.

"Q. What did you mean by 'protection and investment'? A. Well, he said he wanted to sell [will] me the whole place. I said that I didn't want to accept that. Then he said, 'We will, then, pay for your time and everything you have done—what you have done—and the way you have treated me. I will give you that note.'

"Q. What was the meaning of the word 'investment' there? I can understand the word 'protection' but what was meant by 'investment'? A. Oh, the investment was owed to me before I signed the lease."

Letter of September 6, 1950 from plaintiff to Luckel says in part: "Your note came due on the first as I guess you remember. I still can't fathom out why you gave me this note in such a large amount instead of simply giving me a paper stating that we are partners in this venture and no minimum rental is due you under the terms of the lease." Further testimony: "A. No, it was not to pay for any labor. That note was to repay me for the monies that I had given him personally, and for the time and the efforts that I had put in there; and also to reimburse me for money I had lost by reason of the foreclosure of that mortgage, which tied my hands."

[8, 9] The court did not specifically find upon the alleged giving of the note as inducement to stay with the venture. But the contrary is implicit in findings III, IV, and VI, quoted supra. It seems apparent that a specific finding on this matter would have gone against plaintiff. "Where an omitted finding must be inferred from a consideration of the findings actually made, an appellate court will recognize the necessary inference and consider the finding in question as having in effect been made (citing cases)." Schultz v. Los Angeles Doris, Inc., 107 Cal.App.2d 718, 725, 238 P.2d 73, 77. Plaintiff cannot successfully complain of the court's failure to find on this issue when, in the light of the evidence and the reasonable inferences therefrom, the facts actually found and the judgment ordered, the finding would have been adverse to him. Walpole v. Prefab Mfg. Co., 103 Cal.App.2d 472, 481, 230 P.2d 36." Logan v. Forster, 114 Cal.App.2d 587, 596, 250 P.2d 730, 735.

The finding of want of consideration is supported by adequate evidence and pertinent legal principles; it is determinative of the merits of this appeal.

Civ. 20655.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.
June 24, 1955.

Action for declaratory and injunctive relief. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Alfred L. Bartlett, J., granted the relief sought, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McComb, J., held that use, in Agricultural Code section prohibiting sale of imitation ice cream or ice milk in any "place" where ice cream or ice milk is sold, of quoted word, which has no reasonable or definitely accepted meaning either in general usage or in trades and industries affected by enactment, rendered such section so vague, indefinite, and uncertain as to be repugnant to due process clause.

Affirmed.

1. Constitutional Law ☞258

Criminal Law ☞13

A statute providing for criminal penalties is invalid unless it informs citizen with reasonable clarity and precision what acts are prohibited; and a statute which either forbids or requires doing of an act in terms so vague that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application violates first essential of due process of law.

2. Declaratory Judgment ☞124

Fact that constitutionality (under due process clause) of statute, the violation of which was punishable as a misdemeanor, had been questioned in declaratory judgment action rather than in a criminal prosecution was immaterial.

3. Criminal Law ☞13

That legislative history of statute, the violation of which was punishable as a misdemeanor, might make clear its meaning and application would not save enactment if it were impossible for a person to know by reading the law what it meant.

4. Statutes ☞241(1)

The rule of ejusdem generis is applied with stringency in statutes providing criminal penalties.

Use, in Agricultural Code section prohibiting sale of imitation ice cream or ice milk in any "place" where ice cream or ice milk is sold, of quoted word, which has no reasonable or definitely accepted meaning either in general usage or in trades and industries affected by enactment, rendered such section so vague, indefinite, and uncertain as to be repugnant to due process clause. McCOMB, Justice.

These are consolidated appeals involving two wholesale distributors of imitation ice cream (Jerseymaid Milk Products Company, a co-partnership, Los Angeles Superior Court No. 615255, and Market Distributors, a co-partnership, Los Angeles Superior Court No. 615297) and two food market chains (Market Basket, a corporation, and Fitzsimmons Stores, a corporation, Los Angeles Superior Court No. 615254). Declaratory relief actions were instituted by plaintiffs to determine the constitutionality of section 580 of the Agricultural Code which reads:

"Imitation ice cream or imitation ice milk shall not be manufactured, processed, frozen, handled, distributed or sold in any place where ice cream or ice milk is manufactured, processed, frozen, handled, distributed or sold."

Each of the complaints contains substantially the same allegations. In seeking declaratory and injunctive relief, plaintiffs contend that the statute is too vague to be constitutionally applied; that defendants as the administrators and enforcement officers of the provisions improperly interpreted the word "place" with respect to retail sales of imitation ice cream, to mean "store" or "building"; that the statute as interpreted constitutes arbitrary exercise of plenary power in contravention of the State and Federal constitutional requirements of equal protection of the law, and in deprivation of due process of the law; that a reasonable interpretation which would render the statute constitutionally acceptable is that ice cream and imitation ice cream would not be deemed sold in the same place if stored or placed in separate cabinets or freezers within the same store.

Following a trial on the merits, the trial court found:

"28. The word 'place' is extremely indefinite and vague. It has no definite or accepted meaning either in common usage or in the business or industry in which plaintiffs are engaged, and is not made reasonably definite or certain by the context in which it is used in said statute or by other proper means of construction.

"29. It is impossible to determine with any degree of certainty or definiteness what act or acts are prohibited by Section 580, California Agricultural Code, in view of the vagueness and uncertainty of the word 'place', as used therein. Persons, including plaintiffs, who may be subject to the criminal penalties provided for violation of Section 580, are not given any reasonably definite or certain warning by that statute of what conduct is intended to be prohibited thereby."

The court drew the following conclusions of law:

"(1) The meaning of the word 'place', as used in Section 580 of the Agricultural Code of California, is so vague and indefinite that the application or enforcement of said statute in respect to the sale, handling, or distribution of imitation ice cream by plaintiffs, or by any of them, denies to plaintiffs, and to each of them, due process of law, in violation of the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of California.

"(2) To the extent that Section 580 of the Agricultural Code of California attempts to prohibit the distribution, handling, or sale of ice cream and imitation ice cream by plaintiffs in the same 'place', said statute is unconstitutional and void because it does not inform plaintiffs, or any of them, with reasonable certainty or definiteness what act or acts it intends to prohibit, as required by the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of California.

"(5) Plaintiffs are entitled to a judgment declaring that insofar as it relates to the distribution, handling and sale of imitation ice cream by plaintiffs, the word 'place' as used in Section 580 of the Agricultural Code is so vague and indefinite that it is repugnant to the due process clause of the Constitution of the United States and of the Constitution of the State of California.

"(6) In view of the above conclusions, the Court does not deem it necessary or appropriate to make conclusions of law respecting the other constitutional issues raised by the complaints."

Judgment was rendered enjoining defendants from enforcing the provisions of section 580 of the Agricultural Code. The court adjudged:

"It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that insofar as it relates to the distribution, handling, sale, and offering for sale of imitation ice cream by plaintiffs the word 'place' as used in Section 580 of the Agricultural Code is so vague and indefinite that it is repugnant to the due process clause of the Constitution of the United States and of the Constitution of the State of California."

From the judgment defendants have appealed.

Facts: Plaintiffs are licensed wholesalers and retailers of imitation ice cream, a frozen dessert product which differs from ice cream only in that vegetable fats or oils are substituted for the butter fat which is found in ice cream. Imitation ice cream contains nothing harmful to human health and does contain substances which are valuable in human nutrition. Plaintiffs distribute and sell imitation ice cream only in package form and make no sales of their product in bulk.

Plaintiffs' sales and distribution of imitation ice cream were halted in June, 1953, by defendants' serving on them written notices to "cease immediately" the sale of imitation ice cream "in the same store or building" where ice cream was sold. This notice was purportedly based on section 580 of the Agricultural Code, set forth, supra. Plaintiffs immediately ceased the distribution and sale of imitation ice cream upon the service of the stop notices.

The containers in which plaintiffs' ice cream is sold clearly state the nature of the product. Banners with six-inch red lettering stating "Imitation Ice Cream Sold Here" are displayed in stores which sell imitation ice cream. With occasional and unavoidable lapses, the retail stores concerned in these actions have sold ice cream and imitation ice cream only from separate freezer cabinets. Plaintiffs have taken every reasonable precaution to prevent fraud or confusion or the possibility thereof in the sale of the product. There was no evidence that any customer had ever been confused or defrauded on the purchase of imitation ice cream.

[1-5] Question: Is section 580 of the Agricultural Code too vague, indefinite and uncertain to be constitutionally applied to plaintiffs' operations?

Yes. Section 705 of the Agricultural Code makes a violation of section 580 a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or by imprisonment or both.

A statute providing for criminal penalties is invalid unless it informs the citizen with reasonable clarity and precision what acts are prohibited. A statute "which either forbids or requires the doing of an act in terms so vague that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application violates the first essential of due process of law." (Connally v. General Const. Co., 269 U.S. 385, 391, 46 S.Ct. 126, 127 [70 L.Ed. 322, 328].)

The Connally case involved the interpretation of the word "locality," a word which is one of the many synonyms for "place." California courts have fully accepted and applied this rule. In People v. Saad, 105 Cal.App.2d Supp. 851, at page 854[5], 234 P.2d 785, at page 787, the court held invalid the statute, Pen.Code, § 337.5, using the words "touting" and "'practices inimical to the public interest'", saying:

"As stated in Lanzetta v. [State of] New Jersey (1938), 306 U.S. 451, 453, 59 S.Ct. 618, 619, 83 L.Ed. 888, 891; 'No one may be required at peril of life, liberty or property to speculate as to the meaning of penal statutes. All are entitled to be informed as to what the State commands or forbids. The applicable rule is stated in Connally v. General Const. Co., 269 U.S. 385, 391, 46 S.Ct. 126, 127, 70 L.Ed. 322 [328]: 'That the terms of a penal statute creating a new offense must be sufficiently explicit to inform those who are subject to it what conduct on their part will render them liable to its penalties is a well-recognized requirement, consonant alike with ordinary notions of fair play and the settled rules of law; and a statute which either forbids or requires the doing of an act in terms so vague that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application violates the first essential of due process of law.””

In Ex parte Schmolke, 199 Cal. 42, at page 48 [7], 248 P. 244, at page 245, speaking through Mr. Justice Shenk, the Supreme Court said, that the statute which was found fatally uncertain was one which attempted to exempt from its operation vehicles operating within “* * * incorporated cities or towns or the usual transfer delivery zone adjacent thereto * * *.” St.1925, p. 833, § 9. The court further stated, “We fail to be cognizant of any standard of measurement by which an operator could foretell the extent of any such ‘zone’ and be certain that he was not transgressing the law when he proceeded to conduct his business on the public highways therein.”

In re Peppers, 189 Cal. 682, 209 P. 896, 897, the Supreme Court held a statute which prohibited the shipment of oranges, “‘when frosted to the extent of endangering the reputation of the citrus industry, if shipped’”, St.1921, p. 1239, § 10, unconstitutional for the reason that the statute was too uncertain. In this case the court quoted with approval at page 686 of 189 Cal., at page 897 of 209 P. from United States v. Reese, 92 U.S. 214, 23 L.Ed. 563, as follows: “‘If the Legislature undertakes to define a new offense, and provide for its punishment, it should express its will in language that need not deceive the common mind: Every man should be able to know with certainty when he is committing a crime. * * *

It would certainly be dangerous if the Legislature could set a net large enough to catch all possible offenders, and leave it to the courts to step inside and see who could be rightfully detained, and who should be set at large.’” (See also, In re Harder, 9 Cal. App.2d 153, 49 P.2d 304; Barry v. Board of Directors, 7 Cal.App.2d 412, 46 P.2d 298; Perez v. Sharp, 32 Cal.2d 711, 198 P.2d 17.)

Our Supreme Court has held invalid the argument that a statute must be upheld because of the presumption that an act of the legislature is constitutional. In re Lockett, 179 Cal. 581, 586, 178 P. 134, 136, in passing upon such a contention the court said, “If the rule for which contention is made were to attach to all language used in statutes, then would the Court’s duty to construe statutes stand helpless before an impassable wall of presumption. When the Legislature uses language in a statute we must interpret it as language. No peculiar sanctity attaches to it because it is language used in a legislative enactment. Ambiguity is not presumed to be intelligibility merely because it attaches to a statute, nor is hopeless obscurity illuminated by the fact that two houses have passed, and a busy governor has signed, a bill.”

There is likewise no merit in the contention that in fact no criminal prosecution has been initiated against plaintiffs. In Federal Communications Commission v. American Broadcasting Co., 347 U.S. 284, at page 296, 74 S.Ct. 593, at page 600, 98 L.Ed. 699, the United States Supreme Court in dealing with a similar contention said, “It is true, as contended by the Commission, that these are not criminal cases, but it is a criminal statute that we must interpret. There cannot be one construction for the Federal Communications Commission and another for the Department of Justice. If we should give § 1304 the broad construction urged by the Commission, the same construction would likewise apply in criminal cases. We do not believe this construction can be sustained. Not only does it lack support in the decided cases, judicial and administrative, but also it would do violence to the well-established principle that penal statutes are to be construed strictly.”

Section 580 of the Agricultural Code is vague, uncertain and ambiguous because of the use of the term “place”, a word which is not defined by statute, has no reasonable or definitely accepted meaning either in general usage or in the trades and industries here affected. It is not made reasonably certain by the context in which it is used.

In Webster’s New International Dictionary, Second Edition, Unabridged, (1939) Volume II, p. 1877, there are listed 19 main definitions and some 50 subsidiary definitions, including "locality, spot, building, part of a building, or other spot set apart for a special purpose." It is readily apparent that the dictionary does not provide a guide for conduct under section 580 of the Agricultural Code, and that a person reading such definitions will emerge confused and uncertain if he attempts to determine with any accuracy the meaning of "place," relying on the dictionary.

2 Bouv. Law Dict., Rawle's Third Revision, 1914, likewise does not give a definite or established meaning for the word in legal parlance. In Volume 2, page 2595, it is said, "Any locality limited by boundaries however large or small. It may be used to designate a country, state, county, town, or a very small portion of a town. The extent of the locality designated by it must, generally, be determined by the connection in which it is used."

The Attorney General of California has likewise indicated uncertainty as to the meaning of the word "place," because in an opinion interpreting a similar statute, section 28000 of the Health and Safety Code, which provided, "Horse meat shall not be sold in public markets where other meat and meat food products are sold", he says in his opinion that under this statute horse meat may be sold in public markets "in places territorially or physically separated from those places at which meat or other meat products are sold (emphasis supplied)." On the basis of this opinion it could logically be contended that "place" refers to a particular spot within a store and that section 580 will not be violated if ice cream and imitation ice cream are sold in the same store in places territorially or physically separated from each other within the store.

The decisions of the appellate courts have likewise indicated that the term "place" has no definite and certain meaning. In Standley v. Knapp, 113 Cal.App. 91, at page 98, 298 P. 109, at page 112 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court), the court stated: "In American and English Encyclopedia, second edition, at page 829, it is stated: 'The term place, in popular usage, is very indefinite. In legal parlance it is equally indefinite. The extent of the locality designated by it must generally be determined by the connection in which it is used.'"

Defendants attempt to show that "place" in section 580 of the Agricultural Code means "place of business" or "establishment" by citing other sections of the Agricultural Code which use these latter terms. An examination of these sections leads more reasonably to the conclusion that when the legislature meant "place of business" or "establishment" it meant just exactly what it said and knew how to say it.

The net result of any attempt to determine the meaning of "place" is complete uncertainty and confusion. A grocer cannot know whether he can sell imitation ice cream in the same "locality" where ice cream is sold. He cannot guess with any accuracy whether or not it is permissible to sell imitation ice cream in the same building or part of a building where he sells ice cream. If, for example, a producer of ice cream has a concession in his store which sells ice cream there, he does not know whether a sale by him of imitation ice cream in a different part of his store will violate the law if his store has several separate departments, and ice cream is sold in one and imitation ice cream is sold in another. In the event he rents a "stall" in the Grand Central Market, extending between Broadway and Hill Streets in Los Angeles, he is uncertain whether he may sell imitation ice cream at his "stall" if any other seller handles ice cream at any other location in that market. If our seller has a store on the fifth floor of a building, he does not know whether he will violate the law by selling imitation ice cream there when a tenant on the first floor is selling ice cream.

The inevitable result of the use of such a vague, uncertain, ambiguous term as "place" in section 580 is to force the citizen to guess at what the law proscribes. Section 580 leaves him no "measuring stick" as to what is within and what is outside the law. Clearly the "void for vagueness" principle is here applicable.

No person may be compelled, as the citizen is here compelled, to guess blindly as to what he may or may not do, and to run the substantial risk, if not the certainty, of being imprisoned or fined for guessing wrong. "It is the right of every person to know exactly what particular acts are prohibited." (In re Harder, 9 Cal.App.2d 153, 155, 49 P.2d 304, 305.) Section 580 of the Agricultural Code is so vague that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and application; thus it violates the first essential of due process. (See Connally v. General Const. Co., supra, 269 U.S. 391, 46 S.Ct. 127.) It is apparent from the record that the same confusion has beset defendants. In their opening brief, with reference to the meaning of the word "place", they say, "* * * where two distinct and separate businesses are carried on by different proprietors under one roof one may handle imitation ice cream the other, ice cream; neither may handle both."

On the other hand, Mr. O. A. Ghiggoile, Chief of the Bureau of Dairy Service of the Department of Agriculture, testified as follows:

"Q. Remember a conversation you had with Mr. Neal Wells in April or May, 1953, in which you expressed the opinion that in construing the word 'place' that if you had a 14-story building and you sold ice cream on the first floor you could not sell imitation ice cream on the 14th floor, or words to that effect? A. Words to that effect, but I don't recall a 14-story building.

"Q. What were your words? A. 'Place' in my opinion would be construed, would be that building as long as it was in the same ownership, regardless of how many stories.

"Q. Would it make any difference if it was under separate ownership? A. No.

"Q. It is your interpretation, then, and the interpretation of the Department of Agriculture, it is a place or building; is that correct? A. Yes.

"Q. Without respect to ownership? A. Yes."

Clearly the statement in the brief and the testimony of defendants are inconsistent.

There is likewise no merit in defendants' contention that the legislative history of section 580 makes its meaning and application clear. Even if this were so the statute would be impossible for a person to know, by reading the law, what it means. (Mayhew v. Nelson, 346 Ill. 381, 178 N.E. 921, 923.) A consideration of the legislative history of this statute fails to demonstrate that the statute means what defendants say it does, but in fact supports an interpretation under which the statute would not apply to plaintiffs' sales of imitation ice cream.

In its original form this statute (Stats. of 1923, Chap. 392), used instead of the single word "place", the words "factory, plant, hotel, restaurant, boarding house, inn, soda fountain or other place." St.1931, p. 457, § 12(f). The subsection heading for the statute reads "place of sale or manufacture." The section covers two different functions of sale and manufacture. These cases are not concerned with the effect of the statute on the manufacturing process; "factory and plant" can therefore be omitted from present consideration. The remaining specific words, "hotel, restaurant, boarding house * * * [and] soda fountain" have a common analogous meaning, and were included by the legislature because they were all businesses which served food for consumption on the premises. The statute may not on the strength of the specific businesses enumerated be expanded to encompass businesses not performing this function. The words "or other place" do not authorize such expansion because of the rule of ejusdem generis which has been defined as follows:

"* * * where, in a statute, general words follow a designation of particular subjects or classes of persons, the meaning of the general words will ordinarily be presumed to be, and construed as restricted by the particular designation and as including only things or persons of the same kind, class, character or nature as those specifically enumerated. The general words are deemed to have been used, not to the wide extent which they might bear if standing alone, but as related to words of more definite and particular meaning with which they are associated." (50 Am.Jur. (1944), Statutes, Sec. 249, pp. 244, 246.)

Since the words concerning sale refer only to places where food is sold for consumption on the premises, the expression "or other place" merely refers to other places of this same nature—for example, drug stores or tea shops. The rule of ejusdem generis is applied "with stringency" in statutes providing criminal penalties. (People v. Thomas, 25 Cal.2d 880, 889, 156 P.2d 7; People v. McKean, 76 Cal.App. 114, 121, 243 P. 898; United States v. Bevans, 3 Wheat. 336, 390, 16 U.S. 336, 390, 4 L.Ed. 404.)

There is no merit in the suggestion that section 580 of the Agricultural Code provided a valid standard for regulation. In the first place, plaintiffs and this court are not faced with any such regulation. The Director has been requested to promulgate regulations interpreting the section, but has consistently refused to do so. In the second place, the promulgation of regulations interpreting section 580 would not be a mere filling out of a statutory framework but would be either a usurpation of the prerogative of the courts to determine the nature of the existing framework, or a usurpation of the power of the legislature to establish such a framework. In any event the regulations are not above the law, but subject to it. "Whenever by the express or implied terms of any statute a state agency has authority to adopt regulations to implement, interpret, make specific or otherwise carry out the provisions of the statute, no regulation adopted is valid or effective unless consistent and not in conflict with the statute and reasonably necessary to effectuate the purpose of the statute." (Govt.Code, Section 11374.)

Finally, there has been no long-continued interpretation of section 580 of the Agricultural Code as contended by defendants. Defendant Ghiggoile testified that no interpretation of that word or section was made by the Department of Agriculture from the time the present statute was enacted until sometime in 1952, when an oral or written interpretation was given to several unnamed persons, and that not even an oral interpretation was given by the Attorney General until 1953; that on June 11, 1953, at hearings held by the Department there was no representative of the Department who expressed the opinion that "place" meant "store or building". There was no application of the section prior to its application to plaintiffs in 1953.

The trial court's finding that the statute in question was so indefinite, vague and uncertain as to be unconstitutional as applied to plaintiffs, is in accordance with the statement of the United States Supreme Court in Connally v. General Construction Co., 269 U.S. 385, 391, 46 S.Ct. 126, 127, 70 L.Ed. 322, "* * * a statute which either forbids or requires the doing of an act in terms so vague that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application violates the first essential of due process of law."

In view of our conclusions it is unnecessary to consider the other grounds of unconstitutionality of the statute urged by plaintiffs.

Affirmed.

REPUBLIC OF CHINA, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

C. K. CHANG, also known as Chih-Ku Chang and Charles K. Chang, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 20592.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

June 24, 1955.

Action for alleged fraudulent appropriation of money belonging to plaintiff. From ex parte order of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Arnold Praeger, J., appointing a receiver and order confirming the appointment, the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that allegations in verified complaint and affidavit in support of application for appointment of receiver, that defendant, pursuant to conspiracy with plaintiff's agent, received $810,000 of plaintiff's funds, that defendant admitted he received that amount and that portion of it had been expended for art objects, which defendant intended to remove from United States, were legally sufficient to show that plaintiff had probable interest in property and that there was danger that property would be removed from jurisdiction of court, and appointment of receiver under such circumstances was a matter within discretion of trial court.

Order confirming appointment of receiver affirmed and purported appeal from ex parte order dismissed.

1. Receivers $\hookrightarrow$ 8, 36, 37

Allegations in verified complaint and affidavit in support of application for appointment of receiver that defendant, pursuant to conspiracy with plaintiff's agent, received $810,000 of plaintiff's funds, that defendant admitted he received that amount and that portion of it had been expended for art objects, which defendant intended to remove from United States, were legally sufficient to show that plaintiff had probable interest in property and that there was danger that property would be removed from jurisdiction of court, and appointment of receiver under such circumstances was matter within discretion of trial court. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 564.

2. Receivers $\hookrightarrow$ 4

Where basis of action was alleged fraudulent appropriation of money belonging to plaintiff, addition of third cause of action for money had and received did not change nature of action or deprive plaintiff of right to have a receiver appointed to protect his interest in property, which had been allegedly purchased with plaintiff's misappropriated funds and which was in danger of being removed from jurisdiction of court. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 564.

3. Receivers $\hookrightarrow$ 36, 37, 38

Evidence to justify appointment of a receiver may be presented in form of allegations in a complaint or other pleading, by affidavit or by testimony. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 564.

4. Receivers $\hookrightarrow$ 36, 37

Pleadings and affidavits alleging that defendant, pursuant to conspiracy with plaintiff's agent, received a sum of plaintiff's money, that art objects had been purchased by defendant with such funds and that defendant intended to remove art objects from United States were sufficient to justify appointment of a receiver. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 564.

5. Trover and Conversion $\hookrightarrow$ 32(1)

Complaint, which alleged that defendant and plaintiff's agent falsely represented to plaintiff that they had expended plaintiff's money for authorized purposes, that plaintiff relied upon such representations and, because of trust placed in agent, did not audit his account, was sufficient to state a cause of action for recovery of the misappropriated money.

6. Limitation of Actions $\hookrightarrow$ 100(3)

Action for recovery of money instituted about six months after plaintiff discovered plaintiff's agent had turned over a large sum of plaintiff's money to defendant and had falsely represented that money had been expended for authorized purposes was not barred by statute of limitation. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 338, subds. 3, 4.

7. Appeal and Error ⇐101(1)

Ex parte order appointing a receiver is not an appealable order.

Morris Lavine, Los Angeles, or appellant.

Newell & Chester and Theodore A. Chester, Los Angeles, for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Defendant appeals (1) from an ex parte order appointing a receiver, and (2) from the order confirming said appointment. He contends that it was error to appoint a receiver. He argues that: there was no statutory provision authorizing the appointment of a receiver in this kind of action; a writ of attachment could have been issued herein; the affidavit in support of the application for appointment of a receiver was insufficient; and the complaint did not state a cause of action.

The complaint alleges three causes of action. The first cause of action alleges that: in February, 1943, P. T. Mow was appointed by plaintiff as director and placed in charge of one of its purchasing offices in the United States, which office was thereafter named "Chinese Air Force Office in U. S. A."; plaintiff made advances of several million dollars to Mow; as such director it was Mow's duty to receive and hold for the account of plaintiff all moneys advanced by plaintiff to him, to pay therefrom all bills for aircraft equipment purchased by Mow, to make other expenditures authorized by plaintiff, and to return the unexpended balance to plaintiff. It is alleged further therein, upon information and belief, that in the summer of 1946 defendant Chang and Mow entered into a conspiracy to embezzle funds belonging to plaintiff. It is alleged further that, in pursuance of said conspiracy, defendant and Mow represented to plaintiff that they expended $810,000 of plaintiff's money for the purchase of aircraft equipment and payment of administration expenses; said representations were false and were made for the purpose of inducing plaintiff not to audit the account of Mow; plaintiff relied upon such representations, and, because of the trust it reposed in Mow, plaintiff did not audit his accounts; $810,000 was given by Mow to defendant, and it was expended by defendant for his use in a manner unknown to plaintiff, as a result of which plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $810,000. It was alleged further that by an order dated April 30, 1951, plaintiff abolished the office of Chinese Air Force in U. S. A., and directed Mow to deliver to plaintiff all records and funds pertaining to that office; Mow failed to comply with the directive; in November, 1951, plaintiff filed an action in the United States District Court against Mow for an accounting; prior to the date for taking Mow's deposition therein, he fled to Mexico; thereafter, the court made an order "striking the pleadings of Mow," and ordered him to account to plaintiff and to deliver to plaintiff all records and moneys pertaining to said air force office; in November, 1953, plaintiff took depositions of certain officials of the Corn Exchange Bank of Philadelphia, and discovered that Mow had turned over to defendant $810,000 belonging to plaintiff.

The second cause of action realleged the allegations of the first cause of action relating to: appointing Mow as director, advancing money to him for certain purposes, abolishing the office, Mow failing to deliver the records and funds, filing an action against Mow, taking depositions of bank officials in 1953, and learning for the first time that Mow had delivered $810,000 to defendant. It alleged further therein that about August, 1946, Mow, without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff, delivered to defendant $810,000 which belonged to plaintiff; defendant knew that Mow was an agent of plaintiff, that the $810,000 delivered to him by Mow belonged to plaintiff, that Mow was acting in excess of his authority and without plaintiff's consent. It alleged further, upon information and belief, that defendant had used said funds to purchase real and personal property in various states including California; among other properties purchased by defendant are various Chinese objects d'art including Ming vases, and also a 1953 Oldsmobile automobile; defendant has threatened to leave the United States permanently in the near future and to take with him the above described personal property; unless a receiver is appointed to take charge of said property defendant will remove the same permanently from the United States; plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law in that a writ of attachment will not lie, and defendant is now engaged in removing all of his assets including the above described personal property from California.

The third cause of action realleged the allegations of the first cause of action relating to appointing Mow as director and advancing money to him for certain purposes. It alleged further therein that defendant became indebted to plaintiff in the amount of $810,000 for money had and received, no part of which has been repaid, and that said amount is now due from defendant to plaintiff.

The prayer of the complaint was for $810,000 general damages; an order declaring that defendant holds all his property in California "including those certain objects d'art and that certain 1953 Oldsmobile," in trust for plaintiff; an order appointing a receiver to take immediate possession of the assets of defendant; and an order that defendant render an accounting.

An affidavit of Chao-Cho Shih, in support of an application for an order for arrest of defendant, stated, in part, that: Chao-Cho Shih is a citizen of the Republic of China and is in charge of the procurement office of the Chinese Air Force in the United States; he verified the complaint herein, and the allegations of said complaint are incorporated by reference in this affidavit; in May, 1953, defendant applied for a visa for entry into Indonesia, and gave his residence as Chicago, Illinois, when in truth he was residing in California; defendant has been packing his personal belongings and crating various objects d'art, consisting largely of Ming vases located at 921 South Dewey Street, Los Angeles, which defendant values at $50,000. It was stated further therein, upon information and belief, defendant intends to leave the United States permanently and "to ship all of his personal belongings, including said objects d'art." It was further stated that the art objects were purchased with funds which were received by defendant from Mow.

An affidavit of Robert M. Newell, in support of the "Order for Appointment of a Receiver," stated, in part, that on March 18 and 22, 1954, he, as attorney for plaintiff, took the deposition of defendant, and defendant testified as follows: he owns approximately 90 Chinese antiques consisting of porcelain and pottery vases and figurines, the great majority of which are packed in boxes, and are located at 951 South Dewey Avenue, Los Angeles; in his opinion they are worth between $50,000 and $60,000; he received $810,000 from Mow, and a portion of that sum was expended for said antiques. The affidavit stated further that on March 23, 1954, he (Attorney Newell) took the deposition of defendant's wife, and she testified that there are approximately 85 Chinese art objects in the residence at 951 South Dewey Avenue which belong to defendant; in addition thereto, there are approximately six porcelain vases and figurines which have been removed to her brother's ranch in Lancaster, California. It was stated further in the affidavit that the art objects at the Dewey Avenue address are in the actual possession of defendant's wife and mother-in-law; a majority of the art objects are packed in boxes, apparently for shipment to places unknown to affiant; said art objects are not a part of the plant, equipment or stock in trade of any business; since March 17, 1954, defendant has been in the custody of the sheriff under an order of civil arrest issued in this action; on March 21, 1954, defendant executed several general powers of attorney in favor of one Lee; on March 23, 1954, Lee, under authority of said powers of attorney took possession of defendant's 1953 Oldsmobile automobile, which was in storage; the whereabouts of the Oldsmobile is unknown to affiant; Lee has threatened to take possession of the art objects by virtue of said powers of attorney. It was further stated, upon information and belief, that Lee intended to take possession of said art objects and to conceal them. It was stated further that irreparable injury will be suffered by plaintiff during the time necessary for a hearing, upon notice, for the appointment of a receiver of said art objects in that during said period Lee will take possession of said objects, and dispose of or conceal them.

An affidavit of an official of the Corn Exchange Bank, filed after the ex parte order was made, stated that in August, 1946, he opened an account for Chang in said bank; Chang presented two checks, signed by Mow, as the initial deposit—one check for $300,000 and the other for $210,000; Chang stated that he was an agent of the Chinese government, working with Mow, and that the money so deposited was to be used by Chang to make purchases for China.

Appellant contends, as above stated, that there was no statutory provision authorizing the appointment of a receiver in this kind of action. He argues that no provision in section 564 of the Code of Civil Procedure, authorizing the appointment of a receiver, applies herein. Said section 564 provides, in part, that a receiver may be appointed by the court in which an action is pending in the following cases: "1. In an action by a vendor to vacate a fraudulent purchase * * * or by a creditor * * * or between partners or others jointly owning or interested in any property * * * on the application of the plaintiff, or of any party whose right to or interest in the property or fund * * * is probable, and where it is shown that the property or fund is in danger of being lost, removed, or materially injured; 2. In an action by a mortgagee * * *; 3. After judgment, to carry the judgment into effect; 4. After judgment, to dispose of the property according to the judgment * * *; 5. In the cases when a corporation has been dissolved * * *; 6. In an action of unlawful detainer; 7. In all other cases where receivers have heretofore been appointed by the usages of courts of equity."

Plaintiff (respondent) asserts that it has an interest in the property, and that said property was in danger of being removed;

and that the determination by the trial court that the protection of plaintiff's interest requires the appointment of a receiver may not be reversed unless there was an abuse of discretion.

Plaintiff cites Goes v. Perry, 18 Cal.2d 373, 108 P.2d 719, 115 P.2d 441, and argues that the facts in that case are analogous to the facts in the present case. The Goes case was an action in claim and delivery to recover possession of certain furniture and fixtures. An intervenor therein sought to impose a trust upon said property, in favor of herself and co-owners of a trust fund, on the ground that the property was purchased with money which was wrongfully appropriated from the trust fund. Upon the verified complaint in intervention and the affidavit of plaintiff's attorney therein, a receiver was appointed. It was held therein that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in appointing a receiver.

In Snidow v. Hill, 84 Cal.App.2d 702, 191 P.2d 513, which was an action to quiet title to real property, a receiver was appointed to care for and harvest fruit thereon. Appellants therein contended that the court had no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver in that case. It was stated therein, 84 Cal. App.2d at pages 704-705, 191 P.2d at page 514: "If we scan the provisions of the contract * * * and examine the averments in the affidavit * * * we find a situation in which the plaintiffs' interest in the fund is probable and the property or fund is in danger of being lost or materially injured. There is no doubt as to its being the type of action in which courts of equity have exercised their inherent power in aid of their jurisdiction to appoint receivers. * * * In Davies v. Ramsdell, 40 Cal.App. 432, 183 P. 702, the court says: 'This is an appeal from an order appointing a receiver pendente lite, in a suit in equity * * *. The appellant contends the order should not have been made * * *. In this case there were equitable considerations before the court in addition to those of the ordinary suit to quiet title. Equity has inherent power in aid of its jurisdiction to grant injunctions and to appoint receivers, and the exercise of the power rests very largely in the discretion of the chancellor. * * *'"

Takeba v. Superior Court, 43 Cal.App. 469, 185 P. 406, was a petition for a writ of prohibition restraining the superior court from exercising any control of property which was involved in an unlawful detainer action then pending in said court. The sole question for determination therein was whether the court exceeded its jurisdiction in appointing a receiver to take possession of certain fruit growing on the land. The action therein was commenced prior to the time section 564 of the Code of Civil Procedure was amended by adding the present subdivision 6, which provides that a receiver may be appointed in an action of unlawful detainer. It was held therein, however, 43 Cal.App. at pages 475-476, 185 P. 406, that the superior court was authorized to appoint a receiver under another provision of section 564, now subdivision 7, permitting the appointment of a receiver in "all other cases where receivers have heretofore been appointed by the usages of courts of equity."

Armbrust v. Armbrust, 75 Cal.App.2d 272, 171 P.2d 75, was an action by plaintiff against his former wife to rescind an agreement entered into during their marriage which provided that they would hold certain separate property in joint tenancy. Defendant filed a verified cross-complaint therein in which she prayed for an accounting and for the appointment of a receiver, alleging that plaintiff was in possession of a parcel of the joint tenancy property. Plaintiff therein appealed from an order appointing a receiver. It was stated in that case, 75 Cal.App.2d at page 275, 171 P.2d at page 77, that: "The appointment of a receiver is a matter in the discretion of the trial court (22 Cal.Jur. 435). If it appears that the party seeking the appointment 'has at least a probable right or interest in the property' and that 'there is danger of its being lost or destroyed or misappropriated', then if 'upon conflicting testimony, such right or interest and danger of the destruction or misappropriation of the property or fund are found to exist, a reviewing court is as a general rule in no position to say that a nisi prius court has abused its discretion in the appointment of a receiver.'"

[1] In the present case, in view of the allegations of the verified complaint, and of the affidavit of plaintiff's attorney, the court had for its consideration allegations to the effect that appellant, pursuant to a conspiracy with plaintiff's agent Mow, received $810,000 of plaintiff's funds; that appellant admitted that he received said amount of money and that a portion of it was expended for the art objects (the subject of the receivership herein) which were located at Dewey Avenue; and that appellant intended to remove said art objects from the United States. The allegations were legally sufficient to show that plaintiff has a probable interest in the property and that there was danger that the property would be removed from the jurisdiction of the superior court. Under these circumstances the appointment of a receiver was a matter within the discretion of the trial court.

[2] Appellant's contention that a writ of attachment could have been issued herein and that therefore it was error to appoint a receiver is not sustainable. He asserts that each of the three causes of action alleged herein is, "in the last analysis," for money had and received; that such an action is upon an implied contract, and that an attachment will issue in such an action. As above shown, the basis for the action herein was the alleged fraudulent appropriation of money belonging to plaintiff. The addition of the third cause of action for money had and received did not change the nature of the action or deprive plaintiff of the right to have a receiver appointed to protect its interest in the property which was allegedly purchased with its misappropriated funds. In Stone v. Superior Court, 214 Cal. 272, at page 274, 4 P.2d 777, at page 778, 77 A.L.R. 743, it was stated that: "The fact that plaintiff's complaint * * * contained two counts, and that the second count therein was in the form of a common count for money had and received, cannot be held to change the situation or to entitle the plaintiff to the issuance of a writ of attachment in said action, since her cause of action is admittedly the same in each count, and is founded upon the facts set forth in detail in the first count of her complaint, from which it clearly appears that her only cause of action is one founded upon the defendants' alleged fraud and deceit." See also Stowe v. Matson, 94 Cal.App.2d 678, 681, 211 P.2d 591.

[3, 4] As to appellant's contention, that "the affidavit" (of plaintiff's attorney) in support of the application for the appointment of a receiver was insufficient, it is to be noted that the appointment was not based solely on the affidavit of plaintiff's attorney. The court recited in its ex parte order appointing a receiver that it had before it, in support thereof, the complaint, plaintiff's petition for an appointment of a receiver, and the affidavits of plaintiff's attorney and of Chao-Cho Shih. "Evidence to justify the appointment of a receiver may be presented 'in the form of allegations in a complaint or other pleading, by affidavit or by testimony.'" Armbrust v. Armbrust, supra, 75 Cal.App.2d 272, 274, 171 P.2d 75. Appellant asserts that "there is neither in the complaint nor the affidavits any legally competent evidence" from which property purchased by appellant with the funds of plaintiff can be identified. The affidavit of Chao-Cho Shih states that the art objects to be taken into custody by the receiver herein were purchased with funds, or "proceeds thereof," which were received by defendant from Mow. The affidavit of plaintiff's attorney states that defendant testified in his deposition that a portion of the money he received from Mow was expended for the art objects involved herein. The pleadings and affidavits were sufficient to justify the appointment of a receiver.

[5, 6] Appellant contends further, as above stated, that the complaint did not state a cause of action against the defendant and that therefore it was error to appoint a receiver. Appellant demurred to the complaint on the grounds, among others, that no cause of action was stated, and that the action was barred by subdivisions 3 and 4 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Appellant argues that the action was not filed within three years after the alleged misappropriation, as required by subdivisions 3 and 4 of said section 338; and that the complaint shows that plaintiff did not use reasonable diligence in ascertaining the facts constituting the alleged fraud. The complaint herein was filed March 8, 1954 and it alleged, as above shown, that in November, 1953, plaintiff discovered that Mow had turned over $810,000 of plaintiff's money to defendant; that defendant and Mow falsely represented to plaintiff that they had expended $810,000 of plaintiff's money for the purchase of aircraft equipment and administration expenses; that plaintiff relied upon said representations and, because of the trust plaintiff reposed in Mow, did not audit his accounts. The complaint stated a cause of action. The action is not barred by the statute of limitations.

[7] The ex parte order appointing a receiver is not an appealable order, Moore v. Oberg, 61 Cal.App.2d 216, 220, 142 P.2d 443; Baumann v. Bedford, 18 Cal.2d 366, 368, 115 P.2d 437, and the appeal from said order should be dismissed.

The order confirming the appointment of a receiver is affirmed. The purported appeal from the ex parte order is dismissed.

on plaintiffs' property fell across transmission line, energizing telephone wires and igniting switchboard in plaintiffs' building. The Superior Court, Tehama County, Ben R. Ragain, J., rendered judgment on verdict for plaintiffs, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held, inter alia, that owners of land adjacent to electric company's easement for transmission line were not chargeable with negligence, in respect to fire damage which occurred when tree on their property fell across transmission line and energized telephone wires, for failure to inspect trees along easement and in failing to remove any which might have appeared to be dangerously close thereto nor were they called upon to anticipate negligence on part of electric company and to make provision against its defects.

Judgment affirmed.

See also, 275 P.2d 525.

1. Electricity Ⓒ19(5)

In action against electric company for fire damage allegedly sustained when tree on plaintiffs' property fell across company's power line, thus energizing a telephone wire leading to plaintiffs' building and igniting telephone switchboard therein, evidence was sufficient to sustain that electric company had been negligent in failing to protect against falling of the tree.

2. Electricity Ⓒ14(1)

Care exercised by an electric company must be commensurate with and proportionate to dangerous propensities of electricity.

3. Electricity Ⓒ16(3)

Electric company could be found negligent in failing to protect against the falling of a tree across its transmission line, even though tree was on property adjacent to electric company's easement.

4. Negligence Ⓒ28

A man does not become a wrongdoer by leaving his property in a state of nature.

5. Electricity Ⓒ18(3)

Owners of land adjacent to electric company's easement for transmission line were not chargeable with negligence, in respect to fire damage which occurred when tree on their property fell across transmission line and energized telephone wires, for failure to inspect trees along easement and in failing to remove any which might have appeared to be dangerously close thereto nor were they called upon to anticipate negligence on part of electric company and to make provision against its defects.

6. Witnesses Ⓒ268(2)

In action against electric company for fire damage sustained when tree on plaintiffs' land fell across company's transmission line, energizing telephone wires, limiting company's cross-examination of plaintiff's witnesses concerning plaintiff's knowledge of possibility that tree might fall, was not error, since plaintiffs had no duty to inspect trees or to remove trees likely to fall.

7. Evidence Ⓒ150

Testimony as to experiments is addressed primarily to discretion of trial court, but it must appear that conditions and circumstances were in general same in illustrative case and case at hand, and the determination whether conditions were sufficiently similar to make experiments of any value in aiding jury is a matter resting in sound discretion of judge.

8. Evidence Ⓒ557

In action against electric company for fire damage allegedly sustained when tree fell across transmission line, energizing telephone wires and igniting switchboard in plaintiffs' building, admission of testimony concerning experiments illustrating the effect of excessive voltage on an installation such as existed in plaintiffs' building was not abuse of discretion.

9. Evidence Ⓒ547

Questions posed to witnesses, who were experts in electrical field, in action for fire damage allegedly sustained when telephone wires became energized by defendant's transmission line, concerning force of electricity of certain voltage when exerted upon other objects were proper for these witnesses, even though they were not experts on fire.

10. Electricity Ⓒ19(5)

In action against electric company for fire damage allegedly sustained when tree fell across transmission line, energizing telephone wires and igniting switchboard in plaintiffs' building, evidence was sufficient to sustain finding that there had been causal relationship between transmission line and fire.

11. Appeal and Error — 1170(7)

In action against electric company for fire damage allegedly sustained when tree fell across transmission line, energizing telephone wires and igniting switchboard in plaintiffs' building, admission of witness' testimony that he had been awakened by sparks flying from a switch, that he was sure telephone line had been operating before tree fell, and that it did not operate thereafter until repaired, was, in view of great amount of like testimony by other witnesses to same effect, not so prejudicially erroneous, if error, as to warrant reversal. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

12. Appeal and Error — 1170(7)

In action against electric company for fire damage allegedly sustained when tree fell across transmission line, energizing telephone wires and igniting switchboard in plaintiffs' building, admission of photograph of tree, if error, was not so prejudicial as to warrant interference with trial court's determination. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Rawlins Coffman, Red Bluff, and L. C. Smith, Redding, for respondents.

PEEK, Justice.

This is an appeal by defendant P. G. & E. Company from a judgment in favor of plaintiffs in an action for damages for the destruction of plaintiffs' property by fire, alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence.

Plaintiffs operated a resort at Mineral which is located in the mountains approximately 40 miles east of Red Bluff. During the early morning hours of January 10, 1949, the main lodge building at the resort was completely destroyed by fire. The primary basis of plaintiffs' claim of negligence is predicated upon the falling of a tree across a power line of defendant's, causing that line to come in contact with and energizing telephone lines leading to plaintiffs' lodge, thereby causing a fire to break out in the telephone switchboard located therein.

The record shows that in 1939 plaintiffs granted to defendant a right of way for the erection of a transmission line, referred to throughout the testimony as a "tap line". Pursuant to the easement granted, defendant constructed the tap line from its main power line which was located a short distance south of the highway running through Mineral. The line so constructed was parallel to the highway, along the side of which were telephone lines, some leading to a switchboard at the lodge building about one half mile to the east. The tap line, which was uninsulated, carried approximately 11,000 volts of electricity. Near the south end of the tap line was located a transformer from which appellant took two 110-volt service connections.

At a point approximately one half mile from the lodge and about 25 feet from where defendant chose to erect its tap line along the highway, there stood a 110-foot cedar tree. This tree had a fire burn referred to in the record as a "catface" which, according to the testimony, weakened the tree to a degree. The tree was approximately 36 inches in diameter at breast height and leaned approximately five to ten degrees in the direction of the road across which the tap line was strung. The tree had some dry rot and possibly was somewhat unsafe for the further reason that it was located by itself in a cut-over area so that high winds could exert full force against it. It stood approximately 59 feet north of the telephone lines which were 30 feet from the highway, and it rose approximately 75 feet above the 35-foot poles that supported the tap line. On the night of January 10, 1949, at the hour of 12:35 a. m. or shortly thereafter, and during a high wind, the tree fell across the tap line, forcing it in contact with the bare telephone lines, thereby transmitting high voltage electric current over the telephone lines. Apparently no one witnessed the inception of the fire. Shortly after 1 a. m. an employee of plaintiffs observed a fire in the lodge which he described as coming from the area of the telephone switchboard. Witnesses living in the neighborhood testified to the steady continuous ringing of their telephones at various times beginning shortly after 1 o'clock. They also testified to blue flames and sparks shooting out from electric switches in their homes. In addition they testified that fuses in their homes were blown in some instances and the carbon blocks burned. One of two repeater coils which were located side by side on a terminal pole near the lodge, and through which the escaping power traveled, was burned out. The second, which was in no way connected with the lines on which the power was escaping, remained undamaged. A second fire occurred in a cabin near the lodge some time after 4 a. m. When the tree fell the lines were not broken and the power remained on until approximately 3:14 a. m. when a truck which was then being driven past the fallen tree came into contact with the lines and broke them causing an alarm to ring in the South Power House, awakening the attendant.

Prior to that hour no safety or protective device on defendant's power system interfered with or shut off the escaping power, although there was testimony that such alarms or protective devices could have been so regulated. The communications officer of the U. S. Forest Service testified that the damage to the repeater coils on that agency's lines was caused by "a high rate of current flow through a repeater coil for some little time—not an instantaneous surge that was discontinued," and that the damage was more severe than that caused by lightning. A witness for the defendant testified on cross-examination that if he had been informed that the repeater coil burned out shortly after the tree fell onto the line, then he "would say it had some connection with the falling of the tree." One Lynch, an electrical engineer and manufacturer of telephone equipment, testified that the voltage involved would destroy or burn out the telephone lines. Two experts, both electrical engineers and presently employed as instructors at the University of California, were called by plaintiffs, and in response to hypothetical questions involving in general the testimony previously summarized, stated that such conditions would result in a fire. They further testified that relocation of the transformer so that the power crossing the highway would be reduced to 110 volts from the 11,000 it carried, would have reduced the fire hazard as insulated wires would have done.

[1] It is appellant's first contention that the trial court erred in denying its motion for a nonsuit and for judgment notwithstanding the verdict since no actual negligence on their part was shown by the evidence. There can be no question but that defendant operated a power line; that a tree fell, bringing that line into contact with telephone lines leading into plaintiffs' resort; and that the telephone lines were abnormally energized. Under these circumstances whether or not defendant was negligent was a question of fact for the jury.

In Polk v. City of Los Angeles, 26 Cal.2d 519, 525, 159 P.2d 931, the court made the following statement, quoted with approval in the recent case of Dunn v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 43 Cal.2d 265, at page 272, 272 P.2d 745, at page 749:

"On the subject of negligence the standard of care is, that one maintaining wires carrying electricity is required to exercise the care that a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under the circumstances. Among the circumstances are the well known dangerous character of electricity and the inherent risk of injury to persons or property if it escapes. Hence, the care used must be commensurate with and proportionate to that danger."

Again, in Lozano v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 70 Cal.App.2d 415, 422, 161 P.2d 74, 78, and also cited with approval in the Dunn case, this court held that:

"The duty of due care with which the company was charged consists not only in the proper installation of the dangerous instrumentality but in the maintenance thereof in a safe condition at all times and places and under the changing circumstances of the particular case. Even if at the outset of the installation of the equipment the company may have been entirely free from fault, yet, if, under changing circumstances, a hazardous condition arose, nonaction or the failure to remedy such condition would constitute culpable negligence."

[2] As noted in the Polk case the care used must be commensurate with and proportionate to the dangerous propensities of electricity. It has further been held that it is not unreasonable to require the defendant to anticipate that during a high wind a tree might fall across high voltage lines as was the situation in the present case. Irelan-Yuba Gold Quartz Mining Co. v. Pacific G. & E. Co., 18 Cal.2d 557, 116 P.2d 611, 617.

[3] Here the defendant is arguing the same as it did in the Irelan-Yuba case, that since the tree was on the property of plaintiffs it had no obligation and no right to enter upon the plaintiffs' land and cut down the tree. But as the court in that case said, "It is not decisive that the tree was not within the limits of the portion of the right of way which had been cleared." In Rocca v. Tuolumne County Elec., etc., Co., 76 Cal. App. 569, 245 P. 468, 472, a like question was presented, and this court held that such an argument was "untenable, and does not relieve the company from liability for failure to protect its wires or take the ordinary precautions which the circumstances demanded." Again in Smith v. San Joaquin etc., Power Corp., 59 Cal.App. 647, 649, 211 P. 843, the court sustained the contention of plaintiff that if the tree in question stood in such a position as to endanger the defendant's wire, the defendant should have properly protected the same, and in failing to do so its omission was an act of negligence.

In the case of Sullivan v. Mountain States Power Co., 139 Or. 282, 9 P.2d 1038, 1044, which case is cited with approval in the Irelan-Yuba case, the court held as follows:

"The required degree of care is always graduated according to the danger attendant upon the activity one is pursuing. The standard does not vary—it is the conduct of an ordinarily prudent person. But such an individual exercises care commensurate with the dangers to be avoided and the likelihood of injury to others. Such being true, it may be well to take note of the harmful quality of electricity. Electricity is a dangerous force whose destructive qualities are greatly facilitated by its subtle, invisible, and mysterious nature. Since the plant where it is generated is often many miles distant from the place of consumption, the transmission lines frequently pass over country roads, city streets, through forests, and other places where danger to life or property lurks if the electrical current escapes from the conduit. The length of the transmission wires renders impossible the character of supervision generally bestowed upon other dangerous substances.

* * * * *

"* * * Accordingly, we conclude that the defendant, in the performance of its duty to maintain its right of way safe for the transmission of electricity, was bound to exercise a degree of care commensurate with the highly dangerous commodity which it was conveying over its wires. This duty remained unperformed so long as it permitted trees to grow in such close proximity to its uninsulated wires that it, in the exercise of the judgment of a reasonably prudent person, should have known that the tree and the wires would come into contact in a manner that would endanger the safety of others or their property."

Defendant's second contention is that the court committed reversible error in precluding its cross-examination of a witness for the plaintiffs, Harvey Brown, concerning his arrangements with the plaintiffs relative to the cutting down of trees on their property. Defendant's argument in support of such contention is that since its answer raised the issue of contributory negligence, it should have been allowed to show that if Brown considered the tree hazardous, then by reason of the alleged agency relationship between him and plaintiffs, his knowledge, under the law, would become the knowledge of plaintiffs. The same argument is also made as to the court's restriction of its cross-examination of plaintiffs concerning the same matter. Obviously such contention includes two assumptions: (1) That Brown was the agent of plaintiffs, and (2) that plaintiffs as owners of the adjacent land were thereby under a duty to inspect the trees naturally growing on their land.

[4] The last mentioned contention of defendant, and the assumptions therein contained, can best be considered together with its next contention that the trial court erred in taking the issue of plaintiffs' alleged contributory negligence from the jury. Defendant's argument in this regard in substance appears to be that if it was a question of fact for the jury whether or not defendant was negligent in failing to take precaution against the tree falling thereby causing the power line to come in contact with the telephone lines, then likewise it was a question of fact whether or not plaintiffs were contributorily negligent for the same reason, and hence both were questions of fact for the jury. As previously noted, inherent in such contention is the assumption that plaintiffs as the owners of adjacent land were thereby under some duty to inspect the trees naturally growing on their land, and if necessary to alter the natural conditions of their property. Neither party has cited us to any California case directly in point. However, to carry defendant's contention to its end result would be to charge the owners with responsibility for damage arising from the natural conditions of the country through which the power line ran. As the court noted in Salmon v. The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Co., 38 N.J.L. 5, 20 Am.Rep. 356, in the absence of special legislation a man does not become a wrongdoer by leaving his property in a state of nature.

The only statute in point appears to be Rule 35 of General Order 95 of the P.U.C. which provides in part that when overhead wires pass through trees, safety demands a reasonable amount of trimming; and that " * * * trees so located they can fall into a crossing span or into any span that could communicate the trouble to a crossing span, shall be removed wherever practical."

It would thus appear that the inspection and removal of trees near a power line is the duty of the defendant—not the property owner. Furthermore there is no question but that it was the defendant alone who selected the location of its power line, unaided and unaffected in any way by plaintiffs. The route so selected was in virgin mountain territory. The tree itself was not planted by plaintiffs—it was a wild native tree which partook of the character of the land itself. Under such circumstances it cannot be said that the taking of plaintiffs' land under the statutory authority vested in defendant, and the building of the power line, that thereby defendant could impose upon plaintiffs the duty of inspecting trees in order to make safe the transmission of power over those lines. The very essence of Order Number 35 in no way reflects upon the use to be made of the franchise, but rather is to effect the safety of its operations.

[5,6] In view of what has heretofore been said, it is manifest that plaintiffs were not chargeable with any legal neglect for failure in not inspecting trees along defendant's right of way, nor for failure to remove any which might have appeared to be dangerously close thereto. Neither were they called upon to anticipate negligence on the part of defendant and by way of prevention to make provision against its effects. Here the fire in question was found by the jury to have been caused by the tree which fell upon the high-powered lines of defendant which in turn energized the telephone lines, and since, as we have concluded, plaintiffs owed no duty to defendant to anticipate such an occurrence, plaintiffs were not compelled to alter the natural characteristics of their land or to place it in a condition to withstand such a result, and hence could not be guilty of contributory negligence in failing so to do. It necessarily follows that the trial court did not err in taking the question of contributory negligence from the jury. For like reasons the trial court did not err in limiting defendant's cross-examination of the witness Brown or of plaintiffs since the result sought by defendant related to plaintiffs' knowledge of the possibility that the tree might fall—a fact immaterial to the issues.

Defendant next contends that the trial court erred in admitting over its objection, testimony relative to experiments made by the witnesses Saunders and Pritchett. As previously noted, these witnesses were electrical engineers now serving as professors at the University of California. After exhaustive questioning concerning their knowledge of the case, they were asked concerning the experiments which they made; that is, whether power escaping down telephone lines and into a telephone switchboard in the manner shown by the evidence could break down such equipment and cause a fire. They both replied in the affirmative. Certain of their experiments, of which there were seven, were stricken; the remainder, however, were allowed to remain in the record. Defendant now contends that it was error to allow any of their testimony, primarily because it did not meet the necessary standards of such testimony, and secondly because it allowed the jury to speculate.

[7] The rule is well established that at the outset testimony as to experiments is primarily addressed to the discretion of the trial court. However, "it must appear that the conditions or circumstances were in general the same in the illustrative case and the case in hand * * * the determination whether the conditions were sufficiently similar to make the experiments of any value in aiding the jury is a matter resting in the sound discretion of the judge." People v. Mondshine, 132 Cal.App. 395, 397, 22 P.2d 779, 780. A like statement is found in Ortega v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, Inc., 20 Cal.App.2d 596, at page 597, 67 P.2d 702, 703. "The conditions surrounding a test or experiment of this nature need not be identical with those existing at the time of the occurrence in question provided there is a substantial similarity. [Citing cases.]

The admission of such evidence is largely a matter of discretion with the trial court, and such a test is merely a circumstance to be considered in connection with other evidence in the case." Again, as the court noted in People v. Levine, 85 Cal. 39, 43, 22 P. 969, 24 P. 631, 633, "The proof of the result of experiments was equally as open to the defendant as the prosecution, and if other experiments would have shown a different result from that shown by the experiment proved by the prosecution, the defendant had ample opportunity to show the fact. The books are full of authorities sustaining the court in admitting evidence of the result of experiments * * *. [Their] result was not conclusive, but a mere circumstance to be considered in connection with the other evidence in the cause. [They were] both competent and admissible; [their] weight was for the jury to determine." A like statement is found in the frequently cited case of County of Sonoma v. Stofen, 125 Cal. 32 at page 38, 57 P. 681, at page 683. "Experimental evidence in corroboration or disproof depends for its value upon the fact that the experiment has been made when the conditions affecting the result are, as near as may be, identical with those existing at the time of and operating to produce the particular effect. An absolute identity is, of course, impossible; but a substantial identity must exist to give the evidence value."

[8] Here the experiments in question illustrated the effect of excessive voltage on what is termed a Kellogg arrestor which was attached to the pine board, the base of the telephone connections in the lodge. It obviously was tendered as an aid to and for the assistance of the court and jury in obtaining a clearer understanding of the extremely technical testimony which was introduced by both sides. Under all of the facts and circumstances presented by the record in this case, we cannot say that the court abused its discretion in receiving such demonstrative evidence.

[9] Defendant's next contention attacks the admission of certain evidence by the trial court. It is first contended that specified testimony given by the two experts, Saunders and Pritchett, was improper since they were not qualified as experts on fire. Specifically, defendant attacks the testimony of these two witnesses relating to the insulation, relocation of transformers and adjustment of circuit breakers. When all of the testimony relative to these questions is read as a whole, it is quite apparent that all were a part of a series of hypothetical questions on the same subject. We do not understand defendant to contend that the field of electricity generally is of such a commonplace nature as not to warrant the use of experts, but rather that the two witnesses were not experts on fire, and that the particular questions were improper. Here the specific facts which were sought to be introduced by the plaintiffs related to whether or not certain arrestors would disintegrate and set a fire through the application of electricity; whether or not the insulation of power lines carrying 11,000 volts would reduce the fire hazard; if the relocation of a transformer, thereby reducing the 11,000 voltage on the tap line to 110 volts, would reduce the fire hazard; and if a different adjustment in the circuit breaker at the power house would reduce the fire hazard. It is evident that each of the basic questions involved related to the general question of the force of electricity of certain voltage when exerted upon other objects. We do not understand such general questions to fall within the category of arson or fire experts generally, but more properly came within the realm of expert testimony by those particularly trained in the field of electricity. Certainly electricity, with its many ramifications and unusual behavior and the ever present threat of fire, was a proper subject for such witnesses to give testimony on as experts.

[10] Defendant's next contention is likewise without merit; that the court in denying its motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict since no causation was proved between defendant's transmission line and the fire in plaintiffs' building, was therefore in error. It would seem unnecessary to labor this contention. Suffice it to say that there was direct evidence that the circumstances described at length by both parties would have started the fire. The weight of such testimony was for the jury, not this court on appeal.

[11] The defendant further contends that the court erred in not striking the testimony of one Eckels who testified that he was awakened by sparks flying from a switch to which was attached an electric heater; that he was quite sure his telephone line was operating the day before the tree fell, and that it did not operate thereafter until repaired. Even assuming that such testimony was not shown to be connected with this case, in view of the great amount of like testimony by other witnesses to the same effect, it cannot be said that the admission of this particular testimony was so prejudicially erroneous as to warrant a reversal.

[12] Defendant's final contention is based upon the alleged error of the trial court in allowing a certain photograph, introduced by plaintiffs for identification only, to have been taken by the jury and viewed by it during its deliberation, and in denying defendant's motion for a new trial on this ground. It appears that at the hearing on defendant's motion for a new trial, plaintiffs presented affidavits by two workmen, residents of the vicinity, who averred that they knew the particular tree; that they were engaged to clean up the area where it had fallen; that the exhibit in question was a photograph of the same tree; and that certain exhibits of defendants, introduced in evidence, were views of the same tree. Again, assuming but not so deciding, that it was error to allow the jury to view the photograph, we cannot say it was such error and so prejudicial as would warrant this court in interfering with the determination made by the trial court. The judgment is affirmed.

GILMORE & EDWARDS COMPANY, Inc., a California corporation, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 15102.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

June 24, 1955.

Rehearing Denied July 22, 1955.

Hearing Denied Aug. 17, 1955.

Action by owner of goods destroyed in fire and owner's insurer against defendant who did not create fire, but who allegedly negligently caused fire to spread to premises occupied by owner of goods. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Theresa Meikle, J., gave judgment for owner of goods and its insurer. Defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal held that evidence was sufficient to support jury's finding that storage of large quantities of paint thinner by defendant in basement of building where plaintiff's goods were located was negligence and proximate cause of destruction of goods.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨989

Where appellant contended that verdict was not supported by sufficient evidence, function of District Court of Appeal was not to weigh the evidence but only to determine whether or not there was any substantial evidence which would support the verdict.

2. Landlord and Tenant ⇨169(7)

In action by owner of goods and its insurer against another tenant in building who did not create fire, but who allegedly negligently caused fire to spread to goods, evidence was sufficient to support jury's finding that storage by cotenant of large quantities of paint thinner in basement of building where goods were kept was negligence and a cause of the destruction of the goods.

3. Negligence ⇨61(1)

It is not necessary that defendant's negligence be the sole proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries, but it is sufficient that it be one of the contributing causes thereof, for plaintiff to recover.

5. Negligence ⇨59

Spread of fire by paint thinner stored in basement of building in case fire broke out was foreseeable by owner of paint thinner, and such storage was negligence.

6. Negligence ⇨56(1.3)

Although storage of paint thinner in basement of building was negligence, owner of paint thinner was not liable to owner of goods destroyed in fire unless negligence of storing of thinner was proximate cause of destruction of goods.

Fact that title of ordinance providing that before any benzine, gasoline or any product of petroleum or any hydrocarbon liquid that will flash or will make an inflammable vapor below certain temperatures, shall be stored in building a permit must be obtained, did not mention hydrocarbon liquids, did not render ordinance invalid.

17. Municipal Corporations Ⓒ111(1)

In ordinance providing that before any benzine, gasoline or any product of petroleum or any hydrocarbon liquid that will flash below a certain temperature could be stored in any premises in excess of five gallons, application for permit must be made to fire marshal, phrase "hydrocarbon liquid" describes liquids whose distinguishing characteristic is a hydrocarbon content, and has a sufficiently definite and established meaning, and ordinance is not invalid as for vagueness or uncertainty.

Owner of goods destroyed in fire which was spread by paint thinner stored in building by another tenant of building was within class which ordinance requiring permits for storage of any benzine, gasoline or any hydrocarbon liquid sought to protect.

20. Landlord and Tenant ⇨166(9)

Fact that ordinance requiring permit for storage of hydrocarbon liquids in any premises in excess of five gallons did not flatly prohibit storage of such liquids, but rather required a permit therefor, did not relieve tenant in building who stored more than five gallons in basement from liability to another tenant in building whose goods were destroyed by fire.

21. Negligence ⇨6

Where the purpose of requiring a permit is to protect against the event which has caused loss, violation of the ordinance constitutes negligence.

22. Explosives ⇨3

Purpose of ordinance requiring permit for storage of more than five gallons of hydrocarbon liquid in premises was to minimize spread of fire, and whether or not a violation of ordinance proximately contributed to an accident, is a question of fact.

Edward J. Rice, Jr., Oakland, Dana, Bledsoe & Smith, San Francisco, for appellant.

McKinstry, Haber & Coombes, San Francisco, for respondent Reid & Sibell, Inc.

Lillick, Geary, Olson, Adams & Charles, San Francisco, for respondent United States Fire Ins. Co.

PER CURIAM.

This is an action for the value of property lost when a fire, not originated through any act or omission of the defendant, allegedly was caused by its negligence to spread to the premises occupied by a plaintiff.

There are two plaintiffs. Reid & Sibell, Inc. (hereinafter called Reid) was the owner of the goods destroyed. United States Fire Insurance Company (hereinafter called insurer) insured a portion of Reid's property against loss by fire, paid the value of the property covered, and sues as subrogee for the amount paid. Reid sues for losses not covered by its policy.

Defendant Gilmore & Edwards Company, Inc. (hereinafter called Gilmore) was a tenant of the basement and first floor of the building at 1414 Van Ness Avenue, San Francisco. Reid occupied the second floor of this two-story building. Originally, the owner of the building and another tenant of the first floor and basement were joined as defendants, but nonsuit was granted as to them because they did not store any of the paint thinner which assertedly caused the spread of the fire.

The complaint contains two causes of action for each plaintiff. One is based on general negligence in the storing of large quantities of paint thinner. The other counts upon a section of the Fire Code of the City and County of San Francisco which provides:

"Before any benzine, gasoline, or any product of petroleum or any hydrocarbon liquid that will flash or emit an inflammable vapor below a temperature of one hundred and ten (110) degrees Fahrenheit, shall be stored in, upon or about any premises in excess of five (5) gallons application for permit must be made to the Fire Marshal. Said permit will be granted by said officer, except where in the judgment of said officer, the use by the applicant in the manner proposed by him would endanger the safety of life and property." The complaint alleges violation of this ordinance in that the stored paint thinner was a hydrocarbon liquid of a flash point below 110 degrees. Admittedly, Gilmore never applied for a permit.

Both counts allege that because of the presence of the paint thinner, the fire spread from the portion of the building occupied by Gilmore to that occupied by Reid, causing the losses of Reid and insurer.

Jury verdict was for both plaintiffs. Defendant Gilmore appeals from judgment upon that verdict.

[1] Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. In this situation, our function is not to weigh the evidence, but only to determine "whether or not there is any substantial evidence which will support" the verdict. In re Guardianship of Kentera, 41 Cal.2d 639, 645, 262 P.2d 317, 320.

The fire occurred Saturday, May 15, 1948. All the businesses occupying the building were closed that day. A janitor working on the first floor smelled smoke, found that it came from the basement, and notified the fire department. The first battalion chief to arrive (this became a four-alarm fire) found a "very hot fire" on the basement floor. Because it appeared to be a volatile liquid burning, fog stream was used by the firemen.

The fire was brought under control and was nearly extinguished at least three times, but on each occasion was reignited by vapors of liquid on the floor. Each time the fire again ignited, "just in split seconds the entire floor of the basement was a mass of flame."

An employee of appellant told the fire chief that a number of drums of inflammable solvent or paint thinner were in the basement, and he warned the chief to wet it down. Firemen saw a number of 50-gallon drums ruptured and leaking liquid. Six to eight of the large drums, all broken, were removed by the fire department. Additionally, about 30 5-gallon containers and 60 to 80 one-gallon containers also were removed.

Appellant argues at length that only nine 50-gallon drums of thinner were stored in the basement, and that all these were removed, unbroken, on Monday following the fire. There is no question that nine drums were removed Monday, but there is substantial evidence that a much larger number of drums were there at the time of the fire, had been burst by the heat, and deposited inflammable liquid on the floor. The evidence permits the conclusion that 750 to 1000 gallons of highly inflammable paint thinner was stored in the basement on the day of the fire.

There is much testimony of firemen that the burning of this volatile liquid contributed strongly to the spread of the fire. The presence of this inflammable substance, and the danger of explosion of the liquid confined in the drums, made the basement too hazardous for the continued presence of firemen, thus minimizing the possibility of extinguishing the fire.

The building had been used as a garage for some years, and oil had soaked into its wooden floors.

[2] The evidence is ample to warrant the conclusion that the large quantity of paint thinner kept in the basement by Gilmore substantially increased the difficulty of fighting the fire; caused it to flare up again and again after being under control; and caused it to spread. Clearly there was evidence to warrant the inference that the presence of the thinner directly and proximately contributed to the destruction of Reid's goods on the second floor. Whether that inference is to be drawn is for the jury to determine. Sanders v. MacFarlane's Candies, 119 Cal.App.2d 497, 259 P.2d 1010.

Gilmore argues, however, that it cannot be held liable for merely contributing to the spread of a fire not caused, in the first instance, by its act or omission. It is true that the presence of the paint thinner would have caused no harm had there been no fire. There is no suggestion that Gilmore was in any way responsible for the starting of the fire.

[3] However, "It is not necessary that appellant's negligence be the sole proximate cause of respondents' injuries, but it is sufficient that it be one of the contributing causes thereof." Finnegan v. Royal Realty Co., 35 Cal.2d 409, 419, 218 P.2d 17, 24; see also Champion v. Bennetts, 37 Cal. 2d 815, 821, 236 P.2d 155.

[4, 5] Obviously, the storage of materials which are highly inflammable but not self-igniting will cause harm only upon the occurrence of a fire. But "(t)he happening of the very event the likelihood of which makes the actor's conduct negligent and so subjects the actor to liability, cannot relieve him from liability." Rest., Torts, sec. 449, comment a. This rule is recognized and applied in California. McEvoy v. American Pool Corp., 32 Cal.2d 295, 299, 195 P.2d 783; Hession v. City and County of San Francisco, 122 Cal.App. 2d 592, 603, 265 P.2d 542. Just as in McEvoy v. American Pool Corp., supra, harm to a passenger from chemicals carried in a vehicle was foreseeable in the event the vehicle was involved in a collision, so was the spread of fire by the paint thinner foreseeable here.

[6] Of course, Gilmore is liable only if its negligence in storing the thinner was a proximate cause of Reid's loss. But this issue was submitted to the jury on full and proper instructions, and was decided against Gilmore.

There remain the questions whether the storage was negligent as creating an unreasonable risk to the other occupant of the building, and whether Gilmore was under a duty to Reid to avoid creating such risk.

[7] We find no California decision directly in point. The general rule is stated as follows: "A possessor of land is required to make reasonable use of his premises which causes no unreasonable harm to those in the vicinity, either by reason of the character of the use itself or because of the manner in which it is conducted." Prosser on Torts, p. 601.

[8] The test of permissible use of one's own land is: "was the act or use a reasonable exercise of the dominion which the owner of property has by virtue of his ownership over his property, having regard to all interests affected, his own and those of his neighbors, and having in view also public policy." 1 Am.Jur. 506.

[9] In Vowinkel v. N. Clark & Sons, 216 Cal. 156, 13 P.2d 733, operation of kilns and furnaces was ordered enjoined as a nuisance, in part because they were an extraordinary fire hazard. The court said, 216 Cal. at page 164, 13 P.2d at page 737: "'A person may not use his own property, even in and about a business in itself lawful, if it be used in such a manner as to seriously interfere with another in the enjoyment of his right in the use of his property.'"

[10] This decision, dealing with abatement of a nuisance, is not directly in point here. But the theories of nuisance, ultra-hazardous activity and negligence are closely related as they apply to the right of a user of real property to be free from unreasonable invasion of, or unreasonable risk to, his use and enjoyment of his property. The corresponding duty is to refrain from causing such invasion or risk.

There seems no sound reason to restrict this right and its corresponding duty to acts which contribute to the origin of a fire, as distinguished from its spread. In other jurisdictions, the rule, particularly in the later cases, appears to follow the view that one is liable for acts or omissions which cause the spread of fire of whatever origin.

"(I)f the owner of premises allows them to remain in such a condition as to constitute a danger to other property in case of fire, this negligence will make him liable for damages done to such other property by an accidental fire starting on his premises, although he has no connection with its origin." 22 Am.Jur. 603, and cases cited therein.

While the cases cited for this statement do not specifically involve the storage of inflammables in good containers for normal business use, they do indicate a definite trend of decision. In any event, they make clear that starting of the fire by some agency other than the defendant does not exempt him from liability.

Two decisions seem particularly applicable here. In Anderson v. Miller, 96 Tenn. 35, 33 S.W. 615, 31 L.R.A. 604, a lessee was held liable to the owner for loss by fire of a house in which defendant lessee had stored cotton. The fire originated on a neighbor's land. In Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey v. Midgett, 4 Cir., 116 F.2d 562, the oil company was held liable for spread to plaintiff's premises of a fire which originated in the warehouse of the company. The court pointed out that gasoline and oil had been spilled upon the wooden floor of the warehouse, and that it was not safe for the storage of oil and gasoline even in sealed drums and containers.

[11] Upon general rules of liability for negligence, we are satisfied that the rule that "the reasonableness of the use of land by an adjoining landowner must be determined according to the circumstances of each case", 1 Am.Jur., 1954 Supp., p. 53, is applicable to creation of unreasonable fire risks.

Here Gilmore stored large quantities of highly inflammable liquids in the basement of the building, separated from the Reid premises only by wooden floors which had become oil-soaked in a period of use of the building as a garage.

[12] Certainly we cannot say that, as a matter of law, Gilmore was not negligent. Damage to Reid was reasonably foreseeable, and it was for the jury, under proper instructions, to determine whether Gilmore was, under all the circumstances, negligent.

We emphasize that this conclusion is not based upon any theory of absolute liability. Rather, it is grounded wholly in the theory of negligence. We hold that the facts pleaded and proved raised a question for the jury as to whether Gilmore's conduct in storing and handling the paint thinner, under all the circumstances of this case, constituted due care.

Appellant Gilmore urges that it was under no duty to discover the dangerous characteristics of the paint thinner. But here it had actual knowledge. Its employees testified that the drums were marked with red labels bearing the word "inflammable". It was an employee of Gilmore who warned the firemen of the danger from the paint thinner.

[13] Gilmore also contends that insurer is estopped to assert any claim. Insurer covered both Gilmore and Reid against loss of their own goods by fire. The Gilmore policy contained the usual exclusion of liability "unless otherwise provided", "while the hazard be materially increased by any means within the control of the insured" or while specified explosives and inflammables, above a fixed quantity, were on the premises. A "permits and privileges" endorsement was added to the policy. It read "Anything in the printed conditions of the policy to the contrary notwithstanding permission is hereby granted * * * (e) to maintain present and increased hazards; * * * (i) * * * to keep and use all articles or materials usual and/or incidental to said business in such quantities as the exigencies of the business require. * * *"

Gilmore argues that insurer, by this endorsement, had given "consent, acquiescence and approval" to the storage of the paint thinner and thus, if the storage were negligent, had become "a joint tortfeasor" and is estopped.

The contention is without merit. The endorsement does no more than provide that the "permitted" acts will not exclude liability of the insurer to Gilmore on the Gilmore policy. Insurer recognized this meaning of the clause by paying the damage caused to Gilmore's goods in the same fire. The policy does not cover liability of Gilmore to third parties.

Appellant Gilmore asserts error in the opening instruction. This instruction, stating in very general terms the contentions of the parties, said that the charge of negligence was based on the claim that appellant "stored excessive quantities of inflammable substance in the basement." Gilmore points out that the complaint referred only to "large quantities of paint thinner". But the specific instructions later given dealt with paint thinner in detail. On the instructions as a whole, we do not believe that the jury was led to think that the issues were broadened by this opening summary of the issues in the instruction.

[14, 15] In any case, the rule is clear that instructions are not restricted to the pleadings, but are to cover matters developed by the evidence although not disclosed by the pleadings. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 607a; Blanton v. Curry, 36 Cal.App. 2d 575, 98 P.2d 221. Similarly, where a case is tried upon the theory that the pleadings were sufficient to raise certain issues, and no objection to evidence upon those issues was made at trial, the point that they are outside the pleadings cannot be raised for the first time on appeal (see cases cited in 24 Cal.Jur. 981). Here the opening statement of respondents referred, without objection, to "inflammable goods" and "inflammable liquids" other than paint thinner, and appellant's opening statement referred to "inflammable substances, whatever they were". Witnesses were questioned, without objection, as to thinner "or other inflammable substance", and appellant's motions for nonsuit referred to thinner "or other inflammable substance". In the light of this conduct at trial, the present objection to the innocuous reference in the court's preface to its instructions is not reversible error.

Gilmore's other objections to instructions, save for those dealing with the ordinance, have been carefully reviewed and found to be without substance.

The jury was fully instructed upon the ordinance (Fire Code, sec. 144, quoted above) and upon the effect of its violation, if found by the jury. Gilmore attacks these instructions, contending that the ordinance should not have been considered by the jury.

[16] First, it is contended that the ordinance is invalid because contrary to provisions of the city and county charter which require that the subject of the ordinance shall be expressed in its title. The argument is that the title fails to mention "hydrocarbon liquids".

But the title makes amply clear that the provisions of the Fire Code cover generally substances of this type. The rule cannot be carried to the absurdity of making the title as long as the Fire Code itself. Tarpey v. McClure, 190 Cal. 593, 598, 213 P. 983. Under the rule of that decision and of Keech v. Joplin, 157 Cal. 1, 8, 106 P. 222, the title of this ordinance is sufficient.

Gilmore also urges that the phrase "hydrocarbon liquid" has no established or definite meaning, and that therefore the ordinance is invalid because too vague and uncertain to be enforced.

"Hydrocarbon" is "A chemical compound of hydrogen and carbon", The Oxford English Dictionary, corrected re-issue 1933. Webster's New International Dictionary (2d ed.), defines hydrocarbon as "Chem. A compound containing only hydrogen and carbon." The reference to "compound" is to the term as used in chemistry. Thus the word "only" refers merely to the technical term "compound", which in chemistry describes a particular union of elements, constant and unvarying in composition.

[17] In the phrase "hydrocarbon liquid" the word "hydrocarbon" clearly, if ungrammatically, is used as an adjective. The phrase obviously describes liquids whose distinguishing characteristic is their hydrocarbon content.

Qualified chemists testified that a hydrocarbon is a chemical compound of hydrogen and carbon, and that only if another element chemically combines with those elements does the compound cease to be a hydrocarbon. The paint thinners involved in this case were liquids each containing more than 50% hydrocarbons. The other contents were physically mixed, but not chemically combined, with the hydrocarbons.

Appellant Gilmore urges that a liquid containing anything except hydrocarbons cannot be a "hydrocarbon liquid". But this stilted view cannot be sustained. A liquid whose distinguishing characteristic is hydrocarbon clearly, in any normal use of language, is a "hydrocarbon liquid". Where more than 50% of its content is hydrocarbon, with the remainder consisting of several substances, each a much lesser fraction of the whole, its identification as hydrocarbon liquid is in no way vague, uncertain or indefinite.

If appellant's argument were accepted, normal usage would have neither place nor meaning in the statutes. "Alcoholic beverage" would apply only to a liquid which is 100% (200 proof) alcohol. The "additives" now common in gasoline would take that motor fuel outside appellant's definition of gasoline. "Water" would refer only to a chemical compound of hydrogen and oxygen, and the mineral and other substances in the liquid delivered from our household faucets would cause it to cease to be "water". We cannot accept this view.

[18] "To make a statute sufficiently certain to comply with constitutional requirements it is not necessary that it furnish detailed plans and specifications of the acts or conduct prohibited." People v. Smith, 36 Cal.App.Supp.2d 748, 752, 92 P.2d 1039, 1042.

"A statute cannot be held void for uncertainty, if any reasonable and practical construction can be given to its language." County of Tulare v. City of Dinuba, 188 Cal. 664, 677, 206 P. 983, 988. See also People v. Deibert, 117 Cal.App.2d 410, 256 P.2d 355; Lockheed Aircraft Corp. v. Superior Court, 28 Cal.2d 481, 171 P.2d 21, 166 A.L.R. 701; People v. Darby, 114 Cal.App.2d 412, 250 P.2d 743.

Some of the decisions suggest that the test of statutory certainty is that the language be sufficient to enable those persons affected by it to understand its applicability to them. (For general discussion of the test of certainty see 41 Cal.L.Rev. 523.) Under this rule, the Fire Code provision is even more clearly proof against the claim of uncertainty. The section applies to "benzine, gasoline, or any product of petroleum or any hydrocarbon liquid that will flash below a temperature of * * * 110 degrees Fahrenheit." The evidence is that each of the paint thinners here involved was composed in substantial part of petroleum derivatives, that each had a flash point of 40 degrees Fahrenheit, that each drum was marked with a red label "inflammable", and that Gilmore's employees knew their dangerous propensities and, at the fire, warned firemen of their presence in the basement. Also, these thinners were kept in and handled by the paint department of this established supply firm. The experienced operators and employees of that department cannot be expected to be ignorant of the composition and characteristics of the products they dealt with daily.

The ordinance section here involved is not void for vagueness or uncertainty.

[19] There is the further question whether Reid is within the class to which a duty was owed under the ordinance. Satterlee v. Orange Glenn School Dist., 29 Cal.2d 581, 177 P.2d 279; Hagen v. Laurson, 121 Cal.App.2d 379, 263 P.2d 489.

Here there can be no question that the Fire Code was designed to prevent the spread of fire. It specifies its purpose to protect persons and property. It is implicit that it was designed to limit fire losses by protecting those to whose property any given fire might spread. Reid was within this protected class. Alechoff v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corp., 84 Cal.App. 33, 257 P. 569.

[20, 21] The fact that the ordinance did not flatly prohibit storage of inflammable liquids, but rather required a permit therefor, does not relieve Gilmore from liability. Where the purpose of requiring a permit is to protect against the event which has caused loss, violation of the ordinance constitutes negligence. Cragg v. Los Angeles Trust Co., 154 Cal. 663, 98 P. 1063; Beau- vais v. Springfield Institution for Sav., 303 Mass. 136, 20 N.E.2d 957, 124 A.L.R. 611; Hudson v Craft, 33 Cal.2d 654, 204 P.2d 1, 7 A.L.R.2d 696.

There is the further question whether violation of the ordinance was a proximate cause of Reid's injury. There are instances where, as a matter of law, the violation cannot be held to be a proximate cause. Moon v. Payne, 97 Cal.App.2d 717, 218 P.2d 550; Green v. Menveg Properties, Inc., 126 Cal.App.2d 1, 271 P.2d 544. However, those were cases where prevention of the injury sued upon was not at all within the purview of the ordinance, and no possible causal connection existed between ordinance violation and injury.

[22, 23] Here the obvious purpose of the ordinance was to minimize the danger of spread of fire. Thus the issue of proximate cause was for the jury. Whether or not a violation of a statute or ordinance proximately contributed to an accident is a question of fact. Scaf v. Eicher, 11 Cal. App.2d 44, 54, 53 P.2d 368; Satterlee v. Orange Glenn School Dist., supra, 29 Cal. 2d 581, 590, 177 P.2d 279.

[24] Here the jury was fully and fairly instructed upon the issue of proximate cause, with particular reference to the ordinance. Its verdict cannot be disturbed upon appeal.

[25-27] Gilmore asserts error in the admission of the ordinance in evidence. A court does not take judicial notice of a municipal ordinance. Marysville Woolen Mills v. Smith, 178 Cal. 786, 791, 175 P. 13. Thus it is proper and necessary that it be admitted in evidence. Eigner v. Race, 54 Cal.App.2d 506, 129 P.2d 444. Of course, the construction of the ordinance is for the court, and not the jury. Here the jury was fully and correctly instructed as to the construction and effect of the ordinance.

Appellant's assignments of error in the admission of evidence have been reviewed in detail. We find no substance in any of them.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

STATE of California and National Guard of the State of California, Defendants and Respondents.
Civ. 16423.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

June 28, 1955.

Hearing Granted Aug. 17, 1955.*

Guardian's action against State and State's National Guard for injuries received by minor from explosion of a dud shell left on firing range after national guard exhibition. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Herman A. van der Zee, J., entered judgment dismissing complaint and guardian appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, J., held that where State demurred to complaint and moved to dismiss and in support of motion filed affidavit of Adjutant General stating that exhibition was solely for purpose of gaining recruits for National Guard and there was no admission charged, and guardian did not file any affidavit in opposition thereto, the fact that exhibition was for governmental purpose was uncontradicted and defense of sovereign immunity was established.

Affirmed.

Dooling, J., dissented in part.

A general demurrer may not introduce into the controversy any factual matter that is not already there.

2. Pleading $\Rightarrow$ 355

Defects in a complaint may be exposed by motion to dismiss as well as by general demurrer.

A defense of sovereign immunity raises a jurisdictional question.

Motion to dismiss may be used to raise defense of court's lack of jurisdiction, and in certain cases to raise defense of res judicata, and where complaint is sham and frivolous. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 581, 581b, 583.

8. Pleading $\hookrightarrow$ 360(3)

Where guardian brought action against State and State's National Guard for injuries received by minor from explosion of a dud shell used at National Guard exhibition and state moved to dismiss action and in support of motion filed an affidavit by Adjutant General stating that exhibition was solely for purpose of gaining recruits for National Guard and there was no admission charge, uncontradicted affidavit showed that court lacked jurisdiction because of defense of sovereign immunity from suit for negligence involving purely governmental activity. Military and Veterans Code, § 176.

9. Pleading $\hookrightarrow$ 360(3)

An order granting State's motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction could be founded upon an uncontradicted affidavit which was filed in support of motion and which stated facts establishing the defense of sovereign immunity.

In guardian's action against State and National Guard for injuries received by minor from explosion of a dud shell left after National Guard exhibition where in support of motion to dismiss state filed an affidavit stating that exhibition was solely for purpose of gaining recruits for National Guard, if guardian had filed a counter-affidavit or by oral testimony raised an issue as to sovereign immunity, motion to dismiss would have been denied because guardian could not be denied a trial on the merits on this issue.

15. Pleading $\hookrightarrow$ 354(14)

In guardian's action against State and National Guard for minor's injuries received from explosion of a dud shell left on firing range after National Guard exhibition, guardian's complaint alleging that demonstration was held "for the entertainment and education of the public", was subject to motion to strike as a sham and mere conclusion.

Hoberg & Finger, San Francisco, for appellant.

Bronson, Bronson & McKinnon, San Francisco, Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., John E. Fourt, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

KAUFMAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal in a tort action against the State of California and the National Guard of this state.

The complaint herein alleged that Eric Pianka, a minor, was injured as the result of the explosion of a dud shell which had been negligently left on a public firing range by members of the National Guard of the State of California, and which appellant carried away from the range on the day following the demonstration. There was an allegation to the effect that the firing demonstration was held for the entertainment and education of the public generally, was widely advertised, and members of the public were invited to attend. This, appellant asserts, is an allegation that the activity was proprietary. Respondents demurred generally and upon the grounds that the court had no jurisdiction of either the subject matter or of the respondents. Respondents also filed a motion to dismiss based on the same grounds as the demurrer, and supported said motion with an affidavit of the Adjutant General of the State of California setting forth that the firing demonstration was conducted solely for the purpose of gaining recruits for the National Guard and that there was no charge for admission. After hearing, the trial court granted the motion to dismiss.

[1,2] Appellant contends that the affidavit in support of respondents' motion to dismiss was inadmissible and should not have been considered by the trial court. The effect of admitting the affidavit, appellant says was to determine the fact question of whether or not the National Guard was acting in a governmental, rather than a proprietary capacity, at the demurrer stage. A general demurrer may not introduce into the controversy any factual matter that is not already there. Mackay v. Clark Rig Bldg. Co., 5 Cal.App.2d 44, 55, 42 P.2d 341; Kleiner v. Garrison, 82 Cal.App.2d 442, 187 P.2d 57. Appellant, admits however that defects in a complaint may be exposed by motion to dismiss as well as by general demurrer, Monahan v. Blossom, 88 Cal.App.2d 951, 952, 199 P.2d 738, but argues that in either instance the court is not warranted in considering factual matter stated in an affidavit.

[3] Respondents agree that a demurrer attacking the sufficiency of the complaint cannot be supported by affidavit, but point out that the affidavit herein was not in support of the demurrer, but in support of the motion to dismiss. There is no doubt but that the defense of sovereign immunity raises a jurisdictional question. People v. Superior Court, 29 Cal.2d 754, 756, 178 P.2d 1.

[4,5] It is well established that upon a showing of the court's lack of jurisdiction an action will be dismissed. Gallagher v. McGraw, 132 Cal. 601, 64 P. 1080; In re Estate of Palmieri, 120 Cal.App. 698, 700, 8 P.2d 152. An affidavit may be used in support of a motion to dismiss. Section 2009, Code of Civ.Proc.; Cunha v. Anglo California Nat. Bank, 34 Cal.App.2d 383, 93 P.2d 572.

[6-9] While sections 581 and 583 provide for situations in which dismissals may be had on motion of the defendant, there is considerable authority that those sections do not cover every possible use of the motion to dismiss. In Cunha v. Anglo California Nat. Bank, supra, 34 Cal.App.2d at pages 388-389, 93 P.2d at page 575, it was said that the motion to dismiss in that case was not made pursuant to the provisions of sections 581-581b of the Code of Civ.Proc., but that, "as to the power to dismiss, those sections are not exclusive." The court stated further that "The power to dismiss was formerly exercised by courts of chancery and later it was exercised in the law courts. * * * The same rules apply to a dismissal at law or in equity under code procedure unless modified by statute. * * * As the court had the jurisdiction to entertain the motion the defendants had the right to support their motion with affidavits." The granting of a motion to dismiss has been upheld in cases where it has been used to raise the defense of the court's lack of jurisdiction. Gould v. Executive Power of the State, 112 Cal.App.2d 890, 247 P.2d 424. Such motion may also be used to dismiss an action in certain cases involving the defense of res judicata and where the complaint is sham and frivolous. McKenna v. Elliott & Horne Co., 118 Cal.App. 2d 551, 258 P.2d 528; Stafford v. Yerge, 129 Cal.App.2d 165, 276 P.2d 649; Best v. Fitzgerald, 81 Cal.App.2d 965, 185 P.2d 377; Olwell v. Hopkins, 28 Cal.2d 147, 168 P.2d 972, and, see, 36 Cal.Law Rev. 465, 467; 40 Cal.Law Rev. 192, 197-198. Therefore, if the affidavit here used in support of the motion showed that the court lacked jurisdiction because of the defense of sovereign immunity for a purely governmental activity, then the trial court's action in granting the dismissal was proper.

[10, 11] Appellant earnestly contends that the complaint shows that the National Guard was acting in a proprietary capacity in carrying on the firing demonstration for the education and entertainment of the public. However, appellant filed no counter-affidavit to the affidavit of the Adjutant General which shows that this was a free demonstration given for the purpose of gaining recruits for a certain unit of the National Guard. We must therefore accept the uncontradicted fact that the purpose was purely governmental and in line with the usual activities and purposes of a military organization. It is provided by statute that such demonstrations and exhibitions made with the aid of National Guard personnel are to be entirely paid for from State funds. Section 176, California Military and Veterans Code. The basic purpose of this organization is to preserve the public peace and protect the State and Nation. Section 146, California Military and Veterans Code. The complaint made no allegation that the public was charged admission to this demonstration, and there is no denial of the statement in the affidavit that it was free to the public. Clearly, the purpose of the demonstration was in harmony with the purpose for which the National Guard exists, a purpose that is purely governmental—the security of the state. In Newiadony v. State, 276 App.Div. 59, 93 N.Y.S.2d 24, 26, a case involving the National Guard of that state, it was said, "There are some kinds of activities in which no private citizen engages which are functions characteristic of a sovereign. No private citizen undertakes to suppress an insurrection or defend the State against invasion, break up riots, and restore public order." In Dembrod v. State, 185 Misc. 1061, 58 N.Y. S.2d 490, plaintiff was injured when shot by a live shell negligently fired from a machine gun while he was watching a weapons demonstration by the New York state guard. In spite of the fact that New York has a statute expressly waiving sovereign immunity from torts caused by negligence of state officers and employees, it was held that the action was properly dismissed, that the militia was acting in a governmental capacity, that the waiver statute did not apply, and that to render the state liable for acts of the militia, a statute would have to be passed with such an intent clearly expressed. See, also, Goldstein v. State, 281 N.Y. 396, 24 N.E.2d 97, 129 A.L.R. 905; Farina v. State, 197 Misc. 319, 94 N.Y.S.2d 614. There is no California case in point involving the National Guard, but the New York cases are persuasive authority. The function of the National Guard is the same in California as in New York. Those cases are based on the general principle stated in Winthrop's Military Law and Precedents, Second Edition, pages 1382-1383, "that the Government is not legally liable for unauthorized wrongs or injurious acts done by its officers or soldiers to or against civilians, though occurring while engaged in the discharge of their official duties."

[12, 13] Appellant bases his argument that a proprietary activity is involved upon the decision in Guidi v. State, 41 Cal.2d 623, 625, 262 P.2d 325, wherein it was held that the State was acting in a proprietary capacity when its Department of Agriculture conducted a horse show for the amusement and entertainment of the public. The court laid down the rule that governmental immunity "turns on the nature of the particular activity that leads to the plaintiff's injury, not on the identity of the governmental subdivision or agency carrying on the activity, or on the fact that the facility in question may also be used for governmental purposes." The court went on to state that it was "not concerned with the possible immunity of the state from liability for negligence in connection with agricultural and educational activities at the state fair, but only with its claim of immunity for negligence in the course of setting off fireworks and maintaining the horse arena." It is true that this case holds that the test is the nature of the particular activity engaged in, and that this is not determined simply by determining the usual purposes of such governmental agency. However, it does not change the rule that when acting in a governmental capacity a sovereign may not be sued, except where that doctrine has been changed by statutory or constitutional law. Section 16041, Government Code, providing for the filing of claims against the state for negligence, has been held to be procedural only, and not a waiver of sovereign immunity. Betten-court v. State, 123 Cal.App.2d 60, 65, 266 P.2d 201.

In view of the fact that appellant did not deny the averments in the affidavits which clearly showed that the activity of defendant which resulted in appellant's injury, was purely governmental, the defense of sovereign immunity was established, and the court had no jurisdiction to hear the matter and properly dismissed it.

[14] Had appellant raised an issue on the motion to dismiss as to sovereign immunity either by counter-affidavit or by oral testimony, then the motion to dismiss must of necessity have been denied because appellant could not be denied a trial on the merits on this issue.

[15] Respondents also contend that the complaint on its face showed that the activity was governmental, even if the affidavit had not been filed. They argue that the allegation that the demonstration was held "for the entertainment and education of the public" is sham and a mere conclusion of the pleader. With this contention we agree. The undisputed facts before the trial court were that the firing demonstration to which appellant attributes his injury was conducted by the California National Guard for the sole purpose of gaining recruits, was free of charge to those attending, and was in the pursuit of a governmental activity.

In view of the foregoing, the judgment of dismissal finds support in the record before us.

Judgment affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., concurs.

DOOLING, Justice (dissenting in part).

I cannot agree with the clear implication of the majority opinion that a complaint which states a good cause of action may be dismissed because an affidavit has been filed which contradicts one of its essential allegations. Either the complaint states a cause of action or it does not. If it does state a cause of action it is a revolutionary idea, which I cannot accept, that it can be attacked by a "speaking motion" which contradicts one of its allegations. This court by its apparent holding that this can be done muddies the waters of procedure and unsettles a rule that I had believed too well settled for argument, that the allegations of a complaint which states a cause of action are invulnerable to attack except by answer and trial of the issues tendered in the ordinary way.

Harry C. STEINMETZ, Petitioner,

v.

CALIFORNIA STATE BOARD OF EDUCATION, Roy E. Simpson, as State Director of Education, California State Personnel Board, Respondents.

Sac. 6530.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

July 5, 1955.

Proceeding for mandamus to compel reinstatement of petitioner to position of associate professor at state college. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that statute providing for discharge of public employee upon his failure to answer questions as to his knowing membership in Communist Party refers to employee's knowledge of membership, rather than to his knowledge of character of organization, and teacher could properly be discharged for failing to answer question as to knowing membership unless qualified by inquiry into his knowledge of character of organization.

Writ denied.

Carter, J., dissented.

1. Schools and School Districts ⇨141(4)

Statute providing for discharge of public employee upon his failure to answer questions as to his knowing membership in Communist Party refers to employee's knowledge of membership, rather than to his knowledge of character of organization, and teacher could properly be discharged for failing to answer question as to knowing membership unless qualified by inquiry into his knowledge of character of organization. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 1028.1.

2. Officers ⇨18

A governmental body may make reasonable inquiries into matters pertaining to fitness of its employees, and may inquire about employee's associates and conduct in determining his loyalty.

3. Officers ⇨66

Where statutes provide merely for public employees' disclosure of information, on pain of discharge, it is not necessary that employee have knowledge of nature of organizations, membership in which is investigated.

4. Witnesses ⇨305(1)

Where public employee who was questioned under statute requiring disclosure of membership in subversive organizations or Communist Party did not base his refusal to answer on claim of privilege against self-incrimination, he was precluded from thereafter relying on this constitutional privilege. 5. Witnesses ⇨305(1)

A witness is required to claim the personal privilege against self-incrimination, and he waives it unless it is invoked.

6. Criminal Law ⇨393(1)Officers ⇨18, 66

A person may properly be required to disclose information relevant to fitness and loyalty as a reasonable condition for obtaining or retaining public employment, even though disclosure, under some circumstances, may amount to self-incrimination.

7. Officers ⇨66Witnesses ⇨297

A public employee cannot be forced to give an answer which may tend to incriminate him, but he may be required to choose between disclosing information and losing his employment.

8. Statutes ⇨76(4)

No general law could have been made applicable to authorize inquiry as to public employees' membership in Communist Party, and statute requiring public employees to answer questions as to knowing membership in Party was not in violation of constitutional provision prohibiting passage of special laws where a general law can be made applicable. Wirin, Rissman & Okrand, A. L. Wirin and Fred Okrand, Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Richard L. Mayers, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

Petitioner was dismissed from his position as an associate professor at San Diego State College because of his refusal, at a hearing before the State Board of Education, to answer two questions as to whether he was or had been a member of the Communist Party, and he seeks a writ of mandate to compel his reinstatement.

The state board acted pursuant to section 1028.1 of the Government Code, which is part of a statute commonly known as the Luckel Act. Section 1028.1 provides that it shall be the duty of any public employee, when ordered to do so, to appear before the governing body of the state or local agency by which he is employed and to answer under oath questions relating to:

"(a) Present personal advocacy by the employee of the forceful or violent overthrow of the Government of the United States or of any state.

"(b) Present knowing membership in any organization now advocating the forceful or violent overthrow of the Government of the United States or of any state.

"(c) Past knowing membership at any time since September 10, 1948, in any organization which, to the knowledge of such employee, during the time of the employee's membership advocated the forceful or violent overthrow of the Government of the United States or of any state.

"(d) Questions as to present knowing membership of such employee in the Communist Party or as to past knowing membership in the Communist Party at any time since September 10, 1948."

The section further provides that "Any employee who fails or refuses to appear or to answer under oath on any ground whatsoever any such questions so propounded shall be guilty of insubordination and guilty of violating this section and shall be suspended and dismissed from his employment in the manner provided by law."

At the hearing petitioner was examined by William Blair, president of the State Board of Education, as follows:

"Mr. Blair: * * * Are you knowingly a member of the Communist Party?

"Dr. Steinmetz: Mr. Chairman. I am sorry, but I find it necessary to refuse to answer this question as I would if you asked me if I were a member of any other party because I do not believe that there is authority in the act under which you are proceeding for asking such a question.

"Mr. Blair: * * * Have you at any time since September 10, 1948, knowingly been a member of the Communist Party?

"Dr. Steinmetz: In all good conscience I must give you exactly the same answer now that I gave you a moment ago, sir.

"Mr. Blair: That is, that you decline to answer.

"Dr. Steinmetz: Yes, sir.

"Mr. Blair: * * * Do you know whether or not the Communist Party advocates the forceful or violent overthrow of the government of the United States or of any state?

* * * * *

"Dr. Steinmetz: Mr. Blair, I have no such knowledge.

* * * * *

"Mr. Blair: Have you at any time since September 10, 1948, to and including today, knowingly been a member of the Communist Party when, to your knowledge, it advocated the forceful or violent overthrow of the government of the United States or of any state?

"Dr. Steinmetz: Mr. Blair. I have in part answered this question when I disclaimed knowledge. I should like further to answer it by saying that I have never in my life, now, in the past, and so long as I would be a state employee, would never belong to an organization that advocated force and violence against the United States, this state, or any subdivision thereof. I took an oath, the Levering Act oath, and signed it honestly, * * *. [Here petitioner recited in substance, the Levering oath, Gov.Code, § 3103.]

"Mr. Blair: That was intended to be an answer to the question 'Have you at any time since September 10, 1948, to and including today, knowingly been a member of the Communist Party when to your knowledge it advocated the forceful or violent overthrow of the government of the United States or of any state?' What would be your answer directly to that question, Dr. Steinmetz?"

"Dr. Steinmetz: Mr. Blair, in part I answered that when I disclaimed knowledge, and in further part I have just answered it by reaffirming the Levering Act oath.

"Mr. Blair: I have repeated the question and I would feel obliged to direct you to answer it 'yes' or 'no' or 'I refuse to answer.' After that you may explain your answer, if you have not already explained it.

* * * * *

"Dr. Steinmetz: May I say that I have answered a question with regard to membership by saying that I would not answer any question with regard to membership, and that was very straightforward, and I have answered a question with regard to knowledge by disclaiming that I had the knowledge, and I have answered a question with regard to advocacy with an emphatic 'No.'

"Mr. Blair: Your 'no' applies to what part of the question?"

"Dr. Steinmetz: To my advocacy, and to my knowledge, and to membership with knowledge.

"Mr. Blair: These questions were all framed in the belief that they could be in all fairness answered 'yes' or 'no.'

"Dr. Steinmetz: You consider a question like that fair, Mr. Blair?"

"Mr. Blair: It seems that it simply wishes to inquire whether you have knowingly been a member of the Communist Party when to your knowledge it advocated the forceful and violent overthrow of the government. Now can you answer that by—you can answer that by 'yes' or 'no' or by refusal to answer it. If you take objection to the form of it you can refuse to answer.

"Dr. Steinmetz: Under protest in principle on account of my belief with my attorney that this is a duplicitous question, pressed as I feel I am, I answer it then 'no.'

"Mr. Blair: * * * Do you presently advocate the forceful or violent overthrow of the government of the United States or of the government of any state of the United States?"

"Dr. Steinmetz: Mr. Blair, as a teacher and a free American, I trust, who distinguishes between incitement and advocacy, I like no question pertaining to advocacy, but I have already answered it 'no,' and therefore, of course, answer it the same way now.

"Mr. Blair: * * * Are you knowingly a member of any organization which to your knowledge now advocates the forceful or violent overthrow of the government of the United States or of the government of any state of the United States?"

"Dr. Steinmetz: No, sir. * * *

* * * * *

"Mr. Blair: Have you at any time since September 10, 1948, knowingly been a member of any organization which to your then knowledge advocated during the time of your membership the forceful or violent overthrow of the government of the United States or of the government of any state of the United States?"

* * * * *

"Dr. Steinmetz: * * * I should like to answer the last question with a very decided 'no' * * *.

The foregoing shows that, although petitioner answered questions asked under subdivisions (a), (b) and (c) of section 1028.1 relating to his personal advocacy of violent overthrow of the government and his membership in organizations advocating violent overthrow of the government, he refused to answer two questions asked under subdivision (d), namely, (1) "Are you knowingly a member of the Communist Party?" and (2) "Have you at any time since September 10, 1948, knowingly been a member of the Communist Party?" His discharge was based upon this refusal.

Petitioner argues that, in effect, he answered the questions as to whether he was knowingly a member of the Communist Party when, at a later point in the examination, he replied to the inquiry as to knowing membership in the party with knowledge of its objectives. However, he refused to answer inquiries which omitted the qualification of knowledge of the nature of the organization and were directed only to knowledge of membership. The word "knowingly" as used in the questions which he declined to answer did not refer to knowledge of the aims of the party but merely to whether he knew that he was a member, and it is clear from the record that he so understood the word at the time he refused to answer. In a memorandum submitted to the board at the beginning of the hearing, petitioner stated, "The use of the phrase 'knowing membership in the Communist Party' does not vitiate the vice of the statute. This is so because the Legislature has made it clear that the 'knowing' refers to knowing one is a member of the Party rather than as to the knowledge of the one being questioned as to the subversive nature of the Party * * *. In other words, the statute plainly states that knowledge of the improper nature of the Communist Party is not an ingredient." Petitioner also showed that he so understood the questions when he said, "I have answered a question with regard to membership by saying that I would not answer any question with regard to membership * * * and I answered a question with regard to knowledge by disclaiming that I had the knowledge * * *."

[1] Section 1028.1, considered as a whole, shows on its face that the Legislature, in using the words "knowing membership," was referring to a person's knowledge of his membership, rather than to his knowledge of the character of the organization. In subdivision (c), when the Legislature intended to specify knowledge of the nature of the organization, as well as knowledge of the fact of membership, it explicitly referred to "knowing membership" in an organization which "to the knowledge of such employee * * * advocated" violent overthrow of the government. In the next subdivision, on the other hand, when the Legislature spoke of "knowing membership" without mention of knowledge of advocacy, it obviously was referring only to the fact of membership and not to knowledge of the nature of the organization. The choice of language was clearly deliberate, and in both subdivisions the words "knowing membership" were used in the same sense of knowledge of the fact of membership. It thus was proper, under the terms of subdivision (d), to question petitioner as to the fact of membership without reference to his knowledge of the character of the organization, and the questions on this point which he refused to answer were not covered by his denials that he was knowingly a member with knowledge of the nature of the party.

[2] The statute under which petitioner was dismissed is not rendered invalid by the fact that it requires an employee to answer questions as to his membership in the Communist Party without regard to his knowledge of the nature of the party. Petitioner's discharge was not because of membership in a proscribed organization but because of his refusal to answer questions as to whether or not he held membership in the Communist Party. A governmental body may, of course, make reasonable inquiries into matters pertaining to the fitness of its employees. Loyalty on the part of those in public employment is important to orderly and dependable government and is, therefore, relevant to fitness for such employment. Pockman v. Leonard, 39 Cal.2d 676, 687, 249 P.2d 267. An employee's associates, as well as his conduct, are factors which may be considered by a state agency in determining his loyalty, and information on that subject may properly be elicited from him. Adler v. Board of Education, 342 U.S. 485, 492-493, 72 S.Ct. 380, 385, 96 L.Ed. 517; Pockman v. Leonard, 39 Cal.2d 676, 685-687, 249 P.2d 267.¹ In this connection, it has been held that a public employer may constitutionally require its employees to disclose any past or present membership in the Communist Party. Garner v. Board of Public Works, 341 U.S. 716, 720, 71 S.Ct. 909, 912, 95 L.Ed. 1317.²

[3] Statutes, such as the one involved here, which compel disclosure of information concerning a public employee's membership in proscribed organizations, must be distinguished from those which provide for discharge or disqualification because of membership or refusal to take an oath denying membership. Under the latter type of statute, knowledge of the character of the organizations has been held essential, Wieman v. Updegraff, 344 U.S. 183, 73 S.Ct. 215, 97 L.Ed. 216, and the legislation has been sustained only when it expressly or impliedly required such knowledge, Adler v. Board of Education, 342 U.S. 485, 494, 72 S.Ct. 380, 96 L.Ed. 517; Garner v. Board of Public Works, 341 U.S. 716, 723-724, 71 S.Ct. 909, 95 L.Ed. 1317; Gerende v. Board of Supervisors, 341 U.S. 56, 57, 71 S.Ct. 565, 95 L.Ed. 745; Pockman v. Leonard, 39 Cal.2d 676, 685, 249 P.2d 267; Hirschman v. County of Los Angeles, 39 Cal.2d 698, 702, 249 P.2d 287, 250 P.2d 145. On the other hand, where the statutes provide merely for the disclosure of information, a requirement that the employee have knowledge of the nature of the organizations is not necessary. See Garner v. Board of Public Works, 341 U.S. 716, 719-720, 71 S.Ct. 909, 95 L.Ed. 1317; Adler v. Board of Education, 342 U.S. 485, 492-493, 72 S.Ct. 380, 96 L.Ed. 517.

[4-7] Petitioner's refusal to answer was not based upon a claim of privilege against self-incrimination under the Fifth Amendment to the federal Constitution or section 13 of article I of the state Constitution, and, accordingly, he is precluded from relying on these constitutional provisions. It is settled that a witness is required to claim this privilege, that it is a purely personal privilege, solely for the benefit of the witness and that it is deemed waived unless invoked. Rogers v. United States, 340 U.S. 367, 370-371, 71 S.Ct. 438, 95 L.Ed. 344. Moreover, a person may properly be required to disclose information relevant to fitness and loyalty as a reasonable condition for obtaining or retaining public employment, even though the disclosure, under some circumstances, may amount to self-incrimination. Pockman v. Leonard, 39 Cal.2d 676, 687, 249 P.2d 267; Christal v. Police Commission, 33 Cal.App.2d 564, 567 et seq., 92 P.2d 416; Cf. Garner v. Board of Public Works, 341 U.S. 716, 719-720, 71 S.Ct. 909, 95 L.Ed. 1317; Adler v. Board of Education, 342 U.S. 485, 492-493, 72 S.Ct. 380, 96 L.Ed. 517. A public employee, of course, cannot be forced to give an answer which may tend

1. In the Adler case it was said: "One's associates, past and present, as well as one's conduct, may properly be considered in determining fitness and loyalty. From time immemorial, one's reputation has been determined in part by the company he keeps. In the employment of officials and teachers of the school system, the state may very properly inquire into the company they keep, and we know of no rule, constitutional or otherwise, that prevents the state, when determining the fitness and loyalty of such persons, from considering the organizations and persons with whom they associate."

2. In the Garner case, after stating that the issue was whether a city "is constitutionally forbidden to require that its employees disclose their past or present membership in the Communist Party", it was said: "We think that a municipal employer is not disabled because it is an agency of the State from inquiring of its employees as to matters that may prove relevant to their fitness and suitability for the public service. Past conduct may well relate to present fitness; past loyalty may have a reasonable relationship to present and future trust. Both are commonly inquired into in determining fitness for both high and low positions in private industry and are not less relevant in public employment." to incriminate him, but he may be required to choose between disclosing information and losing his employment.

[8] Section 1028.1 does not violate the provision of the California Constitution which prohibits the passage of special laws in certain enumerated cases and "in all other cases where a general law can be made applicable." (See Cal.Const. art. IV, § 25, subds. 1-33.) This section does not fall within any of the enumerated categories, and, insofar as any of its provisions are specific, no general law could have been made applicable. The Legislature, desiring to authorize inquiry as to membership in the Communist Party, could do so only by naming it. The designation of that organization was not arbitrary, but was reasonably related to the purpose of the legislation, since, as we have seen, information as to membership in the party is pertinent to fitness for public employment. The case of Communist Party of United States v. Peek, 20 Cal.2d 536, 127 P.2d 889, is readily distinguishable. The statute there held invalid denied the Communist Party a place on the ballot, and regulation of elections is listed in the Constitution as one of the areas where a special law is prohibited. Cal.Const. art. IV, § 25, subd. 11. The basis of the decision in that case was that, in the absence of evidence, the court would be required to take judicial notice of the subversive character of the Communist Party in order to uphold the statute as reasonable and that judicial notice to that effect could not be taken under the conditions then existing.

We need not determine whether there is any merit in petitioner's attack upon another section of the Luckel Act which provides that it shall be sufficient cause for dismissal when a public employee advocates, or is knowingly a member of the Communist Party or of an organization which during the time of his membership he knows advocates, the overthrow of the government by force or violence. Gov.Code, § 1028. As we have seen, petitioner was not dismissed because of membership in any organization but because of his refusal to answer questions concerning matters which were relevant to his fitness for public employment.

The writ is denied.

SHENK, EDMONDS, TRAYNOR, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

CARTER, Justice.

I dissent.

It is my considered opinion that section 1028.1 of the Government Code of California is unconstitutional because it denies to public employees the fundamental rights and liberties guaranteed to them by the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and article I, section 13, of the Constitution of California. Even if one should be so caught up in the hysteria of our times that he fails to perceive the intrinsic unconstitutionality of this statute, he still must recognize the fact that the decision of the majority of this court in this case is erroneous under the rules announced in many recent cases decided by this court and by the Supreme Court of the United States.

In my opinion Dr. Steinmetz was wrongfully discharged and is therefore entitled to be reinstated. This conclusion may be reached by either of two lines of reasoning: (1) That Dr. Steinmetz answered all of the questions asked of him by the board, and therefore did not violate the provisions of Government Code section 1028.1; or, (2) that Dr. Steinmetz refused to answer two of the questions put to him, but the board had no authority to ask those questions because the statute under which they acted was unconstitutional. Wieman v. Updegraff, 344 U.S. 183, 73 S.Ct. 215, 97 L.Ed. 216; Pockman v. Leonard, 39 Cal.2d 676, 249 P.2d 267; Hirschman v. County of Los Angeles, 39 Cal.2d 698, 249 P.2d 287, 250 P.2d 145.

The arguments opposed to the majority decision in this case are like a Roman gladiator's trident. The central point is that the statute is an abridgement of the constitutionally guaranteed privilege not to testify against oneself. The two auxiliary points are: (1) That there was no violation of the statute, or (2) that the statute is an arbitrary deprivation of due process, and is, therefore, unconstitutional under the holding in the Wieman, Pockman and Hirschman cases. In reaching its erroneous conclusion the majority has necessarily impaled itself on one or more of these points.

The first contention made by Dr. Steinmetz in his petition for a writ of mandate is that he did not violate Government Code section 1028.1, and that his discharge for an alleged violation of that section was therefore unlawful. No contention is made that Dr. Steinmetz refused to answer any of the questions put to him except these two:

(1) "Are you knowingly a member of the Communist Party?"

(2) "Have you at any time since September 10, 1948, knowingly been a member of the Communist Party?"

The record shows that Dr. Steinmetz answered, "No" when asked: "Have you at any time since September 10, 1948, to and including today, knowingly been a member of the Communist Party when, to your knowledge, it advocated the forceful or violent overthrow of the Government of the United States?"

Dr. Steinmetz contends that the answer to this question constituted an answer to the two former questions.

It is clear either that the answer to the latter question did constitute an answer to the former questions, and that the majority opinion is incorrect in upholding his discharge; or that the State Board of Education had no authority to ask the two former questions because the statute authorizing those questions is unconstitutional. Wieman v. Updegraff, supra, 344 U.S. 183, 73 S.Ct. 215; Pockman v. Leonard, supra, 39 Cal.2d 676, 249 P.2d 267; Hirschman v. County of Los Angeles, supra, 39 Cal.2d 698, 249 P.2d 287, 250 P.2d 145.

The controversy centers around the meaning of the word "knowingly" as used in the statute and as used in the questions asked of Dr. Steinmetz. The majority opinion states that the word "knowingly," as used in the questions which Dr. Steinmetz purportedly refused to answer, "* * did not refer to knowledge of the aims of the party but merely to whether he knew that he was a member * * *."

Dr. Steinmetz contends that the word "knowingly" referred to knowledge of the pernicious nature of the Communist party, and that he did, finally, answer (in the negative) the question as to membership in the party with knowledge of its nature.

In Wieman v. Updegraff, supra, 344 U.S. 138, 73 S.Ct. 215, the Supreme Court of the United States, by a unanimous decision held that the due process clause of the Constitution of the United States was violated by inquiries as to the membership of state employees in certain organizations, unless such inquiries referred to membership with knowledge of the activities and purposes of the organizations to which the employees belonged. Classification of innocent membership with knowing membership was held to be arbitrary, unreasonable and unconstitutional.

Conversely, the United States Supreme Court has held (though not unanimously) that inquiry as to membership of an employee in the Communist party, or in named subversive organizations, is permissible where expressly or assumedly the inquiry is as to membership with knowledge of the nature and purpose of the organization. Gerende v. Board of Supervisors of Elections, 341 U.S. 56, 71 S.Ct. 565, 95 L.Ed. 745; Garner v. Board of Public Works of Los Angeles, 341 U.S. 716, 71 S.Ct. 909, 95 L.Ed. 1317; Adler v. Board of Education, 342 U.S. 485, 72 S.Ct. 380, 96 L.Ed. 517.

In ruling on the constitutionality of California's Levering Act Loyalty Oath, Govt. Code, §§ 3100-3109, this court stated: "It should be noted at the outset that the oath provisions relating to membership can reasonably be construed as referring only to affiliation with organizations known by the employee to belong to the proscribed class, and each clause of the oath must be interpreted as requiring knowledge of the character of any group as to which a declaration is required." Pockman v. Leonard, supra, 39 Cal.2d 676, 685, 249 P.2d 267, 272.

In Hirschman v. County of Los Angeles, supra, 39 Cal.2d 698, 249 P.2d 287, 289, 250 P.2d 145, this court held that county employees could be required to disclose membership only in those organizations "which they knew advocated overthrow of the government by force, or which to their knowledge had been held by a court to advocate such action."

The Wieman, Gerende, Garner, Adler, Pockman and Hirschman cases were all decided and published before the passage by the California Legislature of the Luckel Act (in which is included Government Code section 1028.1). The Legislature must be assumed to have had those cases before it, and to have considered them in drafting Government Code section 1028.1. The word "knowing" as used in the statute, clearly must have been intended to mean "with knowledge of the nature and purposes of the Communist Party." If the word did bear this connotation, then Dr. Steinmetz clearly answered the disputed questions in the negative when he stated that he had not "* * *" at any time since September 10, 1948, to and including today, knowingly been a member of the Communist Party when, to [his] knowledge, it advocated the forceful or violent overthrow of the government of the United States or of any state." It follows that the majority opinion, holding that Dr. Steinmetz did not answer the two questions, is erroneous.

If the word "knowing" as used in the statute and in the questions asked of Dr. Steinmetz, and as construed by the majority opinion in this case, meant only "with knowledge that he was a member," then (1) the statute is clearly unconstitutional, Wieman v. Updegraff, supra, 344 U.S. 183, 73 S.Ct. 215; Pockman v. Leonard, supra, 39 Cal.2d 676, 249 P.2d 267; Hirschman v. County of Los Angeles, supra, 39 Cal.2d 698, 249 P.2d 287, 250 P.2d 145; (2) the State Board of Education had no authority to ask the questions; (3) Dr. Steinmetz was perfectly within his constitutional rights in refusing to answer the questions; and (4) the discharge of Dr. Steinmetz was wrongful.

The majority opinion concedes that knowledge of the character of the organization is essential in statutes "* * *" which provide for discharge or disqualification because of membership or refusal to take an oath denying membership." Unlike the majority, I can find no substantial distinction between those statutes and the statute here considered. For refusal under oath to deny membership, the victim must be discharged under the terms of Government Code section 1028.1. If he does answer, and his answers indicate membership in a proscribed organization, he may be discharged under the terms of the companion section, 1028.

My position on the right of the state to inquire into the private affairs of its citizens was made clear by my dissenting opinions in Pockman v. Leonard, supra, 39 Cal.2d 676, 249 P.2d 267; Hirschman v. County of Los Angeles, supra, 39 Cal.2d 698, 249 P.2d 287, 250 P.2d 145; Tolman v. Underhill, 39 Cal.2d 708, 249 P.2d 280; Bowen v. County of Los Angeles, 39 Cal.2d 714, 249 P.2d 285; and Fraser v. Regents of University of California, 39 Cal.2d 717, 249 P.2d 283. I did not, at that time, believe that those cases were properly decided. I still believe that they are wrong. But right or wrong, those cases at least recognized a limit beyond which governmental inquiry into a citizen's associations and beliefs would be unreasonable. I believe that the limit set by that line of cases encroached on basic constitutional rights of the citizenry. The majority opinion in this case disregards even that limit, and broadens the trespass into constitutionally protected territory.

In the adoption of this statute, as well as the loyalty oath statute, I have no doubt as to the good intentions of the Legislature, "* * " and I do not consider it the function of the judicial branch of the government to pass upon the wisdom of such proposals. The " * *" question before the courts is whether the enactments contravene some provision of the fundamental law—the Constitution. This is true even though a very grave question of public policy may be involved. It is for the Legislature and not the courts to declare the public policy of the state, providing such declaration is not in conflict with the Constitution." Emphasis added; Pockman v. Leonard, 39 Cal.2d 676, 690, 249 P.2d 267, 275, dissenting opinion. But Government Code section 1028.1 meets an even broader constitutional objection than did the loyalty oath statute considered in the Pockman case. Without passing upon the wisdom of the public policy behind Government Code section 1028.1, I believe that this section is clearly a legislative abridgement of the provisions of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and of article I, section 13, of the Constitution of California. The section makes of the public employee a second-class citizen by denying to him, under penalty of exclusion from his means of livelihood, the right to refuse to answer questions which might tend to incriminate him—a right guaranteed to every citizen by the Constitutions of the United States and of California.

In the arguments before this court counsel for Dr. Steinmetz did not emphasize the privilege against self-incrimination. I believe, however, that the Fifth Amendment argument is implicit in this case. Even though Dr. Steinmetz's answers would not have been directly incriminating, he was entitled to rely on the protection of the Fifth Amendment, and its California counterpart, " * * * to avoid a trap for perjury set by those with sufficient influence to have him summoned. * * * " That he did invoke that privilege at the hearing, is clearly shown in the portion of his testimony which is quoted later in this opinion.

The Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides in part that "No person * * * shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; * * * ." This amendment was adopted in 1791. In California, at the present time, our Constitution provides, art. I, § 13, in part that "No person shall * * * be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself; nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; * * * "

The proper application of these constitutional provisions to a modern legislative enactment can best be understood by viewing them in the background of their historical development. Beginning in about the year 1236 A. D. in England, there were ecclesiastical courts which took upon themselves much of the burden of settling various disputes. It was the practice of these courts to submit persons called before them to an "oath ex officio." If the persons summoned to appear did not do so, they were excommunicated; if they did appear they were forced to give testimony, under oath, of not only the private sins of themselves, but of others. To lawyers schooled in the common law, a system which required a person to furnish his own indictment from his own lips under oath, was repugnant to the law of the land. About 1640, the accused began to claim, and the judges to concede, that a man on trial could not be compelled to answer questions which would disclose his guilt. However, the privilege was not absolute. When a prisoner was arraigned, he was required to identify himself by holding up his right hand or by expressly admitting that he was the person charged. Then he was asked how he would plead. If he refused to plead, the penalty depended upon the grade of the offense with which he was charged. If treason or a misdemeanor, he was treated as if he had pleaded guilty; if a felony, he was confined to prison with a meager allowance of bread and water. Later, in addition to the bread and water diet, he was subjected to torture, which either killed him or induced him within a period of an hour or so, to plead either guilty or not guilty. This horrible and barbaric practice was not discontinued until 1772. At that time a statute was enacted which provided that if a person stood mute on his arraignment of piracy or felony, he should be convicted and the court should award judgment and execution as if he had been convicted by verdict or confession. In 1827, however, standing mute in any criminal case was by statute (7 & 8 Geo., IV) made the equivalent of a plea of not guilty.

This, then, was the background in brief, which led our forefathers to the firm conviction that no man should be compelled to testify against himself.

If one is asked questions about something, the logical way of looking at his refusal to answer is that he surely must know something about it or else why would he refuse to answer? In other words, it is said that the refusal to answer gives rise to an inference of guilt of something. But the only thing which is sure is that the witness has refused to answer. There are no less than three inferences which may be drawn from such a refusal to testify: (1) That the witness is guilty; (2) that he knows something, or some fact, which might tend to incriminate him; and (3) that he refused to answer because he feels that the inquisitor has no right, or business, to ask him such questions. If we go back to the common law as it finally developed, we find that standing mute, in legal effect, pleads not guilty. How can standing mute be made the cause for punishment of a public servant when it is the legal equivalent of a plea of not guilty? A canon of our law is that it is to be interpreted reasonably in view of accepted common law procedure. We have the old common law which says, in effect, that standing mute is in legal effect a plea of not guilty. We have the present day common assumption that if the witness does not answer, he must have something to hide. And we have the constitutional provisions which say, positively, that no man shall be compelled to be a witness against himself. If he refuses to answer, is he, in effect, pleading guilty to an offense of some sort with the consequent stigma attaching? Or, is he merely standing on his constitutional right which has been guaranteed to him, and if so, should he not be relieved of any and all penalties for having claimed that right?

The privilege against self-incrimination has been characterized by Judge Cardozo, Matter of Doyle, 257 N.Y. 244, 177 N.E. 489, 491, 87 A.L.R. 418, as "a barrier interposed between the individual and the power of the government, a barrier interposed by the sovereign people of the state" which "neither legislators nor judges are free to overleap * * *." In the light of this definition, let us consider the inquiry authorized by the California Legislature in Government Code section 1028.1.

The section applies to all public employees. It imposes on each such employee the duty to appear and answer under oath certain questions which may be asked of him when subpoenaed by the governmental agency by which he is employed or by a committee of the Congress of the United States or of the Legislature of California, or by any subcommittee thereof. If he refuses to answer under oath on any ground whatsoever any questions of the specified group, he shall be suspended and dismissed from his employment. On the other hand, if he does answer, and his answers indicate that he is a Communist or a member of other proscribed groups, he is subject to dismissal.

A public employee, who is a loyal American citizen, called before such a committee and asked questions pertaining to his membership, past or present, in the Communist party or in any organization which to his knowledge advocates or advocated during his membership the violent overthrow of the government, might refuse to answer such questions for any one of several reasons: He might have, in the past, joined many different organizations, and has since found that such organizations have been labelled subversive, or have been used as evidence in prosecutions under the Smith Act, or have been the basis of dismissals as "security risks," or have been labelled "pink" by some pseudo-patriot. While he knows that he is innocent of any wrongdoing, he fears that his former membership in various liberal movements, clubs, charities, etc., may be used against him in some way, and would therefore rather keep such information to himself. Although he may be willing to tell the investigators anything about his own participation in these organizations, he feels a sense of loyalty to his friends who had joined with him, and whom he feels are equally innocent of any wrongdoing. He does not want them to be subjected to the public censure which he has encountered because of being called before an investigating body. If he told all that he would be willing to tell about himself, he would have waived the claim of the Fifth Amendment, and could not refuse to answer other questions about his friends. It may also be true that the witness has no first-hand knowledge of the Communist party or of any other organizations which are of the proscribed type, that he has never joined any organizations of any type, that he is a completely loyal American who believes that the recent rash of security investigations, loyalty oaths, suspicion and distrust has overstepped the boundary of individual liberty and personal security established by the framers of our state and national Constitutions. From his studies of United States history and of the Constitution, he knows that the government has no right to inquire into his private beliefs and associations unless they constitute a clear and present danger to the safety of the nation, which his beliefs and associations obviously do not. He knows that his right to freedom of speech, thought, religion and assembly may not be abridged by the Congress or by the state Legislature. He knows that he may not arbitrarily be deprived of life, liberty or property. He feels that the investigation in which he is involved is not in accord with the spirit which permeates the Constitution, and that to meekly state his innocence would be, in effect, cooperating with those who would destroy or impair the effectiveness of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. He feels also, that if he, an obviously innocent person, opposes this invasion into his liberties, that the unconstitutional nature of the investigation and of the authority under which it is conducted will be forcefully brought home to the public, and that it will provide the courts with a clear opportunity to rule on the constitutionality of the statute on which the investigation is based. What a rude awakening it must be when this last witness finds even the courts of his state caught up in the hysteria of the times, to the extent that the statute is held constitutional, and no harm is seen in the dismissal of a loyal public servant with the implication that he is a Communist or that he has been teaching Communist doctrine in his classroom!

Since the statute requires the dismissal of any public employee who refuses to answer the stated questions, on any ground whatsoever, it is too clear to require further discussion that this statute is a legislative attempt to circumvent the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and article I, section 13, of the Constitution of California. Since its penalty falls on the innocent as well as the guilty, without even the formality of hearing evidence against the victim, this statute is clearly a deprivation of due process of law guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

Unhappily, there is a tendency on the part of many unthinking members of the public to believe that a witness who invokes a constitutional ground in refusing to testify, is disloyal, or is guilty of some misdoing which the investigators were trying to uncover. "There can be no dispute about the consequences visited upon a person excluded from public employment on disloyalty grounds. In the view of the community, the stain is a deep one; indeed, it has become a badge of infamy. Especially is this so in time of cold war and hot emotions when 'each man begins to eye his neighbor as a possible enemy.' * * *

To thus inhibit individual freedom of movement is to stifle the flow of democratic expression and controversy at one of its chief sources. * * *

Wieman v. Updegraff, supra, 344 U.S. 183, 190, 73 S.Ct. 215, 218. I believe that two statements made under oath by Dr. Steinmetz at the same hearing where he purportedly refused to answer two of the questions of the investigating board, should help those who read this opinion to determine whether Dr. Steinmetz is or is not a loyal American, and why he at first refused to answer the disputed questions.

Dr. Steinmetz first stated under oath: " * * * I should like publicly to reaffirm that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of California against all enemies, foreign and domestic; and that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of California; that I take this obligation freely without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will and have well and faithfully discharged my duties. Allow me, please, to further affirm * * * that I do not advocate, nor am I a member of any party or organization, political or otherwise, that now advocates the overthrow of the government of the United States or of the State of California by force or violence or other unlawful means; that within the five years * * * preceding the present moment I have not been a member of any party or organization, political or otherwise, that advocated the overthrow of the government of the United States or of the State of California by force or violence or other unlawful means. Also, as I said, I will not advocate nor become a member of any party or organization, political or otherwise, that advocates the overthrow of the government of the United States or of the State of California. * * *

Later in the hearing, Dr. Steinmetz explained his reason for at first not answering the questions asked by the board, in these words: "I should like * * * to say that with regard to this whole business I wish to disclaim any intent at insubordination. I really deny the constitutionality of the act upon which you are depending because it seems to me to threaten my citizenship in a manner in which none of us can or should be subordinate to each other. The legislation that you have invoked is permissive and not mandatory. You have singled me out for reasons known only to yourselves as if you were exercising a bill of attainder."

"I have been a loyal employee of California since 1930. * * *

"In commenting on your authority I am * * * indebted * * * to certain political science professors at the University of California who taught a course in the United States Constitution that became required by the State Legislature of all pedagogical trainees upon the demand, I believe it was, of the American Legion in 1923. Perhaps I have an unfair advantage in this approach to the problem."

"Mr. Blair, it appears in the legislation that you and the Board are applying to me that Mr. Luckel and Mr. Dilworth have sought to provide that every public employee in California may be required individually or collectively to drop his work and appear at the summons of his superior * * * regardless of existing legal limitations on the responsibility of the superior and the duties of the employee, and to ask the questions at any time and as often as demanded, and requiring me to answer questions regarding not acts but personal advocacies and political memberships, whether these have been clearly outlawed or not. These questions to be, according to the law, as to or pertaining to such, in the wisdom and the relevance of the occupational superior, the questions and answers to be asked and given publicly or privately as the employer wishes, regardless of charges or of no charges having been made and regardless of oaths already given, duties and responsibilities satisfactorily performed and qualifications and tenure rights. The penalty for not answering or for answering in any but one way being dismissal, even if the employee, seeking to avoid a trap for perjury set by those with sufficient influence to have him summoned in the first place, seeks to use the Bill of Rights.

"Now, ladies and gentlemen, I believe that no legislation is valid that incorporates such a transparent attempt to circumvent the Constitution. Behavior allowed by the U. S. Constitution cannot be declared illegal by a state on the grounds that it is insubordinate, particularly when the behavior is admittedly irrelevant to the duties of a subordinate. * * *

"* * * I have been summoned to interrogation of a judicial type because I am a public educator but not for anything that I have done as either an educator or a public employee. Indeed, there being no charge against me the situation is utterly paradoxical, so it should not be taking advantage if I were to demand or attempt an explanation. However, since you find none necessary I find it sufficient at the moment simply to point out this fact. * * * I am sure that all of you members believe in a government of law and not of men, and a government with a clear separation of powers as provided by the Constitution, and I am sure you have probably sworn an oath necessitating such convictions. You must then recognize that the assumption or assignment of judicial powers by or to a legislative committee, or executive agency, or policy commission such as yours is unconstitutional and, if I may add, I think in my opinion subversive to the Bill of Rights."

"The California Legislature has mistakenly authorized you to ask questions that are accusing in effect especially when directed to an individual; questions permitting of but one answer such as usually characterized police state questions; questions that as in my case are totally unnecessary if they are legal because their proper answer is already known so their only point would seem to be to coerce or entrap; questions which have already been answered; and questions which can certainly tempt the unscrupulous to destroy rather than to compete with political opposition by identifying honest dissent with disloyalty in a manner utterly intolerable to free men. Please recognize that I am attributing no motive to you save perhaps the experimental use of a new law.

"I am really questioning not your authority so much as the authority of the Legislature. Not from the standpoint of distrust in our institutions but obviously with a profound trust in our judiciary and electorate. My viewpoint is less radical than very conservative as befits the descendant of the American Revolution fully acquainted with our national traditions, I hope, and very proud of them. The present is the only part of history for which the individual may be responsible and I feel a profound responsibility for the precedent that I must set in the situation in which you have placed me. I believe that freedom from the political inquisition demeaning public confession and patronizing absolutism is necessary for general education, a free press, an instructive and inspiring literature in art, and every other manifestation of culture in America. In these days of vaunted political regard for freedom in the Western World I contend that property rights as well as civil rights are jeopardized by its sacrifice. If I can be arbitrarily summoned for public humiliation and told by the act under which you are proceeding that I cannot use the Bill of Rights to avoid jeopardy from political enemies then no man is safe from those in temporary power, indeed then no secret will be safe and political power may cease to be temporary and become totalitarian.

No self-respecting citizen can find satisfaction in work for any employer, public or private, who can hold him under constant threat for political dissent. Public employment ceases to be either right or privilege or duty an obligation under such circumstances. * * * [I]t is really the vicious permissiveness of the law that threatens. And I oppose that in principle and shall continue to oppose it if it is necessary until the Supreme Court passes upon it. * * *

One must be indeed naive if he cannot see the parallel between the situation of Dr. Steinmetz before this investigating board, and the witness called before the ecclesiastical court or Star Chamber in England in the 15th, 16th or 17th centuries. The very evils which prompted an early Congress to add to our Constitution the protection of the Bill of Rights are now being revisited upon us by a statute which purports to protect our constitutional form of government.

Other arguments which are raised by Dr. Steinmetz in his petition, and which I believe are meritorious, are (1) that the Luckel Act, Govt. Code, §§ 1027.5, 1028 and 1028.1, is special legislation which contravenes article I, section 11, and article IV, section 25(33), of the California Constitution; the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution; and this court's opinion in Communist Party of United States v. Peek, 20 Cal.2d 536, 127 P.2d 889, see, also, In re Campbell, 64 Cal.App. 300, 221 P. 952; (2) that the Luckel Act is, in essence, a bill of attainder, Garner v. Board of Public Works of Los Angeles, supra, 341 U.S. 716, 722, 71 S.Ct. 909; Cummings v. State of Missouri, 4 Wall. 277, 18 L.Ed. 356; Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. 333, 18 L.Ed. 366; (3) that the Luckel Act offends against the principle of separation of powers, art. III, § 1, and art. VI, § 1, of the California Constitution.

In the recent case of Daniman et al. (Slochower) v. Board of Higher Education of City of New York reported at 306 N.Y. 532, 119 N.E.2d 373, the New York Court of Appeals held constitutional a New York City Charter section which in some respects is very similar to the statute being considered in this case. The New York City Charter section (903) directed dismissal of any city employee who should refuse to testify in any authorized hearing or inquiry concerning city affairs or official conduct of officers or employees of the city. Appellant Slochower, a college professor, was dismissed under the authority of this charter section when he refused to state, when asked by a Senate investigating committee, whether he had been a member of the Communist party. A majority of the highest court of the State of New York in that case, just like the majority of this court in this case, saw no infringement of the public employee's constitutional rights in the charter provision or in its application. In the Slochower case the Supreme Court of the United States has noted probable jurisdiction. 348 U.S. 935, 75 S.Ct. 356. I am confident that the Supreme Court of the United States will reverse the state court decision in the Slochower case. I feel even more strongly that the Supreme Court of the United States should reverse the erroneous decision of the majority of this court in the present case.

In summary, I dissent from the holding of the majority here because I believe (1) that Government Code section 1028.1 is an attempt by the Legislature to abridge the rights of certain citizens, guaranteed to them by the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and by article I, section 13, of the Constitution of California; (2) that Government Code section 1028.1 as it has been construed by the majority in this case, is unconstitutional under the views expressed in the Wieman, Gerende, Garner, Adler, Pockman and Hirschman cases; and finally, (3) that if Government Code section 1028.1 should be considered constitutional, then clearly Dr. Steinmetz has not violated its provisions, since he substantially answered all of the questions asked of him by the investigating board.

I am of the opinion that the requested writ of mandate should issue, and that Dr. Steinmetz should be reinstated to his former position.

Walter GROSS, Defendant and Appellant.
L.A. 23663.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.

July 8, 1955.

Sexual psychopathy proceedings. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Harold W. Schweitzer, J., entered order denying defendant's motion to correct and amend transcript which was to be used on his appeal from order that he was still a sexual psychopath. Defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that such order was not appealable.

Appeal dismissed.

1. Mental Health $\S$ 444

Sexual psychopathy proceedings are not criminal actions but special proceedings of a civil nature. Welfare and Institutions Code, $\S$ 5500 et seq., 5519.

2. Mental Health $\S$ 449

Original order of commitment as sexual psychopath is appealable as final judgment in special statutory proceeding and subsequent orders redetermining condition are appealable as special orders after final judgment. Welfare and Institutions Code, $\S$ 5500 et seq., 5519; West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 963, subd. 2.

3. Appeal and Error $\S$ 82(1)

Orders after final judgment are not appealable unless they affect the judgment in some manner or bear some relation to its enforcement. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., $\S$ 963, subd. 2.

4. Mental Health $\S$ 449

Where Superior Court found that defendant was still a sexual psychopath and ordered him to be returned to a state mental hospital and defendant appealed from that order which was still pending and subsequently defendant's motion to correct and amend the transcript on appeal was denied, no appeal could be taken from order denying such motion. Welfare and Institutions Code, §§ 5500 et seq., 5519; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 963, subd. 2.

If record on appeal from order determining that defendant was still a sexual psychopath was deficient in any respect, defendant could apply to District Court of Appeal for augmentation. West's Ann. Rules on Appeal, rules 8, 12; Welfare and Institutions Code, §§ 5500 et seq., 5519.

Walter Gross, in pro. per., and Harry C. Cogen, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

The People have moved to dismiss defendant's appeal from an order denying his motion to correct and amend a clerk's transcript.

Defendant was adjudged a sexual psychopath in 1948 in proceedings brought under section 5500 et seq. of the Welfare and Institutions Code. He applied to the superior court for redetermination of his condition pursuant to section 5519, and on December 15, 1952, in accord with the reports of medical experts, the court found that he was still a sexual psychopath and ordered him to be returned to a state mental hospital.¹ Defendant appealed from that order, and his appeal is still pending in the District Court of Appeal. We ordered transcripts to be furnished at public expense for use on that appeal. Gross v. Superior Court, 42 Cal.2d 816, 270 P.2d 1025. After a record was prepared, defendant made a motion in the trial court to correct and amend the transcript by striking out certain statements and substituting others. The present appeal is from an order denying that motion.

1. Section 5519 of the Welfare and Institutions Code provides in effect that when a person has been confined in a state hospital as a sexual psychopath for at least six months the court, on its own motion or on motion by or on behalf of the person committed, may require

[1-5] The principal question is whether an appeal lies from the order refusing to correct and amend the transcript. Sexual psychopathy proceedings are not criminal actions but special proceedings of a civil nature. An original order of commitment as a sexual psychopath is appealable as a final judgment in a special proceeding under section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and subsequent orders redetermining his condition made under section 5519 are appealable under subdivision 2 of section 963 as special orders after final judgment. Gross v. Superior Court, 42 Cal.2d 816, 820-821, 270 P.2d 1025; see People v. Bachman, 130 Cal.App.2d 445, 279 P.2d 77. However, an order after final judgment is not appealable unless it affects the judgment in some manner or bears some relation to its enforcement. Imperial Beverage Co. v. Superior Court, 24 Cal.2d 627, 632, 150 P.2d 881; Williams v. Superior Court, 14 Cal.2d 656, 666, 96 P.2d 334; McCord Co. v. Plotnick, 104 Cal.App.2d 495, 496, 231 P.2d 880. The trial court, in rejecting the proposed corrections, apparently treated the motion as a request for correction of the transcript under rule 8 of the Rules on Appeal. In an analogous situation, where the trial court denied a motion to amend a reporter's transcript by striking out certain words in the answer of a witness and inserting others, it was held that the order was not appealable as a special order after final judgment since it did not affect the judgment or its enforcement. McCord v. Plotnick, 104 Cal. App.2d 495, 496, 231 P.2d 880. Similarly, in Cross v. Tustin, 37 Cal.2d 821, 825-826, 236 P.2d 142, orders denying motions to vacate and amend a settled statement of oral proceedings were held nonappealable. It is clear that no appeal lies from the order under consideration here. If, however, the record is deficient in any respect, defendant may apply to the District Court of Appeal the hospital superintendent to forward a report and recommendation concerning such person, and the court may order the person returned for a hearing, and after a hearing, if such person has not recovered, he may be recommitted.

for augmentation under rule 12 of the Rules on Appeal.

The appeal is dismissed.

PACIFIC FINANCE CORPORATION,
Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

Alvis Harrison FOUST, Charles A. Huffman, and Alvis Harrison Foust, Charles A. Huffman and William J. Fulwiler dba Universal Motors, a copartnership, Defendants and Appellants.

L. A. 23273.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.
July 8, 1955.

Action by finance company against record owners of certain automobiles to quiet title, as between the parties only, to the automobiles, which had been left by record owners with used car dealer for sale to third parties under conditional sales agreements, but for which dealer had not, after making sales financed by finance company remitted to record owners agreed amount and, therefore, had not received the certificates of ownership for such automobiles. The Superior Court, Ventura County, Walter J. Fourt, J., entered judgment for finance company, and record owners appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that loss would have to fall upon record owners, rather than finance company, despite Vehicle Code provisions regulating transfer of ownership of automobiles, in view of fact that record owners were negligent in their dealings with dealer.

Judgment affirmed.

Opinion, 279 P.2d 1030, vacated.

1. Factors ⚡66

In action by finance company against record owners of certain automobiles to quiet title, as between the parties only, to the automobile, which had been left by record owners with used car dealer for sale to third parties under conditional sale agreements, but for which dealer had not, after making sales finance by finance company, remitted to record owners amount agreed upon and therefore had not received the certificates of ownership for such automobile, evidence established that dealer was record owners' factor. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 2026, 2369.

2. Factors ⚡1, 53

Used car dealer is a "factor" within definition contained in the Civil Code when automobile owner puts automobile in dealer's possession to be sold, and, as such, dealer has ostensible authority to deal in the property of his principal as his own in transactions with persons not having notice of the actual ownership. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 2026, 2369.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Factor".

3. Factors ⚡53

In absence of restrictions, factor, who sells goods entrusted to his possession for that purpose, has implied power to receive payment and to give a receipt in discharge to the purchaser, and payment to the factor is binding upon principal, even though factor misappropriates the funds. West's Ann. Civ.Code, §§ 2026, 2369.

4. Factors ⚡53

Where finance company dealt with used car dealer as ostensible owner of certain automobiles and paid dealer for such automobiles without any notice of interest of record owners of such automobiles or any facts which would put finance company on inquiry, such payment was binding upon record owners, since dealer was record owners' factor. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 2026, 2369.

5. Estoppel ⚡107, 110, 114

Ordinarily, an estoppel should be pleaded.

6. Pleading ⚡428(7)

Where evidence upon which court based its findings on the estoppel theory was admitted without objection, and such issue was fully litigated by parties, any defect in pleading estoppel was waived.

7. Factors ⇐53

Where record owners of certain automobiles left the automobiles with used car dealer for sale to third parties under conditional sales agreements, but dealer, who thereafter became insolvent, failed, after making sales financed by finance company, to remit to record owners amount agreed upon, loss would have to fall upon record owners, rather than finance company, despite Vehicle Code provisions regulating transfer of ownership of automobiles, in view of fact that record owners were negligent in their dealings with dealer. SPENCE, Justice.

Plaintiff sought to quiet its title to ten used automobiles. The cars had been delivered by defendants to a used car dealer for sale. The basic questions were whether said dealer was a factor in the transaction, and whether an estoppel operated in plaintiff's favor. The trial court found for plaintiff on both issues. From the judgment accordingly entered, defendants appeal, contending in the main that the evidence does not sustain the findings. However, viewing the record in the light most favorable to plaintiff, and indulging every inference in its favor in determining whether there is substantial evidence in support of the challenged findings, 4 Cal.Jur.2d § 606, p. 485; Crawford v. Southern Pacific Co., 3 Cal.2d 427, 429, 45 P.2d 183; Estate of Bristol, 23 Cal.2d 221, 223, 143 P.2d 689, defendants cannot prevail.

Defendant Universal Motors, a copartnership composed of defendants Foust, Huffman, and Fulwiler, delivered the ten used cars to a used car dealer, Lonnie's Used Cars. The cars were to be placed on Lonnie's lot and displayed for sale. It was agreed that when the cars were sold, Lonnie's was to remit to Universal a certain amount for each car, and any sum in excess of that amount was Lonnie's profit. When Lonnie's took delivery of each car, it signed a memorandum identifying the car by number and also providing, in part, as follows: "It is understood and agreed that the title of ownership does not pass to me (Lonnie's) until the final cash payment is made." This, however, was not the entire agreement. The trial court found that the agreement, partly oral and partly in writing, also included the understanding that Lonnie's could sell the automobiles consigned to it in the regular course of business on credit pursuant to conditional sales contracts and could assign the contracts. Universal retained the certificates of ownership (the pink slips) on the ten cars.

Lonnie's sold the ten cars but did not pay Universal for them, and finally became insolvent. Each car had been sold to an individual buyer on a conditional sales contract, naming Lonnie's as seller. Lonnie's then assigned the contracts to plaintiff, Pacific Finance Company, and the latter paid to Lonnie's that part of the purchase price which the buyer had borrowed, less a time-price differential. At the same time, Lonnie's executed a document called "In Lieu of Pink," whereby Lonnie's agreed to furnish the pink slip for each car, showing ownership in plaintiff, when issued by the Department of Motor Vehicles. It appears that this was customary practice in the used car business because it usually took three or three and one-half months to get pink slips through the Department. Neither the individual buyers nor plaintiff, the finance company, then knew of Universal's interest in the cars.

When Pacific Finance learned that Universal claimed ownership of the cars, it brought this action to quiet title. At the trial it was stipulated that this action was not intended to affect the interests of the individual buyers of the cars; and that the controversy was between Universal and Pacific Finance only. The trial court found, among other things, that it was the intention of the agreement between Universal and Lonnie's to create a consignment or factorage with respect to the cars in question; that Universal gave to Lonnie's authority to sell the cars on conditional sales contracts and to assign those contracts to financing agencies like Pacific; and that in addition to these ten cars, Universal and Lonnie's for a number of months had followed the same method of selling and financing other cars through conditional sales contracts assigned to Pacific. It was further found that prior to making its arrangements with Lonnie's, Pacific Finance had investigated Lonnie's financial status and inspected the cars then at Lonnie's lot for sale, and from time to time Pacific received and checked supplementary inventories of the cars to be sold by Lonnie's; that having established a "line of business" with Lonnie's, Pacific was entitled to rely on the customs of the trade whereby the used car dealer attended to re-issuance of the certificates of ownership showing the conditional buyer as the registered owner and the financing agency as the legal owner of the car; that Universal made no check on the disposition of the cars given to Lonnie's to sell, nor did Universal instruct Lonnie's to disclose Universal's interest in the cars; that Pacific used reasonable care in its dealings with Lonnie's, but Universal was negligent in its arrangements with Lonnie's insofar as making possible any loss suffered with respect to the cars. Judgment therefore was entered for plaintiff, Pacific Finance, and defendants were directed to deliver to plaintiff the certificates of ownership on the cars in question for re-issuance by the Department of Motor Vehicles so as to show Pacific Finance as legal owner.

[1] There can be no doubt as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings on the factorship issue. It was stipulated at the trial that Lonnie's sold the cars in question in its regular course of business. Defendant Foust, one of Universal's partners, testified as to the business arrangements between Universal and Lonnie's: that Lonnie's was free to sell the cars in its own name as desired—for cash or credit, or finance credit sales; that Universal was not interested in how the cars were sold so long as Universal received the agreed amount from Lonnie's; that Universal would retain the pink slip until Lonnie's paid the stipulated amount, when it would be delivered to Lonnie's for re-registration with the Department of Motor Vehicles; and that a number of cars, perhaps eighty or one hundred, had been sold by Lonnie's for Universal in that fashion. In short, Universal consigned the cars to Lonnie's and Lonnie's held them for sale, with authority to procure financing for the individual buyer through a financing agency. Plaintiff's manager testified that the first knowledge plaintiff had of Universal's interest was through a telephone conversation he had with defendant Foust in August, 1952, some three months following the time when the first conditional sales contract on these ten cars was assigned to plaintiff; that Foust at that time asked "Did you know we (Universal) had 10 cars consigned with Lonnie's and that you folks (plaintiff) have the contracts on them, but we have never been paid off"; and that he, plaintiff's manager, answered that he had previously had no such information.

[2-4] A dealer in used cars is a factor within the definition of Civil Code, section 2026, when the owner of the car puts it in the dealer's possession to be sold. Siegel v. Bayless, 113 Cal.App.2d 661, 663, 248 P.2d 968. As such he has "ostensible authority to deal with the property of his principal as his own, in transactions with persons not having notice of the actual ownership." Civ.Code, § 2369. From the evidence above reviewed, it could readily be inferred that Universal intended Lonnie's to be its factor, with authority to arrange for the financing of credit sales. In the absence of restrictions, a factor who sells goods entrusted to his possession for that purpose has implied power to receive payment, and to give a receipt and discharge to the purchaser, and a payment to the factor is binding on the principal, although the factor misappropriates the funds. 35 C.J.S., Factors, § 12, p. 407. Such principles were applied in Kenny v. Christianson, 200 Cal. 419, 253 P. 715, 50 A.L.R. 1297, and Siegel v. Bayless, supra, 113 Cal.App.2d 661, 248 P.2d 968, in each of which cases the purchaser paid the factor, who absconded with the money, and the original owner unavailingly sought to recover possession of the automobile from the purchaser. The same principle should apply here, for plaintiff, though a finance company dealing with Lonnie's as the ostensible owner of the cars, paid Lonnie's without any notice of Universal's interest or of any facts which would put plaintiff on inquiry.

Defendants contend that title to the cars was in Universal until divested in some manner, and that by the terms of the Vehicle Code the only way in which title could have been transferred was by endorsement and delivery of the pink slips. § 186. To this point, defendants argue that plaintiff, before it paid Lonnie's, should have insisted on Lonnie's producing the pink slips evidencing ownership of the cars; that if such inquiry had been made, Universal's interest would have been revealed; and that plaintiff should therefore bear the loss which its own negligence produced. But under the particular circumstances here involved, Universal is estopped to rely on the registration requirements of the Vehicle Code. Universal's conduct in turning over the cars to Lonnie's, letting them remain on Lonnie's lot for sale in Lonnie's regular course of business, and with no restriction as to any arrangements Lonnie's might make with a finance agency such as plaintiff, justifies an inference of negligence on Universal's part. It is likewise inferable from the evidence that in its continued course of dealing with Lonnie's, Universal knew of Lonnie's practice to sell the cars entrusted to it under conditional sales contracts and to assign such contracts for financing, and that Universal approved such procedure. In short, Universal created the situation upon which plaintiff relied and acted.

Moreover, defendant Foust admitted that Universal made no check of Lonnie's practices to see whether the cars were sold through any credit financing or whether Lonnie's had received the purchase price and had failed to remit to Universal. On the other hand, it is undisputed that plaintiff had no knowledge of Universal's interest at the time it took the conditional sales contracts on the cars in question. Nor does it appear that plaintiff was required to make inquiry of Lonnie's for the pink slips on the cars before paying the purchase price, for plaintiff was entitled to rely on the trade custom whereby there would be a delay of three to three and one-half months in the re-issuance of pink slips by the Department of Motor Vehicles. Universal knew of this trade custom, and that a financing agency such as plaintiff might rely on that custom. Accordingly, plaintiff accepted the "in lieu of pink" document from Lonnie's on each of the cars involved, awaiting the re-issuance of the pink slip. Plaintiff's manager testified that plaintiff had set up a check system which would bring attention to the file of a particular transaction within approximately three months from the date of assignment of the conditional sales contract by a used car dealer such as Lonnie's; and that, in fact, with respect to the cars here involved, the first "check period" on the pink slips would have been due a few days after defendant Foust had notified plaintiff's manager of Universal's interest.

[5-7] From this set of circumstances the trial court found that Universal was negligent in its dealings with Lonnie's; that Lonnie's at no time exceeded its authority in selling the cars upon conditional sales contracts and arranging for financing through such contracts; and that plaintiff was not negligent but used reasonable care in its dealings with Lonnie's. These were all essentially questions of fact, which were resolved in plaintiff's favor upon substantial evidence. Defendants argue that plaintiff cannot rely on any element of estoppel because of its failure to plead such facts. State Credit Corporation v. Ranger, 101 Cal.App. 310, 314, 281 P. 663. Although it is true that an estoppel ordinarily should be pleaded, the evidence on which the court based its findings on the estoppel theory was admitted without objection, the issue was fully litigated by the parties, and any defect in pleading such matter was therefore waived. 18 Cal.Jur.2d § 13, pp. 411-412; Foster v. Fisher, 44 Cal. App.2d 33, 37, 111 P.2d 935. The situation here makes applicable the maxim that "Where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he, by whose negligence it happened, must be the sufferer." Civ.Code, § 3543. The loss must therefore fall upon Universal, and the trial court was justified in so concluding despite the provisions of the Vehicle Code regulating the transfer of ownership. See Wargin v. Wargin, 29 Cal.2d 843, 845-846, 180 P.2d 349.

The judgment is affirmed.

The PACIFIC MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA
(a Corporation) et al., Appellants,
v.

F. Britton McCONNELL, as Insurance Commissioner, etc., et al., Respondents.

L. A. 23261.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank,
June 27, 1955.

Rehearing Denied July 27, 1955.

Mandamus proceeding by old insurance company and certain of its stockholders to review action of insurance commissioner approving a plan of mutualization of a new insurance company, which had been organized by commissioner as part of rehabilitation of old company. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Paul Nourse, J., upheld the action of the commissioner, and the plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that even if rehabilitation agreement entered into by insurance commissioner and court order approving agreement, authorized mutualization of new insurance company under wrong statutes, order was res judicata when there was nothing to prevent question concerning validity of rehabilitation agreement from being litigated in proceedings which led to order approving agreement.

Judgment affirmed.

Traynor, Carter and Schauer, JJ., dissented.

Opinion, 270 P.2d 584, vacated.

1. Insurance ⇨32

Where old insolvent insurance company was taken over by insurance commissioner, who organized new insurance company as part of rehabilitation of old company, mutualization of new company, which was solvent and nondelinquent, pursuant to statutes relating to voluntary mutualization of a solvent insurer, was proper. Insurance Code, §§ 1010 et seq., 1043 et seq., 1045, 1046 et seq., 11525 et seq.

2. Insurance ⇨46

Where old insurance company was in a hazardous and insolvent condition, insurance commissioner, who had taken over business and assets of old company, had power to create a new corporation in order to preserve the business of the seized company. Insurance Code, §§ 1011, 1013.

3. Insurance ⇨32

Fact that commissioner of insurance, as sole holder of stock of new insurance company, which he had organized as part of rehabilitation of old insolvent company, consented in advance to plan of mutualization did not disqualify commissioner from passing upon fairness of mutualization plan which was promulgated. Insurance Code, § 11526(b, c).

4. Judgment ⇨646

Where rehabilitation agreement, which provided for voluntary mutualization of new insurance company, which insurance commissioner had organized as part of rehabilitation of old insolvent insurance company, had been approved by order of the superior court, validity of rehabilitation agreement was res judicata. Insurance Code, §§ 1043, 11525 et seq.

5. Judgment ⇨725(1)

Even though causes of action be different, prior determination of an issue is conclusive in subsequent suit between same parties as to that issue and every matter which might have been urged to sustain or defeat its determination.

6. Judgment ⇨660

A final judgment or order is res judicata even though contrary to statute when court has jurisdiction of the subject matter and the parties.

7. Judgment ⇨660

Even if rehabilitation agreement entered into by insurance commissioner, who organized new insurance company as part of rehabilitation of old insolvent company, and court order approving agreement, authorized mutualization of new insurance company under wrong statutes, order was nevertheless res judicata when there was nothing to prevent question concerning validity of rehabilitation agreement from being litigated in proceedings which led to order approving the agreement. Insurance Code, §§ 1011, 1013, 1043, 11525 et seq.

8. Insurance ⇨32

Fact that approval of shareholders to plan of mutualization of new insurance company, which was organized by insurance commissioner as part of rehabilitation of old insolvent company, was given in rehabilitation agreement by commissioner as sole stockholder of new company, did not render mutualization plan improper. Insurance Code, §§ 1037, 1043, 11525 et seq.

9. Insurance ⇨32

In absence of statutory provision to the contrary, stockholders of a solvent company can contract to consent to a future plan of voluntary mutualization.

10. Insurance ⇨10

Where approval by insurance commission of mutualization of new insurance company did not involve any deprivation of property rights or vested rights, function of superior court, in reviewing action of commissioner, was to determine whether action taken by commissioner was arbitrary or constituted an abuse of discretion, and in upholding action of commissioner, superior court properly refused to conduct a trial de novo.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

The Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company of California (hereinafter referred to as the "old company") and certain of its stockholders brought this mandamus proceeding in the superior court to review the action of the Insurance Commissioner in approving a plan for mutualization of a second corporation, Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company (hereinafter called the "new company"), which had been organized by the commissioner as part of the rehabilitation of the old company. The court upheld the action of the commissioner, and plaintiffs have appealed from the judgment.

In 1936 the old company was in a hazardous and insolvent condition within the meaning of the Insurance Code, and its business and assets were taken over by the Insurance Commissioner,¹ as authorized by statute. Ins. Code, §§ 1011, 1013. Pursuant to section 1043 of the code, a rehabilitation agreement was entered into between the new company and Commissioner Carpenter, as conservator of the old company, whereby most of its assets were transferred to the new company in exchange for all the new company's capital stock. The stock was to be held by the commissioner as conservator for the benefit of the creditors, policyholders and stockholders of the old company. The new company assumed substantially all the obligations of the old company, including a limited obligation with respect to non-cancellable accident and health policies (referred to herein as "non-can policies"), and agreed to set up a special fund for restoration of benefits to holders of those policies.

In December 1936, after a hearing, the superior court approved the rehabilitation agreement and authorized the commissioner to perform all the obligations required on his part. This order was affirmed in Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 10 Cal. 2d 307, 74 P.2d 761. Affirmed in Neblett v. Carpenter, 305 U.S. 297, 59 S.Ct. 170, 83 L.Ed. 182. In February 1937 an order was made providing for the liquidation of the old company and appointing the commissioner as liquidator. It was upheld in Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 13 Cal.2d 306, 89 P.2d 637. In 1938 the commissioner transferred the stock of the new company to five trustees who were given legal title to the stock with power to vote it in accordance with the purposes of the rehabilitation agreement. The order approving the transfer was affirmed in Caminetti v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 22 Cal. 2d 344, 139 P.2d 908.

The rehabilitation agreement set forth the method by which a plan for mutualization of the new company could be formulated. It provided that ten per cent of the participating life policyholders could request the new company to create an appointing committee consisting of the president of the Life Insurance Association of America, the president of Stanford University and the provost of the University of California at Los Angeles. The appointing committee was directed to select a price determination committee composed of persons skilled in matters of insurance company valuation. If the price determination committee concluded that voluntary mutualization could be practicably accomplished, it was to propose a plan of mutualization in accordance with the laws of this state. By the terms of the agreement the commissioner, as sole shareholder of the new company, consented in advance to the plan of mutualization to be formulated.

A price determination committee was appointed, consisting of Alva J. McAndless, president of the Lincoln National Life Insurance Company of Fort Wayne, Indiana; Horace R. Bassford, vice president and chief actuary of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company of New York; Ray D. Murphy, vice president and chief actuary of the Equitable Life Assurance Society of New York; and Albert J. Hettinger, a partner in Lazard Freres & Company, a firm engaged in investment banking. After three years of study the committee proposed a plan of mutualization, which provides that, upon the occurrence of certain conditions, the new company shall buy all of its own capital stock for $3,000,000, plus interest from December 31, 1948, the price to be augmented should the restoration of benefits under the non-can policies be completed before 1973.

The proposed plan of mutualization was adopted by the directors of the new company on May 5, 1950. On September 22, 1950, after a hearing, Commissioner Downey approved the plan, finding that it would be fair and equitable in its operation, and thereafter it was approved by the policyholders of the new company. This proceeding in mandamus was then brought to review the action of the commissioner, and the trial court concluded that there was substantial evidence to support his findings and that he had not exceeded his jurisdiction or abused his discretion in approving the plan.

Plaintiffs attack the judgment upon numerous grounds, and, although many of their contentions may be disposed of by application of principles of res judicata, we believe that the problems may be more clearly presented by first discussing the propriety of the determination of the various points without regard to the binding effect of prior adjudications.

[1] The first problem which we must consider is whether the proper statutes were followed in the formulation and approval of the mutualization plan. As contemplated by the rehabilitation agreement, all steps in connection with the adoption of the plan were taken pursuant to sections 11525 et seq. of the Insurance Code, which relate to voluntary mutualization of a solvent insurer.² Plaintiffs assert that the applicable statutes for mutualization of the new company are sections 1043 et seq., which govern involuntary mutualization of an insolvent insurer.³ The essential differences in procedure are that under the sections relating to voluntary mutualization of a solvent company the plan is adopted by the directors, subject to approval by the stockholders and the commissioner, and no court proceedings are necessary; whereas under the provisions for involuntary mutualization of a seized insurer the plan is formulated by the commissioner as conservator without consent of the stockholders or directors, and it must be approved by the court.

[2] The new company is solvent and nondelinquent, and there is no sound reason why it should be mutualized under the statutes relating to insolvent insurers. The commissioner had power to create the new corporation in order to preserve the business of the seized insurer. Section 1043, which authorizes the commissioner to enter into rehabilitation agreements, contains no express limitation on what may be included in them, and section 1037 provides that the enumeration of the powers of the commissioner shall not be construed as a limitation upon him or upon his right to do such other acts as he may deem necessary in connection with the handling of the affairs of an insolvent company.⁴ When salvaging the business of a seized insurer the greatest possible protection should be given to creditors and other interested parties, and in the present instance the commissioner evidently concluded that this objective could best be accomplished through the formation of a new company divorced as far as possible from the control of those who were in charge of the old company when it experienced financial difficulties.

The new company is a separate and distinct entity, and when the business was transferred it ceased to be the business of the old company and became the business of the new company. In Garrison v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 83 Cal.App.2d 1, 9-10,

2. Section 11525 of the Insurance Code provides: "A solvent domestic incorporated insurer having a paid-in capital represented by outstanding shares of capital stock and issuing, on a reserve basis, nonassessable policies of life insurance or of both life and disability insurance, may convert itself into an incorporated mutual life insurer, or life and disability insurer, issuing nonassessable policies on a reserve basis. To that end it may provide and carry out a plan for the acquisition of the outstanding shares of its capital stock for the benefit of its policyholders, or any class or classes of its policyholders, by complying with the requirements of this chapter."

Sections 11526-11533 contain detailed provisions relating to procedure for adoption and execution of the plan of mutualization.

3. Section 1043 of the Insurance Code provides in part: "In any proceeding under this article, the commissioner, as conservator or as liquidator, may, subject to the approval of said court, and subject to such liens as may be necessary mutualize or reinsure the business of such person, or enter into rehabilitation agreements." The words "such person" include an insolvent insurer as referred to in sections 1010 et seq. of the Insurance Code dealing with insolvency and delinquency.

Section 1045 provides: "If at any time after the issuance of an order under section 1011 * * * it shall appear to the commissioner that the purposes of section 1011 can be best attained by the mutualization of such life insurer, the commissioner may formulate a plan for the mutualization of such insurer." Sections 1046 et seq. set for the necessary procedural steps.

4. Section 1037 of the Insurance Code provides in part: "The enumeration, in this article, of the duties, powers and authority of the commissioner in proceedings under this article shall not be construed as a limitation upon the commissioner, nor shall it exclude in any manner his right to perform and to do such other acts not herein specifically enumerated, or otherwise provided for, which he may deem necessary or expedient for the accomplishment or in aid of the purpose of such proceedings."

187 P.2d 893, 899, it was held that the identity of the new company "is utterly distinct from that of old company," that it "cannot be fairly said that it is a continuance of old company", and that the new company "is a separate entity that came into being after old company's insolvency was declared * * *." The fact that the new company may for some purposes have served as an agent or instrumentality of the commissioner does not destroy its identity as a separate company. Accordingly, as contemplated by the rehabilitation agreement, the applicable statutory provisions for mutualization of the new company are those found in sections 11525 et seq., which govern voluntary mutualization of solvent nondelinquent insurers.

[3] Plaintiffs nevertheless contend that it was improper to follow the procedure set up in the code for mutualization of a solvent company because, they assert, the commissioner in doing so was forced to act in a dual capacity with conflicting interests. Section 11526, which prescribes the method to be followed in mutualizing a solvent insurer, provides that the plan shall be: " * * * (b) Approved by the vote of the holders of at least a majority of the outstanding shares at a special meeting of shareholders called for that purpose, or by the written consent of such shareholders. (c) Submitted to the commissioner and approved by him in writing." Commissioner Carpenter as the sole holder of the stock of the new company consented in advance to the plan of mutualization, and Commissioner Downey approved it after holding a hearing to ascertain if the plan would be fair and equitable in its operation. Plaintiffs claim that the responsibilities of the commissioner under subdivision (c) are different from and may conflict with his duties under subdivision (b). Even if there might be such a conflict under some circumstances, it would not follow that it was improper to adopt the statutory procedure set forth for the mutualization of a solvent company. The legislative scheme for the mutualization of solvent nondelinquent insurers would in some instances be defeated if the commissioner were disqualified for the reasons urged by plaintiffs, and it must be assumed that the Legislature realized that the commissioner might be required to pass upon the fairness of a plan in a case where he, acting as conservator, had previously consented to mutualization on behalf of the stockholders. In numerous cases where the action of an administrative officer was necessary to prevent defeat of the statutory scheme, his participation has been upheld although the grounds for disqualification were much more serious than those raised here. For example, see Thompson v. City of Long Beach, 41 Cal.2d 235, 243-244, 259 P.2d 649; Caminetti v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 22 Cal.2d 344, 365-366, 139 P.2d 908; Federal Construction Co. v. Curd, 179 Cal. 489, 493-495, 177 P. 469, 2 A.L.R. 1202; Scannell v. Wolff, 86 Cal.App.2d 489, 492-493, 195 P.2d 536; Nider v. Homan, 32 Cal.App.2d 11, 13, 89 P.2d 136. The fact that Commissioner Carpenter gave advance consent on behalf of the stockholders to a plan of mutualization did not disqualify Commissioner Downey from passing upon the fairness of the mutualization plan which was promulgated.

[4] An alternative reason for rejecting plaintiffs' claim that it was improper to follow the procedure set forth in sections 11525 et seq. in the mutualization of the new company is that the validity of the rehabilitation agreement, which provided for voluntary mutualization, is now res judicata. A copy of the agreement was attached to and made a part of the petition which sought approval of the agreement. The petition was filed pursuant to section 1043, which provides that rehabilitation agreements entered into by the commissioner are subject to the approval of the superior court. The validity of all the provisions of the agreement was put in issue by the petition and determined by the court. The order of December 4, 1936, approved the agreement "and each and all of the terms and conditions thereof, and the plan therein embodied," reciting that all interested parties had been given a reasonable opportunity to be heard on "the question of fairness, justice, equity, feasibility, and propriety" of the agreement and the plan. All parties were forever enjoined from making any complaint with respect to the agreement or any provisions thereof. This order was affirmed in Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 10 Cal.2d 307, 74 P.2d 761. See also Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 13 Cal.2d 306, 314-316, 89 P.2d 637; Caminetti v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 22 Cal.2d 344, 351-352, 139 P.2d 908.

[5] While different causes of action were involved in the present proceeding and the one leading to the order approving the rehabilitation agreement, the parties were the same, and it is settled that even though the causes of action be different, the prior determination of an issue is conclusive in a subsequent suit between the same parties as to that issue and every matter which might have been urged to sustain or defeat its determination. Shore v. Shore, 43 Cal. 2d 677, 277 P.2d 4; Krier v. Krier, 28 Cal. 2d 841, 843, 172 P.2d 681; De Hart v. Board of Trustees, 1 Cal.2d 354, 356, 34 P.2d 1021; Price v. Sixth District Agricultural Ass'n, 201 Cal. 502, 510 et seq., 258 P. 387. Inconsistent language found in certain opinions of the District Court of Appeal must be disapproved. Green v. Green, 66 Cal.App.2d 50, 59, 151 P.2d 679; Babcock v. Babcock, 63 Cal.App. 2d 94, 97, 146 P.2d 279; Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n v. McLaughlin, 22 Cal.App.2d 411, 417, 71 P.2d 291, 72 P.2d 554. The basic issue before the court when the agreement was submitted for approval was the propriety of each of its provisions, and the determination of that issue is conclusive as to every matter which might have been urged to sustain or defeat its determination.

It is contended that the order approving the rehabilitation agreement may be collaterally attacked upon the theory that the mutualization procedure provided for in the agreement followed the wrong statutory provisions and that therefore the order is void. For the purpose of passing upon this question we shall assume, contrary to what we have just decided, that the wrong statutes were used in the mutualization of the new company.

[6] It is the general rule that a final judgment or order is res judicata even though contrary to statute where the court has jurisdiction in the fundamental sense, i. e., of the subject matter and the parties. In the consideration of problems arising in this field it should be kept in mind that there is a difference between lack of jurisdiction in the fundamental sense, which is ordinarily essential for collateral attack, and the broader meaning of the term "lack of jurisdiction" when used in determining the availability of prohibition or certiorari to review an order or judgment. Some cases involving collateral attack have unfortunately failed to recognize this distinction. For discussion of the distinction, see Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal, 17 Cal.2d 280, 287-291, 109 P.2d 942, 132 A. L.R. 715; Tide Water Assoc. Oil Co. v. Superior Court, 43 Cal.2d 815, 279 P.2d 35.

In some instances the requirements of a statute may relate to subject matter jurisdiction, and disregard of the statute may render a judgment void and subject to collateral attack. See, for example, Grannis v. Superior Court, 146 Cal. 245, 254-255, 79 P. 891; cf. Rogers v. Cady, 104 Cal. 288, 291-292, 38 P. 81 (constitutional provision). In the present case, however, it is clear that the court which approved the rehabilitation agreement had jurisdiction of the subject matter and the parties, and, unless the case comes within some exception, collateral attack cannot be based on the ground that the court authorized mutualization to proceed under the wrong statute.

Closely analogous to the problem involved here are cases holding that probate decrees are res judicata, although they direct distribution pursuant to wills which are contrary to statute, since the court sitting in probate, like a court passing upon a rehabilitation agreement, is under a duty to determine the validity of the instrument before it. In re Estate of Loring, 29 Cal. 2d 423, 427 et seq., 175 P.2d 524; Crew v. Pratt, 119 Cal. 139, 147 et seq., 51 P. 38; In re Estate of Gardiner, 45 Cal.App.

2d 559, 562 et seq., 114 P.2d 643; McGavin v. San Francisco P.O.A. Soc., 34 Cal.App. 168, 170 et seq., 167 P. 182. Similarly analogous are cases holding that an order settling a trustee's account is res judicata as to the propriety of the purchase of investment certificates which were issued contrary to statute. Willson v. Security-First Nat. Bank, 21 Cal.2d 705, 134 P.2d 800; In re Estate of Crane, 73 Cal. App.2d 93, 165 P.2d 940; cf. Fergodo v. Donohue, 40 Cal.App. 670, 181 P. 819. In re Estate of Rowe, 66 Cal.App.2d 594, 152 P.2d 765, which is contrary to the cases cited above, is disapproved.

The principle of res judicata has also been applied as a basis for holding that judgments enforcing contracts are a bar to the defense of illegality in subsequent litigation. Andrews v. Reidy, 7 Cal.2d 366, 60 P.2d 832; De Hart v. Allen, 49 Cal.App. 2d 639, 646, 122 P.2d 273, approved in De Hart v. Allen, 26 Cal.2d 829, 830-831, 161 P.2d 453; cf. Short v. Short, 106 Cal.App. 210, 215, 288 P. 1111. Another instance in which the doctrine was applied is San Diego Trust & Sav. Bank v. Young, 19 Cal.2d 98, 119 P.2d 133, where the prior judgment reduced the time for redemption contrary to statute. The San Diego case impliedly overruled Anthony v. Janssen, 183 Cal. 329, 191 P. 538, and Tonningsen v. Odd Fellows' Cem. Ass'n, 60 Cal.App. 568, 213 P. 710. It has also been held that a judgment, which was contrary to the Constitution because it was based upon a statute later held invalid, was nevertheless res judicata in a subsequent suit, the court stating that objections to the statute should have been raised in the prior proceeding. Chicot County Drainage Dist. v. Baxter State Bank, 308 U.S. 371, 376, 378, 60 S.Ct. 317, 319-320, 84 L.Ed. 329. The Chicot case is quoted with approval in Mueller v. Elba Oil Co., 21 Cal.2d 188, 205-206, 130 P.2d 961, and was cited in Rescue Army v. Municipal Court, 28 Cal.2d 460, 463-464, 171 P.2d 8.

[7] There are some recognized exceptions to the general rule that collateral attack will not be allowed where there is fundamental jurisdiction even though the judgment is contrary to statute. For example, a judgment may be collaterally attacked where unusual circumstances were present which prevented an earlier and more appropriate attack. See 1 Witkin, California Procedure (1954) 411-412. In Burnett v. King, 33 Cal.2d 805, 205 P.2d 657, 12 A.L.R.2d 333, collateral attack was permitted against a default divorce decree which awarded all the community property to the plaintiff in the absence of a prayer therefor in the complaint, contrary to the provision in section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure that relief in a default case cannot exceed that demanded in the complaint. The defendant in the divorce action had no notice or warning that the property would be affected by a default judgment, and the opinion points out that the decision would sanction a trap if it held that his property rights had been disposed of since he would properly have assumed from the complaint that his rights to the property were not to be litigated at that time. 33 Cal.2d at page 811, 205 P.2d at page 660. The present case is readily distinguishable, since there was nothing to prevent the questions which are raised with regard to the validity of the rehabilitation agreement from being litigated in the proceedings which led to the order approving the agreement.

Proceedings to prohibit or annul judgments of contempt for violation of injunctions and other equitable orders made contrary to statute may constitute another exception to the general rule. Harlan v. Superior Court, 94 Cal.App.2d 902, 904-905, 211 P.2d 942; Hunter v. Superior Court, 36 Cal.App.2d 100, 97 P.2d 492; cf. Fortenbury v. Superior Court, 16 Cal.2d 405, 407-408, 106 P.2d 411 (violation of Constitution). The decisions do not use the term, but the attack in such cases might be considered to be collateral, and the proceedings apparently fall in a special category because they are penal in nature.

From the foregoing discussion it follows that, even if we assume that the rehabilitation agreement and the order approving it authorized mutualization of the new company under the wrong statutes, the order is nevertheless res judicata.

[8] The next problem is whether there was sufficient compliance with the statutory requirements for voluntary mutualization of solvent insurers. Sections 11525 et seq. provide that the plan of mutualization shall be adopted by the directors and approved by the shareholders, the commissioner and the policyholders. Plaintiffs contend that the actions taken to meet these requirements were in certain respects defective and unauthorized.

[9] The approval of the shareholders to the plan of mutualization was given in the rehabilitation agreement by Commissioner Carpenter as sole stockholder of the new company. As we have seen, the agreement provided for the formulation of a plan of mutualization by the price determination committee, and plaintiffs claim that the commissioner, acting for the shareholders of the new company, was without authority to give advance consent to such a plan. In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, the stockholders of a solvent company can contract to consent to a future plan of voluntary mutualization, cf. Market St. Ry. Co. v. Hellman, 109 Cal. 571, 586-587, 42 P. 225, and no sound reason appears why such an agreement is improper merely because the shares are held by the commissioner as conservator of a seized insurer. The commissioner apparently concluded that a plan for mutualization which could not be destroyed by future action or non-action of the shareholders was necessary as a means of inducing both former and prospective policyholders to deal with the new company and thus permit its continued existence. The powers vested in the commissioner by sections 1037 and 1043 are sufficiently broad to authorize him, as sole stockholder, to give advance consent to the plan of mutualization. Moreover, the validity of all portions of the rehabilitation agreement, including the provision for advance consent, is res judicata.

The directors adopted the mutualization plan, but it is claimed that the action taken was ineffective because they assertedly did not obtain sufficient information to enable them to properly evaluate the desirability of the plan. They had the benefit of the report of the price determination committee and the opinions of experts, including actuaries and officers of the company, and it seems obvious that, as a practical matter, directors must ordinarily act on the advice of corporate officers and other persons who have expert knowledge. See Ballantine & Sterling, California Corporation Laws (1949), p. 110.

[10] After the directors adopted the plan as formulated by the price determination committee, Commissioner Downey held a hearing which lasted nearly three weeks. Oral and documentary evidence was received, and all interested parties had an opportunity to participate. The commissioner approved the plan after finding that the rights and interests of the new company, its policyholders and shareholders were protected and that the plan would be fair and equitable in its operation. Plaintiffs contend that the findings are not supported by the evidence and that there was a lack of procedural due process at the hearing. In passing upon these contentions, we shall first give consideration to plaintiffs' claim that the trial court, in reviewing the action of the commissioner, should have held a trial de novo. The approval of the mutualization plan by the commissioner did not involve any deprivation of property rights or vested rights; it was in essence a permit or license authorizing the new company to purchase its own stock. Under these circumstances the function of the superior court was to determine whether the action taken by the commission was arbitrary or constituted an abuse of discretion, and in upholding the action of the commissioner, it properly refused to conduct a trial de novo. Southern California Jockey Club v. California Horse Racing Bd., 36 Cal.2d 167, 174-175, 223 P.2d 1; McDonough v. Goodcell, 13 Cal.2d 741, 746-749, 91 P.2d 1035, 123 A.L.R. 1205; see Thomas v. California Emp. Stab. Comm., 39 Cal.2d 501, 504, 247 P.2d 561; Andrews v. State Board of Registration, 123 Cal.App.2d 685, 694-695, 267 P.2d 352.

There is no merit in plaintiffs' claim that the record before the commissioner does not support his approval of the plan. The price determination committee consisted of men highly skilled in matters of insurance company valuation, and they were assisted in the formulation of the plan by Joseph Christman, associate actuary of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company of New York, two Fellows of the Society of Actuaries and numerous trained supervisory and clerical employees. Experts testified that the price fixed for the purchase of the stock was fair, that the provisions relating to the time and manner of payment were necessary for the safety and stability of the new company, that the proposed plan gave due regard and protection to the rights of all persons interested in the new company and would be fair in its operation.

Plaintiffs' contention that there was a denial of procedural due process is based on their claim that the commissioner accepted the conclusions of the price determination committee without having before him all the facts on which those conclusions were based and that the committee itself relied on statistics furnished by its actuary without reviewing all the supporting data. Two members of the price determination committee testified in detail as to how the committee arrived at its determinations, and the actuary testified regarding his report which was introduced in evidence. Thus two of the four members of the committee who were responsible for its report, as well as the actuary who procured most of the data relied on by the committee, were available for cross-examination. These men, as we have seen, were experts in the insurance and investment fields, and the fact that the other members of the committee and the persons who assisted the actuary were not called as witnesses is immaterial, at least in the absence of a showing that plaintiffs sought to obtain their testimony. City of Pasadena v. City of Alhambra, 33 Cal.2d 908, 919, 207 P.2d 17. At the hearing an offer was made to furnish the documents and testimony necessary to explain every detail of the committee's work. No claim is made that any request for data was refused, and plaintiffs have no valid basis for complaint if they failed to make such a request.

The judgment is affirmed.

I dissent.

Although the Legislature has provided detailed statutory provisions for the mutualization of the business of an insolvent insurer, Ins. Code, § 1045 et seq., the majority opinion holds in effect that these provisions may be completely nullified by the execution of a rehabilitation agreement under section 1043 of the Insurance Code, if such agreement provides for the voluntary mutualization of a new insurer created for the purpose of carrying on the business of the old. The commissioner has broad powers in executing rehabilitation agreements, and it may be both proper and desirable for him to make use of a new corporate entity to salvage the business of an insolvent insurer. It does not follow, however, that if the end product of a rehabilitation agreement is to be the mutualization of the business of an insolvent insurer, the statutory provisions with respect to such mutualization may be ignored. To hold that they may be not only renders the provisions with respect to involuntary mutualization superfluous but deprives the interested parties of their right to the protection of court scrutiny of the plan of mutualization. See, Ins. Code, § 1051.

The importance to the shareholders of the old company of having the court independently pass upon the fairness of the plan of mutualization is demonstrated by the facts of this case. The trial court clearly indicated that had the decision been his, the plan would not have been approved; if the shareholders were entitled to his independent judgment, their rights have been prejudiced by his failure to exercise it. This case is not one involving only the mutualization of a solvent insurer, since if it were, the shareholders would have the power to protect their interests by withholding their consent to the plan of mutualization. Ins. Code, § 11526 (b). In fact, the business of an insolvent insurer is being mutualized pursuant to a rehabilitation agreement that has deprived the shareholders of the old company of the veto power they otherwise would have, and under the holding of the majority opinion they must look to the commissioner rather than to the court for the protection of their interests. Ins. Code, §§ 11526 (c), 11527. Although the Legislature recognized that approval by the commissioner is sufficient when all of the interested parties are in a position to protect their own interests, it also provided that court approval is essential when they are not. Ins. Code, § 1051.

Despite the force of the foregoing considerations, if in fact the trial court in 1936 approved a rehabilitation agreement that not only provided for mutualization contrary to the statutory provisions but also restricted the power of that court to control the ultimate disposition of the assets in the hands of the commissioner as conservator or liquidator, I would reluctantly concur in the judgment on the ground that the validity of the agreement and order is res judicata. In my opinion, however, the court in 1936 did not exhaust its power to control the disposition of assets in the hands of the commissioner as conservator or liquidator, see Ins. Code, § 1037 (d), and that therefore the commissioner cannot carry out the terms of the mutualization agreement until as liquidator he has secured the permission of the court in the insolvency proceedings. Accordingly, until he secures that approval he cannot approve the plan presented by the price determination committee as "fair and equitable in its operation", Ins. Code, § 11527, for it cannot be known whether it will become operative at all until it is approved by the court in the insolvency proceedings.

Subdivision (d) of section 1037 provides "that no transaction involving real or personal property shall be made where the market value of the property involved exceeds the sum of one thousand dollars without first obtaining permission of * * * [the court in the insolvency proceedings], and then only in accordance with such terms as said court may prescribe." The stock of the new company subject to the plan of mutualization is personal property worth more than $1,000, and that plan is clearly a transaction involving such property. This section has not been complied with unless the court in approving the rehabilitation agreement granted permission to the commissioner to dispose of the stock under the terms of any mutualization agreement that might be proposed by the price determination committee 10 years or more in the future.

The order approving the rehabilitation agreement is ambiguous. Paragraph 15 provides:

"That the Insurance Commissioner of the State of California as Conservator of respondent corporation, or, if he should hereafter be appointed Liquidator of said corporation, as such Liquidator, be and is hereby authorized, without further order of this court, fully and faithfully to perform, carry out, and discharge each and all of the obligations, terms, conditions, and covenants on his part required to be performed under the terms of said Rehabilitation and Reinsurance Agreement; and, either with or without further order of this court, to make, do, execute, and deliver any and all such further or other acts, deeds, and things by him deemed reasonably necessary or desirable to effectuate the intents and purposes of said Rehabilitation and Reinsurance Agreement, and to assure and to confirm to Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company, or its successors, all and singular the properties hereinbefore directed to be conveyed and released to said corporation, and to enable said corporation from and after the date hereof to conduct and continue to conduct a life and disability insurance business, as contemplated by said agreement."

Paragraph 16 provides:

"That this court, without relinquishing by these specific provisions any jurisdiction by it retained as a matter of law, do, and and it does hereby, specifically retain and reserve jurisdiction of the within proceedings (for the purpose of authorizing or approving any act of the Insurance Commissioner of the State of California done, or to be done pursuant to or in accordance with this order, and) for the purpose of making or entering, upon application of the Insurance Commissioner of the State of California or of Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company, any order, decree, judgment, or ruling required, permitted, or requested to be done, made, or entered in connection with or pursuant to the terms of said agreement, or for the effectuation of the purposes thereof."

Since the contemplated plan of mutualization was not to be formulated for at least ten years, the court could obviously not approve that plan at the time it entered its order approving the rehabilitation agreement. Moreover, it did not expressly approve in advance the carrying out of any mutualization plan that might be presented by the price determination committee. Although standing alone the language permitting the commissioner to carry out the rehabilitation agreement "without further order of this court" might be interpreted as exhausting the court's jurisdiction over mutualization, it may not reasonably be so interpreted in the light of the express reservation of jurisdiction "for the purpose of making * * * any order * * * required * * * in connection with or pursuant to the terms of said agreement." It is significant that in Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 10 Cal.2d 307, 322, 74 P.2d 761, 771, this court was careful to note: "The plan also provides that the commissioner, either as conservator or liquidator, shall continue to hold all the stock of the new company as a protection to all old company policyholders. Ultimate mutualization, in the event the policyholders so elect, is also provided for. The trial court reserves jurisdiction over the entire proceeding." Paragraphs 15 and 16 may be reconciled by interpreting them as authorizing the commissioner without further order of the court to carry out the rehabilitation agreement to the extent that its provisions represented a completed plan for rehabilitation and reinsurance, and at the same time reserving to the court jurisdiction to approve or disapprove plans to be developed in the future for mutualization or other disposal of the stock in the hands of the commissioner. Such an interpretation of the order subserves the primary purpose of section 1037 (d) and the statutes governing involuntary mutualization by securing to all interested parties their right to court scrutiny of all steps in the proceedings that substantially affect their rights, and since the order is reasonably susceptible of that interpretation it should be adopted. Although the validity of the rehabilitation agreement and the order approving it are res judicata, the interpretation of the order is not res judicata, and it should not be interpreted to sanction further departures from the statutory provisions than res judicata compels. See, Watson v. Lawson, 166 Cal. 235, 242, 135 P. 961; Treece v. Treece, 125 Cal.App. 726, 728, 14 P.2d 95.

The judgment should be reversed.

I dissent.

The majority opinion is a masterpiece of legal legerdemain. It approves a transaction whereby the policyholders of old company are deprived of between $18,000,000 and $24,000,000 to which they are entitled under any concept of law and justice. It also deprives the stockholders of old company of whatever value their stock in old company may be worth in view of the fact that the assets of old company which were transferred to new company at the time of its creation were valued in excess of over $200,000,000. The majority concedes that new company was created in an insolvency proceeding and has always been used in said proceeding as an agency of the insurance commissioner for the purpose of rehabilitating an insolvent insurance company, and that such proceeding is still pending because rehabilitation has not been completed. It nevertheless holds that "the new company is solvent and nondelinquent," even though it owes and is obligated to pay the policyholders of old company between $18,000,000 and $24,000,000 which it admittedly is not financially able to pay. In approving this transaction the majority disregards express statutory provisions of this state and deprives the stockholders and policyholders of old company of their right to a judicial review of the administrative proceeding whereby they were deprived of their property, thus denying them due process of law to which they are entitled under both state and federal constitutional provisions.

The Undeniable Facts

On July 22, 1936, some 3,000 stockholders and 300,000 policyholders of The Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company of California, hereinafter known as old company, were stunned by the news that the insurance commissioner had taken charge of the company, alleging it to be insolvent. This development was all the more shocking because of its suddenness and also because only a short time before, the regular, verified, annual statement of the company showed it to be in sound financial condition, as had similar previous statements from year to year consistently shown throughout its lifetime of over 68 years. The business and assets of old company were then taken over by the insurance commissioner of this state pursuant to the provisions of sections 1011 and 1013 of the Insurance Code. Thereafter, The Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company was organized as part of a plan of rehabilitation of old company by the commissioner who purchased its entire capital stock with assets of old company. Pursuant to section 1043 of the Insurance Code, a "Rehabilitation and Reinsurance" agreement was entered into between the new company and the then insurance commissioner, as conservator of old company. The rehabilitation plan provided for the organization of a new corporation with a capital of $1,000,000 which consisted of 10,000 shares at a par value of $100 each. The commissioner was to purchase all the outstanding stock of the new company with $3,000,000 in cash belonging to the old company (which gave new company an initial surplus of $2,000,000). The commissioner was then to transfer all the other assets of old company (with the exception of the stock of new company which, of course, was owned by old company) to new company, and new company was to assume all policies and obligations of the old company to the extent provided for in the plan. The plan provided that new company would assume all the obligations of the old company under existing policies with the exception of the non-can policies which obligations were assumed on a reduced benefit schedule at the old premium rates. It was agreed that further benefits would be restored out of certain designated income of new company. All of new company's stock was purchased with $3,000,000 out of old company's funds. In addition, all the other assets of old company (over $200,000,000 assets in addition to going agency organization and concern, good will, etc., "worth several millions of dollars", Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 10 Cal.2d 307, 325, 74 P.2d 761, 772, were transferred to new company. Therefore, new company owes its creation and existence to old company. The confiscatory nature of this entire proceeding, including the present majority holding, is at once apparent when we see that old company's stockholders will ultimately only receive $3,000,000 for their stock which, when old company was taken over, was supported by that amount in cash plus over $200,000,000 in various assets plus the value of good will, going business organization, etc., worth several more millions of dollars! The agreement thus provided for a transfer to new company of the assets of old company (with certain exceptions not relevant here) and the assumption by new company of the obligations of old company, excluding certain noncancellable policies. With regard to these policies, known as the "non-can" policies, new company assumed a limited obligation and agreed to set up a special fund for the restoration of benefits thereunder. This obligation is still unpaid and outstanding. The capital stock of new company was to be held by the commissioner, as conservator, or liquidator, for the benefit of the creditors, policyholders, and stockholders of old company. On December 4, 1936, the agreement was approved by the trial court. In Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 10 Cal.2d 307, 332, 334, 74 P.2d 761, affirmed Neblett v. Carpenter, 305 U.S. 297, 59 S.Ct. 170, 83 L.Ed. 182, it was held that the organization of new company, as part of a plan to rehabilitate the business of old company was proper. It is pointed out, 10 Cal.2d at page 322, 74 P.2d at page 771, that "Ultimate mutualization, in the event the policyholders so elect, is also provided for."

On February 2, 1937, an order was made providing for the liquidation of the old company and appointing the insurance commissioner as liquidator. This order was upheld on appeal, Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co., 13 Cal.2d 306, 89 P.2d 637, although old company has never been dissolved. On April 4, 1938, the commissioner, as liquidator, transferred title to the capital stock of new company to voting trustees. This transfer was upheld on appeal. Caminetti v. Pac. Mutual L. Ins. Co., 22 Cal.2d 344, 139 P.2d 908. Other aspects of this case have been decided by this court in Caminetti v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 22 Cal.2d 77, 136 P.2d 779; Caminetti v. Pacific Mutual L. Ins. Co., 22 Cal.2d 386, 139 P.2d 930; Caminetti v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 23 Cal.2d 94, 142 P.2d 741; Neblett v. Pacific Mutual L. Ins. Co., 22 Cal.2d 393, 139 P.2d 934; Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 14 Cal.2d 704, 96 P.2d 796; and by the appellate courts in Sanborn v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 42 Cal. App.2d 99, 108 P.2d 458; Garrison v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co., 83 Cal.App.2d 1, 187 P.2d 893.

New company now seeks to acquire its stock (see later discussion) through the device of mutualization under section 20(a) of the rehabilitation agreement. The mutualization plan provides that the price to be paid for new company's stock is $3,000,000, with simple interest. If non-can benefits are fully restored prior to January 1, 1973, the purchase price is to be increased by an additional sum of $250,000 for each full year by which the date of completion of restoration precedes December, 1973. The purchase price is not absolutely payable, but is to be paid only "when and if" all the following conditions are met: (1) Non-can restoration is completed; (2) the funds in a special surplus fund (to be created pursuant to the plan) plus the capital and surplus of new company, equal or exceed the purchase price of the stock; (3) the financial condition of the new company is such that, after paying for and cancelling the stock, it would still have admitted assets in excess of all its liabilities amounting to the sum of 4% of all admitted assets plus 25% of the premiums collected during the preceding calendar year on all group insurance written on a one-year term basis and on all accident and health insurance.

This résumé shows that the new company was brought into existence as a creature of the state to rehabilitate old company and to carry on its business for that purpose. It also shows the grievous injustice being perpetuated by the majority in approving the plan of mutualization used here—that of voluntary mutualization of an insolvent corporation. This type of voluntary mutualization is as voluntary as a confession given under force, duress, and threats of bodily injury. Non-can benefits have not been fully restored; even under the mutualization plan it is contemplated they will not be fully restored (if partial benefit payments can be considered "full" restoration) until 1973. Until such time as they are restored, new company cannot be considered as a solvent concern since it still owes a debt to the policyholders and stockholders of old company, which it admittedly cannot now pay. The amount of this debt is conceded to be between $18,000,000 and $24,000,000. How can it then be said, with any degree of honesty whatsoever, that new company is solvent and may avail itself of the statutory provisions relating to mutualization? I defy anyone to give an affirmative answer to this question.

Present Proceeding

Purporting to act under Paragraph 20(a) of the rehabilitation and reinsurance agreement, a plan of mutualization was formulated by the committee and, on September 22, 1950, the insurance commissioner found that the plan protected the rights and interests of new company, its policyholders and shareholders and that he was satisfied that the plan would be fair and equitable in its operation.

Paragraph 20(a) of the rehabilitation and reinsurance agreement provides:

"Mutualization and Disposition of Stock of New Company

"(2) Neither the Conservator, nor, if one be appointed, the Liquidator, of the Old Company, shall dispose of any of the stock of the New Company except as follows:

"(a) At any time between July 1, 1946 and January 1, 1948, and thereafter so long as the Conservator or a Liquidator of the Old Company may continue to hold any or all of said stock, ten percent (10%) of the holders of participating policies of life insurance entitled to vote at a policy holders' election on a proposal for voluntary mutualization of the New Company, whether those re-insured hereunder or those issued by the New Company (each policy holder for this purpose being regarded as one person regardless of the number of policies owned or amount of insurance held) may request the New Company to create an Appointing Committee as hereinafter provided to exercise the duties and functions hereinafter specified in respect of a proposed voluntary mutualization of the New Company, in accordance with the laws of the State of California in effect at the time of said request, or, if said laws then so permit, of any one or more departments thereof. Such request shall specify the department or departments of the New Company desired to be mutualized.

"Upon the receipt of such request the New Company shall create an Appointing Committee consisting of the then President of the Association of Life Insurance Presidents, the President of Leland Stanford Jr. University, and the Provost of the University of California at Los Angeles, or persons occupying similar positions if their or any of their titles shall have been changed. In the event any one or more of such persons shall refuse or be unable to act, the remaining member or members shall fill the vacancy or vacancies thereby created by their appointment in writing of another person or persons of similar position and standing. If all of said persons refuse or are unable to act, the Court or any Judge thereof shall, on the application of the Commissioner, designate an Appointing Committee consisting of three (3) persons of similar position and standing. Said Appointing Committee, acting through not less than a majority of its members, shall designate a Price Determination Committee of not less than three and not more than five (5) persons skilled in matters of insurance company valuation, which committee, acting through not less than a majority thereof, shall determine whether in their opinion the proposed voluntary mutualization of the New Company, or of the department or departments thereof specified in said request can then be practicably accomplished having due regard to the interests of all persons interested in the New Company.¹ If it can be determined that such mutualization is not then practicable no further steps shall be taken in connection with a possible mutualization of the New Company under the provisions of this subparagraph until at least six months after the date of such determination. If in the opinion of a majority of the members of the committee such mutualization is then practicable, the committee shall determine the proper price to be paid upon such mutualization and appropriate terms of payments thereof; said determination shall not be made, however, prior to January 1, 1947.

"If, at the date of the appointment of such committee the New Company shall have in force Participating Life Insurance written subsequent to the effective date of this agreement in an amount in excess of its Non-Participating Life Insurance written during the same period, one-half ($\frac{1}{2}$) of such excess shall, for the purpose of fixing the proper price to be paid (but for no other purpose) be deemed to be, and shall be valued as, Non-Participating Life Insurance. If at the time of such appointment, there shall have been transferred from the Participating Department in accordance with the provisions of subparagraph (d) of paragraph 6 hereof, less than ten per cent (10%) of the then accrued earnings described therein, or if there shall have been transferred to the Participating Department any working capital pursuant to the provisions of subparagraph (c) of said paragraph 6, any unpaid balance thereof shall, for the purpose of fixing the proper price to be paid (but for no other purpose) be deemed to be a debt then due and matured. Said Committee shall in its report

1. The statutory scheme relating to insolvent companies is concerned with the protection of those interested in the insolvent company.

to the New Company include a plan of mutualization of the New Company, or of the department or departments thereof specified in said request of the policy holders. Such plan shall specify, in addition to any other relevant matters, the price to be paid, the terms of payment, and the persons by whom and the manner in which the right to vote the stock of the New Company is to be exercised pending complete payment of the purchase price. In this connection the said Committee, if it deem it advisable, may provide in the plan for the creation of a voting trust, designate the initial trustees, and make provision for the appointment of their successors. Unless the benefits under Non-Can policies have theretofore been fully restored and claims against the Liquidator fully paid, such plan shall further provide that such mutualization shall not affect the provisions of paragraph 17 or of paragraph 14 hereof or the right of holders of Non-Can Policies to the restoration of benefits from the sources and in the manner therein provided.

"The New Company agrees that within sixty (60) days after the making of such report (unless said report shall be to the effect that mutualization is not then practicable) it will mail copies thereof to all of its policy holders entitled to vote upon such plan or plans of mutualization if submitted according to law. If within one hundred twenty (120) days after the mailing of such notice, ten percent. (10%) of the policy holders entitled to vote upon any such plan or plans (each policy holder being for this purpose regarded as one person regardless of the number of policies owned or amount of insurance held) shall request in writing the submission thereof, the New Company will promptly submit the same in accordance with the laws of the State of California then in effect. The Conservator for himself and for any successors in the ownership of said stock claiming under him in any manner other than through a sale of said stock pursuant to the provisions of subparagraph (d) hereof agrees to consent and hereby consents as the holder and owner of the stock of the New Company to such plan of mutualization. In the event said mutualization plan is adopted, the Conservator, or a Liquidator as aforesaid, shall dispose of such stock in accordance with such plan. The expenses of the foregoing proceedings including costs, fees and expenses of the Price Determination Committee, shall be borne by the New Company, and unless the proposed plan of mutualization is consummated, shall be charged to the Participating Department thereof.

"In the event the Price Determination Committee has been appointed as herein provided prior to January 1, 1948, said Committee shall have the power to extend the time within which mutualization may be effected hereunder for such period or periods of time as it may deem necessary for the orderly completion of mutualization proceedings as herein ordered." (Emphasis added.)

Mutualization

The Insurance Code provides for mutualization of insurance companies in two different ways. Division 1, Part 2, Chapter 1, Article 14, sections 1010-1062, entitled "Proceedings in Cases of Insolvency and Delinquency" provides in section 1043 for "Mutualization," reinsurance and rehabilitation." Division 2, Part 2, Chapter 13, Articles 1, 2, sections 11525-11533, entitled "Voluntary Mutualization of Incorporated Life and Life and Disability Insurers Having a Capital Stock and Issuing Nonassessable Policies on a Reserve Basis" provides in sections 11525 and 11526 the "Authorization to mutualize" and the "Method of mutualization."

There is no dispute concerning the method actually used in this proceeding. The rehabilitation plan provided for "voluntary" mutualization and the matter proceeded under sections 11525 and 11526. There is complete disagreement as to which method should have been used. Appellants correctly contend that the procedure outlined for "involuntary" mutualization of an "insolvent" insurer is the only proper method.

As stated in Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 10 Cal.2d 307, 328, 74 P.2d 761, 774, "* * * the proceedings here under review were taken under sections 1010 to 1061 of the Insurance Code, adopted in 1935." (The other cases heretofore cited have reiterated this statement.) The original seizure of old company was accomplished under section 1011, subdivision (d). Section 1045 provides "Mutualization of life insurer issuing nonassessable policies on a reserve basis: Formation of plan. If at any time after the issuance of an order under section 1011 affecting a life insurer issuing nonassessable policies on a reserve basis and organized with a capital stock evidenced by shares thereof it shall appear to the commissioner that the purposes of section 1011 can be best attained by the mutualization of such life insurer, the commissioner may formulate a plan for the mutualization of such insurer." (Emphasis added.)

All proceedings heretofore had in this litigation have been as provided for in Article 14 relating to insolvent and delinquent insurers. The rehabilitation agreement provides for mutualization under the statutory scheme set up for solvent insurers. The majority opinion states "The new company is solvent and nondelinquent, and there is no sound reason why it should be mutualized under the statutes relating to insolvent insurers. * * * Section 1043 [which relates to insolvents], which authorizes the commissioner to enter into rehabilitation agreements, contains no express limitation on what may be included in them, and section 1037 [which also relates to insolvents] provides that the enumeration of the powers of the commissioner shall not be construed as a limitation upon him or upon his right to do such other acts as he may deem necessary in connection with the handling of the affairs of an insolvent company." (Emphasis added.) Thus the majority opinion admits the procedure relating to insolvents was the one used and impliedly admits that it is the correct procedure. However, in using the code sections relating to insolvents, the author then argues that these sections place no limitation upon the commissioner. Section 1037 provides that the powers and authority of the commissioner in proceedings "under this article" (which relates to insolvents) shall not be construed as a limitation on his right to act or to do that "which he may deem necessary or expedient for the accomplishment or in aid of the purpose of such proceedings." Then, citing section 1043 (relating again to insolvents), we are told that the new company was properly organized by the commissioner who "evidently concluded" that the protection of creditors and "other interested parties" could best be accomplished through the formation of a new company "divorced as far as possible from the control of those who were in charge of the old company when it experienced financial difficulties." Then we are told that the new company is a separate and distinct entity. We are told this without any discussion of the character of new company, and with only the unreasoned and unsupported dictum in Garrison v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co., 83 Cal.App.2d 1, 9-10, 187 P.2d 893, as authority therefor.

Section 11525 (the procedure followed here) provides for "Authorization to mutualize. A solvent domestic incorporated insurer having a paid-in capital represented by outstanding shares of capital stock and issuing, on a reserve basis, nonassessable policies of life insurance or of both life and disability insurance, may convert itself into an incorporated mutual life insurer, or life and disability insurer, issuing nonassessable policies on a reserve basis. To that end it may provide and carry out a plan for the acquisition of the outstanding shares of its capital stock for the benefit of its policyholders, or any class or classes of its policyholders, by complying with the requirements of this chapter." (Emphasis added.)

The question is thus directly posed as to whether new company falls within the classification of a "solvent" domestic incorporated insurer which "may convert itself into an incorporated mutual life insurer" which "may provide and carry out a plan for the acquisition of the outstanding shares of its capital stock for the benefit of its policyholders."

Character of New Company

New company was organized by the insurance commissioner "with a name similar to that of the old company as a corporate agent to assist him in carrying on the business of the old company." Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 10 Cal.2d 307, 324, 325, 74 P.2d 761, 772. It was also said there, 10 Cal.2d at page 327, 74 P.2d at page 773, that "The proceeding was had under sections 1010 to 1061 of the Insurance Code which specially deal with the rehabilitation and liquidation of insurance companies. Those sections set up a comprehensive statutory scheme to accomplish those results. The proceeding is not one in which another party is prosecuting another party at all. It is simply a proceeding in which the state is invoking its power over a corporate entity permitted by the state to engage in a business vitally affected with the public interest upon condition of continuing compliance with the requirements provided by the state. It is not a controversy between private parties but a proceeding by the state in the interest of the public." See, also, Caminetti v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 22 Cal.2d 77, 82, 136 P.2d 779, 782, where it was held that "The new company was the corporate agency of the insurance commissioner as conservator for the purpose of continuing and preserving the business of the old company." (Emphasis added.)

The commissioner held, either as conservator or later as liquidator, the entire capital stock of new company until 1938 when it was transferred to voting trustees, Caminetti v. Pacific Mutual L. Ins. Co., 22 Cal.2d 344, 356, 139 P.2d 908, 914. It was there said that "The affairs of the new company are placed in charge of a board of directors to whom the agreement expressly confides a large measure of discretion. Supervisory powers, however, are reserved to the commissioner, independent of and in addition to his statutory powers over delinquent insurance companies. For example, no investment or reinvestment of the assets of the old company may be made without written approval of the commissioner. Payments to the restoration fund for non-can policies are subject to the approval of the commissioner who, in addition, may require further payments thereto. The determination by the board of directors of the apportionment of expenses and the exchange of assets among the several departments of the new company is subject to adjustment by the commissioner. Reserves against policies of the old company subject to assumption of reinsurance under the agreement were to be established by the new company with the approval of and in accordance with the requirements of the commissioner. While as holder of the stock the commissioner possessed the voting rights incident thereto, the agreement contains no express provision with respect to the exercise of the voting power. * * *

"The trustees are given legal title to the stock of the new company with the power to exercise all the rights of ownership. The commissioner, however, retains the entire beneficial interest for the benefit of creditors of the old company and others interested. The voting trust undertakes to transfer to the trustees only administrative duties relating to the stock, principally the right to vote the same. * * *" (Emphasis added.)

New company does not possess the characteristics of a solvent company as that term is generally understood. First, it was organized as the agent of the commissioner to rehabilitate the business of the old company. It may be, as was said in the Garrison case, that it is a distinct entity without detracting in the least from the fact that it is still an agent for the purpose of rehabilitating the old company. An agent, or servant, is usually a distinct entity, but the duties and activities of such agent or servant, are carried out to serve the purposes of the principal. In other words, the agent acts for the principal, not for himself, or itself. Does the insurance commissioner ordinarily, and customarily, hold all the stock of a solvent insurance company? Does the insurance commissioner ordinarily, and customarily, have reserved to himself supervisory powers, "independent of and in addition to his statutory powers" where a solvent company is concerned? Does an insurance commissioner ordinarily, and customarily, give his written approval of the investment or reinvestment of funds of a solvent insurance company? Does the insurance commissioner ordinarily, and customarily, tell the board of directors of a solvent company when and how they must apportion expenses and exchange assets among its several departments? In the case of new company, the commissioner does all of those things. See Chief Justice Gibson's opinion in Caminetti v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co., 22 Cal.2d 344, 356, 139 P.2d 908.

New company would have no existence had it not been for the technical insolvency of old company. No new money constituted the assets of new company which was organized with the assets of old company. If new company were a solvent, independent and distinct corporation, the insurance commissioner would not be holding its stock for the policyholders of old company. The stockholders of new company would be holding their own stock supported by assets in the hands of the officers and directors of the company. Section 11525 provides that "A solvent domestic incorporated insurer [is one] having a paid-in capital represented by outstanding shares of capital stock and issuing, on a reserve basis, non-assessable policies of life insurance or of both life and disability insurance * * *." Surely in the normal case, "outstanding shares of capital stock" refers to stock held by stockholders, not by the commissioner!

Mr. Justice TRAYNOR has pointed out how the use of the solvent mutualization procedure has deprived the members of old company of their right to the protection of court scrutiny of the plan of mutualization. He shows how the procedure used here cannot apply to the facts of the case because in the ordinary case of a voluntary mutualization, the shareholders would have the power to protect their interests by withholding their consent to the plan of mutualization. The sections of the code which relate to mutualization of insolvent companies were clearly intended by the Legislature to protect the interests of the interested parties by providing for court approval.

In the present case by the use of the procedure provided for in the case of a solvent company, the commissioner approves a plan to be formulated in the future. When that plan is formulated, as holder of all the stock, he votes for the plan. Then, as commissioner, he approves the plan as fair and equitable. We are told by the majority opinion that "it must be assumed that the Legislature realized that the commissioner might be required to pass upon the fairness of a plan in a case where he, acting as conservator, had previously consented to mutualization on behalf of the stockholders." Nothing of the kind must be assumed. It is obvious from even a casual reading of the code provisions relating to insolvent companies (1043 et seq.) and those relating to solvent companies (11525 et seq.) that the Legislature had not the faintest thought that the two would be so commingled as they are in this case, or that the commissioner would be placed in a position where he was forced to approve a plan to be formulated some ten years in the future, then, when the plan was formulated forced to vote an approval of it as a sole stockholder, and still later, to give his approval of something he had theretofore twice before approved.

Ever since the inception² of the receivership proceedings and the organization of new company all the parties and proceedings concerned in the rehabilitation matter have been subject to the continuing jurisdiction and supervision of the court. It has been pointed out in various phases of this litigation that new company was organized by the commissioner as his corporate agent to rehabilitate the business of old company. Without the original proceeding under section 1011(d) of the Insurance Code, new company would not have come into being.

It is necessary, next, to note the difference in methods provided for in the two divisions of the Insurance Code for mutualization of insolvent and solvent companies.

Section 1046 provides that "Said mutualization plan [called involuntary mutualization for insolvent companies and follows the section (1045) which provides: "If at any time after the issuance of an order under section 1011" the "commissioner" shall formulate a plan of mutualization] shall include provisions for:

2. (With the exception of the present proceeding to be hereinafter discussed.)

"(a) (Acquisition of capital stock.) The acquisition by such insurer of all outstanding shares of its capital stock at a price and upon terms and conditions to be fixed as hereinafter provided.

"(b) (Retirement of capital stock.) The retirement of said shares of stock when acquired by such insurer.

"(c) (Amendment of charter.) The amendment of the charter of such insurer so as to enable it to transact its business as a mutual insurer issuing nonassessable policies on a reserve basis.

"(d) (Payment of claims.) The manner in which and the time within which, after mutualization is effected, matured and maturing claims against such insurer shall be paid to the lawful holders thereof.

"(e) (Submission of plan to policyholders.) The submission of said mutualization plan to the policyholders of such insurer under such procedure as shall be set forth in the plan or prescribed by said court, for their approval or rejection.

"(f) (Notice to shareholders.) Notice to the shareholders of such insurer, in such manner and at such time after the approval of said mutualization plan by said policyholders, as the court may direct."

Section 1048 provides that after the formulation of the mutualization plan, the commissioner shall submit it to the court for its order directing the submission thereof to the policyholders named in subdivision (e), of section 1046.

Section 11526 (relating to solvent insurers) provides that "Such plan shall include appropriate proceedings for amending the insurer's articles of incorporation to give effect to the acquisition, by said insurer, for the benefit of its policyholders or any class or classes thereof, of the outstanding shares of its capital stock and the conversion of the insurer from a stock corporation into a nonstock corporation for the benefit of its members. The members of such nonstock corporation shall be the policyholders from time to time of the class or classes for whose benefit the stock of the insurer was acquired, and no other persons. Such plan shall be:

"(a) Adopted by a vote of a majority of the directors. [As distinguished from the formation thereof by the commissioner as provided in section 1045.]

"(b) Approved by the vote of the holders of at least a majority of the outstanding shares at a special meeting of shareholders called for that purpose, or by the written consent of such shareholders. [As distinguished from section 1048 requiring the commissioner to obtain court approval and an order of the court directing the submission of the plan to the policyholders.]

"(c) Submitted to the commissioner and approved by him in writing. [Under the circumstances here prevailing with regard to the commissioner's position as conservator, liquidator and general supervisor of new company, this amounts to an idle act.]

"(d) Approved by a majority vote of all the policyholders of the class or classes for whose benefit the stock is to be acquired voting at an election by the policyholders called for that purpose, subject to the provisions of section 11528. * * *

"(e) Filed in the office of the Insurance Commissioner after having been approved as provided in subdivisions (b), (c) and (d) of this section."

Under the provisions of the rehabilitation agreement, a price determination committee consisting of four members was set up. The price determination committee reported to new company, in April, 1950, that mutualization was practicable and valued the stock of new company at $3,000,000. The mutualization plan provided in part for the payment of the purchase price with simple interest at the rate of long-term government bonds (2½%). Under the terms of the rehabilitation agreement, "The Conservator for himself and for any successors in the ownership of said stock claiming under him in any manner other than through a sale of said stock pursuant to the provisions of sub-paragraph (d) hereof agrees to consent and hereby consents as the holder and owner of the stock of the New Company to such plan of mutualization. In the event said mutualization plan is adopted, the Conservator, or a Liquidator as aforesaid, shall dispose of such stock in accordance with such plan."

Under the voluntary mutualization procedure heretofore set forth (section 11526) the mutualization plan is submitted to the commissioner after adoption by a vote of a majority of the directors and after a vote by a majority of the outstanding shares at a special meeting of shareholders called for that purpose. Section 11527 provides that "The commissioner shall examine the plan submitted to him under the provisions of subdivision (c) of section 11526. He shall not approve such plan unless in his opinion the rights and interests of the insurer, its policyholders and shareholders are protected nor unless he is satisfied that the plan will be fair and equitable in its operation." (Emphasis added.) Fair and equitable to which company?

Under the provision of the rehabilitation agreement heretofore set forth, the then commissioner agreed for himself, and his successors, to agree to any plan promulgated by the price determination committee. It should be borne in mind that the stock of new company is now held by voting trustees who had no discretion, but were (as stated in the insurance commissioner's Answering Brief, p. 73) "not only authorized, but bound, to give their consent; and [that] they had no discretion to exercise." (Emphasis that of the commissioner.) There is evidence in the record which shows that the trustees voted for the plan of mutualization because they were told to so vote; that they did not examine into the merits of the plan. The next step provided for in section 11526 (Insurance Code) is that the plan shall be submitted to the commissioner for his written approval. The insurance commissioner states (Answering Brief, p. 83), "As we have already shown, the Liquidator [commissioner] had bound himself to consent to a Plan of Mutualization proposed in accordance with the Rehabilitation Agreement." The code, however, (§ 11527) provides that the commissioner shall examine the plan submitted to him under the provisions of subdivision (c) of section 11526 and that "He shall not approve such plan unless in his opinion the rights and interests of the insurer, its policyholders and shareholders are protected nor unless he is satisfied that the plan will be fair and equitable in its operation." (Emphasis added.) The net result, under the circumstances prevailing in this case, is that the commissioner, as beneficial owner of all the stock of the new company, instructs the voting trustees to vote for any plan proposed by the price determination committee and then, when such plan is submitted to him for his approval, places his rubber stamp of approval thereon because he (or his predecessor) has, ten years prior to the promulgation of the plan, agreed to approve it no matter what it is—agreed, not only for himself, but for any successor in office, to approve the plan as proposed. It is shown, therefore, without a shadow of a doubt, that the earlier agreement to approve any plan proposed by the price determination committee has the effect of nullifying section 11527 of the Insurance Code, as well as the sections relating to mutualization of insolvent insurers.

Had the procedure outlined in sections 1045, 1046 and 1048 been followed, the result would be very different. Under section 1045 the commissioner would formulate the mutualization plan for the purpose of carrying out the rehabilitation of the insurer whose business was seized under the provisions of section 1011. The commissioner's plan would then be submitted to the court for its order directing the submission of the mutualization plan to the shareholders and policyholders of the seized insurer for their vote of approval, or disapproval as the case might be (section 1046, subdivisions (e) and (f)). Old company, not having been dissolved, still exists; new company was organized as the corporate agent of the commissioner to rehabilitate the business of old company with the assets of old company. New company cannot, as it appears, be considered as a completely independent and solvent organization under the facts here prevailing. As I have pointed out, the commissioner holds the entire beneficial interest in all the capital stock of new company for the benefit of stockholders, policyholders and creditors of old company; the legal title to the stock of new company is held by voting trustees who vote it as directed by the commissioner. As I have also pointed out, the board of directors of new company are under the close supervision, control and direction of the commissioner and must, in reality, take orders from him as to every major, and some minor, business details. It cannot be said that this close supervision, control and direction exist in the usual "solvent" corporation.

Corporate Entity of New Company

Respondents argue that the corporate entity of new company cannot be disregarded so as to make the proposed mutualization a mutualization of old company. In support of this contention, In Re Bond & Mortgage Guarantee Corp., 157 Misc. 240, 283 N.Y.S. 623, 652, and Garrison v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co., 83 Cal.App.2d 1, 9-10, 187 P.2d 893, are cited. In neither case was mutualization involved. In the Bond & Mortgage Guarantee case, the superintendent of insurance had organized Bond & Mortgage Guarantee Corporation. [157 Misc. 240, 283 N.Y.S. 641] "as a domestic insurance corporation, with a capital of $1,000,000, a surplus of $2,000,000, and a reserve for contingencies of $200,000, all of which was paid out of the assets of the guarantee company in exchange for the entire capital stock of the new corporation, 10,000 shares of the par value of $100 each; a certificate for said number of shares was issued in the name of the guarantee company and is held by the superintendent of insurance as an asset, for the benefit of the creditors (including the policyholders), of the guarantee company." (Emphasis added.) The guarantee corporation here involved took on the duty of insuring mortgages, "but on a restricted basis under a limited policy of guaranty." 283 N.Y.S. at pages 641, 650. This case involved a proceeding whereby the People, and certain individuals interested, applied for an order enjoining the State Mortgage Commission from demanding and receiving or assuming control of certain mortgages being serviced by the guarantee corporation pursuant to court order. The injunction was granted. The contention was that the guarantee corporation, in servicing mortgages, was acting without adequate corporate powers. The court held that the corporation was acting within its corporate authority and, in answer to the contention that the guarantee corporation was a state agency inseparable from the superintendent of insurance (so as to permit another state agency, the Mortgage Commission, which came into being after the proceedings set forth had been had) to take it over, the court said: "Said corporation is like any other corporation; a distinct entity. All of its stock is owned by guarantee company, and the certificate therefor is held in the custody of the superintendent; this he holds as he does any other assets of the company in rehabilitation, as a receiver designated by statute for the benefit of the creditors and stockholders of said company; not as an owner, representing the state. It is a stock corporation, having been created, for one thing, with a view to its possible sale for the benefit of the creditors, as its exhaustive by-laws make apparent. During such time as the stock control remains as it is, the operation of the corporation is to be under the supervision of the superintendent as rehabilitator." (Emphasis added.) The court continued and said that the primary management of the corporation was with the board of directors, although it was subject to the supervision of the superintendent "in his capacity as supervisor of insurance companies". 283 N.Y.S. at pages 651, 652. The situation presented in the New York case and that presented in the case at bar are factually similar up to a point. I have heretofore quoted extensively from Caminetti v. Pacific Mutual L. Ins. Co., 22 Cal. 2d 344, at page 356, 139 P.2d 908, wherein we set forth the extensive and minute supervision exercised by the commissioner over new company. This supervision exceeded by far anything required of him as "supervisor of insurance companies." We also said in Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 10 Cal.2d 307, 324, 325, 74 P.2d 761, 772, that new company was organized "as a corporate agent to assist him [commissioner] in carrying on the business of the old company." See, also, Caminetti v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 22 Cal.2d 77, 80, 136 P.2d 779.

In Garrison v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co., 83 Cal.App.2d 1, 187 P.2d 893, 894, the court said, "The question for decision is whether an insurance company which was organized to conserve an insolvent insurance company and to rehabilitate its business is obligated to pay interest on claims allowed by the conservator against such insolvent based upon the breach by the latter of certain policies, in the absence from the rehabilitation agreement of a specific promise to pay such interest, the agreement having provided for the payment to the liquidator for the benefit of such claimants an amount equal to the sum of all 'allowed claims' against the insolvent company." New company, by the terms of the rehabilitation agreement had agreed (Paragraph 17) "to pay to the Liquidator for payment to claimants an amount equal to the sum of all claims against the Old Company filed with the Liquidator and finally allowed." The court answered the question put with this statement: "It is customary practice in liquidation proceedings to marshal the assets of the debtor, fix the amount of its liabilities and disburse the assets among the creditors pro rata. Such a process would not be possible if during the season of liquidation the claims should be varied by the additions of varying amounts of interest." 83 Cal.App.2d at page 9, 187 P.2d at page 898. Respondents rely upon the following paragraph from the opinion of the District Court in the Garrison case: "Appellants contend that new company is a reincarnation of old company and therefore has impliedly promised to pay all of the latter's indebtedness. In this they ignore provisions of the Insurance Code, Article 14 of Chapter 1, Part 2, Division 1, which article deals with insolvency and liquidation proceedings. Section 1043 of such article provides that in any proceeding under the article the commissioner may mutualize or reinsure the business of any person affected by proceedings thereunder and may enter into rehabilitation agreements. New company was organized by the sovereign power for the purpose of rehabilitating the business of one of its own creatures whose very existence inhered in the blood and sweat of the people. It was to go forward under the guidance of the state. Its identity is utterly distinct from that of old company, notwithstanding the latter's equitable ownership of new company's stock. It cannot be fairly said that it is a continuance of old company. It did not take over the latter's assets or assume its burdens at the behest of old company. Such transfer and assumption were rendered indispensable to the public weal and were required by law to conserve the common good in general and the army of policyholders of old company in particular. New company was not organized by old company to do service in a prescribed manner for the latter but was created by the state to perform a public service. It must be and act in its own right upon the arena of trade and commerce and of human existence, free from the fetters of a collapsed institution which in the kaleidoscope of a changing world will soon be only a memory." 83 Cal. App.2d at pages 9, 10, 187 P.2d at page 898. New company was organized by the state to rehabilitate the business of old company; as the "corporate agent" of the insurance commissioner for that purpose. The language just quoted is, in part, illogical under the facts presented in this long line of litigation, including the Garrison case. It appears to me that the statement that "its [new company] identity is utterly distinct" is inconsistent with the latter part of the same sentence that this was so "notwithstanding the latter's [old company] equitable ownership of new company's stock" and with one of the preceding sentences wherein it is said that "New company was organized by the sovereign power for the purpose of rehabilitating the business of" old company, and the fact that new company "was to go forward under the guidance of the state." The duties and obligations imposed upon the commissioner in this case amount to far more than his usual supervision of the usual solvent insurance company. There can be no doubt that new company is a separate corporate agency and that it was not organized by old company, but it does not logically follow that it is "utterly distinct" from old company. In my opinion, new company would have no existence but for the insolvency proceedings against old company. It also conclusively appears that the quoted statement from the Garrison case is dictum since it had nothing to do with the question involved there.

Respondents also argue that because this court said in Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 10 Cal.2d 307, 334, 74 P.2d 761, 777, that new company was, as a reinsurer, "substituted as insurer in the place and stead of the original insurer" that the corporate identity of new company cannot be disregarded; that because this court said in the Carpenter case, 10 Cal.2d at page 335, 74 P.2d at page 777, that "Every policyholder who consents to the plan clearly enters into a novation with the new company" that the two companies cannot be considered as "essentially one and the same." New company will in time replace old company but so long as old company exists in any form, it is clear that new company is still only the corporate agent of the commissioner for the purpose of rehabilitating the business of old company and that the mutualization plan must be worked out in accordance with the procedure provided for in that part of the Insurance Code relating to involuntary mutualization of insolvent companies. The stock of new company, held now by voting trustees, with beneficial ownership in the commissioner is still held by him for the benefit of the policyholders and creditors of old company. This fact cannot be disregarded; nor can the rights of the policyholders and creditors of old company be disregarded. In holding that new company is "utterly distinct" from old company for all purposes, a majority of this court chooses to forget all the facts concerning this litigation and pretends that new company was organized as any other insurance company with its own assets and liabilities, that the insurance commissioner had only the normal, nominal, supervision over its affairs, and that no insolvency proceedings had ever been involved. In the light of the record before us, such a holding cannot stand the test of honest scrutiny.

Res Judicata

Respondents argue that it has been decided by the superior court that the commissioner had authority to include in a rehabilitation agreement an option to mutualize the new company by voluntary proceedings and to agree to dispose of the stock of new company at the price, and on the terms, fixed by the price determination committee; and that this court has decided that the superior court had jurisdiction to so decide and that the superior court did not abuse its discretion in approving the rehabilitation agreement.

In the commissioner's Answering Brief (p. 61) is found this statement: "It is true that no attack seems to have been made on the mutualization provisions [of the rehabilitation agreement] in any of the appellate proceedings, but the courts have taken notice of them in determining various appeals." Neither this court, nor an appellate court, has been concerned in any of this litigation with the mutualization provisions of the rehabilitation agreement as will hereinafter appear.

In Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 10 Cal.2d 307, 322, 74 P.2d 761, 771, we said that the plan of rehabilitation provided for "Ultimate mutualization, in the event the policyholders so elect." We were there concerned in the main with the organization of new company as the corporate agent of the commissioner to rehabilitate the business of old company. In Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 13 Cal.2d 306, 89 P.2d 637, we were concerned with the validity of the "Order for Liquidation" and the mutualization provisions of the plan were not considered. In Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 14 Cal.2d 704, 96 P.2d 796, we were concerned with an order of the trial court correcting its minutes nunc pro tunc. In Caminetti v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co., 22 Cal.2d 77, 136 P.2d 779, we were concerned with the claims of dissenting policyholders and, once again, the mutualization provisions were not considered. In Caminetti v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co., 22 Cal.2d 344, 353, 139 P.2d 908, 913, we were concerned with the propriety of creating a voting trust with the stock of new company under the provisions of section 1037(e) of the Insurance Code. We said there that "To adopt the contention that section 1037(e) was not intended to apply to stock of an insurance company organized as a medium through which rehabilitation of the business of a delinquent insurer was to be accomplished would require us to disregard the clear language of the statute. Section 1037(e) specifically refers to stock issued to the commissioner 'as conservator or as liquidator in connection with a rehabilitation or reinsurance agreement.'" (Emphasis added.) We also said there, 22 Cal.2d at page 355, 139 P.2d at page 914, that the rehabilitation agreement (Paragraph 20) related to the "ultimate status and ownership of the new company." We then pointed out that subdivision (a) (Paragraph 20) authorizes the commissioner to dispose of the stock in accordance with "any plan of mutualization thereafter adopted by the policyholders of the new company, and such a disposition may include a transfer to voting trustees if the plan of mutualization so provides." We held that the voting trust agreement was not a disposal of the stock within the meaning or purpose of Paragraph 20 of the rehabilitation agreement and we said, 22 Cal.2d at page 358, 139 P.2d at page 915, that "It is true that the words 'dispose of' are used in subdivision (a) of paragraph 20 in connection with an authorization to the commissioner to transfer the stock of the new company to voting trustees in accordance with a plan of mutualization. But it is clear that under that subdivision the transfer there provided for would require a complete alienation of the stock in order to carry out the plan of mutualization contemplated therein." (Emphasis added.) Again, the validity of the mutualization procedure was not passed upon; the only holding being that the rehabilitation agreement did not preclude the creation of the voting trust. In Caminetti v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co., 22 Cal.2d 386, 139 P.2d 930, we were concerned with disqualification of a judge and a party's waiver thereof. Mutualization was not considered. In Caminetti v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 23 Cal.2d 94, 142 P.2d 741, we were concerned with the correctness of the measure of damages adopted by the commissioner to be allowed disability policyholders. In Garrison v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co., 83 Cal.App.2d 1, 187 P.2d 893, the court was concerned with the question of interest on claims allowed by the commissioner. In Sanborn v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 42 Cal.App.2d 99, 108 P.2d 458, the court pointed out that the following questions were involved: What was the effective date of the agreement between new company and the insurance commissioner as conservator of old company? Did appellant's present disability commence prior to such date and was notice of claim filed in accordance with the agreement?

It is contended by respondents, however, that a judgment upholding the validity of a contract establishes its validity, not only against the attacks actually made, but against those that could have been made, even though no question of invalidity was raised in the original proceeding and even though the judgment does not expressly pass on the contract.

Appellants argue that the procedure for mutualization provided for by statute cannot be altered by contract and that any attempt to do so is against public policy, illegal and void. It is true, of course, that the plan of mutualization, as proposed by the price determination committee, has never been before the courts until the present proceeding. The trial court, in its order of December 4, 1936, stated (13) "That said Rehabilitation and Reinsurance Agreement, and each and all of the terms and conditions thereof, and the plan therein embodied are, and each of them is, hereby approved; * * * ." Clk.Tr., p. 169. This was an approval only of the agreement and, while grossly wrong, does not now preclude this court from correcting the error since the plan of mutualization was not passed upon nor could it have been since it was to be promulgated ten years in the future.

We said in the Caminetti case, 22 Cal.2d 344, 363, 139 P.2d 908, 918, "This proceeding is wholly statutory. The duties imposed upon the commissioner, and the supervision over him vested in the courts, result from the statute." Appellants, citing Fortenbury v. Superior Court, 16 Cal.2d 405, 407-408, 106 P.2d 411, 412, contend that if the order of the trial court (December 4, 1936) is considered as having approved a plan of mutualization contrary to the statutory provisions therefor, it is void for want of jurisdiction of the subject matter. The respondents' position is that this court having previously determined the trial court's jurisdiction, the matter is res judicata. In the Fortenbury case, we said "The term jurisdiction originally included only the right to hear and determine concerning the subject matter in a particular case. But the modern tendency has been to broaden that meaning, particularly where the right to review a decision by certiorari, or other prerogative writ is the question for decision. A court may have jurisdiction of the cause of action and of the parties, but it may lack the authority or power to act in the case except in a particular way. Under such circumstances, it is now generally held that the court had no jurisdiction. As pointed out in the case of Spreckels Sugar Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 186 Cal. 256, 260, 199 P. 8, 9, 'the word is frequently used as meaning authority to do the particular thing done, or, putting it conversely, a want of jurisdiction frequently means a want of authority to exercise in a particular manner a power which the board or tribunal has, the doing of something in excess of the authority possessed.'" (Emphasis added.) We also said in First Industrial Loan Co. v. Daugherty, 26 Cal.2d 545, 556, 159 P.2d 921, 926, that "It is elementary that the power given to the Commissioner of Corporations (by section 10 of the act) 'to establish such rules and regulations as may be reasonable or necessary to carry out the purposes and provisions of this act' does not include power to alter the statute or enlarge or impair its scope." (Emphasis added.)

It seems apparent that if the involuntary mutualization provisions for insolvent insurance companies are applicable the commissioner was acting without statutory authority in approving a plan of mutualization based upon the statutory provisions relating to voluntary mutualization of solvent companies and that his approval thereof was void, as was his agreement to approve such a plan. The rule is settled that a contract in violation of an express statutory provision is void and that it is not necessary that the statute expressly so declare, City of Oakland v. California Const. Co., 15 Cal.2d 573, 576, 104 P.2d 30. A contract made in any manner except that expressly provided in the applicable statute is ipso facto void, Dale v. Palmer, 106 Cal.App.2d 663, 667, 235 P.2d 650. If upon review of all the legislation on the subject, the contract appears to contravene the design and policy of the laws, the courts will not enforce it, Kreamer v. Earl, 91 Cal. 112, 27 P. 735; Loew's, Inc., v. Cole, 9 Cir., 185 F.2d 641. See Hill v. Bank of San Pedro, 41 Cal.App.2d 595, 607, 107 P.2d 399; County of San Diego v. California Water, etc., Co., 30 Cal.2d 817, 186 P.2d 124, 175 A.L.R. 747; Film Producers, Inc., v. Jordan, 171 Cal. 664, 154 P. 605.

The parties are in disagreement as to whether or not the mutualization provisions were litigated at the time the order of December 4, 1936, was made. The insurance commissioner says that "Presumably these provisions did not go entirely unchallenged in the proceedings leading up to the Order of Rehabilitation." (Emphasis added.) Insurance commissioner's Answering Brief, p. 61. New company asserts that the "validity" of the rehabilitation agreement was put in issue and decided by the order of December 4, 1936, and that the same has been approved by this court. From all that appears, it is obvious that the precise question here involved has never been passed upon. It most certainly has not been passed upon by an appellate court, or by this court. Respondent, new company, points to the following quotations from the pleadings in the original proceeding as showing that the mutualization provisions of paragraph 20(a) were litigated. "Answer of Certain Interveners to Petition for Approval of Second Proposed Rehabilitation and Reinsurance Agreement, Folios 2757-2759 of Transcript on Appeal. L.A. 16182:

"That said plan, if executed, would be entirely void and of no effect, and would not be binding upon the parties thereto, and that the execution of the same is beyond the authority of the said Samuel L. Carpenter, Jr., as Insurance Commissioner of the state of California and as Conservator of The Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company of California [old company], and that the execution of said agreement and the transfer of the assets by the said Insurance Commissioner is wholly unauthorized by the Insurance Code of the state of California and is entirely beyond the power of the said Samuel L. Carpenter, Jr., as Insurance Commissioner and as Conservator as aforesaid, and the said agreement will be void when executed and beyond the power of the Insurance Commissioner under the statute in such cases made and provided and that the said agreement is of no binding effect whatever on any of the parties thereto and that any acts done pursuant thereto are wholly null and void."

"Amended Complaint in Intervention of Certain Intervenors, Folio 3882 of Transcript on Appeal, L.A. 16182:

"That the approval of said agreement is beyond the authority and jurisdiction of this court and, if given, would be void and of no force and effect, for the reason that authority therefor is not given in, and, in fact, is forbidden by, the terms and provisions of said Insurance Code of California, and, in particular, of articles is [sic] and 14 of chapter 1 of part 2 of division 1 thereof."

It appears to me that what was undoubtedly meant by these pleadings was that the organization of new company was said to be beyond the commissioner's power since that was the major issue in Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 10 Cal.2d 307, 74 P.2d 761.

The next question that arises is whether or not the provisions for mutualization could have been litigated in that proceeding inasmuch as mutualization was not to take place until between 1946 and 1948, or "so long as the Conservator or a Liquidator of the Old Company may continue to hold any or all of said stock. * * *" Paragraph 20(a), rehabilitation agreement. The proposed voluntary mutualization plan was also to be in accordance "with the laws of the State of California in effect at the time of said request. * * *" The plan was also not to be proposed unless the price determination committee "shall determine whether in their opinion the proposed voluntary mutualization of the New Company * * * can then be practicably accomplished. * * *" In Silva v. City & County of San Francisco, 87 Cal.App.2d 784, 198 P.2d 78, 80, a county board of supervisors passed a resolution that certain land of plaintiff's should be acquired when necessary. Plaintiff sued for a declaration as to the value of his property. The court, in refusing to place plaintiff's valuation on the property, declared: "The court may take judicial knowledge that real estate values do not remain constant. The value fixed during the present period may be disproportionate to what should be paid when the recreation department of the city decides to use the property as part of a 'playground.' Plaintiff seeks a final determination that the property is worth $10,000 and that if and when defendant chooses to take the property this will be the amount it must pay." (Emphasis that of the court.) It was also said that "* * * the present complaint alleges in substance that the value of the property may be determined through condemnation proceedings when defendant deems it 'necessary.' The only declaratory judgment that could be rendered under the allegations of the complaint would be of an advisory nature—namely, that when defendant deems it necessary to institute condemnation proceedings the price be fixed at the then market value." 87 Cal. App.2d at pages 778-789, 198 P.2d at page 80.

In Young v. Young, 100 Cal.App.2d 85, 87, 223 P.2d 25, 26, it was held that an action to establish a foreign decree of divorce in California, and for ratification by the California court of a property settlement included in the foreign decree, did not present a justiciable controversy in the absence of a showing that defendant had refused or failed to comply with the foreign decree or the terms of the property settlement agreement. It was held that "The rule is accurately stated in 1 Cal.Jur.(1921) at page 335, section 25, as follows: 'To invoke the jurisdiction of a court of justice, it is primarily essential that there be involved a genuine and existing controversy, calling for present adjudication as involving present rights.' See, also, Neill v. Five C. Refining Co., 79 Cal.App.2d 191, at page 193, 179 P.2d 818, wherein Mr. Justice Drapeau thus pointedly states the rule, 'An action not founded upon an actual controversy, or prosecuted "for the gratification of the curiosity of the litigants" is collusive and will not be entertained. (Citing cases.)' "

In Merkley v. Merkley, 12 Cal.2d 543, 547, 86 P.2d 89, 91, the court stated that "The facts in the record present an academic question only. The courts will not exercise the discretionary power to declare rights which do not give rise to a present controversy."

In County of San Diego v. California Water, etc., Co., 30 Cal.2d 817, 823, 826, 186 P.2d 124, 130, 175 A.L.R. 747, a case involving an agreement by a county to relocate a county highway, we enunciated the following rule: That if the Legislature had provided a method by which a county or city might abandon or vacate roads, that method was exclusive. We said: "It is clear, however, that neither the doctrine of estoppel nor any other equitable principle may be invoked against a governmental body where it would operate to defeat the effective operation of a policy adopted to protect the public. See Miller v. McKinnon, 20 Cal.2d 83, 124 P.2d 34, 140 A.L.R. 570, and cases cited therein; Pan American Co. v. United States, 273 U. S. 456, 505, 506, 47 S.Ct. 416, 71 L.Ed. 734; American Surety Co. of N. Y. v. United States, 10 Cir., 112 F.2d 903, 906. In the American Surety Co. case the court stated that the government could not be estopped so as to 'frustrate the purpose of its laws or thwart its public policy.' 112 F.2d at page 906. In 3 McQuillin, Municipal Corporations [2d ed., 1943], § 1266, it is said that various statutory procedures or steps exist to protect citizens and taxpayers from ill-considered contracts or those showing favoritism and that if recovery is allowed for property or services on the ground of estoppel or implied contract, 'then it follows as the night the day that the statute or charter provision can always be evaded and set at naught.' The author adds that the rule denying indirect enforcement of such void contracts harmonizes with our governmental system, appears to be supported by reason, and is not unjust, because the other party is charged with notice of the law."

At any rate, the plan of mutualization, as distinguished from the provisions for mutualization as found in the rehabilitation agreement, has never until this case, been passed upon. That plan, while following the outline contained in Paragraph 20(a) made some ten years prior to the promulgation of the one here under consideration, is an entirely different matter and may properly be held void as not in accordance with the statutory scheme for involuntary mutualization of insolvent insurance companies seized by the commissioner under the provisions of sections 1010 and 1011 of the Insurance Code. The rule enunciated in County of San Diego v. California Water, etc., Co., supra, hereinabove set forth would be applicable if the plan of mutualization is held void as against public policy and as being in excess of the commissioner's jurisdiction.

It should be noted that Paragraph 20(f) contains a provision to the effect that if all, or any part, of the paragraph should be contrary to law, or illegal, or void, the vulnerable provision should be deemed separable and the balance of the agreement should stand. If, as I believe, the validity of Paragraph 20(a) has never been before determined, the provision just noted would prevent anything that has been heretofore determined by either this court, or any appellate court, from conflicting with the determination made here.

Trial de Novo

If the procedure for involuntary mutualization had been followed, as it should have been, this question would never have arisen. Section 1048 of the Insurance Code provides that after the formulation of the mutualization plan, it "shall" be submitted by the commissioner to the court for its approval. The clear import of the procedure outlined for insolvent organizations is that those possessed of property rights in them must be accorded court protection at every stage. For example, the court appoints the appraisers (§ 1051). Such court approval, required by section 1048, accords the interested parties the equivalent of a trial de novo.

According to the majority opinion, the "alternative" reason given for affirmance is reliance upon the doctrine of res judicata. That this reason is patently false is shown by Mr. Justice TRAYNOR when he points out that the court "could obviously not approve [the] plan at the time it entered its order approving the rehabilitation agreement. Moreover, it did not expressly approve in advance the carrying out of any mutualization plan that might be presented by the price determination committee." He shows that there is reserved to the court, by the agreement, continuing jurisdiction to approve or disapprove plans to be developed in the future for mutualization or other disposal of the stock in the hands of the commissioner. He points out that to so interpret the order subverts the primary purpose of section 1037(d) of the Insurance Code by securing to all interested parties "their right to court scrutiny." Appellants have not been accorded "court scrutiny" in its true sense.

Appellants correctly contend that the order of the commissioner approving the plan of mutualization was subject to full judicial review by the superior court. It is argued that the commissioner, in making his order, acted in a judicial capacity rather than in an administrative or legislative capacity as contended by respondents. Appellants contend that in reviewing a decision or order of a statewide administrative agency or of a state officer, the superior court must reweigh the evidence and determine for itself according to its independent judgment whether or not the decision is supported by the weight or preponderance of the evidence in every case where state judicial functions are involved. They rely upon Thomas v. California Emp. Stab. Comm., 39 Cal.2d 501, 504, 247 P.2d 561; Moran v. Board of Medical Examiners, 32 Cal.2d 301, 308, 196 P.2d 20; Laisne v. California St. Bd. of Optometry, 19 Cal. 2d 831, 834-835, 123 P.2d 457; and Drumme v. State Bd. of Funeral Directors, 13 Cal.2d 75, 87 P.2d 848. Respondents, on the other hand, argue that the commissioner's order was an exercise of executive power and was not the exercise of such full judicial power as to entitle appellants to have the trial court exercise its independent judgment with respect to the weight of the evidence. Respondents rely upon the cases of Bank of Italy v. Johnson, 200 Cal. 1, 251 P. 784; Doble Steam Motors Corp. v. Daugherty, 195 Cal. 158, 232 P. 140; McDonough v. Goodcell, 13 Cal.2d 741, 91 P.2d 1035, 123 A.L.R. 1205, and Southern California Jockey Club v. California, etc., Racing Board, 36 Cal.2d 167, 223 P.2d 1.

The duties of the commissioner, as set forth in section 12921 have been held to be "that of a minister of the court in possession of the property, to the end of conserving the rights of everybody having any interest", 11 P.2d 873, 876, H. D. Roosen Co. v. Pacific Radio Pub. Co., 123 Cal. App. 525, and discretionary, Garris v. Carpenter, 33 Cal.App.2d 649, 657, 92 P.2d 688. It was held in Caminetti v. Guaranty Union Life Ins. Co., 22 Cal.2d 759, 764, 141 P.2d 423, 425, that the commissioner's " * * * office is not to perform functions in aid of the court's jurisdiction to decide a controversy between litigants, but he acts as a statutory officer, subject, however, to judicial supervision to prevent an arbitrary exercise of power or neglect of duty." The court in the Caminetti case, however, was referring to the commissioner as a receiver of the assets of insurance companies and stated that he did not derive his power from the court, but from the statute.

The distinction in the two lines of cases relied upon by appellants and respondents is that in those relied upon by appellants an existing vested property right was extinguished, or taken away, by the administrative order. For example, in the Drumme case, 13 Cal.2d 75, 87 P.2d 848, 853, Drumme and Wilson had been duly licensed embalmers and the State Board of Funeral Directors and Embalmers ordered their licenses suspended. This court held that it was dealing with a statute which conferred certain fact-finding powers on a board exercising statewide jurisdiction and that there was no "indication that the legislature intended the facts so found to be binding on the courts"; that no method of review was provided in the statute. We held that we could see no escape from the conclusion that in such a proceeding the court to which the application for mandate is made must weigh the evidence, and exercise its independent judgment on the facts as well as the law, if the complaining party is to be accorded his constitutional rights under the state and federal constitutions. "The state constitutional provision discussed, supra, prohibits the conferring of judicial power on such administrative boards", 13 Cal.2d at page 84, 87 P.2d at page 853.

In Laisne v. California St. Bd. of Optometry, supra, the California State Board of Optometry had revoked Laisne's certificate of registration to practice optometry in this state. We held there that "On the authority of the *Drumme*y case the only type of review that would afford appellant his full constitutional rights would be a complete trial de novo as outlined in the decision in that case." 19 Cal.2d at page 843, 123 P.2d at page 464.

In Moran v. Board of Medical Examiners, supra, the State Board of Medical Examiners revoked the license of Dr. Moran to practice medicine in this state. We held "That the trial court in this case was 'authorized by law to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence' is well established. (See Dare v. Board of Medical Examiners, 1943, 21 Cal.2d 790, 795, 136 P.2d 304; Sipper v. Urban, 1943, 22 Cal.2d 138, 141, 137 P.2d 425; Hohreiter v. Garrison, 1947, 81 Cal.App.2d 384, 402, 184 P.2d 323.) As stated in the last cited case, 81 Cal.App.2d at page 402, 184 P.2d at page 334, 'Thus the ultimate power of decision rests with the trial court.'" 32 Cal.2d at page 308, 196 P.2d at page 25.

In Thomas v. California Emp. Stab. Comm., 39 Cal.2d 501, 247 P.2d 561, it was held that unemployment benefits provided for by the Unemployment Insurance Act were such property rights as to fall within the rule that persons deprived of property rights by a statutory administrative agency were entitled to a limited trial de novo in the superior court.

Respondents' position (which has been adopted in toto by the majority opinion) is that the "Order" of the commissioner was merely a "permit" which allowed mutualization if the policyholders so voted (section 11526(d)) and that the order did not deprive anyone of vested property rights. We have heretofore held, Thomas v. California Emp. Stab. Comm., 39 Cal.2d 501, 504, 247 P.2d 561; Laisne v. California St. Bd. of Optometry, 19 Cal.2d 831, 123 P.2d 457; Moran v. Board of Medical Examiners, 32 Cal.2d 301, 308, 196 P.2d 20; *Drumme*y v. State Bd. of Funeral Directors, 13 Cal.2d 75, 87 P.2d 848, that where an existing property right is extinguished by the questioned administrative order the one so deprived is entitled to a trial de novo in the superior court. Appellants here are the beneficial owners of the stock of new company which is held by the voting trustees for their benefit. Under the proposed mutualization plan, this stock will be non-existent and they will be forced to accept a price therefor, as well as terms, over which they have exercised no control. Mr. Justice Traynor has pointed out that if the proper procedure had been followed, the rights of these people would have been protected by a court of law, rather than subjected to the action of one man acting in three irreconcilable positions. The assets of old company were transferred to new company in exchange for all the stock of new company which, in the beginning, was held by the commissioner, as conservator for the benefit of the creditors, policyholders, and stockholders of old company, Caminetti v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co., 22 Cal.2d 344, 351, 139 P.2d 908. Later, the stock of new company was transferred to voting trustees who held legal title thereto, "* * * with the power to exercise all the rights of ownership. The commissioner, however, retains the entire beneficial interest for the benefit of creditors of the old company and others interested." 22 Cal.2d at page 357, 139 P.2d at page 915. As stated by the insurance commissioner in his opinion and decision (page 7 of the Exhibit): "Greatly epitomized, the plan [of mutualization] determined that both the Participating and Non-Participating Life Departments of the company should be mutualized by the purchase and cancellation of all of the outstanding shares of capital stock of the New Company, thus converting the New Company into a non-stock insurer conducted for the benefit of its members who shall be the policyholders of the participating and non-participating life classes." Inasmuch as purchase and cancellation of the stock of new company will be accomplished by the proposed mutualization, it appears that appellants have been deprived, by the order, of their vested beneficial ownership of that stock so as to entitle them to a trial de novo within the rule of the cited cases.

The majority opinion states: "The approval of the mutualization plan by the commissioner did not involve any deprivation of property rights or vested rights; it was in essence a permit or license authorizing the new company to purchase its own stock." This would be true if new company members owned their own stock (and therein lies the fallacy in calling new company a solvent corporation with all that term connotes). But the matter is not quite so simple. All the beneficial ownership, which is the real ownership is held by the policyholders and stockholders of old company; all the legal title is held by the voting trustees (appointed by the commissioner) for the benefit of old company policyholders and stockholders. In other words, new company holds neither legal nor beneficial ownership of its stock, but through the medium of the mutualization plan is given the right to deprive the beneficial owners of their property in clear violation of the law as heretofore propounded by this court. We held in the Drummey case that we could see no escape from the conclusion that the court must weigh the evidence and exercise its independent judgment on the facts as well as the law, if the complaining party was to be accorded his constitutional rights under the state and federal Constitutions. 13 Cal.2d 75, 87 P.2d 853. "The state constitutional provision discussed, supra, prohibits the conferring of judicial power on such administrative boards."

In St. Joseph Stock Yards Co. v. United States, 298 U.S. 38, 52, 56 S.Ct. 720, 726, 80 L.Ed. 1033, the court stated: "Legislative agencies, with varying qualifications, work in a field peculiarly exposed to political demands. Some may be expert and impartial, others subservient. It is not difficult for them to observe the requirements of law in giving a hearing and receiving evidence. But to say that their findings of fact may be made conclusive where constitutional rights of liberty and property are involved, although the evidence clearly establishes that the findings are wrong and constitutional rights have been invaded, is to place those rights at the mercy of administrative officials and seriously to impair the security inherent in our judicial safeguards. That prospect, with our multiplication of administrative agencies, is not one to be lightly regarded. It is said that we can retain judicial authority to examine the weight of evidence when the question concerns the right of personal liberty. But, if this be so, it is not because we are privileged to perform our judicial duty in that case and for reasons of convenience to disregard it in others. The principle applies when rights either of person or of property are protected by constitutional restrictions. Under our system there is no warrant for the view that the judicial power of a competent court can be circumscribed by any legislative arrangement designed to give effect to administrative action going beyond the limits of constitutional authority." (Emphasis added.) This case and this statement were relied upon by us in the Drummey case, supra, 13 Cal.2d 75, 85, 87 P.2d 848, and no information has been presented to me to show that the rule there set forth has been in any way changed. No clearer case than this could possibly be found to illustrate the evils to be avoided. Old company stockholders and policyholders have been, and are, at the "mercy" of administrative officials; those officials may, during the last ten years, have been either "expert and impartial" or "subservient."

I have heretofore set forth at length the self-evident fact that appellants are possessed of vested property rights of which they are being deprived. In Ohio Valley Water Co. v. Ben Avon Borough, 253 U.S. 287, 289, 40 S.Ct. 527, 528, 64 L.Ed. 908, it was held: "The order here involved prescribed a complete schedule of maximum future rates and was legislative in character. Prentis v. Altantic Coast Line Co., 211 U.S. 210, 29 S.Ct. 67, 53 L.Ed. 150; Lake Erie & Western R. Co. v. State Public Utilities Commission, 249 U.S. 422, 424, 39 S.Ct. 345, 63 L.Ed. 684. In all such cases, if the owner claims confiscation of his property will result, the state must provide a fair opportunity for submitting that issue to a judicial tribunal for determination upon its own independent judgment as to both law and facts: otherwise the order is void because in conflict with the due process clause, Fourteenth Amendment. Missouri Pacific Ry. Co. v. Tucker, 230 U.S. 340, 347, 33 S.Ct. 961, 57 L.Ed. 1507; Wadley Southern Ry. Co. v. Georgia, 235 U.S. 651, 660, 661, 35 S.Ct. 214, 59 L.Ed. 405; [State of] Missouri v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. Co., 241 U.S. 533, 538, 36 S.Ct. 715, 60 L.Ed. 1148; Oklahoma Operating Co. v. Love, 252 U.S. 331, 40 S.Ct. 338, 64 L.Ed. 596." (Emphasis added.)

Appellants here complain bitterly because the mutualization plan provides that the price to be paid for new company's stock (of which they are the beneficial owners) is $3,000,000 while that same amount was originally taken out of old company's funds to purchase new company's stock and, in addition, all the other assets of old company (over $200,000,000 in assets plus such intangibles as going agency organization and concern, good will, etc., "worth several millions of dollars", Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 10 Cal.2d 307, 325, 74 P.2d 761, 772) were turned over to new company! It surely must be crystal clear to everyone who can think that such an outrageous confiscation of property without due process of law has never before taken place in this state.

Evidence

In the trial court the evidence consisted of all of the record of the proceedings before the insurance commissioner, consisting of the reporter's daily transcript, the exhibits and the commissioner's decision. Appellants contend that they were prohibited from introducing evidence, or offering to do so, because of the rulings of the trial court; that no issues of fact were litigated; that the court ruled that it was not empowered to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence taken before the commissioner. Respondents state that appellants were given leave to serve and file a motion and affidavits relative to the introduction of additional evidence and failed to do so. The memorandum opinion and order (July 2, 1951, Clk. Tr., 237-239) contains this statement: "After a careful study of the briefs submitted and the authorities cited I have come to the conclusion that, so far as any matter of fact is concerned, this Court is limited to determining whether or not the findings of the Commissioner are supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record, but that it is for this court to exercise its independent judgment in interpreting the Rehabilitation Agreement and in construing and applying section 11527 of the Insurance Code. * *

"I have come to the further conclusion that this Court cannot receive any additional evidence, but that upon proper showing may remand this matter to the Commissioner to take further evidence and reconsider the case in the light of such evidence. * * *

Appellants point to the statements made by the trial judge on the settlement of findings that "I think it must be very evident if I had had this case to decide on a new question of fact my decision might have been the opposite" (emphasis added; page 766, Rep. Tr.) and "It [fixing the price] is very complex, and I think you are making it more complex. My finding was, and the basis of my determination was that they [the price determination committee] had a reasoned basis in fixing the price. That is the fact. If they had acted unreasonably then I would have had to set it aside. It was only because I could not convince myself that it was not a rational conclusion that they acted upon that I ever decided the case the way I did. Because I could not take the facts and arrive at the same conclusion; not by a long shot. But because I did not feel that I could substitute my opinion for theirs, or substitute my opinion for the Commissioner's, that is the reason I arrived at the conclusion that I did. But that is the crux of it. It is not the details that they took in. What you are entitled to find now is entirely evidentiary." (Emphasis added.) The inference from this is obvious—that had the involuntary procedure been followed, the court would have withheld its approval because the plan did not protect the interests of those owning the beneficial interests.

The just-quoted statement made by the trial court shows, without equivocation, that had there been a trial de novo his decision would have been contrary to that reached. His statement shows that he was convinced that the weight of the evidence was with appellants but, believing himself limited by the substantial evidence rule, his conclusion was in favor of respondents. The only rational conclusion to be drawn from the facts of this case is that appellants were possessed of a vested property right and, therefore, should have been given a trial de novo in a judicial tribunal provided by the state for the protection of private property rights. Because appellants were not afforded a trial de novo they have been deprived of their property without the due process of law guaranteed to them by both the state and federal Constitutions.

Summary of Major Points

(1) It is my opinion that the provisions of the Insurance Code relating to voluntary mutualization of solvent insurance companies were not applicable to new company. As I have heretofore pointed out, new company was organized because of the insolvency of old company and cannot be considered as a solvent company until the liabilities arising from the non-can policies have been paid or sufficient funds accumulated to pay them. The voluntary mutualization provisions of the Code in and of themselves show that they were intended by the Legislature to apply to not only a solvent company but to a company not so closely supervised by the commissioner as the one here under consideration. The ordinary solvent company is not such a hybrid as we have in new company. In using the voluntary procedure, we have the commissioner, acting as conservator and beneficial owner of the stock of new company, agreeing to vote for the plan of mutualization as proposed by the price determination committee. As conservator, and beneficial owner of the stock of new company, he is supposed to be protecting the rights and interests of those in the position of appellants. When, as commissioner, he approves the proposed plan as fair and equitable, under the voluntary mutualization procedure, he is concerned with the fairness of the plan as it concerns those interested in new company. If the normal solvent company were being mutualized, the plan of mutualization would be proposed by the company itself, approved by its board of directors, adopted by a majority vote of its own shareholders, and then approved by the commissioner who, presumably, would not have seen the plan, or even heard of it, prior to the time it was presented to him for his approval as fair and equitable to those concerned—the shareholders and policyholders of the solvent company.

The following statement is found in the majority opinion: "In numerous cases where the action of an administrative officer was necessary to prevent defeat of the statutory scheme, his participation has been upheld although the grounds for disqualification were much more serious than those raised here." (Emphasis added.) The author again assumes too much. He assumes that the "statutory scheme" was being carried out. On the contrary, the statutory scheme is being defeated. The entire scheme for rehabilitation of insolvent corporations, and the statutory protection of the interested persons therein, is abrogated through the use of the procedure designed for mutualization of solvent corporations.

(2) I am also of the opinion that Paragraph 20(a) of the rehabilitation agreement has never before been judicially determined and, therefore, its provisions are not res judicata of the present controversy. I have pointed out that there is a separability clause in the rehabilitation agreement and that nothing heretofore done by this, or an appellate court, will be affected by a holding by this court that the parties may not validly contract to mutualize new company contrary to the applicable statutory provisions.

(3) There should have been a trial de novo in the superior court where evidence relative to the proper method to be used by the price determination committee, or court-appointed appraisers, could have been introduced by both sides and a determination made by a judicial trier of fact. Both appellants and respondents here devote many pages of their numerous briefs to such material. Such methods are obviously matters for experts in the field of insurance and should be the subject of testimony in the trial court.

(4) If, as I firmly believe, the procedure for involuntary mutualization of insolvent companies is the proper procedure, sections 1049, 1050, 1051 and 1052 of the Insurance Code contain detailed provisions for hearings and the appointment by the court of appraisers to appraise "the then outstanding shares of the capital stock of such insurer, without regard to any appreciation or depreciation arising out of said mutualization plan as so approved or modified. Such appraisal shall fix the reasonable value of such shares of capital stock, including the goodwill, if any, of such insurer, and shall state the value, if any, assigned to such goodwill; and if the appraisers shall have found that such insurer has no goodwill, such finding shall be stated. Such appraisal, when confirmed by said court, shall be final and conclusive." Section 1051.

The use of the involuntary mutualization procedure for an insolvent company follows logically from the original proceeding under sections 1010 and 1011. It should be noted that section 1054 (still under the Insolvency and Delinquency sections) provides that: "Such insurer, after mutualization, shall be a continuation of the original insurer, and such mutualization shall not affect existing suits, rights or contracts except as provided in said mutualization plan as approved. Such insurer, after mutualization, shall exercise all the rights and powers and perform all the duties conferred or imposed by law upon insurers writing the classes of insurance written by it, and to protect rights and contracts ex- isting prior to mutualization, subject to the effect of said mutualization plan." (Emphasis added.)

We held in Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 10 Cal.2d 307, 334, 74 P.2d 761, that "reinsurance" was a contract by which one company (new company) takes over the insurance risks of another company (old company) and becomes substituted as an insurer in the place and stead of the original insurer. This holding is also the logical result of following the procedure outlined in the Insolvency and Delinquency division of the Insurance Code.

From what Mr. Justice TRAYNOR has said in his dissent and from the reasons heretofore set forth by me, the conclusion is inescapable that the judgment should be reversed.

Action to quiet title to certain real estate and stock. From an adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Louis H. Burke, J., the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held evidence was sufficient to sustain findings that there was not a valid delivery of the deed or the stock certificates

DORAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment quieting title to certain real estate and stock certificates in favor of plaintiff, now deceased, and against the defendant-appellant Dee Forward, plaintiff's niece. The record title to the property was in the joint names of plaintiff and defendant.

From the record it appears that plaintiff's husband died on July 2, 1949, leaving all property to the plaintiff. Mrs. Hughes, the plaintiff, was 72 years old, suffering from diabetes, arteriosclerosis, cancer, and partial blindness. On April 5, 1950, Dee Forward, appellant, at respondent's request, drove Mrs. Hughes to the law office of Glen Behymer, who had handled Mr. Hughes' estate, and Mrs. Hughes there executed the deed here in question conveying the real estate to "Birdie D. Hughes and Dee Forward, as joint tenants". This deed was notarized by Della R. Manes, Attorney Behymer's secretary. There is testimony that the attorney explained the nature of the conveyance to Mrs. Hughes, but this episode is denied by Mrs. Hughes.

On the same day, the joint tenancy deed was recorded "at request of Birdie D. Hughes, Dee Forward", as shown by the Recorder's stamp on the deed, and was returned to Attorney Behymer's office pursuant to a notation on the back of the conveyance. The respondent, Mrs. Hughes, admitted going to the attorney's office and the genuineness of the signature, but denied any knowledge or recollection of executing a joint tenancy deed.

Plaintiff testified: "It was my idea to make a will, and I supposed that I was signing a paper that I thought was a will"; that plaintiff did not deliver the joint tenancy deed to Dee Forward, and did not authorize Attorney Behymer to make delivery. Mrs. Hughes further denied having any knowledge of the deed until some two years later when desiring to sell the property; never had possession of the paper and never intended to execute such an instrument.

In respect to certificates of stock in El Tejon Ranch Company, bearing the names of Birdie D. Hughes and Dee Forward as joint tenants, Mrs. Hughes likewise denied having ever instructed anyone to create such a joint tenancy, denied delivering the certificates to Dee Forward, and disclaimed any knowledge of the joint tenancy until in 1954. From the date of the decree of distribution under which the stock was received from Mr. Hughes' estate, Mrs. Hughes always considered herself the owner of the stock; "I not only considered it, I was. I took the dividends and spent it". Dee Forward never "claimed any right as an owner to any of these shares". During 1950-51, Mrs. Hughes and Dee Forward had a safe deposit box standing in both names. Appellant and respondent were living together in Mrs. Hughes home from approximately December, 1949 until March, 1952, at which time, due to a family misunderstanding, Dee Forward left.

The record discloses that Dee Forward, although present at the attorney's office, did not see Mrs. Hughes sign the joint tenancy deed, and the latter "never handed it to me". The appellant testified: "Aunt Birdie (Mrs. Hughes) said that she was going to put the property in joint tenancy with me because she had been in failing health, and wanted my Aunt Kitty (sister of Mrs. Hughes) to be taken care of in the event of her death, and, in any event, that she wanted the property to—what remained, to go to me, to my mother, and to my boy". Dee Forward "did not pay Aunt Birdie D. Hughes anything for this deed", and "never paid taxes on the property at any time". Nor did the appellant ever collect any rents from the property, and never paid anything for maintenance thereof.

Likewise, Dee Forward testified in answer to the question "you never received any delivery of any certificate of those shares, (El Tejon Ranch Company) did you?", said, "No, I can't recall", never had possession of the certificates, never received any assignment of the stock, and had no power of attorney from Mrs. Hughes authorizing the stock to be placed in joint tenancy. Mrs. Hughes denied any recollection of signing a request that the stock be issued in joint tenancy. The evidence does not solve the problem of how the stock certificate came to be issued in the joint names of respondent and appellant. And, as stated in appellant's brief, "The evidence is not clear, however, as to how the deed came back into the possession of either party after being returned to Birdie D. Hughes' attorney".

Mrs. Hughes original complaint was for cancellation on the ground of fraud; for breach of contract, and to quiet title, but at the close of the evidence, plaintiff was permitted to amend to conform to proof on the additional ground that there had been no delivery of the deed or the stock. The trial court believed "that the evidence doesn't show a valid delivery of the deed or of the stock certificate or certificates", and "that the evidence does not show any intent on the part of Mrs. Hughes to make a present gift of either the property, the real property or the stock, to her niece, the defendant", and entered judgment accordingly.

It is appellant's contention that "A valid and irrevocable joint tenancy estate was created" between appellant and respondent in respect to both the real property and the corporate stock, and that Mrs. Hughes' actions "constituted gifts inter vivos and cannot be revoked by the grantor". It is claimed that "There is no substantial evidence in the record to support the findings and judgment * * * quieting title * * * in Birdie D. Hughes and holding that Dee Forward had never acquired an interest as joint tenant in said property".

As pointed out in respondent's brief, "appellant concedes a conflict in the evidence; yet notwithstanding this concession, it is urged that plaintiff's evidence * * * 'is not only such as to tax the credulity of the trier of facts but also to justify an appellate court's total disregard thereof'." These contentions, in effect seeking a reconsideration and evaluation of weight and credibility of the evidence, are, as respondent says, "one which may be properly addressed to the trier of facts, and to the trial court on a motion for a new trial (both of which were done in this case and decided adversely to defendant) but not to an appellate tribunal."

[1, 2] A survey of the record leaves no doubt in the mind that there is substantial evidence in support of the findings and judgment. The fact that there is conflicting evidence merely brings the case within the well established rule that every such conflict must, on appeal, be resolved in favor of the trial court's findings "which are deemed conclusive". Sutera v. Palmieri, 79 Cal.App.2d 359, 361, 180 P.2d 414.

There is no serious question of law involved in the present appeal. The decision rests, rather, upon the credibility of the witnesses and which of two conflicting versions should be believed. If appellant's interpretation of the evidence is to prevail, then there was a fully executed gift inter vivos of land and stock which could not be recalled. But the trial court, having had the advantage of observing the demeanor of plaintiff and defendant on the stand and that of the supporting witnesses, came to a contrary conclusion—namely that Mrs. Hughes, ill and full of years, had never intended to make gifts to the niece, and that in some manner, not fully explained by the evidence, the transfers of land and stock, making Dee Forward a joint tenant thereof, were accomplished. It cannot be said that this conclusion is without support, nor that the plaintiff's testimony is incredible. No reversible error has been pointed out.

The judgment is affirmed.

Prosecution for violation of section 288 of the Penal Code. From judgment of conviction of Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Burdette J. Daniels, J., defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that in sexual psychopathy proceedings it is only after the order of commitment as a sexual psychopath that a defendant may demand a jury on the issue of sexual psychopathy.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇨1159(2)

When a jury, in a criminal case, has determined a question of fact and there is substantial evidence to support that determination, the appellate court will not reweigh the evidence. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, §§ 4, 4b; Pen.Code, § 288.

2. Mental Health ⇨449

Record on appeal disclosed that sexual psychopathy proceedings were regular, sufficient, and proper, and in accordance with governing statutes. Pen.Code, § 288; Welfare and Institutions Code, § 5512.

3. Jury ⇨25(6)

In sexual psychopathy proceedings it is only after order of commitment as a sexual psychopath that defendant may demand a jury.

Gladys Towles Root, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and James D. Loeb, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

Defendant was convicted by a jury of violating Section 288 of the Penal Code. He admitted one prior conviction of a felony, (robbery and kidnapping) for which he served a term of imprisonment in the penitentiary. He appeals from the judgment of the Superior Court sending him back to state's prison.

Defendant argues the sufficiency of the evidence to establish the crime charged, and that it was error for the trial court to deny him a jury trial and a hearing on the issue of sexual psychopathy.

[1] So far as the sufficiency of the evidence is concerned, this Court is without power to do other than affirm the judgment. The boy victim of the defendant testified to the commission of the acts denounced by the Penal Code. Defendant denied them; the jury resolved the question of fact against him; and under familiar rules of appellate practice that is all there is to it.

The Constitution of this State limits a review by appellate courts to questions of law alone. Const. Art. VI, Secs. 4, 4b. And when a jury has determined a question of fact and there is substantial evidence to support that determination, it is not the function of an appellate court to reweigh the evidence. People v. Newland, 15 Cal. 2d 678, 104 P.2d 778.

[2,3] This Court has examined the record and finds that the sexual psychopathy proceedings were regular, sufficient, and proper, and in accordance with the code sections defining and applying the sexual psychopathy statutes of this state. In such proceedings it is only after the order of commitment as a sexual psychopath that a defendant may demand a jury. People v. Willey, 128 Cal.App.2d 148, 275 P. 2d 522.

In this case defendant was not committed as a sexual psychopath. He was referred to a state hospital for observation and diagnosis. Section 5512, Welfare and Institutions Code. He was returned to the Superior Court with the report that while he was a sexual psychopath he would not benefit from further treatment in a state hospital. Then his application for probation was denied and judgment was pronounced.

The judgment is affirmed.

Proceeding on petitions of nonresident alien next of kin of intestate for payment to them of residue of estate, which had been previously distributed to state of California under escheat law. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, T. I. Fitzpatrick, J., granted petition. State appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. J., held that where petitioners were nonresident aliens residing at Harbin, Manchuria, China, on January 13, 1949, when intestate died, Court would take judicial notice that such place was within territory of Republic of China, and that under treaty between United States and China, providing for reciprocal rights of inheritance, petitioners were entitled to estate.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Aliens ⇨13, 14

Where treaty between United States and Republic of China gave reciprocal rights of inheritance only to nationals of the contracting parties, and residents of China, Harbin, Manchuria, who petitioned to take estate and who were not nationals, derived no rights from treaty, or rule that such treaty, as supreme law of land, superseded provisions of Probate Code which were inconsistent with it. Treaty between United States and China, Nov. 4, 1946, art. 8, subd. 4, 63 Stat. 1307; Probate Code, § 259.

2. Aliens ⇨14

In proceeding on petition of nonresident alien heirs of intestate to recover estate which had been paid to state under escheat laws, only function of treaty between United States and Republic of China was that of evidence of existence of reciprocity required by statute providing that right of aliens not residing in United States to take personal property by succession is dependent upon existence of reciprocal right upon part of citizens of United States to take personal property in country of which aliens are residents. Treaty between United States and China, Nov. 4, 1946, art. 8, subd. 4, 63 Stat. 1307; Probate Code, § 259.

3. Descent and Distribution ⇨1

Existence of a right of succession is determined as of the date of death of decedent.

4. Aliens ⇨14

Date of death of decedent was controlling as to existence of reciprocity between citizens of United States and Republic of China to succeed to personal property in each country. Treaty between United States and China, Nov. 4, 1946, art. 8, subd. 4, 63 Stat. 1307; Probate Code, §§ 259, 259.1.

5. Evidence ⚡26

District Court of Appeal took judicial notice that on January 13, 1949, Manchuria was an integral part of the Republic of China. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1875, subd. 8.

6. Treaties ⚡9

Where exchange of ratifications between United States and Republic of China of treaty providing for reciprocal descent and inheritance had taken place one and one-half months before death of intestate, treaty was in force as to China as a whole, on date of death of intestate, although at that time civil war existed in China. Treaty between United States and China, Nov. 4, 1946, 63 Stat. 1300.

7. Treaties ⚡5

Action of political departments of the government is controlling as to ability of a foreign state to perform its treaty obligations and question of whether a treaty has been terminated.

8. Treaties ⚡7

Where treaty provided that treaty shall extend to all areas of land and water under sovereignty or control of either United States or Republic of China, parties referred to are the two states as such, not their governments at that moment. Treaty between United States and China, Nov. 4, 1946, 63 Stat. 1300.

9. Treaties ⚡1, 5

Treaties are contracts between sovereign states and are binding on those states even when the government and its form changes.

10. Treaties ⚡3

Fact that Chinese Communist Party declared after signing of treaty between United States and Republic of China, and before its ratification, that party would not recognize treaty, could have no effect on court's determination as of scope of treaty at time Party was engaged in civil war. Treaty between United States and China, Nov. 4, 1946, 63 Stat. 1300.

11. Aliens ⚡14

In statute providing that right of aliens not residing in United States to take personal property by succession is dependent upon existence of reciprocal right upon citizens of United States to take personal property on same terms as residents of country in which such aliens are resident, word "country" means state, and so long as there is no stabilized secession of a part of a state, the decision as to whether such reciprocity exists must be based on the conditions in the foreign state as a whole, and not on temporary conditions in the specific locality or province of which claimants are residents. Probate Code, § 259.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Country".

12. Treaties ⚡7

Treaties may be considered as evidence of foreign law.

13. Treaties ⚡9

In proceeding on petition of nonresident aliens to take intestate property which had gone to state under escheat laws, treaty between United States and Republic of China providing for reciprocal descent and distribution as to citizens of two states, was prima facie proof that one and one-half months after its effective date it represented law of China. Treaty between United States and China, Nov. 4, 1946, 63 Stat. 1300; Probate Code, §§ 259, 1027.

14. Treaties ⚡7

A state is bound to carry out in good faith the obligations which it has assumed by a treaty.

15. Evidence ⚡86

In proceeding on petition of nonresident alien heirs of intestate to take estate that had escheated, court could accept as evidence rebuttable presumption that law had been obeyed and official duty had been carried out in determining if reciprocity of right to take property existed in fact between citizens of United States and residents of Republic of China, as provided for in treaty. Treaty between United States and China, Nov. 4, 1946, art. 8, subd. 4, 63 Stat. 1307; Probate Code, §§ 259, 1027; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subds. 15, 33.

16. Aliens ⚡14

Fact that civil war existed in China, at time of death of intestate, and that such civil war could have impeded in many parts of China effective enjoyment of reciprocal rights to take property under descent laws provided for under treaty between Republic of China and United States, was not decisive in determining whether nonresident aliens who resided in Manchuria were entitled to take intestate's personal property. Treaty between United States and China, Nov. 4, 1946, art. 8, subd. 4, 63 Stat. 1307; Probate Code, § 259.

17. Appeal and Error ⌘1010(1)

A finding by the trial court on the issue of reciprocity of rights of citizens of United States and claimant's country to take personal property by descent is to be treated like a finding on any other issue of fact, and if there is evidence to support it such finding will not be disturbed on appeal. Probate Code, § 259.

18. Escheat ⌘6

Statute providing that whenever any claim is made to receive money or other property deposited in treasury, under escheat laws, no recovery will be allowed unless it affirmatively appears that there are heirs or legatees who will receive such money or other property, does not require proof that the heirs will receive the property immediately, free from restrictions in the country of their residence. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 1354.

19. Escheat ⌘6

Purpose of statute providing that whenever any claim is made to recover money held by state in the Unclaimed Property Fund no recovery will be allowed unless it affirmatively appears that there are heirs or legatees who will receive such money or other property, is to prevent futile proceedings with respect to deposited property for which no entitled heirs are actually in existence. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1354.

20. International Law ⌘10.22

Foreign Assets Control regulations providing for placing of distributive shares of nonresident alien heirs in blocked bank accounts, do not prevent such heirs from receiving property under statute providing that no recovery will be allowed of property held in Unclaimed Property Fund unless it affirmatively appears that there are heirs or legatees who will receive such property. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1354.

21. Appeal and Error ⌘151(6)

Where claimants did not appeal from judgment granting them property held by state in Unclaimed Property Fund, state was not entitled to review portion of judgment fixing salary of claimant's attorneys, as state was not aggrieved by that part of the judgment. Probate Code, § 1027; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1021.

22. Appeal and Error ⌘880(1)

An appellant is entitled to review of only error which injuriously affects him, and cannot urge error which affects others who do not appeal.

23. Appeal and Error ⌘151(4)

Where federal Foreign Assets Control regulations required that money recovered by nonresident alien heirs of intestate from state unclaimed property fund, must be placed in blocked bank accounts, state's claim that money deposited in such accounts might escheat again was too remote to constitute state a party aggrieved by decision granting claimants attorney's fees, and did not entitle state to review of attorney's fees fixed. Probate Code, § 1027; West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 1021.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen. of the State of California, Wayne D. Hudson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellant.

Douglas M. Moore, San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

The Attorney General of the State of California appeals from a judgment ordering the payment of the residue of the above captioned estate, which had been distributed to the State of California pursuant to Section 1027 of the Probate Code, to the attorney in fact of certain first cousins of decedent as his sole heirs and next of kin, and directing said attorney in fact to deposit said residue in a blocked account in a domestic bank to the credit of the heirs and pay out of said account certain fees, fixed by the court, to himself and to the counsel of petitioners.

Avil Nepogodin, a single man, died intestate on January 13, 1949, a resident of the City and County of San Francisco. No person entitled to succeed to his estate appeared in probate and the residue consisting of cash in the sum of $15,427.23 was distributed to the State of California as stated before. The respondents, six first cousins of decedent, by their attorney in fact Edward J. Niedens, timely petitioned for an order directing the payment of said amount to them and for the allowance of reasonable fees to said Edward J. Niedens and to their attorney for services rendered. The Attorney General opposed the petition on the ground among others that petitioners were non-resident aliens residing at Harbin, Manchuria, China, under the dominion of the Communist Government of China and that there did not exist on January 13, 1949, or thereafter reciprocal rights of inheritance between citizens of the United States and of China as required by Section 259 of the Probate Code,¹ and on the further ground that it could not be shown that they, as heirs, would receive the money as required by Section 1354, Code of Civil Procedure.²

1. At the time of decedent's death Section 259 of the Probate Code read in part: " * * * the right of aliens not residing in the United States or its territories to take personal property in this State by succession or testamentary disposition, upon the same terms and conditions as residents and citizens of the United States is dependent in each case upon the existence of a reciprocal right upon the part of citizens of the United States to take personal property upon the same terms and conditions as residents and citizens of the respective countries of which such aliens are residents."

2. At all times herein involved Section 1354 of the Code of Civil Procedure read in part: "Whenever any claim is made or petition filed by the representative of an estate or other person, under the provisions of this chapter, or under any other provision of law, to recover money or other property deposited in the State Treasury or held by the State or any officer thereof to the credit, or in the name, of any account in the Unclaimed

At the trial before the court without a jury, petitioners with respect to these two points asked the court to take judicial notice of the "Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Navigation" between the United States of America and the Republic of China, dated November 4, 1946, United States Statutes at Large, Volume 63, Part 2, p. 1300, hereinafter called the Treaty, especially of Article VIII, subd. 4 thereof.³ They likewise asked the court to take judicial notice of, and they introduced into evidence the Foreign Assets Control Regulations, 31 C.F.R. part 500, which require that distributions of property from an estate to a national of China "shall be made by deposit in a blocked account in a domestic bank * * *" (Section 500.523(c) and which regulate the possibility of transfer from such blocked account pursuant to general or special license. Finally petitioners asked the court to take judicial notice of the fact that Manchuria is within the geographical boundaries of the Republic of China.

The court found with respect to these points in substance that petitioners at the time of the filing of said petition were residents of the Republic of China; that on January 13, 1949 and ever since that date there have existed between citizens of the Property Fund, no recovery will be allowed unless it affirmatively appears that there are heirs or legatees who will receive such money or other property * * *."

3. Article VIII, subd. 4 of said treaty reads in part: "The nationals, corporations and associations of either High Contracting Party shall be permitted to succeed, as heirs, legatees and donees, to personal property of every kind within the territories of the other High Contracting Party, left or given to them by nationals of such other High Contracting Party or by nationals of any third country, and shall be permitted to take possession thereof, either by themselves or by others acting for them, and to retain or dispose of it at their pleasure, exempt from any restrictions, taxes or charges other or higher than those to which the nationals, corporations and associations of such other High Contracting Party are or may hereafter be subject in like cases."

United States and citizens of the Republic of China pursuant to the above treaty reciprocal rights to take personal property by succession as required by Section 259, Probate Code; that the deposit in a blocked account of the distributive shares of petitioners in accordance with the above Foreign Assets Control Regulations is an actual payment of said funds to petitioners who will be able to secure the release of said funds pursuant to general licenses granted in said regulations or special licenses issued by the Department of Treasury, so that they are heirs who will receive said funds as required by Section 1354 of the Code of Civil Procedure; that the reasonable value of the services of the attorney of petitioners was $5,142.61 and of those of Edward J. Niendens $500.

Appellant attacks said findings and the decision on the following grounds. 1) The Treaty does not extend to residents of Manchuria and even if it did, it would not prove that a citizen of the United States actually has an enforceable right to receive Manchurian property by succession, the burden of proof of which fact appellant contends is on the claimants under Section 259.1 of the Probate Code. 2) The blocking provisions of the Foreign Assets Control Regulations prevent the petitioners from actually receiving their distributive shares, as required, according to appellants, by Section 1354, Code of Civil Procedure, supra, and the licensing provisions of these regulations cannot provide such actual possession. 3) The award of attorney's fees is beyond the jurisdiction of the court, because the compensation of attorneys is left to the agreement of the parties except when specifically provided for by statute, § 1021 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and no such specific provision is applicable to the present situation. We have concluded that said grievances are without merit.

[1, 2] It must be noted from the outset that the provision of the Treaty on which the claimants rely, relates only to nationals of the contracting parties. There is no evidence or contention that claimants were at any time nationals of China, only that they were residents. Therefore the claimants can derive no rights from the Treaty and the rule that such Treaty, as the supreme law of the land, supersedes the provisions of Section 259 of the Probate Code which are inconsistent with it, Clark v. Allen, 331 U.S. 503, 508, 67 S.Ct. 1431, 91 L.Ed. 1633; In re Estate of Meyer, 107 Cal.App.2d 799, 804, 238 P.2d 597, is not applicable to this case. The only function of the Treaty in this case is that of evidence of the existence of the reciprocity required by Section 259, supra, for the right of succession of the claimants.

[3, 4] As to the existence of the right of succession the date of the death of decedent is controlling. On the ground that under our law, the property of a decedent on his death vests at once by inheritance in his heirs it was held in Re Estate of Giordano, 85 Cal.App.2d 588, 594, 193 P.2d 771, that changes in the substantive law of succession to which Sections 259 and 259.1, Probate Code, belong, enacted after the date of death cannot divest it. The same reasoning supports the decisiveness of that date as to the existence of reciprocity and accordingly the reciprocity was decided as of that date in the California cases. See for instance In re Estate of Arbulich, 41 Cal.2d 86, 88, 257 P.2d 433. Although there is no finding to that effect it is undisputed that on the date of death of decedent respondents were residents of Harbin, Manchuria. The first point to be decided is therefore whether the provisions of the Treaty at that time (January 13, 1949) extended to Manchuria, as part of the territory of China. The facts regarding the geographical division and the political history of the world, of which our courts take judicial notice, Section 1875, subd. 8, Code of Civil Procedure; Ocean Industries, Inc., v. Superior Court, 200 Cal. 235, 241, 252 P. 722, support the implied finding of the trial court that they did.

During the rule of the dynasty of the Manchus in China (1644-1911) Manchuria formed part of their territory. In the late 19th and early 20th centuries Russia and Japan extended their influence into Manchuria acquiring seaside territories and developing railways. The Russo-Japanese war (1904-1905) was partly fought in Manchuria and over the influence there. In the Treaty of Portsmouth (1905) which ended said war both states agreed to restore Manchuria to China, but nevertheless both retained influence there. The influence of Russia was mainly limited to an interest in the quasi-private Chinese Eastern Railway whereas Japan held another railway and the seaside territories and embarked on the economic penetration of Southern Manchuria. During the Chinese revolution and civil war (since 1911) Japan obtained the controlling influence in Southern Manchuria. At the Peace Conference of Paris in 1919 at the end of the First World War Japan obtained the enlargement of its Manchurian holdings with the former German holdings in Shantung and China therefore refused to sign the Versaille peace treaty with Germany. Although it continued its penetration of Manchuria, Japan, in 1922, was a party to the Washington Nine Power Treaty which provided for the respecting of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of China and for the abstaining from the supporting of individual spheres of interest. The Communist Government of Soviet Russia, which in 1919 had renounced all special privileges acquired by the Tsarist Government, in 1924 insisted on retaining a share in the administration of the Chinese Eastern Railway in Manchuria. In 1927 a conflict between the Soviet Union and China with respect to these privileges led to an invasion of Manchuria by Soviet troops but in December 1929 in negotiations between the Soviet Union and China the status quo ante was restored.

In 1931 Japanese troops forcibly occupied Manchuria and the Chinese rule there collapsed. China appealed to the League of Nations, but without practical success: when a report on this matter was unfavorable to Japan, it withdrew from the League. In 1932 it declared Manchuria an independent state under the name Manchoukuo. In 1934 it placed Pu Yi, the last Manchu emperor of China, who as a child had abdicated in 1912, on the throne of Manchoukuo. This puppet government was only recognized by Japan and its Axis partners (and San Salvador). This condition continued during the undeclared Japanese-Chinese war which broke out in July 1937 and during the Second World War.

The continued Japanese aggression led in 1937 to a united front between the Kuomintang Government under Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek (which in 1928 had been recognized by the United States as the National Government of the Republic of China) and the Chinese Communists, who since 1927 had been in a state of civil war with the Kuomintang Government. As part of this approach the Chinese Communist Party abolished its Soviet Government and its separate red army, which at least in name was placed under control of the National Government. However, notwithstanding the common fight against the Japanese, military friction between the communists and the government soon broke out again. It continued also when after Pearl Harbor the Chinese-Japanese war had become part of the Second World War.

At the Cairo Conference in November 1943 President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Churchill and Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek declared that it was their purpose that all territories which Japan had taken from the Chinese, such as Manchuria, should be restored to the Republic of China. The Yalta Agreement (February 11, 1945), to which China was not a party, promised the Soviet Union, which would enter the war against Japan, among other things that the Manchurian railroads should be jointly operated by a Soviet-Chinese Company, that the preeminent interests of the Soviet Union should be safeguarded and that China should retain full sovereignty in Manchuria. On August 9, 1945, the Soviet Union entered the war against Japan. On August 14 a Treaty of Friendship and Alliance between the Republic of China and the Soviet Union was concluded. In separate notes and agreements the advantages promised the Soviet Union at Yalta were granted by China and the Soviet Union pledged that it would respect Chinese sovereignty in the control of all of Manchuria as an integral part of China. On the same date Japan surrendered. The Japanese troops in Manchuria surrendered to the occupying troops of the Soviet Union, which agreed to remove its troops before February 1946. The removal met with some delay so that it took place mainly in April 1946. The conclusion of the Sino-Soviet Treaty improved the willingness of the Chinese Communists to cooperate with the National Government. In a conference of Mao Tse-Tung with the Government in Chungking it was decided in October 1945 that the leadership of President Chiang Kai-shek would be retained, that at an early date the one party political tutelage of the Kuomintang would be changed to a democratic constitutional government and that a Political Consultative Conference of all parties and non-partisan leaders would further discuss the measures to be taken. On January 10, 1946, a cease fire agreement was concluded between the government and the communists, of which a provision for the movement of National Government troops into and within Manchuria for the purpose of restoring Chinese sovereignty there formed part. The Political Consultative Conference was in session till the end of January and published resolutions as to all pending problems. Further difficulties between the government and the communists prevented their implementation.

When late in 1945 General Marshall had been appointed Special Representative of the President in China, part of his stated task was to assist the Chinese National Government in transporting Chinese troops to Manchurian ports with American means of transportation and to evacuate Japanese troops; both before and after his arrival such was done on a large scale. However, notwithstanding the stated provision of the cease fire agreement, the arriving government troops met communist resistance in Manchuria. The Soviet troops were not cooperative in having the Chinese Government troops take over, but often arranged their retreat so that the Chinese Communists could take over the parts evacuated and the Japanese war equipment there present. On April 18, 1946, the Chinese Communists occupied Changchun, the former capital of Manchoukuo, and not long thereafter Harbin. On May 23, 1946, Changchun was captured by government troops, who from there continued their march north and east into territory where the communists predominated. On June 6, 1946, a temporary truce as to Manchuria was concluded between the government and the communists, the government reserving its right under the Sino-Soviet Treaty to take over the sovereignty of Manchuria and on June 26, 1946, an agreement for cessation of all hostilities in Manchuria was reached; however, hostilities flared up again. On October 11, 1946, government troops took Kalgan an important communist center in northern China. Pending negotiations and increased fighting between communists and government troops also in Manchuria, the government troops mainly advancing, the Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Navigation between the United States and the Republic of China was signed on November 4, 1946. It was to enter into force on the day of exchange of ratifications, (which took place on November 30, 1948) and was to continue in force for a minimum period of five years from that day. The negotiations between the government and the communists ended in November 1946. On February 1, 1947, the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party declared that the party would not recognize any of the loans, treaties and agreements established by the Chinese Kuomintang Government after January 10, 1946, which had not been passed by the Political Consultative Conference. When in 1947 the civil war fighting was resumed on a large scale, the government, though winning much ground in other parts, weakened in Manchuria so that it held there only some main points, the railway communications of which were cut by the communists. During 1948 all of Manchuria with all government troops there fell to the communists. Also in other parts of China the government lost heavily so that in the beginning of 1949 its position was critical although it still held many of the main cities like Peking, Nanking, Shanghai, and Canton.

[5] Most of the above historical facts are found in a voluminous book "United States Relations with China, With Special Reference to the Period 1944-1949", released by the State Department in August 1949. It may be noted that the map which forms part of this book shows the Manchurian provinces as part of China. From these facts it must be concluded that at all times involved in this case, from the signing of the Treaty on November 4, 1946, to the death of decedent on January 13, 1949, Manchuria was an integral part of China. There might have been some doubt in this respect during the existence of the unrecognized Japanese puppet state of Manchoukuo, but that doubt disappeared with the surrender of Japan, the occupation of Manchuria by the Soviet Union, the recognition by the Soviet Union of the sovereignty of China over Manchuria and the withdrawal of the Soviet troops from Manchuria, all prior to the period here involved. It is evident that the Kuomintang Government, the Chinese Communists and the United States Government equally favored the unity of China with the inclusion of Manchuria as a sovereign nation, and that all foreign states so recognized it at the time in question.

[6,7] As to China as a whole we must hold that the Treaty was in force on January 13, 1949. The exchange of ratification which made it effective had taken place only one and a half months before. At that time the same civil war and the same weakened National Government had existed in China as on the above date of death of the decedent herein mentioned. The ratification exchange shows that the United States Government did not then consider the conditions existing in China an unsurmountable obstacle to the effectiveness of the Treaty. It had not denounced the Treaty at the date of decedent's death. As to the ability of a foreign state to perform its treaty obligations and as to the question whether a treaty has been terminated the action of the political departments of our government is controlling. Clark v. Allen, 331 U.S. 503, 514, 67 S.Ct. 1431, 91 L.Ed. 1633; Terlinden v. Ames, 184 U.S. 270, 285, 288, 22 S.Ct. 484, 46 L.Ed. 534. In Clark v. Allen it was held that the fact that Germany after its defeat in the Second World War was under Allied occupation could not be considered by the court to have terminated a treaty between that country and the United States concerning the right to succession to real property when there was no evidence that that political departments had so considered it. The same must apply a fortiori to the civil war in China.

[8,9] Appellant's contention that the scope of the Treaty is limited to the territory over which the Nationalist Government of China under Chiang Kai-shek had effective control is without merit. When Article XXVII of the Treaty, on which appellant relies, provides that the Treaty shall extend to "all areas of land and water under the sovereignty or authority of either High Contracting Party, except the Panama Canal Zone" the parties referred to are the two states as such, not their governments of the moment. Treaties are contracts between sovereign states and are binding on those states even when the government and its form changes. See Oppenheim Lauterpacht International Law, 7th ed., pp. 791, 795, 830; Draft Convention on the Law of Treaties, § 24 and comment, 29 A.J.I.L.Supp. 1044; V Hackworth Digest of International Law 360 et seq.; II Hyde International Law 1528; Ivancevic v. Artukovic, 9 Cir., 211 F.2d 565, 566. At the time in question, there was only one sovereign Chinese state although it was in a condition of civil war. The Chinese Communists were a Chinese political party taking part in the civil war, but they had not seceded from the Chinese state. It is a wholly unacceptable proposition; not supported by any authority, that with every change in the fortunes of a fluid civil war, the territory of the state and the sphere of applicability of its treaties should change.

[10] With respect to the scope of the Treaty the court cannot attach any significance to the fact that the Chinese Communist Party has declared after the signing and before the ratification of the Treaty that it would not recognize it. It is very doubtful whether our courts can consider even the formal denunciation by a foreign state of a treaty to which the United States is a party so long as the political departments of our government have not conceded its termination. Terlinden v. Ames, supra, 184 U.S. 270, 287, 22 S.Ct. 484, 46 L.Ed. 534; The Legal Nature of Treaties, 10 A.J.I.L. 722. Certainly the adverse declaration of a party to a continuing civil war, which declaration did not halt the ratification of the Treaty by our government can have no effect on our decision as to the Treaty.

[11] The next question is whether the Treaty sufficiently proved the existence of the right of citizens of the United States to take in China personal property by succession upon the same terms and conditions as Chinese residents and citizens as required by Section 259, Probate Code, supra. It is undisputed and undisputable that the Treaty provides for such right. However appellant contends that it does not prove the actual existence of such right because of the absence of proof of the construction and application of the Treaty by the Chinese Government and of the enforceability of the right under it so that American citizens would actually receive their inheritance. Appellant restricts his contention to Manchuria, but we are of the opinion that "country" in Section 259, Probate Code, means state and that so long as there is no stabilized secession of a part of a state the decision as to reciprocity must be based on the conditions in the foreign state as a whole and not on temporary conditions in the specific locality or province of which the claimants are residents. At the time here controlling (January 13, 1949) there existed no separate and stabilized "Communist Government of China" as alleged in appellant's answer. Only on September 21, 1949 did Mao Tse-tung proclaim the People's Republic of China in Peiping, which government was first recognized by the Soviet Union on October 2, 1949. The situation must be viewed as of January 13, 1949, not by hindsight.

[12-17] Treaties may be considered as evidence of foreign law, In re Estate of Arbulich, supra, 41 Cal.2d 86, 89, 257 P.2d 433, and the Treaty in this case was at least prima facie proof that one and a half months after its effective date it represented the law in China. It is a recognized rule of international law that "A State is bound to carry out in good faith the obligations which it has assumed by a treaty. (pacta sunt servanda)" Draft Convention on the Law of Treaties, Art. 20 with comment, 29 A.J. I.L.Supp. 977; I Oppenheim Lauterpacht International Law, 829; V Hackworth Digest of International Law, 164. There are rebuttable presumptions that the law has been obeyed, Section 1963, subd. 33, Code of Civil Procedure, and that official duty has been regularly performed, Section 1963, subd. 15, Code of Civil Procedure, which the trial court could accept as evidence. For the rule that a presumption can constitute evidence as to reciprocity see In re Estate of Kennedy, 106 Cal.App.2d 621, 625, 235 P.2d 837. There was no proof or even contention in the trial court that the attitude of the recognized National Government of China or the domestic law of China on the point involved were at the time in question violative of the Treaty and we know in that respect of no facts of which the court should taken judicial notice. It is true that the existence of a state of civil war may have impeded in many parts of China the effective enjoyment of the reciprocal rights but such circumstances need not be considered decisive. In Re Estate of Blak, 65 Cal.App. 2d 232, 238, 150 P.2d 567, 570, the effect of the occupation of the Netherlands by the Germans was under consideration and it was held "That the exigencies of war may temporarily suspend or defer the remedy to enforce the right to receive does not militate against the right". The trial court could apply the same rule to the exigencies of the civil war. "A finding by the trial court on the issue of reciprocity is to be treated like a finding on any other issue of fact and if there is evidence to support it such finding will not be disturbed on appeal". In re Estate of Arbulich, supra, 41 Cal.2d at page 90, 257 P.2d at page 435. On that basis we must sustain the finding of reciprocity in this case.

[18-20] At the oral argument appellant has abandoned the contention that under the provision of Section 1354, Code of Civil Procedure, supra, the federal requirement that distribution to the claimants must be made by deposit in a domestic bank prevents their recovery. Correctly so. Section 1354, Code of Civil Procedure, does not require proof that the heirs will receive the property, immediately, free from restrictions, in the country of their residence. We understand the purpose of the provision to be the prevention of futile proceedings with respect to deposited property for which no entitled heirs are actually in existence. In re Estate of Zimmermann, 132 Cal.App.2d 702, 283 P.2d 68; In re Estate of Costa, 109 Cal.App.2d 735, 741, 241 P.2d 621. Such purpose does not require acquisition free of restrictions. It is undisputed that claimants are decedent's next of kin and sole heirs at law and we have decided that they are not excluded from succession by Section 259, Probate Code. The Foreign Assets Control Regulations do not divest the title of these claimants to their distributive shares when deposited in a blocked account and do not prevent them from all enjoyment of them. When the owner of a blocked account comes into the United States he can pay from it for living, travelling and similar expenses within the United States (§ 500.518). (There was a statement at the trial that two of the claimants had left China for Brazil and might come to the United States.) Section 500.521 permits remittance of $100 per calendar month to each blocked account holder or member of his household, by means of crediting the amount to be transferred to a blocked account in the name of a banking institution in China. The finding that the claimants will receive the property so as to satisfy the requirement of Section 1354 of the Code of Civil Procedure must be upheld.

[21-23] The question whether the trial court was entitled to fix the salary of respondents' attorney cannot be reviewed on this appeal by the State. The judgment orders the State to pay over to the attorney in fact of the claimants all that had been distributed to it, and said attorney in fact to pay the fixed salary to respondents' counsel. What happens to the money after the State has paid it out is of no concern to the State so that the State cannot be aggrieved by that part of the judgment. The claimants are the only parties interested and they do not appeal. An appellant is entitled to review of error only which injuriously affects him and cannot urge error which affects others who do not appeal. Nichols v. Nichols, 135 Cal.App. 488, 491, 27 P.2d 414; 3 Witkin California Procedure 2228 and compare Ribero v. Callaway, 87 Cal. App.2d 135, 139, 196 P.2d 109. The interest which the State claims on the ground that money deposited in a blocked account might escheat again, is too remote to constitute the State a party aggrieved. If such were accepted the State would be a party aggrieved in all decisions adverse to a resident of the State.

Judgment affirmed.

Action by sister against brother to recover possession of certain U. S. Savings Bonds. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Louis H. Burke, J., entered judgment for sister and brother appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that where sister purchased all of the bonds with her own funds but registered them in the name of herself and her brother and delivered them to her brother, evidence supported finding that sister did not intend to make a completed gift to brother but did make a gift causa mortis.

Affirmed.

1. Evidence — 461(1)

Where sister furnished all the funds for U. S. Savings Bonds which were made payable to her or her brother, neither sister nor brother during the lifetime of both would be prevented from showing the true intent and purpose of the joint tenancy.

2. Joint Tenancy ⚡10

In sister's action against brother to recover possession of U. S. Savings Bonds paid for entirely by sister but placed in both names, the intent of sister in creating joint tenancy was a question of fact.

3. Gifts ⚡49(5), 82(2)

In sister's action against brother for recovery of possession of U. S. Savings Bonds paid for entirely by herself but placed in both names and delivered to brother, evidence was sufficient to support finding that sister did not intend to make a completed gift of the bonds but did make a gift causa mortis.

4. Gifts ⚡66(3)

Where sister procured U. S. Savings Bonds for which she paid entire consideration and registered them in the names of herself and her brother and delivered them to him, sister made a gift causa mortis only and retained complete control and title over the bonds until her demise.

5. Appeal and Error ⚡930(1)

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff instituted this action to recover possession of certain government bonds which she had purchased and caused to be delivered into the custody of her brother, defendant Sidney Stern. At the commencement of the trial the action was dismissed as to all defendants except Stern.

As to the factual background surrounding this litigation, we consider the following to be a fair epitome thereof as reflected by the record. Ten of these bonds were

Series G, having a maturity value of $18,000 and ten were Series E, having a maturity value of $10,000. At the time of trial the total cash surrender value of these bonds was $26,100. Plaintiff is a widow 70 years of age, and defendant, her brother, also unmarried, is 68 years of age. All of Series E bonds were purchased between August 1 and October 31, 1949, and at the time of such purchase, plaintiff caused the bonds to be issued in the names of "Mrs. Bertha Velleman or Sidney Stern," and to be delivered to defendant.

All of the Series G bonds, except five, were originally issued in plaintiff's name, but thereafter and prior to March, 1949, she caused them to be reissued in the names of "Mrs. Bertha Velleman or Sidney Stern." The other five Series G bonds were originally issued in the names of those two.

Around March of 1949, plaintiff caused all of the Series G bonds to be delivered to defendant, at which time she instructed him to keep these bonds in his safe deposit box at the Farmers and Merchants National Bank of Los Angeles until plaintiff's decease. Prior to the delivery of these bonds to defendant, plaintiff had told him that she intended to deliver these bonds to him because she had been advised that she could save inheritance taxes thereby.

Prior to such delivery, plaintiff had kept these Series G bonds in her custodian account with the Corn Exchange Bank in New York City. Neither plaintiff nor defendant filed any gift tax returns as to this transaction. Interest on these Series G bonds has been paid by the Treasury Department at regular intervals directly to plaintiff.

As is usual in cases of this nature, the evidence is conflicting. We deem it unnecessary to here set it forth in detail. Suffice it to say that in response to the question whether she intended to make a present gift of the bonds, plaintiff testified:

"I gave him the key to this vault and told him about the bank book and the bonds, and said, 'If I take sick in California, you may use what you need to pay my expenses, if I die, for cremation, and my body to be sent or ashes to be sent to New York.

And if anything is left, you can keep what is left over.”

On January 12, 1950, plaintiff wrote a letter to defendant on the reverse side of which appears the following recital:

“same as vault and contents. If anything happens to me—withdraw all, its yours.”

During the latter part of 1951, after plaintiff became ill, she wrote defendant requesting him to send her the savings bank book which was also delivered to him. With the return of the bank book defendant wrote his sister in part as follows:

“I have always considered this a sacred trust. A fund for your benefit should the need arise. So far as I am concerned I had no intention to touch one penny of this money while you were alive, and as you can see from the bank book, it is all intact.”

On May 9, 1952, plaintiff wrote a letter to defendant describing her ill health and her need for money in which she said:

“Please send me those Series E bonds. I must have cash.”

Receiving no reply to this communication, plaintiff again wrote defendant saying that she had received his several post cards, but was hurt at not having received a reply to her request for the bonds. She closed with the request, “Please send my property to me immediately.” Upon receiving no reply to this letter, plaintiff thereupon referred the matter to her lawyer in New York, who, in November, 1952, wrote two letters to defendant, which were also ignored by the latter.

Defendant testified that when plaintiff told him she was “going to give away all of her property while she was alive”, he remonstrated with her and urged her not to do so. That plaintiff insisted, saying that, “I (defendant) formerly was a sole beneficiary in her will, and one of the executors, and she is giving me this part of it, giving me $50,000.00 as part of it in consideration that we have been very, very close throughout our entire lives, and further consideration that I at several times have given her thousand-dollar bonds, and further consideration that at one time I gave her over $10,000 and gifts too many for me to occupy his Honor’s time to enumerate here.” That he accepted the bonds as a gift only after he had vainly tried to dissuade her from “giving her money away”. Defendant insisted that nothing was ever said to the effect that the bonds were not to be his until the demise of plaintiff.

Another witness, Mrs. Sarah Quadow, a very dear friend of plaintiff, testified that late in December, 1949, at a luncheon meeting, plaintiff told the witness that “she (plaintiff) had given her brother Sidney (defendant) $50,000.00”.

Upon the foregoing conflicting evidence the court found that in delivering the bonds, plaintiff “* * * instructed said defendant Sidney Stern to keep and retain the said bonds in his safe deposit box at the Farmers and Merchants National Bank of Los Angeles until plaintiff’s decease. That the defendant Sidney Stern accepted and received the said bonds and did place them in his safe deposit box in the Farmers and Merchants National Bank of Los Angeles and has retained the said bonds at all times since and does now have the said bonds in his possession in his said safe deposit box.” “That plaintiff did not at any time intend to make an immediate gift of the said bonds to defendant Sidney Stern or to transfer the ownership of said bonds to defendant Sidney Stern until after plaintiff’s decease. That plaintiff did intend that upon her decease such of the said bonds as remained in the defendant’s possession should become the property of and belong to the defendant Sidney Stern.” “That prior to the filing of this action, plaintiff, on numerous occasions following a date on or about the 9th day of May, 1952, did request and demand of defendant that he return the said bonds to plaintiff, but that defendant Sidney Stern has at all times failed, neglected and refused to return the said bonds or any of the same. That the said defendant has no right, title or interest in and to the said bonds or ownership therein, and plaintiff is entitled to the possession of all of said bonds.” Judgment was accordingly entered that plaintiff have and recover from defendant possession of the bonds in question. From said judgment defendant prosecutes this appeal.

The basic question presented to us is whether or not the evidence supports the finding that no present gift of the bonds had been accomplished. This brings us to the inquiry of whether the legal incidents essential to make an inter vivos transfer or completed gift are here present. This would depend upon whether having created a joint tenancy with respect to securities, the donor is precluded from proving that the transaction was only a device for passing title upon her demise, and if not so precluded, is there sufficient substantial evidence in the record to sustain the determination of the trial court that there was no completed gift of the bonds.

[1-4] As to the first of these questions, we are satisfied that during the lifetime of the two parties, either would have the right to establish the true intent and purpose of the joint tenancy, Spear v. Farwell, 5 Cal.App.2d 111, 113, 42 P.2d 391. And the question as to the intent of the respondent in causing the bonds to be issued to herself and appellant was one of fact for determination of the trial court, Blankinship v. Blankinship, 104 Cal.App.2d 199, 203, 230 P.2d 869; Paterson v. Comastri, 39 Cal.2d 66, 73, 244 P.2d 902. The record here contains substantial, though contradicted, evidence, as to the respondent's intent not to make a completed gift of the bonds to appellant, but to formulate a plan whereby the bonds would become the property of the appellant upon the death of respondent. In the instant case the trial court chose to believe the testimony of the respondent coupled with inferences drawn from documentary evidence as showing an intent upon her part to give the bonds to appellant in the event of his survivorship, and hence there was present in the transaction all the essential qualities of a gift causa mortis which respondent could revoke in her lifetime and which would not take effect until her death if not previously recalled. Under such circumstances, the control of respondent over the bonds was unlimited, and only at her death would become the absolute property of appellant if he survived her. Until her demise the gift was not consummated and respondent retains the entire title.

As to the aforesaid second question presented, it follows from the foregoing conclusion at which we have arrived, that the evidence is sufficient to support the findings. As pointed out by respondent, if she "had intended to make a present of the bonds, it would have been a very easy matter for her to have the bonds issued in the name of appellant alone and to deliver the possession thereof to him. The fact that she placed them in the names of both herself and appellant indicates that she was attempting to effectuate a means whereby such of the bonds as had not been used by her would vest in appellant upon respondent's decease." Also noteworthy is the conceded fact that respondent purchased all the bonds with her own funds and, as heretofore pointed out, the interest on the Series G bonds had been paid by the Treasury Department at regular intervals to respondent.

[5] Where a judgment is challenged on the ground of "insufficiency of the evidence" an appellate tribunal in reviewing the evidence must resolve all conflicts in favor of the respondent, and all reasonable and legitimate inferences must be indulged in to support the judgment if possible. In other words, when a judgment is attacked as being unsupported, the power of the reviewing court begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support the conclusion reached by the duly constituted arbiter of the facts. And, though two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts, the reviewing court is not authorized to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court.

With these well-settled rules in mind the judgment herein must be affirmed. It is so ordered.

No. 4886.

District Court of Appeal,
Fourth District, California.

July 1, 1955.

Action for cancellation of note and to set aside trust deed adjudged the separate property of defendant in prior divorce action. The Superior Court, San Diego County, Robert B. Burch, J., entered judgment for defendant and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that evidence was insufficient to show that defendant knew that plaintiff was incompetent when she procured his signature to note and trust deed.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Judgment ⇨117

A default judgment can give no relief in excess of that demanded by complaint.

2. Stipulations ⇨18(7)

Where stipulation was furnished by husband in prior divorce action to effect that there was no community property and that note was the separate property of wife, and such stipulation was used in the case, the husband, who was not without notice of form of judgment that might be expected, in effect consented to the judgment which was entered in divorce action and which stated that note was separate property of wife and was estopped from questioning the effect of his stipulation in instant action to cancel note.

3. Divorce ⇨168

Allegation that extrinsic fraud was used in the procurement of judgment of divorce, alleged for first time in husband's subsequent action for cancellation of note and trust deed, could have and should have been raised in divorce action in which judgment was entered stating that note secured by trust deed was wife's separate property.

4. Divorce ⇨169

The validity of a marriage is a matter which is necessarily intrinsic in a divorce decree.

5. Judgment ⇨443(1)

To constitute extrinsic fraud in procuring judgment there must have been some representation or concealment which prevented the plaintiff from having his day in court.

6. Divorce ⇨168

In action for cancellation of note and to set aside trust deed, that were held to be separate property of wife in prior divorce action, evidence was sufficient to show that no extrinsic fraud was used in procuring the divorce decree.

7. Mortgages ⇨86(3)

In action for cancellation of note and to set aside trust deed allegedly procured by fraud, evidence was insufficient to show that defendant knew plaintiff was incompetent when she procured his signature to note and trust deed.

8. Mortgages ⇨86(1)

In action for cancellation of note and to set aside trust deed, allegedly procured through fraud, burden of proving that note was obtained by undue influence or fraud was upon plaintiff.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

Alva E. Richardson, who will be referred to as the plaintiff, owned four lots in National City on which he operated a motel. On March 25, 1951, he and the defendant were married in Yuma, Arizona. On November 15, 1951, he deeded the motel property to the defendant and himself as joint tenants. On April 11, 1952, the defendant filed an action for divorce, and another action for a partition of the motel property. The complaint in the divorce action alleged that the community property consisted of the furniture in the motel, and that the parties owned a motel business situated on property held by them in joint tenancy. The prayer was for a divorce, for all of the community property, and for such other relief as the court deemed proper. Summons and a copy of the divorce complaint were served on this plaintiff on April 14, 1952.

On May 23, 1952, this defendant signed a deed reconveying her interest in the motel property to this plaintiff, and he executed and delivered to her a note for $13,375, secured by a trust deed on the property. This deed and trust deed were recorded on June 4, 1952. On the same day (May 23) this plaintiff also signed a stipulation, entitled in the divorce case, stating that said action might be heard on the complaint as a default matter and without notice to him, and further stipulating that a certain 1950 automobile and a certain note for $13,375 secured by trust deed on the motel property were this defendant's separate property, and that there was no community property of the parties. This stipulation was filed in the divorce action on June 6, 1952. This defendant also dismissed her action for partition.

An interlocutory decree of divorce was entered on June 16, 1952, in which the court also found and adjudged that there was no community property, and that the 1950 automobile and this note for $13,375, secured by a trust deed, were the separate property of this defendant.

On November 21, 1952, this plaintiff was adjudicated an incompetent person, and a guardian was appointed. On February 11, 1953, this action was filed. The complaint alleged that on May 23, 1952, the plaintiff owned this real estate as his separate property; that he was then, and for more than a year had been, incompetent; that on April 11, 1952, the defendant filed an action to partition said property, and an action for divorce; that on May 23, 1952, the defendant threatened to place a receiver on this property, and supplied the plaintiff with liquor; that while the plaintiff was in an intoxicated and incompetent condition, which was known to the defendant, she caused him to sign a stipulation stating that the $13,375 note and trust deed, and the 1950 automobile, were her separate property; and that at the same time she fraudulently induced him to sign this note and trust deed. The prayer was for a cancellation of this note and trust deed, and this written stipulation.

The answer denied the material allegations of the complaint and alleged that on November 15, 1951, the parties became the owners of the real property as joint tenants; that on April 11, 1952, the defendant filed an action for divorce, and another action for partition of the real property; that summons was served on April 14, 1952; that, thereafter, the defendant deeded her interest in the real property to the plaintiff in consideration of his assigning to her the automobile, and his execution and delivery to her of the note for $13,375 secured by a trust deed on the real property; that this consideration was reasonable and just; and that no offer has been made by anyone to restore to the defendant her interest in the real property. The answer further alleged the entry of the divorce decree in the other action decreeing that the automobile and note were her separate property; that said decree had become final; that said decree has become res judicata as to any issue in this action; and that the plaintiff is estopped from seeking any cancellation of the documents mentioned in the complaint.

After a trial the court found that all of the material allegations of the complaint are untrue; that all of the denials and allegations in the answer are true; that the same issue of property rights as that here involved was presented and determined by the court in the divorce proceeding; that the court had jurisdiction in the divorce action to determine the right and title to the note and trust deed; that the plaintiff had due notice of said divorce action and the opportunity to be heard therein, and was then and there competent so to do; that he was not prevented in any manner from a full participation in said divorce action; and that no extrinsic fraud was used or practiced in the procurement of said divorce decree. A judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, from which the plaintiff has appealed.

[1, 2] It is first contended that the court erred in holding that the judgment of divorce was res judicata as to the issue in this action. It is argued that the issue of fraud was not a necessary issue in the other action, and that the adjudication in the divorce decree that the $13,375 note was the separate property of the wife exceeded the prayer of the complaint with respect to property rights, which was only that the court award her all of the community property. The general rule is that by a default judgment no relief can be given in excess of that demanded by the complaint. Burnett v. King, 33 Cal.2d 805, 205 P.2d 657, 658, 12 A.L.R.2d 333. In that case, it was stated that "The essence of the policy underlying section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure, supra, is that in default cases, defendant must be given notice of what judgment may be taken against him—". In that case it was further pointed out that no contention of estoppel had been made, and that there was nothing in the record from which it could be said that the doctrine of estoppel was applicable to the situation there involved. In the instant case, this plaintiff furnished a stipulation to the effect that there was no community property and that this note was the separate property of this respondent which stipulation was used in the case. In Capital National Bank v. Smith, 62 Cal.App.2d 328, 144 P.2d 665, 674, the court said: "When a written stipulation of facts authorizes the rendering of judgment accordingly, that agreement should be construed with and it becomes controlling over the pleadings. It has been held the stipulation merges with the pleadings and is controlling with respect to the agreed facts therein contained." In Morrow v. Morrow, 40 Cal.App.2d 474, 105 P.2d 129, 135, it is said: "'As a general rule, however, one may be estopped by an agreement or stipulation made in a judicial proceeding. * * * The case for estoppel by stipulation is greatly strengthened, of course, where the stipulation has been acted upon and the adverse party would be injured if it were not given effect.'" In accordance with the stipulation the court here found that there was no community property, for which the wife had prayed, and found that the note in question was her separate property. The situation was changed by the stipulation, and this plaintiff was not without notice of the form of judgment that might be expected. In effect, he consented to the judgment which was entered. He should be estopped from questioning the effect of his stipulation, and the court so found.

[3] It is further contended that the court erred in adjudging that no extrinsic fraud was used in the procurement of the judgment of divorce. It is first argued that the respondent's joint tenancy interest in the real property was conveyed to her in November, 1951, for a fiduciary purpose only, that she thereby became a trustee for this plaintiff, and that her conduct in exacting the execution of the note and trust deed in order to obtain a reconveyance of the trust corpus must, as a matter of law, be held to have been fraudulent. The respondent testified that this plaintiff gave her this interest in the property in November, and that he said at the time that everybody wanted to take the place away from him so he wanted her to have an interest in it for his own protection. While there was some evidence justifying a conflicting inference, not only was the question one of fact but this matter could, and should if relied on, have been raised in the prior action. Moreover, this contention was not raised in the pleadings or at the trial of this action and is raised for the first time on appeal. The respondent had this interest in the real property, and was asking for some community property when this stipulation was signed. By way of a partial settlement of the controversy this plaintiff entered into an agreement with the respondent, and executed papers accordingly. The facts support the estoppel which was found by the court.

[4, 5] It is also argued that the court refused to permit this plaintiff to introduce evidence to prove that at the time these parties were married the respondent had another husband living in New York. In that connection, the respondent was asked by this plaintiff's counsel "Did you disclose to the court at the time of obtaining your divorce decree that you had a husband living in New York?" An objection to this question was sustained. No other evidence of such a prior marriage was offered. The validity of a marriage is a matter which is necessarily intrinsic in a divorce decree. Mumma v. Mumma, 86 Cal.App.2d 133, 194 P.2d 24. To constitute extrinsic fraud there must have been some representation or concealment which prevented the plaintiff from having his day in court. Gale v. Witt, 31 Cal.2d 362, 188 P.2d 755. If error be assumed in this connection, no extrinsic fraud appears.

[6, 7] It is also contended that the finding that no extrinsic fraud was used in procuring the divorce decree is unsupported by the evidence; and that the evidence "indicates" that the respondent knew that this plaintiff was incompetent when she procured his signature to the waiver and to the note and trust deed. The court found against the appellant in both of these respects, and these findings are amply supported by the evidence. This plaintiff was called to the stand by appellant's counsel and his testimony takes up 50 pages of the transcript. He testified that he did not remember being married to the respondent; that he was told the next day that he was married, but he did not believe it; that he did not remember anything about the deed conveying to her a joint tenancy in the property; that he remembered nothing about the divorce except that he was told that she was getting a divorce; that he remembered signing the stipulation and trust deed and note in the lawyer's office, but that he did not know what he was signing; and in general, that he could remember nothing about any business transaction during the fifteen months in question. He could not remember anything about the conversation in the lawyer's office at the time the papers were signed, or what the lawyer had said to him about the agreement and the effect of the papers, although these things had been taken down in shorthand at the time and were read to him. A reading of his testimony discloses why it was not believed by the trial judge. There was also evidence that he talked about the matter to his brother-in-law, to a friend, and to a justice of the peace between the time he was served with summons in the divorce action and the time the papers were signed on May 23; that he was advised to see a lawyer; and that he refused to do so. The findings in question are also supported by the testimony of the respondent.

[8] If it be assumed that the decree in the divorce action was not res judicata with respect to the note here in question, and that there was extrinsic fraud in procuring that decree the plaintiff, or someone in his behalf, would of course be entitled to bring this action. However, it was still incumbent upon the appellant to prove that this note was obtained by undue influence or fraud. This burden was not met, and the court's findings to the contrary are sustained by the evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

Division 2, California.

July 22, 1955.

Action on written contract for legal services. The Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, William T. Sweigert, J., directed verdict for plaintiff. Defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. J., held that when attorney fully performs services required by contract he is entitled to fee stipulated in contract and client's attempted cancellation after full performance was irrelevant.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨724(1)

Though judgment on cross-complaint is reviewable on appeal from main judgment something more than mere argument is necessary to show error unless that can be determined on face of record.

2. Attorney and Client ⇨135

When attorney fully performs services required by contract he is entitled to fee stipulated in contract.

3. Attorney and Client ⇨134(2)

Where written contract between attorney and client provided that client would pay attorney 20 per cent of any money collected, and attorney recovered $150,000 from estate of client's former husband by settlement for alimony and, after receiving money, client purported to repudiate agreement and discharge attorney, attorney had fully performed services required by contract and was entitled to fee stipulated in contract.

4. Libel and Slander ⇨7(13)

Where attorney stated that he gave client, for signature, check and papers concerning settlement of client's claim and that client shoved both check and papers down into her bosom and ran away, there was no libel.

Samuel Vartan, San Francisco, for appellant.

Sullivan, Roche, Johnson & Farraher, San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

[1] Plaintiff sued on a written contract for legal services. Defendant answered admitting the execution of the contract but alleging that she had cancelled it. The defendant failed to appear at the trial and offered no witness in her behalf. At the conclusion of plaintiff's case the trial court instructed the jury to bring in a verdict for plaintiff. The defendant also filed a cross-complaint and counter-claim for an alleged libel. Respondent states in his brief that an order was made for a judgment on the pleadings for cross-defendant. No order of that nature appears in the clerk's transcript, but, from the reporter's transcript it appears that a motion was granted for such a judgment, and no record is made of the grounds of the motion or of the opposition to it. Though a judgment on a cross-complaint is reviewable on the appeal from the main judgment something more than mere argument is necessary to show error unless that can be determined on the face of the record.

Plaintiff's complaint pleaded that the written contract between attorney and client provided: "Out of the proceeds of any sums of money collected, whether by negotiation and settlement, court award, or otherwise, Grace S. Pope will pay unto James Martin MacInnis twenty per cent (20%) thereof, as his fee for representing her, in addition to costs and expenses advanced in the prosecution of the same affairs."

"Plaintiff recovered and/or collected, on behalf of defendant, Grace S. Pope, from the estate of the late W. K. Pope, also known as W. Kenneth Pope, and/or his personal representatives, the total sum of $150,000, from and out of efforts thus undertaken by plaintiff, pursuant to said agreement; defendant, Grace S. Pope, accepted said recovery and/or collection, in the total sum of $150,000, and has in fact received, from and out of said undertaking, the total sum of $150,000".

Though defendant denied all these allegations (including the admitted receipt of the moneys collected for her) she refused to appear in court or to offer any evidence in her behalf.

Two questions arise on the appeal. (1) Did the trial court commit error in directing the verdict for plaintiff? The answer is no. The undisputed evidence is that the controversy involved the defendant's claim against her former husband's estate for alimony occurring after his death; that she employed plaintiff to collect such claim and agreed to pay him a fixed fee; that a settlement was made with the estate on July 11, 1952; that in August 1952 she received the moneys in settlement; and that on September 11, 1952, defendant purported to repudiate the agreement and to discharge plaintiff as her attorney when he attempted to collect his fee.

[2,3] This is not a case of "reasonable value". Plaintiff sued on a written contract fully performed. It would seem unnecessary to cite authority for the point that when an attorney fully performs the services required by the contract he is entitled to the fee stipulated in the contract. The authorities cited by appellant relating to the cases when the contract is breached before full performances have no relation to these issues.

(2) Did the trial court commit error in entering judgment on the cross-complaint? The answer is no so far as appears from the record.

The cross-complaint wholly fails to plead a cause of actionable libel. The language complained of appears in the statement of plaintiff that, following the settlement: "I got the check from the bank. As one of her attorneys, I said I would be glad to take it down to Beverly Hills and have her sign the settlement papers.

"I handed her the check and the papers to sign. She shoved both check and papers down into her bosom and ran down a terrace. I haven't seen her since."

[4] Appellant contends that there was some sort of libel in the "implication" or "inference" that she was thereby accused of stealing the check and the settlement agreement. But both belonged to her and were delivered to her as her property. How can one be charged with theft for taking that which rightly belongs to him? It is also suggested that there is some sort of implied libel in plaintiff's reference to the place of deposit. We cannot follow this argument either. It seems to be more probable that plaintiff was merely referring to a well-known place of deposit for women's valuables and that he meant it as a compliment rather than as a libel.

The whole case pleaded in the cross-complaint and counter-claim is just so much trash and nonsense. If the record should show that judgment was entered for respondent we would unhesitatingly say that judgment was proper.

The judgment on plaintiff's complaint is affirmed. Whatever was done on the cross-complaint and counter-claim adverse to appellant is affirmed.

July 26, 1955.

Petition for writ of habeas corpus. The District Court of Appeal held that defendant who did not object at trial in Superior Court of Marin County and failed to move to dismiss in that court could not raise possible violation of his right to a speedy trial on habeas corpus.

Petition denied.

Habeas Corpus Ⓒ25(1)

When defendant did not object in trial court and failed to move to dismiss in that court, the possible violation of his right to a speedy trial could not be raised on appeal nor on habeas corpus. Pen.Code, § 1382.

Robert Anderson, in pro. per.

PER CURIAM.

[1,2] The petitioner did not raise the question of a possible violation of Section 1382 of the Penal Code in the trial court, nor did he move to dismiss in that court under that section. The point was not raised on the appeal, People v. Anderson, 126 Cal.App.2d 702, 272 P.2d 805, and but imperfectly mentioned on the petition for hearing. The United States Supreme Court denied certiorari. 348 U.S. 918, 75 S.Ct. 302.

Under well-settled principles, the right to a speedy trial may be waived. When a defendant does not object in the trial court, and fails to move to dismiss in that court, the point cannot be raised on appeal, and, of course, not on habeas corpus. *People v. July 15, 1955.

Proceeding to enjoin musicians' union from interfering with private contract of member musician in order to aid other union to obtain a labor contract with same employer. The Superior Court, San Diego County, L. N. Turrentine, J., granted a preliminary injunction to employer and musicians' union and representative appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that where musician's contract expired and labor controversy between musicians' union and employer was settled prior to review of the preliminary injunction, there was no present controversy, and all material questions involved were moot.

Appeal dismissed.

1. Appeal and Error ¶781(4)

District Court of Appeal is not required to give opinions on moot questions or abstract propositions.

2. Appeal and Error ¶781(4)

Where musicians' union was attempting to aid other union to obtain a labor contract with employer by interfering with a private contract of a member musician with the same employer, but musician's contract expired and labor controversy between musicians' union and employer was settled prior to review of grant of a preliminary injunction, no present controversy existed and all questions involved in the appeal were moot, and consequently the appeal would be dismissed.

Appeal must be dismissed when controversy between parties thereto terminates.

4. Labor Relations ¶971

In proceeding to enjoin musicians' union from interfering with private contract of a member musician in order to aid other union in obtaining a labor contract with same employer, evidence was insufficient to show that trial court abused its discretion in issuing a preliminary injunction.

5. Appeal and Error ¶954(1)

Where there was no showing of abuse of discretion on part of the trial court in issuing preliminary injunction, the exercise of discretion was not reviewed on appeal.

Walter Wencke, San Diego, for appellants.

Clifford L. Duke, Jr., San Diego, for respondents.

MUSSELL, Justice.

Walt James Slocomb, a musician and member of appellant American Federation of Musicians, San Diego Local No. 325, entered into a contract of employment with plaintiff Hidden Harbor, Inc., dba Secret Harbor. Under this contract Slocomb was employed by plaintiff for fifty-two weeks, beginning on or before December 28, 1953, at a salary of $150 per week. He began his employment on the date agreed upon and continued to work until the contract expired on December 28, 1954. On or about March 25, 1954, Hidden Harbor's culinary and bartender employees went on strike and began picketing the Hidden Harbor for the purpose of obtaining a labor contract.

It is alleged in the complaint that at the time said picket line was instituted Slocomb and Secret Harbor were informed by the musicians' union that the rules of the musicians' union did not prohibit Slocomb from continuing to perform the obligations of his contract with Secret Harbor and that Slocomb continued to perform said obligation at all times since March 25, 1954, behind the Joint Board picket line; that on or about May 11, 1954, E. B. Wheeler, as representative of the musicians' union, sent a letter to Hidden Harbor stating, among other things, that "No federation musicians will be permitted to accept engagements at the Secret Harbor after May 25, 1954"; that Slocomb, who was a member of the musicians' union, did not request nor authorize the musicians' union to terminate his contract; that he had no dispute with Secret Harbor and that there was no dispute between Secret Harbor and the musicians' union; that Slocomb feared that disciplinary action would be taken against him by the musicians' union if he failed to obey the orders of that union. This action was filed by Hidden Harbor on May 24, 1954, to restrain the defendants from interfering with the contractual relationship between Secret Harbor and Slocomb. On June 7, 1954, Hidden Harbor filed an action in the superior court in San Diego County (No. 189517) against the Local Joint Executive Board of San Diego, et al., seeking an injunction enjoining the defendants from picketing Secret Harbor and obstructing or interfering in any way with the conduct or operation of its business. A preliminary injunction was issued therein on June 18, 1954, enjoining the picketing and this injunction remained in effect until March 23, 1955. On May 24, 1954, an order to show cause and temporary restraining order was issued by the court in the instant action (No. 189241) and after a hearing thereon the court issued a preliminary injunction enjoining the defendants American Federation of Musicians, Local No. 325, and Edward Wheeler, from (1) Demanding that Walt James Slocomb terminate his services at the Hidden Harbor, Inc. during the life of the contract between Hidden Harbor, Inc. and Slocomb; (2) Requesting either directly or indirectly by any means whatsoever that Walt James Slocomb cease performing at Hidden Harbor, Inc.; and (3) Refusing to permit Walt James Slocomb to continue performance during the life of his contract with Hidden Harbor, Inc. and that said defendants cease and desist from doing any act which interferes with the contractual relationship between Hidden Harbor, Inc. and Slocomb.

Defendants appeal from this preliminary injunction stating that the sole issue is "Whether one union may assist another union where":

"(a) Members of both unions work for the identical employer at the same place;

"(b) The first union is on strike for a legitimate labor objective (a labor contract);

"(c) The first (striking) union has established a peaceful picket line in front of the mutual employer's place of business;

"(d) The employer has been placed on an 'unfair list';

"(e) The striking employees have been replaced by non-union personnel;

"(f) The only union person working in the midst of the newly hired non-union personnel is a member of the second union;

"(g) The labor contract with the mutual employer governing the second union's members contains a condition subsequent to the effect that prevention of service by those members due to a strike, 'unfair list' or order of the second union relieves them of any obligation or liability;

"(h) The condition subsequent materializes in that the second union orders its members to stop work because of a strike at, and the 'unfair listing' of, the mutual employer of the members of both unions."

[1-3] We do not deem it necessary to decide the issue thus stated in view of the evidence of events shown by the record to have taken place since the filing of the complaint herein. The contract of employment between plaintiff and Slocomb expired on December 28, 1954, and was fully performed by both parties. The picketing of Secret Harbor was enjoined in action No. 189517 on June 18, 1954. On December 24, 1954, Secret Harbor entered into an agreement with the Local Joint Executive Board and there has been no labor dispute since that date between respondent and said joint executive board or any of the American Federation of Labor affiliates. The preliminary injunction herein was issued enjoining appellants from interfering with said contract and the contract had no vitality after its termination. We are not required to herein give opinions on moot questions or abstract propositions. In Consol. Vultee Aircraft Corp. v. United Automobile, etc., Workers, 27 Cal.2d 859, 862, 863, 167 P.2d 725, 727, the court said:

"As the United States Supreme Court declared in Mills v. Green, 159 U.S. 651, 653, 16 S.Ct. 132, 133, 40 L.Ed. 293: 'the duty of this court, as of every other judicial tribunal, is to decide actual controversies by a judgment which can be carried into effect, and not to give opinions upon moot questions or abstract propositions, or to declare principles or rules of law which cannot affect the matter in issue in the case before it. It necessarily follows that when, pending an appeal from the judgment of a lower court, and without any fault of the defendant, an event occurs which renders it impossible for this court, if it should decide the case in favor of plaintiff, to grant him any effectual relief whatever, the court will not proceed to a formal judgment, but will dismiss the appeal.'" (Citations.)

The record herein shows that there is no present controversy between plaintiff and appellants and that all material questions involved in the appeal are moot. When a controversy between parties to an appeal ceases to exist the appeal must be dismissed. Covina Union High School v. California Interscholastic Federation, 136 Cal.App. 588, 29 P.2d 323.

[4, 5] There is no showing of abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in issuing the preliminary injunction herein and under the circumstances shown the discretion of the trial court will not be reviewed on appeal. Riviello v. Journeymen Barbers, etc., Union, 88 Cal.App.2d 499, 510, 199 P.2d 400.

Cr. 5375.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

July 26, 1955.

Prosecution for grand theft. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Joe Raycraft, J., entered judgment on verdict of conviction. Defendant appealed from the judgment and from denial of motion for new trial. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that evidence sustained conviction.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law $\S$ 814(3)

In grand theft prosecution against defendant who allegedly kept proceeds of check given by used car dealer for purchase of automobile by defendant for dealer, evidence failed to disclose such partnership or joint venture between defendant and dealer as to require instruction on such matter.

2. Criminal Law $\S$ 717

Reading by prosecuting attorney in argument to jury of instructions which prosecuting attorney believes will later be given by judge is within discretion of trial court but is practice which should be discouraged.

3. Criminal Law $\S$ 1171(1)

In prosecution for grand theft, reading by prosecuting attorney in argument to jury of instructions which he said he was sure would later be given by the judge was not such prejudicial misconduct as to require new trial of case.

4. Embezzlement $\S$ 44(1)

Evidence sustained conviction for grand theft based on retention of proceeds of check given defendant for business purposes.

Loyal C. Pulley, Long Beach, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Marvin Gross, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

Defendant was convicted by a jury of grand theft. He was granted probation, with the first fifty-two days of it in the county jail. And he was directed to refund the money he stole from the prosecuting witness.

Defendant was given a cashier's check for $300 by a used car dealer to purchase an automobile for him. Instead of purchasing the automobile, defendant endorsed the check, got the money, and kept it. He told the dealer that he had lost the money in Las Vegas. He told a police officer who arrested him that he used the money to pay his personal bills. And on his trial he said that the dealer owed him $455; so he cashed the check and applied the proceeds to that indebtedness.

[1] Defendant appeals from the judgment and from the denial of his motion for a new trial. He argues that there was a partnership or joint venture between him and the dealer, and that it was error to refuse to instruct the jury on that issue.

But there is nothing in the record from which an inference could be drawn that there was a partnership between the two men. Defendant purchased automobiles for the dealer on several occasions, upon the understanding that the dealer would furnish the money, defendant would sell the automobiles, and the two would share equally in the profits; or, if the dealer desired to take over any such automobiles and put them on his used car lot he would pay defendant $25 for each of them. Therefore, the trial court was not called upon to give the proffered instruction.

[2-4] Defendant further argues that it was wrong for the prosecuting attorney in his argument to the jury to read instructions that he said he was sure would later be given by the judge.

While that practice is within the discretion of the court, Boreham v. Byrne, 83 Cal. 23, 23 P. 212, trial judges should discourage it. It is a waste of time, and could unfairly influence jurors by putting undue emphasis upon particular questions submitted to them.

This Court has performed the duty enjoined upon it by our constitution, and has read the record in this case. The evidence of guilt is clear and convincing, and the reading by the prosecuting officer was not such prejudicial misconduct as to require a new trial of the case.

The judgment and the order are, and each of them is, affirmed.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

This is an action brought by Television
Productions, Inc., against Jerry Fairbanks, Inc., National Broadcasting Company, Inc., corporations, and Consolidated Television
Sales, a co-partnership, composed of Hallett
Manufacturing Company and KTTV, Inc., a corporation. The complaint prays for declaratory relief and for an accounting as to all the defendants and as against Jerry Fairbanks, Inc., for damages for breach of contract. Certain contracts are involved, all of which create rights and obligations as between the respective contracting parties in and to the ownership and use of certain motion picture films and a distribution of the proceeds from the exploitation and distribution of the same. The question on the appeal is whether the court was in error in striking out portions of a cross-complaint of National Broadcasting Company upon motion of defendants and cross-defendants, KTTV, Inc., and Hallett Manufacturing Company. The ground upon which the portions were stricken was that the matter therein alleged was not a proper subject of a cross-complaint. It will be developed in our discussion that the claims for relief asserted in the causes of action that were stricken were directly related to the transaction which is the subject matter of the action and that they should not have been stricken.

Although the several contracts to be examined employ the customary verbosity, a greatly abbreviated digest of the same will serve the purposes of this opinion. The names of the parties will likewise be abbreviated. Television made and sold to Fairbanks 65 short motion pictures, agreed to make 65 more, and sell the same to Fairbanks, and gave to the latter an option over a 5-year period to call for and acquire additional pictures of the same kind, which it made to a total number of 195. Fairbanks agreed to advance certain sums of money, to exploit the pictures and, after deducting from the returns certain items of reimbursement, to hold in trust for Television and to pay over 50 per cent of the balance remaining. Fairbanks agreed that in contracting with any third party with respect to the films it would incorporate in its agreements the provisions of its agreement with Television that were designed to establish and protect the latter's rights, and it was agreed that no contract would be effective which did not contain such protective provisions. Television-Fairbanks contract provided that any contract made by Fairbanks with third parties under which he would retain a perpetual right to share in profits would not operate as a sale, license or other disposition of the films and that all receipts thereunder should be accounted for by Fairbanks in accordance with its agreement with Television. It was alleged that Fairbanks entered into an agreement with National by which it purported to sell, transfer and assign to National all its right, title and interest in and to said television programs, which then numbered 195, but that the agreement contained no provision preserving the rights of Television under its contract nor any provision to hold any of the profits in trust for it; at the same time Fairbanks gave National an agreement of chattel mortgage-pledge and assignment which likewise contained no provision for the protection of plaintiff's rights; National foreclosed the mortgage, purchased 195 filmed programs at foreclosure sale and has entered into an agreement by which it purported to sell some interest in the 195 films to Consolidated. It was alleged that defendants claim that Television has no right, title or interest in or to the films or any right to any percentage of the net profits and that each defendant claims to be the sole owner of the films and entitled to all of the net profits. Television challenges the validity of the foreclosure sale and claims an interest in the films and the profits from their exploitation. In a second cause of action plaintiff asked for an accounting of profits, and in a third cause of action damages against Fairbanks occasioned through the breach by Fairbanks of its agreement to incorporate in its said agreements with National those provisions of the Television-Fairbanks agreement which were designed for the protection of Television's interest in the films and in the profits.

By its cross-complaint National alleged that it entered into an agreement with Fairbanks which antedated the Television-Fairbanks contract, which agreement contemplated and provided for the purchase by National from Fairbanks of motion pictures to be produced by the latter. It was alleged that with respect to any pictures purchased by National the agreement contained provisions as set out in the margin,¹ and that

1. "13. Fairbanks represents and warrants to NBC as follows: (a) That as of the date of delivery to NBC of any motion picture produced by Fairbanks for NBC, Fairbanks will own all the right, title and interest in and to such picture and the aural and visual broadcasting rights thereto throughout the world; all the characters, titles and text therein; the exclusive rights enumerated in Paragraph 1(h) hereof; the right or world-wide license to utilize the music associated with such picture for any purpose for which NBC desires to use such picture or authorize such picture to be used; and the right to use in the exhibition of such picture and in publicizing, advertising and exploiting such picture the product or the chattel mortgage agreement also contained the following: "Fairbanks warrants that it will own full, complete and unimpaired title to the pictures, properties and rights covered hereby, free and clear of any and all claims, rights, liens or charges thereon, which may to any extent defeat the rights of NBC * * *."

As to Hallett and KTTV, the cross-complaint alleged in a third cause of action that National sold and transferred to KTTV and Hallett all its right, title and interest in and to said cartoons and that said agreement contained a provision as set out in the margin.² A fourth cause of action alleged that National had incurred an indebtedness for legal fees and court costs in the present litigation in an amount in excess of $5,000. It was alleged that a controversy existed between National and Hallett and KTTV in that National contends that it has the right to be indemnified and held harmless by Hallett and KTTV against any losses, damages, expenses or judgments incurred by cross-complainant, whereas Hallett and KTTV deny that National has any right to indemnification. The prayer of the cross-complaint was for a declaration of National's right to be indemnified in accordance with the agreements, for damages against the cross-defendants, for attorneys fees, expenses and costs. The court struck out the third cause of action and the fourth cause of action insofar as it related to Hallett and KTTV.

Section 442 of the Code of Civil Procedure permits the filing of a cross-complaint service of any sponsor or sponsors thereof, and for institutional purpose of NBC, its affiliated stations, lessees and licensees and any sponsor or sponsors, the names characters, titles and text in and from the story and material contained in such picture, and the names, pseudonyms, photographs, likenesses and biographies of the actors and others appearing in or connected with such picture. * * *

"14. Fairbanks agrees to defend, indemnify, and to save and hold NBC harmless against and to make good to NBC and all other persons, losses, damages, expenses or judgments, including legal fees, incurred or sustained by or entered against NBC or such other per-

"Whenever the defendant seeks affirmative relief against any party, relating to or depending upon the contract, transaction, matter, happening or accident upon which the action is brought * * *." The words "matter, happening or accident" were added by Statutes 1915, page 298. The legislature could scarcely have chosen more clear and comprehensive language in extending the procedure by cross-complaint to cases in which the subject matter of the action and of the cross-complaint are the same. Of course, they are the same if they are not different and in the present case they are not different. Fairbanks was to exploit the pictures through television mediums. In fact, as shown by the contract, an agreement had been made or was expected to be made with National for that purpose. National, when it contracted with Consolidated, did not agree to indemnify Consolidated against such claims but, upon the contrary, was to be indemnified by Consolidated. It is not questioned that the claims of Television are within the scope of the indemnity agreements. Under the theory of National, translated into issues by the pleadings, if Television recovers judgment against National both Fairbanks and Consolidated will be bound to pay National the amount of its liability. In the present action, or in a separate action brought on the indemnity agreements, the primary question would be that of the liability of National. So far as appears from the pleadings a judgment for or against National in the present action would determine the question of liability of cross-defendants sons by reason of any violation of any agreement, representation, or warranty contained in this Agreement. * * *

2. "Hallett and KTTV jointly and severally admit the validity of the Fairbanks debt and the Fairbanks mortgage, which mortgage will be foreclosed in the manner hereinabove indicated, and further admit the validity of the foreclosure sale and the foreclosure title obtained by NBC at said foreclosure sale, and agree to indemnify NBC against any and all claims, debts, demands, and causes of action which may be asserted against it based upon any claimed invalidity of said debt, mortgage, sale or title."

under their indemnity agreements. It is the precise type of liability sought to be fixed on National against which it claims the cross-defendants have agreed to hold it harmless. If there are defenses against liability under those agreements other than the non-liability of National to plaintiff they are not to be found in the pleadings.

[1-3] The purpose of the procedure by cross-complaint is to avoid such circuitry of action as would be involved if National were not allowed to have its rights adjudicated under its cross-complaint. Whether a cross-complaint is proper in such a case is not an open question. Where several persons are sued upon a demand, against which one defendant has agreed to indemnify another, the latter may have his rights to indemnity determined by means of a cross-complaint. It was so held in Eastin v. Roberts, Carpenter & Co., 19 Cal. App.2d 567, 66 P.2d 224; County of Humboldt v. Kay, 57 Cal.App.2d 115, 134 P.2d 501; Sattinger v. Newbauer, 123 Cal.App. 2d 365, 266 P.2d 586. The order appealed from is directly contrary to the well-established rule of procedure in such cases. It was error to strike out the third cause of action of the cross-complaint and the allegations of the fourth cause of action insofar as they related to Hallett and KTTV.

The only question involved and all that we have decided is that the pleadings in their general aspects present a case in which the cross-complaint of National as against KTTV, Inc., and Hallett Manufacturing Company was properly filed. No questions respecting the interpretation or scope of the agreements or the liability of any party or parties thereunder nor as to any defenses against claims of liability are before us on the appeal. Aside from the question of the right of National to file its cross-complaint all matters in issue will be for the trial court and no implications to the contrary may be read into our opinion.

The order is reversed.

District Court of Appeal,
Fourth District, California.

July 14, 1955.

Prosecution for grand theft. The Superior Court, Fresno County, Edward L. Kellas, J., entered judgment of conviction and denied accused's motion to set aside judgment for purpose of withdrawing plea of guilty. Accused appealed from judgment and purported order denying new trial. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that where accused made no motion for new trial in the action, his attempted appeal therefrom must be dismissed.

Judgment affirmed and attempted appeal from order denying new trial dismissed.

1. Criminal Law §1131(4)

Where accused convicted of grand theft made no motion for a new trial in the action, attempted appeal therefrom was dismissed.

2. Criminal Law §1134(10)

If certain proceedings in trial court by accused convicted of grand theft amounted to a motion to set aside information and enter plea of not guilty, where it was made after judgment and after notice of appeal from judgment had been filed, it was too late to be reviewed on appeal from judgment.

Howard Renge, Fowler, and Tom Okawara, Fresno, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Defendant filed his notice of appeal on December 21, 1954, in propria persona, after personally pleading guilty to a charge of grand theft of a house trailer, admitting a prior conviction of a felony (burglary), and that he served time therefor in a state penal institution in Illinois. He was then represented by counsel of his own choosing. After being denied probation he was duly arraigned for judgment which was entered on December 6, 1954, and he was sentenced to state's prison.

At defendant's request, other counsel were appointed by this court to represent him on appeal. The reporter's transcript shows the proceedings had in the Superior Court to be regular, and defendant's rights were fully protected by his counsel who appeared for him. As we understand it, defendant now claims, in a letter written to the trial judge on December 23, 1954, not made a part of the record on this appeal, that his former counsel visited him in jail and defendant told him he was not guilty of the charge, but his attorney stated he had talked to the district attorney and that upon entry of a plea of guilty defendant would receive probation or a short local jail sentence; and that it was further claimed the probation officer "guaranteed" defendant he would recommend probation, otherwise the defendant would have entered a plea of not guilty. Apparently defendant set this matter up in some form of proceeding in the Superior Court in the nature of a petition for writ of certiorari, coram nobis, or as a motion to set aside the judgment for the purpose of withdrawing the plea after judgment had been pronounced and after defendant's notice of appeal had been filed. At any rate, after the matter was heard upon conflicting evidence, the motion or writ was denied by that court and no appeal was taken from the order. It is defendant's claim that under the holding in People v. Gilbert, 25 Cal.2d 422, 154 P.2d 657, he should now be allowed to raise the same question on appeal from the judgment, and be permitted to enter a plea of not guilty.

[1,2] The record does not indicate that defendant made a motion for a new trial in the instant action and accordingly his attempted appeal therefrom must be dismissed. If the proceedings in the Superior Court amounted to a motion to set aside the information and enter a plea of not guilty it came too late to be reviewed on an appeal from the judgment since it was made after judgment and after the notice of appeal from the judgment had been filed. It being an appealable order made after judgment and after notice of appeal from the judgment, this court has no jurisdiction to review it on an appeal from the judgment. 3 Cal.Jur.2d 688, sec. 199.

Defendant's appeal is based on a matter admittedly not a part of the record on appeal from the judgment. Accordingly, since no error affirmatively appears, the judgment must be affirmed. The attempted appeal from the purported order denying a new trial is dismissed.

Judgment affirmed.

DURALADD PRODUCTS CORPORATION,
a corporation, Petitioner,

v.

SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA, IN AND FOR THE COUNTY OF SACRAMENTO, Honorable James
H. Oakley, Judge thereof, Honorable C. C.
LaRue, County Clerk of the County of Sacramento, and Carl E. Moore, Respondents.

Civ. 8819.

District Court of Appeal,
Third District, California.

June 29, 1955.

Hearing Denied Aug. 18, 1955.

Original proceeding for writ of prohibition by foreign corporation to enjoin court from proceeding further in action for personal injuries brought against foreign corporation and others, and to require court to vacate order denying motion to quash substituted service of summons on corporation. The District Court of Appeal, Andrew R. Schottky, J., held that where foreign corporation manufactured parts for ladders and sold them to California company which assembled ladders, furnished advertising material to California company, and had its representative make annual visit to California company for purpose of technical consultation, foreign corporation held out California company as its California distributor or representative, and was doing business within state for purpose of assumption of jurisdiction and amenability to process.

Petition denied and alternative writ discharged.

1. Corporation $\S$ 642(1)

The essence of "doing business" within the state is that the corporation is present within the state sufficiently to constitute it just and equitable that it be amenable to process within the state.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Doing Business".

2. Corporations $\S$ 642(1)

Not any activity of a foreign corporation in the state will make it amenable to process, and there is no precise test that can be applied, but it is a combination of local activities conducted by foreign corporation, their manner, extent and character which becomes determinative of the jurisdictional question.

3. Corporations $\S$ 642(4½)

Where foreign corporation manufactured parts for ladders outside state, and shipped parts into state for assembly by company that had contract with it, furnished advertising material to California company and had its representative make annual visit for purpose of technical consultation with California company, foreign corporation held California company out as its California distributor or representative, and was doing business within state for purpose of assumption of jurisdiction and amenability to process.

C. Ray Robinson, Auburn, for real party in interest.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Petitioner, a New Jersey corporation, filed in this court a petition for a writ of prohibition to enjoin the Superior Court of Sacramento County from proceeding further in an action for personal injuries brought against it and others by Carl E. Moore, and to vacate an order denying petitioner's motion to quash the substituted service of summons made on it in said action. Attached to said petition as exhibits were copies of the first amended complaint, plaintiff's affidavit for service of process on a foreign corporation, notice of motion to quash service of summons and affidavit in support thereof, and pertinent extracts from depositions of John B. Lindquist and Eleanor C. Lindquist.

Plaintiff Carl E. Moore, as the real party in interest, filed an opposition to the issuance of the writ of prohibition. We issued an alternative writ requiring respondent court to show cause why further proceedings against petitioner in said action should not be prohibited and restraining further proceedings against petitioner until this court determined the matter.

It is the contention of petitioner that it was not doing business in California and was therefore not amenable to service of process upon the Secretary of State. The same record is before us as was before the superior court upon the hearing of the motion to quash service of summons. In support of its motion petitioner submitted the affidavit of Charles S. Schulek, a vice president of the Duraladd Products Corporation, and plaintiff and respondent Moore relied upon the affidavit of his attorney filed in support of the motion for service of process and the depositions of John B. Lindquist, Eleanor C. Lindquist and Louis C. Larson. The question which we must determine is whether the court's order denying petitioner's motion to quash the service of summons is supported by the record.

The facts are not in substantial dispute. The action is one for personal injuries resulting to plaintiff from the collapse of an aluminum ladder which had been purchased from defendant, Sacramento Stucco Company. The latter had obtained the same through the wholesale hardware firm of defendant, Thomson-Diggs Company, which in turn had received it from defendant Louis C. Larson, a San Jose distributor. Larson, in turn, had purchased it from defendant Larson Ladder Company, a Los Angeles concern, which was engaged in the business of producing such ladders and selling them to distributors, of which Larson of San Jose handled the northern California business.

Larson of Los Angeles operates under a contract with Duraladd, whereby it purchases from Duraladd in New Jersey ladder parts which are shipped to Los Angeles and paid for by the Los Angeles company. These ladders arrive in a "knocked down" condition. They are there assembled and sold to dealers. The volume of business so done in 1952 approximated $25,000. It was less than that in 1951, and more in 1953. The contract under which this arrangement is still being carried on was entered into in 1950, between Duraladd and Larson of Los Angeles, and provided for outright sale of ladder parts under an exclusive distributorship arrangement. Duraladd manufactures these parts solely in its New Jersey plant; maintains no sales, or other representatives, or office in California; does no business with any other firm or person than Larson of Los Angeles, with whom it has the contract mentioned which it terms a licensing agreement.

The affidavit of its vice president asserts that the only connection Duraladd has with California is the sale of ladder parts to Larson of Los Angeles under this agreement, a copy of which is attached to Duraladd's affidavit; and that no officer of Duraladd has done business in California since its president, one Dold, came to California in 1950 to execute the contract. However, it appears from other evidence that when Larson started to set up its ladder assembly business in Los Angeles, a representative of Duraladd came to California and assisted in setting up the assembling machine and gave instruction in the method of operating it. Since that time Duraladd has had a man at Larson's plant several times, though not recently. This was the same man who helped set up Larson's operation and he dropped in to see how it was operating. About two years ago, Larson also received some instructions from Duraladd in regard to the assembly of the ladders. Larson also has received technical information from Duraladd as to tests, strength, and composition of their products.

The machine used in this assembly process is called an "air machine," operated by one person, and it applies 380 pounds air pressure, by which the ladder rungs are annealed to the side of the rails. There is no welding, and there are no screws or rivets used in the process. Larson has assembled over 1,000 of these ladders since 1950. This air machine was designed by Duraladd and purchased by Larson from Duraladd's representative in Wisconsin. If anything goes wrong with the machine, Larson does not go to Duraladd, but to an air company in Los Angeles. The ladders, themselves, are Duraladd's design and manufacture. All parts arrive in Los Angeles machined, stamped, and ready to be assembled. Larson does no machine work on the parts; merely assembles them. The rungs are all cut to size and packed in barrels. The ladder dogs or catches (for extension arms) are already attached.

Duraladd does no advertising in California, but Larson puts out a catalog sheet, a copy of which has been submitted as an exhibit. This sheet or brochure contains at the top the following lettering:

"Aluminum Ladders

Larson Ladder Company

Distributors For Duraladd, The

Lifetime Ladder."

It appears that Duraladd furnished the dies for this brochure and composed the copy, but Larson had it printed and paid for it. Larson put its name on as distributors for Duraladd and sent this brochure out to wholesalers as advertising, so that the latter could put the material in their salesmen's book. This brochure was put out about one year after Larson started handling Duraladd products, and it is still in use.

The air machine, originally set up with help from the Duraladd representative, is the same as when originally set up, except for retooling that was done under Duraladd's instructions.

Respondent Moore contends that under the facts and circumstances shown by the record in the instant proceeding petitioner Duraladd Products Corporation was doing business in California within the meaning of the applicable code sections. He argues that "in determining whether or not a foreign corporation is subject to service of process in this State, the test is not merely mechanical or quantitative (International Shoe Co. v. [State of] Washington, supra [326 U.S. 310, 66 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 95],)" and quotes from the recent case of Jeter v. Austin Trailer Equipment Co., 122 Cal.App. 2d 376, at page 388, 265 P.2d 130, at page 137, as follows:

"By way of recapitulation of the current state of the law under the evolving concept of the 'doing business' requirement, it is deducible from the cases that the essentials of due process are fully met, at least for the purposes of amenability to local process and jurisdiction, if a foreign corporation maintains substantial contacts with a state through a course of regularly-established and systematic business activity, as distinguished from casual, isolated, or insubstantial contacts or transactions. The court must be astute to weigh the facts of the individual case to determine whether the particular type of activity in, relation to, or nexus with, the forum is of such substance as will make it just and equitable to conclude that a corporation is 'doing business' in the sense required by the purpose at hand."

Respondent Moore also cites Sales Affiliates, Inc., v. Superior Court, 96 Cal.App. 2d 134, at page 136, 214 P.2d 541 at page 542, where the court said:

"* * * There is no need for us to indulge in a repetitious analysis of the authorities. Every factual situation where the question arises calls for a comparison of the business advantages derived from the methods employed by the corporation, with those it would enjoy if it conducted its business through its own offices or paid agents in the state. If the representation which petitioner maintained in the state gave it in a practical sense, and to a substantial degree, the benefits and advantages it would have enjoyed by operating through its own office or paid sales force, it was clearly doing business in the state so as to be amenable to civil process."

[1,2] As stated in Fielding v. Superior Court, 111 Cal.App.2d 490, at pages 494, 496, 244 P.2d 968, at page 970:

"* * * The essence of doing business is that the corporation is present within the state sufficiently to constitute it just and equitable that it be amenable to process within the state. Milbank v. Standard Motor Const. Co., 132 Cal. App. 67, 22 P.2d 271; Boote's Hatcheries [& Packing] Co. v. Superior Court, 91 Cal.App.2d 526, 528, 205 P.2d 31.

* * * * *

"In the final analysis it would seem that this is really not a question of the power of the state, but whether there is afforded to both parties a greater amount of justice by allowing suit in this state rather than requiring it elsewhere. See 20 C.J.S., Corporations, § 1918, p. 148; International Shoe Co. v. [State of] Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 66 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 95 [161 A.L.R. 1057]."

And as this court said in Martin Brothers Electric Co. v. Superior Court, 121 Cal. App.2d 790, at page 793, 264 P.2d 183, at page 185:

"Not 'any activity' of a foreign corporation in the state will make it amenable to process and there is no precise test that can be applied in all cases. It 'is the combination of local activities conducted by such foreign corporation—their manner, extent and character—which becomes determinative of the jurisdictional question.' West Pub. Co. v. Superior Court, 20 Cal.2d 720, 728, 128 P.2d 777, 781. In the language of Sales Affiliates, Inc., v. Superior Court, supra (96 Cal.App.2d 134, 214 P.2d 542), it must be shown that the corporation 'maintained in the state' a representation which 'gave it in a practical sense, and to a substantial degree, the benefits and advantages it would have enjoyed by operating through its own office or paid sales force'."

[3] In the instant case we have a situation where the Larson Company was not only an exclusive distributor, but, in so far as it assembled parts into a completed whole, it participated in the final stages of manufacture of Duraladd's products. Such products were purchased outright by the California concern and Duraladd had no financial interest whatever in them from the time of shipment. However, it is apparent that Duraladd maintained a continuous course of business with the California company and continued after the original installation of the assembly equipment to maintain an interest in seeing that the assembling was done properly; and, also, Duraladd was obviously interested in maintaining the volume of California sales and to that end furnished advertising material. In the agreement between petitioner and Larson Ladder Company it is provided, among other things, that "It is the intention of the parties listed in the within agreement that Mr. Dodd of the Corporation shall make annual visits to Larson for the purpose of technical consultation." Duraladd, at least tacitly, held out Larson Ladder Company as its California distributor or representative.

As stated by the Supreme Court of the United States in International Shoe Co. v. State of Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 319, 66 S.Ct. 154, 159, 90 L.Ed. 95, 103-104:

"It is evident that the criteria by which we mark the boundary line between those activities which justify the subjection of a corporation to suit, and those which do not, cannot be simply mechanical or quantitative. The test is not merely, as has sometimes been suggested, whether the activity, which the corporation has seen fit to procure through its agents in another state, is a little more or a little less.

* * * Whether due process is satisfied must depend rather upon the quality and nature of the activity in relation to the fair and orderly administration of the laws which it was the purpose of the due process clause to insure. * *

"But to the extent that a corporation exercises the privilege of conducting activities within a state, it enjoys the benefits and protection of the laws of that state. The exercise of that privilege may give rise to obligations; and, so far as those obligations arise out of or are connected with the activities within the state, a procedure which requires the corporation to respond to a suit brought to enforce them can, in most instances, hardly be said to be undue. * * *"

In view of the facts and circumstances of the instant case, as hereinbefore set forth, and bearing in mind the rules laid down in the authorities hereinbefore cited, we are satisfied that the activities of petitioner in this state bring it within the framework of the "doing business" concept for the purpose of assumption of jurisdiction and amenability to process, and that there is substantial evidence to support the order denying the motion to quash the service of summons.

The petition for a peremptory writ is denied; and the alternative writ heretofore issued is discharged.

Proceeding on motion to augment the record in an appeal from the judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Allen W. Ashburn, J. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that, where defendant moved to augment record by adding papers involved in issuance of writ of attachment, on ground that, when plaintiff invoked remedy of attachment, action was converted from equity to law and, as a consequence, plaintiff elected to proceed in law, record would be so augmented regardless of sufficiency of defendant's contention so that court would have entire record before it when it considered merits of case.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

Motion by defendant to augment the record.

Defendant contends that when plaintiff invoked the remedy of attachment the action was converted from equity to law, and that as a consequence plaintiff elected to proceed in law. Therefore, defendant moves to add to the record the several papers involved in the issuance of the writ of attachment.

Without passing upon the sufficiency of the contention, this Court is of the opinion that it will do no harm to have the entire record before it when it considers the merits of the case.

The motion is granted.

The PACIFIC TELEPHONE AND TELE-

No. 4883.

District Court of Appeal,
Fourth District, California.

July 13, 1955.

Action by city against telephone company to collect taxes levied under ordinance requiring telephone company to pay license tax of $400.00 per year plus additional tax of $2 per year for each pay telephone within city limits. The Superior Court, San Diego County, Joe L. Shell, J., entered judgment for city with respect to $400 per year license tax but declared that $2.00 per year tax for each pay telephone was unconstitutional and each party appealed from so much of the judgment as was adverse to them. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that since evidence supported finding that $400 license tax was at a higher rate and in a different manner and form than that levied on mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations it was unconstitutional and tax of $2.00 per year per pay telephone constituted a burden on interstate commerce.

Affirmed in part and reversed in part.

1. Taxation ⇨155

Constitutional provision forbidding the levying by political subdivision of a tax on telephone company at a rate higher or in form different from that imposed upon mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations refers to tax rate to be imposed by such political subdivision and not tax rate that might be imposed anywhere in the state. West's Ann.Const. art. 13, § 14.

2. Municipal Corporations ⇨957(1)

Constitutional provision respecting taxation of public utilities provides a limitation on power of municipalities to tax public utilities. West's Ann.Const. art. 13, § 14.

3. Licenses ⇨32(2)

In action by city against telephone company to collect taxes levied against telephone company under ordinance, evidence supported trial court's finding that license tax levied was at a higher rate and in a manner and form different from tax levied upon mercantile manufacturing and business corporations within meaning of constitutional provision prohibiting discriminatory taxation. West's Ann.Const. art. 13, § 14.

4. Licenses ⇨29

Where license tax levied by city against telephone company was at a higher rate and in a manner and form different from tax levied upon mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations, it was not necessary for telephone company to show that city did not have any reasonable basis for classifying it in a different category since discriminatory taxation is prohibited by Constitution. West's Ann.Const. art. 13, § 14.

5. Commerce ⇨69(5)

Where city levied against telephone company a license tax of $2 per year for each pay telephone within city limits and such telephones were used for both interstate and intrastate commerce, such license tax constituted an improper burden on interstate commerce.

6. Commerce ⇨69(5)

Fact that city ordinance levying license tax on telephone company at rate of $2 per year for each pay telephone within city which was used in both interstate and intrastate commerce, stated that tax did not include any business in interstate commerce, did not avoid effect of tax as being a burden on interstate commerce. MUSSELL, Justice.

This is an action brought by the city of Oceanside, a city of the sixth class, to collect from the defendant, hereinafter referred to as the "Telephone Company", municipal license taxes alleged to be due from the defendant for the first three quarters of the year 1953 pursuant to the terms of ordinance No. 741, as amended, of said city.

This ordinance provides for the levy of two license taxes on telephone companies (1) A tax of $400 a year (at the rate of $100 per quarter); and (2) A tax of $2 a year (50¢ per quarter) for each pay telephone located within the city. The telephone company refused to pay either of these taxes on the ground that both violate the provisions of Article XIII, section 14, of the Constitution of the State of California and refused to pay the special tax of $2 per year for each pay telephone for the further reason that such telephones are instrumentalities of interstate and foreign commerce and such a tax constitutes an unlawful burden upon interstate commerce in violation of Article I § 8, of the Constitution of the United States.

The trial court found that the tax of 50¢ a quarter ($2 a year) for each pay telephone located within the city of Oceanside would constitute a burden on interstate commerce, and further found:

"9. The business license tax of $100 a quarter ($400 a year) upon telephone companies provided for by section 29 of Ordinance No. 741 of The City of Oceanside is a higher rate than, and in a manner and form different from, the business license tax levied by The City of Oceanside under Ordinance No. 741, as amended, upon and collected from mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations doing business within the State of California, but the evidence fails to show that The City of Oceanside did not have any reasonable basis for classifying telephone companies for business license tax purposes in a different category from mercantile, manufacturing and other business corporations."

Judgment was rendered in favor of the city for $300. ($100 for each of the first three quarters of 1953.) The telephone company appeals from the judgment and the city appeals from "that part of the judgment" denying recovery of the tax levied on pay telephones.

The issues on the appeal by the telephone company relate to the application of section 14 of Article XIII of the State Constitution. The first paragraph of this section provides, among other things, that all property, other than franchises, owned by telegraph and telephone companies shall be assessed annually by the State Board of Equalization, at the actual value of such property. The second paragraph provides that all property so assessed by said board shall be subject to taxation to the same extent and in the same manner as other property, and the third paragraph is as follows:

"All companies herein mentioned and their franchises, other than insurance companies and their franchises, shall be taxed in the same manner and at the same rates as mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations and their franchises are taxed pursuant to Section 16 of this article; provided, that nothing herein shall be construed to release any company mentioned in this section from the payment of any amount agreed to be paid or required by law to be paid for any special privilege or franchise granted by any political subdivision or municipality of this State; provided further, that no excise, or income tax or any other form of tax or license charge shall be levied or assessed upon or collected from the companies, or any of them, mentioned in the first paragraph of this section, in any manner or form, different from, or at a higher rate than that imposed upon or collected from mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations doing business within this State."

Ordinance No. 741 of said city, as amended, provides for taxation of corporations doing business within the city in three forms: (1) A tax measured by gross receipts; (2) A tax measured at flat rates; and (3) A tax measured by the number of vehicles used within the city. The first form is applied to most mercantile businesses and it was stipulated that in 1953 most mercantile corporations were taxed by the city under this form of tax based upon their gross receipts in 1952. The remaining mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations doing business within the city were taxed pursuant to either the flat rate form of tax or the wheel tax and such taxes were applied to approximately 61 such mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations. The gas, electric and telegraph companies were taxed under the flat rate provision. In 1953 the city levied upon and collected from gas and electric corporations a business license tax of $100 a quarter and from a telegraph corporation a business license tax of $7 per quarter. In the same year the city sought to collect from the telephone company a business license tax of $400 a year, plus $2 a year for each pay telephone.

There was substantial evidence supporting the trial court's finding that the gross receipts of the telephone company from the intrastate business done within the city during the year 1952 were approximately $380,238. Applying the schedule of rates set forth in section 9 of ordinance 763, amending ordinance 741, we find that the tax on the defendant company would have amounted to an annual license fee of $185 instead of the $400 yearly tax sought to be collected.

The total annual license tax collected from all but two of the mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations, taxed under the flat rate provision of the ordinance, was less than the basic $400 a year tax that the ordinance purports to impose on telephone companies. The two exceptions noted were a trailer park and an amusement company. The trailer park was taxed at the rate of 50¢ per trailer space per quarter and apparently the amusement company was taxed in various amounts for games and rides. The total amount of the annual license tax collected by the city from these two corporations was less than the sum per year (approximately $754) which the city sought to collect from the telephone company. The highest total annual tax collected in 1953 under the wheel tax provisions of the ordinance was the sum of $176 and no corporation taxed under that provision of the ordinance paid a tax in 1953 equivalent in either rate or total amount to the basic $400 a year tax attempted to be imposed on the defendant corporation.

[1] The city apparently admits that the tax sought to be imposed on defendant was different from and at a rate higher than that imposed upon or collected from mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations within the city but contends that there was no finding that the license fee was at a higher rate either in a manner or form different from that imposed upon or collected from mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations doing business elsewhere in the state. There is no merit in this contention. It seems quite clear that the plain and unambiguous wording of the latter portion of paragraph three of section 14 of Article XIII of the State Constitution permits no such construction. Obviously the statute refers to taxes to be imposed by the city without regard to the rate charged by other municipalities in different parts of the state. The city's contention is that this section should read as follows:

"* * * no excise, or income tax or any other form of tax or license charge shall be levied or assessed upon or collected from the companies, or any of them, mentioned in the first paragraph of this section, in any manner or form, different from, or at a higher rate than that imposed upon or collected from [any] mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations doing business [anywhere] within this State."

To insert the italicized words in the section would defeat the purpose of the prohibition against discriminatory taxation and add a meaning not to be found in the clear wording of the section. We are not at liberty to add provisions to what is declared in definite language. People v. Campbell, 138 Cal. 11, 15, 70 P. 918.

[2] It is contended by the city that section 14 of Article XIII of the State Constitution does not provide any limitation whatsoever on the power of municipalities to license utilities. This contention is likewise without merit. In 1910 section 14, as amended, provided for a state gross receipts tax upon public utilities, which tax was "in lieu of all other taxes and licenses, State, county and municipal." This provision not only prohibited the various taxing authorities in this state from taxing the operative property of telephone companies and all other public utilities, but also prohibited them from imposing any form of license tax on such utilities. City and County of San Francisco v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co., 166 Cal. 244, 135 P. 971; Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Roberts, 168 Cal. 420, 143 P. 700. In 1933 section 14 was again amended and now provides as hereinbefore set forth. The first two paragraphs of this section prevent local taxing authorities from discriminating against public utilities in the taxation of their properties by providing that such property shall be assessed by the State Board of Equalization and when so assessed shall be subject to taxation "to the same extent and in the same manner as other property." The first clause of the third paragraph of section 14 prevents the state from taxing such utilities and their franchises in a different manner or at a different rate from mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations, and provides that such utilities shall be taxed by the state (pursuant to section 16 of Article XIII) "in the same manner and at the same rates as mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations." The last clause is substantially the same as the provisions contained in the 1910 provisions of section 14. It provides that nothing in section 14 should be construed to release any such utilities from the amounts they have agreed to pay or are required by law to pay for any special privilege or franchise granted by any political subdivision or municipality. The last clause in paragraph 3 of section 14 provides that "no excise, or income tax or any other form of tax or license charge shall be levied or assessed upon or collected from the companies, or any of them, mentioned in the first paragraph of this section, in any manner or form, different from, or at a higher rate than that imposed upon or collected from mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations doing business within this State." (Italics ours.) The phrase "No * * * tax or * * * charge" clearly indicates that the prohibition therein set forth is applicable to taxes imposed by all taxing authorities, including the city of Oceanside. When the entire section is read as a whole it is apparent that the section provides a limitation on the power of municipalities to tax public utilities, such as the defendant herein.

[3,4] While the trial court found that the license tax levied by the city against the telephone company was at a higher rate and in a manner and form different from the tax levied upon mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations doing business within the state, and this finding is supported by the evidence, the court further found that the telephone company had failed to show that the city of Oceanside did not have any reasonable basis for classifying telephone companies for business license tax purposes in a different category from mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations. It was not necessary for the telephone company to show that the city did not have any reasonable basis for classifying it in a different category from mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations since the city is prohibited by the provisions of section 14, Article XIII of the State Constitution from taxing telephone companies in a manner and form different from or at a higher rate than that imposed or collected from mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations doing business in the state.

[5] The city, in its appeal from that portion of the judgment which determined that it could not recover its special business license tax of $2 a year (50 cents a quarter) for each pay telephone within the city, contends that the said tax does not constitute a burden on interstate commerce within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States, Art. I, § 8, cl. 3. In this connection the trial court found that "14. A tax of 50 cents a quarter ($2 a year) for each pay telephone located within The City of Oceanside would constitute a burden on interstate commerce," and concluded that "4. In so far as Ordinance No. 741 of The City of Oceanside provides for a tax of 50 cents for each pay telephone located within said City, said ordinance violates Article I, section 8, clause 3, of the Constitution of the United States." This finding and conclusion are supported by the record. The defendant telephone company is a corporation engaged in rendering a local, state-wide and interstate communication service within the states of California, Oregon and Washington and the northern part of Idaho. By connecting with other telephone companies, it provides communication service throughout the United States and other parts of the world. As a part of this service it maintains pay telephones within the city of Oceanside which are used in making telephone calls from the city to telephones located outside of the state of California. These pay telephones may be connected with over 80 million telephones throughout the world. The use of such pay telephones for interstate commerce is substantial. From February 21, 1952, to January 20, 1954, there were 9,212 telephone calls from such pay stations to telephones outside of the state of California and 283 calls went to points outside of the United States. In this connection the trial court found:

"12. The same telephone instruments, the same signaling apparatus, the same wires, lands, buildings, central office equipment and operative organization of The Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company within The City of Oceanside are used in providing interstate toll telephone service from pay telephones located within said City as are used in providing intrastate toll telephone service from said pay telephones.

"13. It would not be practicable or feasible for The Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company to provide separate systems for intrastate and interstate telephone service from pay telephones within The City of Oceanside. The Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company could not discontinue intrastate telephone service from pay telephones in The City of Oceanside without also discontinuing interstate telephone service from the same telephones."

In this connection it is conceded by the city in its opening brief that "The intrastate business of the defendant in the City of Oceanside cannot be discontinued without discontinuing the interstate business also; nor can the defendant provide separate pay telephones for intrastate and interstate use."

In Cooney v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., 294 U.S. 384, 55 S.Ct. 477, 481, 79 L.Ed. 934, the telephone and telegraph company brought suit to restrain the enforcement of two acts of the legislature of Montana imposing annual license taxes. The acts prescribed a tax to be paid for each telephone instrument used in the conduct of the business of operating and maintaining telephone lines and furnishing telephone service in the state of Montana. Plaintiff was a Colorado corporation operating a state-wide telephone system in Montana. There, as here, the company furnished telephone services of a interstate and intrastate character and its system extended throughout several states. Its telephone instruments in Montana were an integral part of its system and were a part of a still greater system extending throughout the United States and to many foreign countries. All of its telephones were instrumentalities of interstate and foreign commerce and plaintiff could not discontinue its intrastate business and operations in Montana without virtually destroying and being compelled to abandon and withdraw from its interstate and foreign business. The court there held:

"There is no question that the state may require payment of an occupation tax from one engaged in both intrastate and interstate commerce. But a state cannot tax interstate commerce; it cannot lay a tax upon the business which constitutes such commerce or the privilege of engaging in it. And the fact that a portion of a business is intrastate and therefore taxable does not justify a tax either upon the interstate business or upon the whole business without discrimination. Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U.S. 640, 8 S.Ct. 1380, 32 L.Ed. 311. There are 'sufficient modes' in which the local business may be taxed without the imposition of a tax 'which covers the entire operations.' Id., page 647 of 127 U.S., 8 S.Ct. 1380, 1383. See Williams v. Talladega, 226 U.S. 404, 419, 33 S.Ct. 116, 57 L.Ed. 275. Where the tax is exacted from one doing both an interstate and intrastate business, it must appear that it is imposed solely on account of the latter; that the amount exacted is not increased because of the interstate business done; that one engaged exclusively in interstate commerce would not be subject to the tax; and that the one who is taxed could discontinue the intrastate business without also withdrawing from the interstate business. Sprout v. South Bend, Inc., 277 U.S. 163, 171, 48 S.Ct. 502, 72 L.Ed. 833, 62 A.L.R. 45; East Ohio Gas Co. v. Tax Commission, 283 U.S. 465, 470, 51 S.Ct. 499, 75 L.Ed. 1171."

The city contends that the Cooney case is distinguishable from the instant case in that the Montana license tax was levied for the privilege of doing joint interstate and intrastate business, whereas the Oceanside ordinance is so worded that the levy is for the privilege of doing intrastate business, Citing Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Tax Commission, 297 U.S. 403, 414, 56 S.Ct. 522, 525, 80 L.Ed. 760, where the court said: "Although the two branches of the business of the companies are inseparable, the tax is not laid inseparably upon both. Thus it is not open to the objection held fatal in Leloup v. Mobile, 127 U.S. 640, 8 S.Ct. 1380, 32 L.Ed. 311, and Cooney v. Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph Co., 294 U.S. 384, 55 S.Ct. 477, 79 L.Ed. 934." However, in the Pacific Telephone Company v. Tax Commission tax case the court distinguished the Cooney case on the ground that it involved a flat-rate tax measured by an instrumentality used in both interstate and intrastate commerce, whereas the tax involved in the Pacific Telephone & Tel. Company v. Tax Commission case was measured solely by gross receipts from intrastate (as distinguished from interstate) business and held that a tax on the privilege of engaging in intrastate business measured solely by gross receipts from such intrastate business would not necessarily burden interstate commerce.

[6] The fact that the city ordinance here involved states that the special tax measured by pay telephones does not include any business done to and from points without the state of California and that no license levied by the city shall be presumed to apply to interstate commerce does not avoid the effect of the tax. In the instant case, as in the Cooney case, the tax, being indivisible and indiscriminate in its application, necessarily burdens interstate commerce. It is not laid on revenue derived from local service as distinguished from interstate service, and is not imposed with respect either to the nature of the revenue, to the character of the service, or to the manner in which charges for the service are fixed.

In the recent case of Michigan-Wisconsin Pipe Line Co. v. Calvert, 1954, 347 U.S. 157, 166, 74 S.Ct. 396, 401, 98 L.Ed. 583 the court held: "It is now well settled that a tax imposed on a local activity related to interstate commerce is valid if, and only if, the local activity is not such an integral part of the interstate process, the flow of commerce, that it cannot realistically be separated from it."

The record shows that the city's business license tax ordinance, by imposing the special tax on pay telephones, violates section 14 of Article XIII of the State Constitution in that the telephone company is required to pay two license taxes on its privilege of engaging in business in the city of Oceanside, while only one business tax is imposed on mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations.

The judgment rendered in favor of the city is reversed and that part of the judgment denying recovery of the tax levied on pay telephones is affirmed. Each party to pay its own costs on appeal.

v.

IRMA F. BRAZIL, Defendant and Appellant.
Civ. 8617.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

July 20, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 17, 1955.

Action by real estate broker to recover commission from vendor. From adverse judgment of Superior Court, Stanislaus County, B. C. Hawkins, J., vendor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held evidence sustained findings that, pursuant to exclusive listing contract providing that broker would be entitled to commission if vendor sold property within thirty days after expiration of term to any person with whom broker had negotiated for sale during term, broker negotiated with purchaser who subsequently purchased property within thirty days after expiration of broker's exclusive listing term and broker was therefore entitled to recover commission.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨931(1)

Although not all testimony in support of trial court's judgment was uncontradicted, reviewing court must assume truth of such testimony.

2. Brokers ⇨53, 55(1)

Where exclusive listing contract provided that broker would be entitled to commission if vendor sold property within thirty days after expiration of one month term to any person with whom broker had negotiated for sale during term, it was not necessary that broker be procuring cause of sale in order that he recover commission and fact that another broker was active in effecting sale did not prevent recovery.

3. Brokers ⇨88(3)

What would constitute "negotiation for sale" requirement in broker's exclusive listing contract providing for payment of commission to him if vendor sold property within thirty days after expiration of exclusive listing term to anyone with whom broker had negotiated for sale during term, was primarily question of fact for trial court.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Negotiation for Sale".

4. Brokers ⇨40

Parties to broker's contract are at liberty to make compensation of broker depend upon any lawful conditions they see fit to place therein.

5. Brokers ⇨86(1)

In action to recover broker's commission based on exclusive listing contract providing that broker would be entitled to commission if vendor sold property within thirty days after expiration of the term to any person with whom broker had negotiated for sale during term, evidence sustained finding that pursuant to contract broker negotiated with purchaser who subsequently purchased property within thirty days after expiration of broker's exclusive listing term.

6. Trial ⇨404(1)

Rule that findings of trial court must be construed liberally by reviewing court in support of judgment is peculiarly applicable in absence of request for more specific findings.

7. Trial ⇨392(1)

In action to recover broker's commission based on exclusive listing contract providing that broker would be entitled to commission if vendor sold property within thirty days after expiration of exclusive listing term to any person with whom broker had negotiated for sale during term, failure to specifically find that broker's negotiations for sale with purchaser occurred prior to termination of his exclusive listing was not error where there was evidence which would support such finding and vendor made no request for more specific findings.

George G. Murry, Gustine, for appellant.

Gilbert Moody, Turlock, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in the amount of $3,200 in an action to recover a real estate broker's commission.

The action was based upon a brokerage contract which gave to respondent, a licensed real estate broker, an exclusive right to sell real property during the period from June 16 to July 16, 1952. That contract contained the following provisions: "The appellant as owner of the property involved agreed to pay respondent 'the agreed commission upon the actual sales price if the above described property is sold or agreed to be sold to any person prior to the termination of such right, or if such property is sold or agreed to be sold within 30 days thereafter to any person with whom said Broker or his agent negotiated for its sale, prior to the expiration date hereof.'" Respondent's action was based upon the second alternative.

[1] There was substantial evidence of the following: A licensed real estate salesman employed by respondent held an interview with Horace C. Spencer, who later purchased the property, in the respondent's office. This occurred July 11, 1952. During that conference and for an hour or more the salesman discussed appellant's property with Spencer. In part he told Spencer that the property would be good clover ground, easily leveled, gave him the approximate slope of the lands, and stated the listing price of $225 per acre. During the interview he offered to show the property to Spencer, but the latter replied that he preferred to go alone, whereupon the salesman drew a diagram of the location of the property for Spencer so that he would be able to find it. Three days later the salesman telephoned Spencer who said he had looked at the property and wanted more information as to the legal description, the amount of water available for use on the property, and the amount of taxes and assessments thereon. The next day the salesman journeyed to Merced and obtained this information. He telephoned the information to Spencer and at that time gave him the name and address of appellant as owner. Spencer replied that he was then looking at another property and would let the salesman know when he decided one way or another. Within a week the salesman telephoned Spencer again and was informed that Spencer was still waiting to decide between appellant's property and another. Spencer was interested at the time in the purchase of a large piece of land, had known the property was for sale, and had seen it before his visit to respondent's office, but not as a prospective purchaser. About a week before Spencer purchased the property he went to the office of a second real estate broker, through whom he purchased the property after July 16, that is, after the expiration of respondent's exclusive agency but within 30 days thereafter. He purchased it at a lower price than the price quoted by respondent's salesman. It appears that after the expiration of respondent's listing the appellant had listed the property with the second broker. Not all of the above testimony was uncontradicted, but under the familiar rule we must, in support of the trial court's judgment, assume the truth thereof.

The trial court, after quoting the material provisions of the agreement, found that "pursuant to said written agreement, plaintiff by and through his salesman * * * negotiated with one Horace Spencer for the purchase of said real property"; that Spencer had purchased the property within 30 days after the expiration of respondent's exclusive listing, and as a conclusion of law from those findings declared that respondent was entitled to recover the agreed commission, that is, five per cent upon the actual sales price, amounting to the sum for which judgment was given.

[2-4] Appellant contends the finding that respondent negotiated with Spencer for the sale of the property is contrary to law and the evidence and that judgment must be reversed for failure to establish that respondent was the procuring or efficient cause of the sale to Spencer. With this we do not agree. Under the contract respondent was to be paid a commission in either of two events: (1) Consummation of a sale or an agreement therefor between June 16 and July 16, 1952; or (2) a sale within 30 days thereafter to any person with whom respondent had "negotiated for a sale" during that period. To collect a brokerage for a sale, respondent would, of course, have had to have been the procuring cause thereof, but to carry that requirement over into the second provision for payment of commission would be to rob the latter of any meaning not already contained within the former except as to the extended period. To recover under the second provision it was not necessary that respondent be the procuring cause of the sale to Spencer. Under the latter clause the fact that another broker was active in effecting the sale and inducing the purchaser to buy does not prevent respondent's recovery. Maze v. Gordon, 96 Cal. 61, 66-67, 30 P. 962; Kimmell v. Skelly, 130 Cal. 555, 560, 62 P. 1067; Mills v. Hunter, 103 Cal.App.2d 352, 357, 229 P.2d 456; Baumgartner v. Meek, 126 Cal.App.2d 505, 508, 272 P.2d 552. See also 27 A.L.R. 2d 1348, 1408 et seq. What would constitute in this case "negotiation for a sale" was primarily a question of fact for resolution by the trial court. Munson v. Furrer, 261 Wis. 634, 53 N.W.2d 697, 699. Obviously negotiation for a sale is something less than an actual sale. The parties to a broker's contract are at liberty to make the compensation of the broker depend upon any lawful conditions they see fit to place therein. The simple question is, what does the contract provide? Baumgartner v. Meek, supra, 126 Cal.App.2d at page 510, 272 P.2d at page 554, 555. In Munson v. Furrer, supra (also 12 C.J.S., Brokers, § 88, page 203) it was said [261 Wis. 634, 53 N.W.2d 699] that "negotiation", when used in a contract such as here before us, meant that the "efforts of the broker to interest a prospect must have proceeded to the point where the prospect would be considered a likely purchaser." "Ordinarily," said the court, "this would be a question of fact for determination by the jury."

[5] We think the trial court properly interpreted the contract and that the evidence presented before it amply sustains its conclusion that all of the conditions under which, by the contract, the owner was obligated to pay a commission to respondent based on the actual sales price of the property were present.

[6, 7] Appellant makes a further contention that the trial court's conclusions of law and judgment are not sustained by the findings of fact. They point out, and correctly, that for respondent to succeed in his action he had to prove that respondent's "negotiations for a sale" occurred prior to the termination of his exclusive listing. And they say that the court failed to specifically find that this contract requirement had been met. Findings must be construed liberally in support of the judgment. K. & M., Inc., v. Le Cuyer, 107 Cal.App.2d 710, 238 P.2d 28; Heifetz v. Bell, 101 Cal.App.2d 275, 225 P.2d 231. The rule is peculiarly applicable in the absence of a request for more specific findings. Appellant requested none. In view of the evidence which would support a specific finding that respondent negotiated with Spencer for a sale, during the period June 16 to July 16, the court's findings were sufficient.

Judgment affirmed.

Pedestrian's action against city for injuries arising from fall on allegedly defective sidewalk. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, J. T. B. Warne, J., entered judgment for city and pedestrian appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that where pedestrian's claim, required by statute to be filed with city, stated that defect in sidewalk was on the southeast corner of intersection though accident happened on southwest corner, and there was no showing that pedestrian intended to mislead city, the claim was in substantial compliance with statute.

Action for damages for personal injuries resulting from a fall allegedly caused by tripping on a defect in a public sidewalk. Plaintiff appeals from judgment in favor of defendant.

The amended complaint alleged that the accident occurred on July 27, 1952; that on September 18, 1952, plaintiff filed, with the clerk of the legislative body of defendant, "a verified written claim for damages specifying the name and address of the plaintiff claimant, the date and place of the accident, and the extent of the injuries and damages received"; that defendant negligently permitted a portion of a public sidewalk on the west side of Main Street at or near its intersecting point with 82nd Street to deteriorate and become "a dangerous, defective and broken hazard to persons using said sidewalk"; that "the area [portion of sidewalk] complained of" extended from a point about 18 inches east of the south corner of the north entrance (on Main Street) of the "Corner Market" on the southwest corner of the intersection of Main Street and 82nd Street to a point about 30 inches east of said south corner of said entrance; that said area was about 12 inches long, about 6 inches wide, and about 4 inches deep. The complaint was filed July 6, 1953.

A recital in the judgment is that counsel for the parties stipulated: "that the issue as to the legal sufficiency of the claim first be tried as a condition precedent to the maintenance and prosecution of said action before proof of damages be made"; and "that the claim filed in behalf of the plaintiff stated the location of the accident was on the sidewalk at the southeast corner of 82nd and Main Street"; and "that the accident actually occurred on the sidewalk at the southwest corner of 82nd and Main Street in the City of Los Angeles."

The question is whether the claim filed by plaintiff was legally sufficient with respect to specifying the place of the accident.

Section 53052 of the Government Code provides: "When it is claimed that a person has been injured * * * as a result of the dangerous or defective condition of public property, a verified written claim for damages shall be filed with the clerk or secretary of the legislative body of the local agency within ninety days after the accident occurred."

Section 53053 of the Code provides: "The claim shall specify the name and address of the claimant, the date and place of the accident, and the extent of the injuries or damages received."

There is no reporter's transcript herein. A copy of the claim is not attached to any of the pleadings. The claim is not before this court—it does not appear from the record that it was received in evidence or for identification.

Appellant argues that there was substantial compliance with the requirement of said Section 53053 that the claim specify the place of the accident; that there was no evidence of intent on the part of plaintiff to mislead the defendant, and that in the absence of anything indicating that defendant was misled the claim was legally sufficient.

In Perry v. City of San Diego, 80 Cal. App.2d 166, at page 169, 181 P.2d 98, at page 101, it was said: "From these authorities [cited above] it seems clear that California courts have taken a reasonably liberal view of the claim statutes and that where a reasonable attempt is made to comply with the law in good faith and no intent to mislead or conceal appears the claim will be upheld in the absence of anything indicating that the municipality has been misled, if the claim substantially conforms to the requirements of the statute." (The question in that case pertained to the sufficiency of the statement in the claim regarding negligence.)

In Silva v. County of Fresno, 63 Cal. App.2d 253, 146 P.2d 520, 521, the claim stated: "* * * 'the place of injury was on a public highway approximately four miles east of Dos Palos in the County of Fresno, State of California'" and "* * * the cause and manner of such injury and facts connected therewith are as follows: A dangerous and defective road in that there were no signs kept or maintained by said County of Fresno indicating that the public highway upon which this claimant was riding came to an abrupt end". It was held therein that there was a substantial compliance with the statute in describing the place of the accident. In that case the name or number of the highway was not stated in the claim and the place of the accident was not described with particularity. The reference therein to a highway that "came to an abrupt end" was not a reference to a "dead end" highway but it was a reference to a right-angle turn in a highway.

Respondent cites Hall v. City of Los Angeles, 19 Cal.2d 198, 120 P.2d 13, 15, wherein the claim stated that it was for "Personal injuries received from slipping on sidewalk which was covered with mud, leaves and debris, resulting in injury * * *." The claim therein did not state what city the sidewalk was in, but the complaint alleged that the accident occurred on the sidewalk at the corner of Union Drive and Sixth Street in Los Angeles. In that case the court, after referring to certain cases, stated, 19 Cal.2d at page 202, 120 P.2d at page 15, that those cases held "that a defect in the form of compliance is not fatal so long as there is substantial compliance with the essentials of the requirement. In the present case [the cited case], however, there is an entire failure on the part of the plaintiff to comply with one of the mandates of the statute. Substantial compliance cannot be predicated upon no compliance." In the Silva case, supra, in referring to the Hall case, supra, it was said further, 63 Cal.App.2d at page 257, 146 P.2d at page 521: "In that case [Hall case] it was held there was an entire failure to designate in the claim the place where the accident occurred. Considering the territorial extent of the city limits of the city of Los Angeles, such a description of a sidewalk as one being somewhere in the city limits of that city would be quite indefinite and uncertain. In the instant case, however, there was an endeavor to state the place of the accident and injury. The place where the accident occurred was on a country road, away from the inhabited portions of the valley, about four miles east of the small town of Dos Palos, and was a public highway which came to an abrupt end, where no signs were maintained by the county so indicating."

[1] In the present case respondent says that the erroneous designation of southeast corner instead of southwest corner was more misleading than no designation and made it impossible for the city to locate the defect "from the claim itself." It is to be noted that said statement is not a statement that the error made it impossible or difficult for the city to locate the defect;—the statement limited the asserted impossibility to locating the defect "from the claim itself." Respondent also asserts in effect that such an erroneous designation was more misleading than no designation, especially since sidewalks are ordinarily not kept in perfectly smooth condition and since minor defects, small holes, or slight irregularities do not constitute actionable defective conditions. As above stated, the "claim itself" (or a copy) is not before this court, and of course we cannot draw conclusions as to its sufficiency from a reading of it. Respondent in its brief, however, has volunteered information that "the claim referred to no other identifying feature except a 'hole,' and that no "other identification is given in the claim such as the size of the hole, the presence of some large object nearby, or the street number or name of the owner of the property in front of which the defect existed—such as existed in cases in which an error or inaccuracy in the description of the place was permitted." In view of the stipulation that the accident actually occurred at the southwest corner, and since there is no implication or any basis for an implication that the claimant acted in bad faith or intended to mislead by designating the place of the accident, it is apparent that the word "southeast" was inadvertently used in the claim instead of the word "southwest." This is not a case, such as the Hall case, where the designation of the place was so general and indefinite that there was no semblance of compliance with the statute. In the Hall case the cause of the fall was a removable substance on a sidewalk (mud and leaves), whereas in this case the cause was a hole in the sidewalk. It is to be assumed that the word "hole," used in the claim herein, meant a hole of some significance as an actionable defective condition, as opposed to a minor defect or small hole (mentioned by respondent) that obviously was of no significance as a basis for an action for damages. If there was no hole of any significance at the southeast corner, it should have been obvious to an investigator of the claim that the word "southeast" was inadvertently used.

[2] The record does not show whether a hole was at that corner, but in the absence of a record showing the condition of the sidewalk at the southeast corner, it will be assumed that public duty with respect to properly maintaining that corner had been performed and that there was no hole in that sidewalk. If the claim were considered by an investigator for respondent in the light of the principle of substantial compliance, rather than on the basis of strict and precise compliance, it is apparent that, under the circumstances here and without any appreciable inconvenience or effort, he would have ascertained that the hole on the southwest corner was the one which was intended to be referred to. Respondent cites cases wherein it is held that knowledge, on the part of a city of facts required to be specified in a claim, does not give rise to an estoppel to assert the defense of failure to comply with the statute. One of those cases is Ghiozzi v. City of South San Francisco, 72 Cal.App. 2d 472, 164 P.2d 902, wherein no written claim was filed. In that case defendant changed the course of creeks by building canals, and plaintiff's land was damaged by sand and water as a result of a flood. It was established therein that the city engineer knew the facts regarding the damage to plaintiff's land. It was held therein that, irrespective of such knowledge, it was necessary to file a claim. Another of those cited cases is Hall v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 19 Cal.2d 198, 120 P.2d 13, wherein as above stated the claim which was filed was so general and indefinite that it was no compliance at all with the statute. Also, in that case, it was stated that knowledge on the part of city officials of the facts required to be stated in the claim does not dispense with the filing of a proper claim. Those cases were not governed by the doctrine of substantial compliance—there was no compliance at all therein.

It appears that the claim in the present case complied more substantially with said sections of the Government Code than the claim in the case of Silva v. County of Fresno, supra, wherein the name or number of the highway was not stated and the place was referred to as being on a public highway approximately four miles east of Dos Palos in Fresno County; and it was also stated that the highway came to an abrupt end (referring to a right-angle turn in the highway). In the present case, the claim was a substantial compliance with said sections of the Government Code.

The judgment is reversed.

1. Criminal Law §998

Defendant's remedy with regard to his contentions, on motion to vacate judgment, that he did not have effective aid of counsel, that court did not honor his request for change of counsel, that judgment was pronounced against him though he had shown sufficient cause why it should not be pronounced, that he was not informed of his rights, that inherently improbable and perjurious testimony was used against him, that irrelevant facts were brought out by prosecution, that he was subjected to double jeopardy by two different statements of one alleged offense, that court failed to give customary instruction on introduction of alleged extrajudicial admissions, and that witnesses defendant had requested were not called, was by appeal.

2. Criminal Law §997(2)

Failure to appeal does not, as matter of law, justify resort to coram nobis.

3. Criminal Law §997(1)

Law with regard to coram nobis is well settled and its application is limited.

4. Criminal Law §998

On motion by accused to annul, vacate and set aside judgment, burden was upon him to produce convincing proof of facts which would constitute legal ground for setting aside the judgment.

5. Criminal Law §998

On motion by accused to annul, vacate and set aside judgment against him in criminal case, there was strong presumption that judgment was valid in all respects.

6. Criminal Law §998

On accused's motion to annul, vacate and set aside judgment against him in criminal case, his proof was insufficient to overcome presumption of validity of judgment, and he was entitled to no relief from appellate court.

7. Criminal Law §1028

Matters not presented to court below on motion to annul, vacate and set aside judgment in criminal case could not be considered on appeal.

William J. McNally, in pro. per., William Bronsten (appointed by Court), Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

Defendant was found guilty of grand theft by the jury. A motion for a new trial was argued and denied. Judgment was entered October 15, 1953. No appeal was taken from the judgment or order denying the motion for a new trial. The record reveals, as recited in respondent's brief, that, " * * * on or about April 23, 1954, the defendant filed with the Clerk of the Superior Court, a 'Motion for the trial records,' noticing it for hearing 'for the master calendar.' On May 17, 1954, McNally also filed with the court his 'Application for Permission of the Court to File Certain Amendments to Original, Pending Motion for Trial Records.' The motion for the trial records, as amended, came on for hearing and the same was denied on June 1, 1954. On June 9, 1954, McNally filed with the Clerk of the Superior Court a notice of appeal from the order of the court denying his motion for records. The record on appeal in that case was filed with this Honorable Court and assigned 2d Criminal No. 5241.

"On respondent's motion to dismiss noticed for September 14, 1954 the appeal (2d Crim. No. 5241) was ordered dismissed and the remittitur issued on or about the 14th of October, 1954, and was filed with the Clerk of the Superior Court October 18, 1954.

"Thereafter, and on or about October 19, 1954, there was filed with the Clerk of the Superior Court defendant McNally's 'Motion to Annul, Vacate and Set Aside Judgment and Conviction.'

"On November 22, 1954 the motion of the defendant to annul, vacate and set aside the judgment and conviction was denied. On November 30th, the notice of appeal was filed commencing the instant appeal."

Appellant appears in propria persona. It is argued that the motion to annul, vacate and set aside the judgment was filed commencing the instant appeal."

Appellant appears in propria persona. It is argued that the motion to annul, vacate and set aside the judgment was in the nature of coram nobis. It is contended by appellant:

1. That defendant did not have effective aid of counsel;

2. That judgment was pronounced against defendant although he claimed that he had shown sufficient cause why judgment should not be pronounced;

3. That defendant had requested the court for change of attorney and the court did not act upon his request;

4. That judgment was pronounced even though he was not represented by counsel of his choice;

5. That he was not informed of his rights;

6. That "inherently improbable and perjurious testimony" was used by the prosecution in presenting the case against him;

7. That irrelevant and immaterial facts were brought out by the prosecution;

8. That defendant was subjected to double jeopardy in that there were two different statements of the one alleged offense;

9. That the court failed to give a customary instruction on the introduction of alleged extra-judicial admissions;

10. That witnesses that defendant had requested were not called; and

11. "Further facts that defendant's court-appointed counsel may be able to present to this Court."

[1-6] That the court's order denying defendant's motion is supported by the record and the law there is no question. Obviously, defendant's remedy with regard to all of the above noted contentions, was by appeal. Failure to appeal does not, as a matter of law, justify resort to "coram nobis". The law with regard to coram nobis is well settled and its application is limited. It is unnecessary to cite and quote from the many decisions on this subject.

As argued by respondent, "Under the circumstances, the trial court had no alternative but to deny the motion to annul, vacate and set aside the judgment. In a case such as this, the burden is on the applicant for the relief to produce convincing proof of a fact which constitutes legal ground for setting aside the judgment. The presumption that the judgment is valid in all respects is strong. It is clear that the appellant failed in the trial court to overcome this strong presumption and that he is entitled to no relief from an appellate court. People v. Shorts, 32 Cal.2d 502, 508, 197 P.2d 330.

[7] "Of course, matters not presented to the court below (contention number 11) cannot be considered on appeal. People v. Bailey, 105 Cal.App.2d 150, 153, 232 P.2d 518."

The order is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,

Hearing Denied Sept. 21, 1955.

Action by guest for personal injuries sustained in intersectional automobile collision. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Jesse J. Frampton, J., granted defendant's motion for new trial after verdict and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that evidence was sufficient to support granting of motion for new trial.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error §1015(3)

An order granting new trial will be reversed only when it can be said as a matter of law there is no substantial evidence to support contrary judgment.

2. New Trial §70

In action by guest for injuries in intersectional automobile collision, substantial evidence relating to signal controlling traffic as defendant motorist entered intersection would support finding that defendant was not negligent so that there was no error in granting new trial motion for insufficiency of evidence to justify verdict for guest.

Louis A. Audet, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Wyman & Finell, William B. Rodiger, Beverly Hills, for respondent.

VALLEE, Justice.

Appeal by plaintiff from an order granting defendant's motion for a new trial after a jury verdict in her favor in an action for personal injuries sustained by her while riding as a guest in an automobile caused by a collision with an automobile driven by defendant. The motion was granted on two grounds: 1) insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict; and 2) error in law in an instruction as to the contributory negligence, if any, of plaintiff.

[1] The order of the trial court will be reversed only when it can be said as a matter of law there is no substantial evidence to support a contrary judgment. Gibson v. Stuck, 125 Cal.App.2d 340, 342, 270 P.2d 17.

The accident occurred at the intersection of Union Avenue and 12th Street in Los Angeles, on July 30, 1952, at approximately 6:00 p.m. The intersection was controlled by semaphore traffic signals installed at each of the four corners. The signals were set to allow a "Go" or "Stop" period of 27 seconds with a 3-second period when all four signals were "Stop" to allow traffic to clear and the signal to change. The signals located at the northwest and southeast corners controlled north- and south-bound traffic on Union Avenue. Those at the northeast and southwest corners controlled east- and west-bound traffic on 12th Street. At the time of the accident, 12th Street was a one-way, west-bound traffic lane. Both streets were approximately 40 feet wide.

Plaintiff was a guest passenger in an Oldsmobile sedan owned and driven by Mabel Allen Smith. Just before the collision, plaintiff and Mrs. Smith were traveling north on the curb side of Union; defendant was driving west on the north side of 12th in a Buick.

The front of the Buick struck the right side of the Oldsmobile. The point of impact was 10 feet west of the east curbline of Union Avenue and approximately 16 feet south of the north curb of 12th Street. The Oldsmobile was shoved in a northwesterly direction, striking a building, and came to rest after traveling 67 feet from the point of impact. The Buick was thrown out of control, turning in a clockwise manner so as to come to rest facing northeast against a telephone pole located at the northwest corner of the intersection. Before the impact, the Buick laid down 8 feet of skid marks. No skid marks were attributed to the Oldsmobile.

Plaintiff testified that she was sitting on the right-hand side of the front seat of the Oldsmobile; as she and Mrs. Smith approached the intersection the signal changed from "Go" to "Stop" and they stopped; they waited until the signal on the northwest corner turned to "Go" and "we started, and we got out, I don't remember how far, but I looked to the right and I looked to the left, * * * I didn't see any car from any direction"; "I don't believe I could see a block * * * there was a hedge or something there that I don't remember how far I could see down that [12th] street"; she could see over the hedge and could see the lanes of traffic coming from the east and going west; she looked "just for a split second" to her right; she didn't see any vehicle coming; at the time she looked "we had started out, we were going, * * * [w]e were moving."

A newsboy testified that as he was lying on his news box, facing skyward, on the northeast corner of the intersection, he "heard a screeching of brakes, and as I come up I could see the signals, and they were changing"; he saw the signal above him, the one on the northeast corner, change; he did not remember from, or to, what they were changing; a "split second" later he saw the impact.

Defendant testified that at the time of the accident he was traveling about 25 miles an hour; as he approached the intersection of Union and 12th, he could see at least two blocks ahead; there were no vehicles in front of him for a distance of several blocks; there was a house with a hedge on the southeast corner; as he came to the intersection, there was no cross-traffic going north or south on Union, nor did he at any time become aware of any traffic on Union; when he was about 200 feet from Union he noticed the signal on the northeast corner and it said "Go"; he kept his eye on the signal until he came to a point where he could no longer see it and then he watched another signal; when he was 8 or 10 feet from the intersection he saw the Oldsmobile which was already in the intersection; "[j]ust as I approached, and probably a split second or so before where these skid marks started, I noticed the plaintiff's car coming, and I jammed on my brakes, and there was the collision"; he noticed the other car when he was about 10 feet from where the skid marks started; the front of his car struck the right side of the Oldsmobile.

There was substantial evidence that would support a finding that defendant was not negligent. Defendant testified that when he was approximately 200 feet from Union the signal controlling west-bound traffic on 12th Street said "Go" and he proceeded. The newsboy testified he observed the signal on the northeast corner of the intersection, the signal controlling traffic for defendant, change after he heard the screeching of brakes. The time sequence of the traffic signals was such that if defendant's signal had changed from "Go" to "Stop," or vice versa, there necessarily would have to have been a 3-second interval after the change in which all the signals for both streets would have to have been "Stop." Both defendant and Mrs. Smith would have been required to stop for 3 seconds. The point of impact was approximately 16 feet south of the north curb of 12th Street or 24 feet north of the south curb. The Oldsmobile had traveled more than half way across the intersection before it was struck by defendant's Buick. After the impact the Oldsmobile was pushed in a northwesterly direction and continued 67 feet before it came to a stop after striking a building; the Buick was spun around so as to come to rest against a telephone pole on the northwest corner, facing northeast. The court might reasonably have inferred the physical facts were not consistent with the claim of plaintiff that the Oldsmobile entered the intersection after a complete stop and, believing the testimony of the newsboy, that defendant's version of the accident was more reasonable: that he entered the intersection when the signal for the west-bound traffic still said "Go" and the Oldsmobile moved across the intersection against the traffic signal. We cannot say as a matter of law there was no substantial evidence to support a verdict for defendant.

[2] Since the evidence was sufficient to support the granting of defendant's motion for a new trial, it is unnecessary to decide whether the order might also be sustained on the ground of error in law in the giving of an instruction on the subject of contributory negligence.

Hearing Denied Sept. 8, 1955.

Action by finance company for declaratory relief to determine its contractual rights with bank under financing agreement. From adverse judgment of Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Paul Nourse, J., bank appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that evidence established fact that when agreement was made the parties were competent, they were dealing with lawful subject matter, and made valid contract, and there was a meeting of the minds supported by consideration and that bank was bound by the agreement.

Affirmed.

1. Contracts ⇨99(3), 141(3)

In action by finance company for declaratory relief to determine its contractual rights with bank under financing agreement, evidence established fact that when agreement was made the parties were competent, they were dealing with lawful subject-matter.

2. Sales ⇨475

Where automobile finance company, to secure funds, assigned conditional sales contracts to bank under agreement whereby interest to be prepaid to bank on unpaid balance of conditional sales contracts was adjusted for two prior agreements and 7% interest was provided for present agreement, there was a meeting of minds supported by consideration and contract was valid.

3. Banks and Banking ⇨101

Alleged fact that reduction of prepaid interest from eight percent to seven percent to be paid to bank on unpaid balance of conditional sales contracts assigned to bank by finance company under financing agreement was ultra vires and contrary to banking laws and regulations did not necessarily make agreement void.

Pray & Price and Eric A. Rose, Long Beach, for appellant.

Walker & Horn, Long Beach, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

There is no dispute about the facts in this case.

Plaintiff corporation is in the business of financing purchases of motor vehicles, using conditional sales contracts. To secure funds for a part of its financing, plaintiff assigned conditional sales contracts to defendant bank on three occasions.

On the first occasion the bank agreed to pay plaintiff the total balance of the conditional sales contracts assigned to it, less 5 % to be placed in a reserve account for losses, and less 5 % per annum simple interest, prepaid to the bank.

On the second occasion the agreement was substantially the same, except that the bank was to receive 8 % prepaid interest, and plaintiff was to repurchase any of the contracts sixty days delinquent.

On the third occasion it was agreed, among other things: (a) that interest on the unpaid balance of the contracts assigned under the first transaction would be 7% instead of 5%; (b) that interest on the unpaid balance of the contracts under the second transaction would be 7% instead of 8%, and (c) that on this third transaction interest would be 7%.

Thereafter the bank repudiated the third agreement, and demanded interest at the rate of 8%, as provided in the second agreement.

Plaintiff brought this action in declaratory relief, to determine its rights.

The bank contended it was not bound by the third agreement for several reasons. The trial court found against this contention, and judgment followed for plaintiff. The bank appeals from the judgment.

In support of its appeal the bank argues: (1) That the third transaction attempts to modify an executed oral contract and a written contract by an oral contract without consideration. (2) That a debt due to the bank cannot be released by an officer thereof and such transaction is ultra vires and void. (3) That the material findings of fact are not supported by the evidence.

[1,2] The record establishes the fact that when the third agreement was made the parties were competent; they were dealing with a lawful subject-matter, and made a valid contract; and there was a meeting of the minds supported by consideration.

[3] Whether or not the reduction of interest in the third transaction was ultra vires and contrary to banking laws and regulations does not necessarily make the agreement void. Machado v. Bank of Italy, 67 Cal.App. 769, 228 P. 369.

Prosecution for forgery of endorsement. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clement D. Nye, J., entered judgment of conviction and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that evidence sustained conviction.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Forgery ⚡44(2)

Evidence sustained conviction of forgery of endorsement. Pen.Code, § 470.

2. Forgery ⚡4

The elements necessary to establish forgery of endorsement are (1) that the person whose name was alleged to have been forged was a real person, (2) that his name was signed to the check without his authority, and (3) that the check was cashed with intent to defraud. Pen.Code, § 470.

3. Criminal Law ⚡406(1)

In prosecution for forgery of endorsement, where defendant's pretrial statements covered his and another's activities in taking check out of mailbox, writing in name of payee and in accomplice's cashing of check, but did not contain a statement that by his actions he intended to defraud, such pretrial statements constituted admissions rather than confessions and were admissible. Pen.Code, § 470.

4. Forgery ⚡35

In prosecution for forgery of endorsement, evidence was sufficient to show that defendant wrongfully forged payee's name to check without authority and warranted trial court in inferring from facts and circumstances that defendant intended to defraud some one. Pen.Code, § 470.

5. Forgery ⚡44(1)

In prosecution for forgery of endorsement, the signing of the name of another as endorser of a check without authority is conclusive evidence of the signer's intent to prejudice or damage payee. Pen.Code, § 470.

John H. Marshall, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., James D. Loebl, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

In an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County the above defendants were jointly charged with the crime of forgery of endorsement, Penal Code, § 470.

Following the entry of pleas of not guilty and waiver of trial by jury, the case of the People was by stipulation submitted on the transcript of the testimony adduced at the preliminary examination. Defendant Epperson testified as a witness in his own behalf. Thereafter, the court adjudged each defendant guilty of the crime charged in the information. Defendant Epperson was sentenced to imprisonment in the Los Angeles County Jail for the term of one year. From the judgment of conviction he prosecutes this appeal.

Concerning the factual background surrounding this prosecution the record reflects that the above named defendants took a check from a mailbox at 905 East 40th Place in the City of Los Angeles. The check was drawn on the Bank of America payable to Robert A. Tracy in the amount of $17.29 on the Disability Insurance Account of the Department of Employment of California. At the time of the preliminary hearing and the trial, the check bore the endorsement of Robert Tracy and subendorsement of Frederick Bryant.

G. W. Smith, a police officer of the City of Los Angeles, assigned to the forgery division, was the arresting officer in the case. On July 28, 1954, he had a conversation with defendant Epperson in which the latter stated that he signed the name Robert Tracy and used a pawn ticket which had been supplied by his co-defendant Bryant in attempting to duplicate as closely as possible the true signature of Robert Tracy. In a subsequent conversation, in the presence of Epperson, defendant Bryant admitted that he took the check into a Safeway store and cashed it in the presence of Epperson. Bryant further admitted to Officer Smith that he was at first going to represent himself as Tracy, but then decided to sign his true name underneath the endorsement of Robert Tracy on the back of the check. Both men admitted that they had been waiting at the 40th Place address all day for the mailman to deliver the check.

Charles Hurd, a clerk for Safeway Stores at 4077 Avalon Boulevard, testified that he saw the check in question in defendant Bryant's hand when Bryant came up to the cash register, on or about the 23rd of February, 1954. Hurd cashed the check at the request of Bryant and gave him in exchange a small amount of groceries and the rest of the $17.29 in cash. At the time Hurd cashed the check the signature Robert Tracy and the signature Frederick Bryant were on it. Neither signature was written in Hurd's presence.

Robert A. Tracy of 3514 South Central Avenue, Los Angeles, testified that he previously lived at 905 East 40th Place and was entitled to disability insurance payments from the State of California. Tracy was entitled to receive two disability insurance checks in February of 1954, but he received only one. Examining the check in question, Tracy denied that he ever gave anyone permission to sign his name to the check. He further denied that either of the endorsements on the back of the check were in his handwriting.

Defendant Sammy Epperson testified in his own behalf. He denied signing someone else's name on the back of the check in question, or being present when it was so signed. Epperson denied telling Officer Smith that he had forged Tracy's name to the check. He did say, however, that he told Smith that he received no money at all from the proceeds of the check. He further denied that he had any part in taking the check out of the mailbox.

[1, 2] We have narrated the evidence in detail because it furnishes a complete answer to appellant's contention that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment finding him guilty of forging the endorsement on Mr. Tracy's check. The evidence conclusively establishes that the person whose name was alleged to have been forged was a real person; that his name was signed to the check without his authority, and that the check was cashed with intent to defraud. Such proof constitutes the elements necessary to establish the crime charged, People v. Cullen, 99 Cal.App.2d 468, 472, 221 P.2d 1016.

[3] Appellant next contends that the judgment is against law in that the court erred in admitting, over his objection, an alleged confession made by appellant, without which incriminating testimony it is claimed there is no evidence to connect him with the commission of the crime charged. Appellant urges that the extra-judicial statements testified to by Officer Smith were inadmissible because no foundation was laid showing that they were freely and voluntarily made, and without promise of immunity.

There is merit in the People's argument that, in the case at bar, appellant's pretrial statements constituted admissions rather than confessions in that at no time did appellant admit an intent to defraud in connection with the passing of the check. His statements covered his and Bryant's activities in taking the check out of the mailbox, and writing in the name of Robert Tracy, and finally in Bryant's cashing the check at the Safeway store, but in none of his comments is there contained a statement that by his actions he intended to defraud. Though the element of felonious intent may be inferred from other evidence in the case it is totally absent from appellant's statements, and as pointed out above, this is a necessary ingredient of the crime of forgery. The distinction between admissions and confessions is thus stated in People v. Cryder, 90 Cal.App.2d 194, 203, 202 P.2d 765, 770: " * * * 'Admission' is not the synonym of 'confession.' In a criminal action an admission against interest relates to factual matters and does not convey the idea of a criminal intent on the part of him who admits, whereas a confession is an acknowledgment of the guilt of the crime charged. It is only with respect to the confession that the rule obtains requiring preliminary proof that it was voluntary. (Citing cases.)" Since the statements of appellant and those by defendant Bryant in the presence of the former did not amount to confessions as that term is known to the law, their admission into evidence was not error.

[4,5] Since there was sufficient evidence to show that appellant wrongfully forged Tracy's name to the check without authority, the trial court had the right reasonably to infer from the facts and circumstances established at the trial, that appellant intended to defraud someone. When a person without authority, signs the name of another as endorser of a check, that in itself is quite conclusive evidence that his intent was to prejudice or damage that person, People v. Collins, 60 Cal.App. 263, 268, 212 P. 701.

The judgment is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,

July 5, 1955.

Rehearing Denied July 29, 1955.

Hearing Denied Sept. 1, 1955.

Action by lessee for damages for breach of lease. Two members of lessor partnership cross-complained to recover amount of loan made to lessee. One cross-complainant died before trial of action and his executrix was substituted for him. The Superior Court, Fresno County, Strother P. Walton, J., gave judgment for lessee against lessor on complaint and judgment for cross-complainants on cross-complaint. Executrix appealed from order denying motion for judgment n. o. v. Lessor appealed from judgment against it. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that where lease provided that lessor agreed that two-thirds of all payments received under lease would be applied to discharge of any indebtedness secured by mortgage on any portion of demised premises, and parties were aware at time of making lease that there was a mortgage on portion of premises, lessor was not required by terms of lease to remove mortgage from premises except by making payments as provided in lease.

Judgment reversed and order denying motion for judgment n. o. v. reversed as to executrix.

1. Landlord and Tenant ⇨147

Where lease provided that two-thirds of all payments received under contract would be applied to discharge of any indebtedness secured by mortgage on portion of demised premises, and parties knew that there was mortgage on portion of premises leased at time of making lease, lessor was not required to remove mortgage from leased premises except by making payments provided for.

2. Evidence ⇨450(4)

In action by lessee for damages for breach of lease, court properly admitted parol evidence to aid in interpreting paragraphs in lease which provided that lessor agreed to execute necessary loan documents to consummate borrowing by lessee of money to complete development of land leased, and which provided that lessor agreed that two-thirds of all payments received under lease would be applied to discharge of any indebtedness secured by mortgage on premises leased.

3. Evidence ⇨455

If a contract is uncertain or ambiguous parol evidence is admissible to show what the parties meant by the uncertain or ambiguous phrase used in the written contract, but if the language of the instrument is clear and explicit, the intention of the parties must be ascertained from the writing alone, and unless a court can to a certainty and with sureness, by a mere reading of the document, determine which is the correct interpretation, extrinsic evidence becomes admissible as an aid to its interpretation.

4. Landlord and Tenant ⇨147

Where lessee's application for loan to improve leased land was refused by insurance company because it was a speculative type of venture, and not because of existence of mortgage made by lessor on premises, lessee's failure to secure loan from insurance company did not constitute breach of lease by lessor and lessor was not liable for any damages suffered by lessee's failure to obtain loan.

5. Landlord and Tenant ⇨48(1)

In action by lessee for damages for breach of lease, evidence was insufficient to support award of damages, for loss of money expended to improve land, and loss of profits and potential profits from crops.

MUSSELL, Justice.

This is an action for damages for breach of a lease agreement entered into on August 12, 1949, by and between plaintiff, William E. Crawford, and James DeLucas, as lessees, and Hub Ranch of Paradise Valley, a partnership, composed of Shigeru Uchiyama, C. E. Halliburton and R. R. Bray, the general partners, as lessor. A cross-complaint was filed against Crawford to recover a loan in the sum of $2,500 made to him by Halliburton and Uchiyama. Halliburton died before the trial of the action and Eva M. Halliburton, as executrix of his estate, was substituted, and said executrix filed an amended answer. A jury trial was had, resulting in a verdict for plaintiff and against defendants for the sum of $134,640, and in favor of the cross-complainants on their cross-complaint for the sum of $2,500. Defendants appeal from the judgment against them and defendant Eva Halliburton, as executrix, also appeals from the order denying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

The defendant Hub Ranch, a limited partnership, early in 1949 purchased approximately 41,400 acres of land in Humboldt County, Nevada, and 12 sections thereof are involved in this action. The said 12 sections were undeveloped and required clearing, leveling and developing of a water supply from underground sources before they could be farmed. R. R. Bray was the general manager of the Hub Ranch and was authorized to enter into partnership transactions and contracts not exceeding the sum of $1,000.

In May, 1949, plaintiff and James DeLucas visited the property, contacted Mr. Bray, and discussed with him the leasing of 12 sections of the ranch property. Bray informed them that he was general manager and that their primary negotiations would be with him, subject to the approval of the other partners. Crawford stated that they did not have the money to "go ahead and" complete a development the "size potentially had there" and asked Bray whether or not it would be possible "to do some outside financing". Bray then stated that there was a financing setup already established through an insurance company whereby it agreed to advance so much money on land as it was developed. Bray further stated that Mr. Herman, who represented the insurance company, had visited the land and would advance $10,000 a section at such time as the land was leveled and water was brought to the surface. Several weeks prior to the date of the lease here involved Bray and Crawford, at Bray's suggestion, went to Los Angeles to discuss the insurance loan with Mr. Herman. Crawford testified in this connection that one purpose of this discussion with Mr. Herman was to verify the insurance loan and "also to have the loan made out to me, with the land being put up as security"; that Herman asked him if he had enough money to carry out the development, to level the first section, and Crawford stated that he had with the exception of the well; that he, Crawford, stated he would level the section and put a well on it if the insurance company would grant $10,000 upon completion; that Herman said "Yes", he says, "The minute the land is level and the water is on top of the ground". He says, "You 'phone me long distance down here, and I'll come up there." He says, "You'll have a check in less than 30 days"; that Herman stated that he had already approved the loan of $10,000 per section and that "It was only necessary to change the application over into my name, and then send it back to the home office. And he said the home office rarely, if ever, turned down a loan once he had okayed it out here on the west coast."

Early in August, 1949, Crawford went to Fresno for the purpose of negotiating a lease with the Hub Ranch for 12 sections of land. Bray and Crawford went to the office of Mr. Hollins, an attorney, and the lease was prepared by him. This draft was signed by Bray, Crawford and DeLucas. It was then submitted to the remaining general partners of the Hub Ranch and a conference was held at the office of Mr. Snell, one of the attorneys for the defendants. The Hollins draft of the lease was not acceptable to the remaining partners of the Hub Ranch particularly by reason of the fact that it contained no reference to existing encumbrances on the property or the payment of the indebtedness then secured by a mortgage on the premises.

The lease here involved was then drawn up and executed by the Hub Ranch, Crawford and DeLucas. It provided generally as follows: Twelve sections of land were leased to plaintiff and James DeLucas for a period of five years, with an option to renew for an additional five years. The twelve sections were to be adjoining and were to be selected by the lessees within sixty days. The lessees were to clear and level said land, install wells, equipment and ditches for irrigation or drainage, one section the first year, two sections each and every year thereafter until all of said land had been developed as therein provided. The lessees agreed to devote all of the leased premises to the raising of grains or other suitable crops and as return for the said leased premises the lessor was to receive one-fifth of the entire crop of grain and other crops raised on the premises, except as to vegetables, of which it was to receive one-sixth. The lease also contained an option to purchase one or more sections of said land at $50 an acre, provided that one-half of the rent lessor received was to apply on the purchase price of the land upon which lessees exercised the option to purchase. The lease also contained a covenant against assignments without the written consent of the lessor, and contained the following two paragraphs:

"8. It is understood that the Lessees contemplate borrowing money for the purpose of clearing, leveling, irrigating, draining and water development, including wells, pumps and pipelines, and Lessor agrees to execute the necessary loan documents to consummate the borrowing of moneys to complete the foregoing development."

"21. Lessor agrees that two-thirds of all payments received under this contract will be applied to the discharge of any indebtedness now secured by mortgage on any portion of the demised premises. Lessor shall not, except with consent of Lessees, borrow money upon the security of the demised premises unless the money so borrowed is expended in improvement of the demised premises."

[1] It is the contention of the plaintiff that said paragraph 8 required the leased premises to be free and clear of all encumbrances to enable lessees to borrow money to develop the land and it is the contention of the defendants that the language of paragraph 8 was clear and unambiguous and merely required the lessor to subordinate his interest in the leased premises to any loan which the lessees might secure for the development of the property. Defendants further contend that said paragraph 21 clearly disclosed the existence of the then existing encumbrance on the property, to which encumbrance they agreed to apply two-thirds of the lease rentals in repayment.

It is undisputed that at the time of the execution of the lease there was a then existing deed of trust on the property, which is referred to throughout the trial as the Cordoza deed of trust, in the amount of $26,666.67. This deed of trust covered one of the sections plaintiff chose to develop first, namely, section 21.

The lessees moved their equipment upon the property in August and September, 1949, and commenced the development of section 21 and a portion of section 20. This development consisted chiefly of clearing off the sage brush, disking and land planing. The lessees then proceeded with the drilling of a well and entered into a contract with one R. L. Norris to drill it on section 21. The contract was executed on September 28, 1949. The well was completed by Mr. Norris, the driller, on or about October 30, 1949, and a pump installed. The well would pump 2,500 gallons per minute and was adequate to irrigate section 21 if it were properly prepared.

DeLucas testified that some time after the middle of August, 1949, he went up to the property and Crawford was then engaged in tearing down a fence; that he assisted Crawford until their equipment "was finally intact up there"; that they proceeded to clear all of section 21 and part of section 20; that they burned the brush, disced and land planed; that it was in the latter part of September, 1949, that they had finished the grading and leveling of section 21 and that they then did some work on section 20.

In November, 1949, James DeLucas assigned in writing his interest in the lease to plaintiff William E. Crawford.

Crawford testified that some time in March, 1950, he planted section 21 to barley and planted 92 acres of wheat on section 20; that by May 5, 1950, the grain was two or three inches out of the ground; that he secured the loan of a pump early in May but was unable to irrigate any appreciable portion of his land and the crop failed. He further testified that shortly before September 21, 1949, he discovered for the first time that section 21 was subject to the Cordoza trust deed in the sum of $26,666.67; that on September 21, 1949, he turned the lease over to H. A. Parichan, an attorney, who on that date wrote a letter to the Hub Ranch advising them that they had failed to comply with paragraph 8 of the lease and that he hoped it would not be necessary to enforce the agreement. On September 27, 1949, Crawford and DeLucas wrote to Mr. Halliburton stating, in effect, that they had employed Mr. Parichan to expedite the removal of the first trust deed on the property; that they could not wait "after the completion" of their work, and that everything must be in order so that they could collect the insurance company loan immediately.

A meeting of the Hub Ranch partners was held November 3, 1949, to discuss the removal of the Cordoza trust deed. At this meeting DeLucas told the group that they had reached "the end of their rope" and had to have the insurance loan in order to install a pump and start irrigating. While the partners did not admit they were under obligation to lift the Cordoza trust deed, they instructed their attorney, Mr. Snell, to prepare an agreement to see if that could be accomplished. On or about November 26, 1949, a number of persons, including Halliburton and Uchiyama, entered into an agreement as joint venturers to acquire the Cordoza trust deed and agreed to contribute the sum set opposite their respective names in said agreement. In pursuance of this agreement the Cordoza note and trust deed was, on November 30, 1949, assigned to one Oscar Crain as trustee for the joint contributors.

On March 10, 1950, Mr. Leighton, attorney for Mr. Norris, wrote to Mr. Snell enclosing a statement rendered by Norris to Crawford and stating that in addition to the amount shown therein Norris had agreed to furnish and install a pump which would complete the work on the well and have it ready for pumping; that the amount shown on the statement, plus the cost of the pump and its installation, was the basis of the amount which must be financed and was shown on the note enclosed to be secured by a deed of trust on section 21, to be executed for the benefit of Mr. Norris. It was further stated therein that Norris would enforce a lien on the land unless security was given him. Snell replied to this letter stating that section 21 was then subject to a trust deed and further stated, in effect, that he was unable to comply with the request of Mr. Norris.

It is evident from the voluminous record before us and the statements in respondent's brief that his principal contention is that the defendants breached the lease and caused his damages by failing to secure the release of the Cordoza deed of trust, and by refusing to execute a trust deed to Mr. Norris on section 21 for the cost of the well. However, paragraph 21 of the lease provided that two-thirds of all payments received under the contract would be applied to the discharge of any indebtedness then secured by mortgage on any portion of the property. The evidence shows without contradiction that this paragraph was not in the original draft of the lease prepared by Mr. Hollins and that it was added to the lease at the insistence of defendants. There was then only one encumbrance on the property of the Hub Ranch and that was the Cordoza trust deed. The defendants were unable to execute the lease without providing for its payment as set forth in said paragraph 21. Crawford knew that there was an encumbrance on the property and so testified. He claimed that he did not know section 21 was subject to a trust deed until some time in September, 1949. However, when he signed the lease he had not made his selection of the sections to be leased and could easily have selected an unencumbered section for his first development and could have ascertained the fact that the trust deed covered section 21. Under the terms of the lease defendants were not required to remove the Cordoza trust deed except as provided in paragraph 21 of the lease.

[2,3] The trial court ruled that parol evidence was admissible to aid in interpreting paragraphs 8 and 21 of the lease and this rule is supported by the holding in Schmidt v. Macco Construction Co., 119 Cal.App.2d 717, 730, 731, 260 P.2d 230, where the court held that if a contract is uncertain or ambiguous, parol evidence is admissible to show what the parties meant by the uncertain or ambiguous phrase used in the written contract; that if the language of the instrument is clear and explicit, the intention of the parties must be ascertained from the writing alone, and parol evidence is admissible only when the language used is doubtful, uncertain or ambiguous and only then in cases where doubt appears on the face of the contract; that unless a court can to a certainty and with sureness, by a mere reading of the document, determine which is the correct interpretation, extrinsic evidence becomes admissible as an aid to its interpretation.

[4] According to the testimony of DeLucas the interpretation placed upon the lease by him was as follows: "The lease was contingent on the moneys being available to us from the insurance company"; that he and Crawford were to borrow the money and that "My understanding was that the moneys would be available to us from the life insurance, or this insurance company, and that the lessors were willing to hypothecate their land to allow us to borrow the money. That was my understanding of it." Plaintiff Crawford testified in this connection that before the lease was executed there was a discussion in Mr. Snell's office between the general partners, in his presence, and that "During the conversation a discussion was had by all present that there were certain encumbrances on the property of the Hub Ranch. * * * Also that certain portions of the land were not completely owned by the Hub Ranch." He testified further that he could not secure financing; that "The insurance company, that was the understanding when we made the deal with them, that Hub put up the land as security." It is apparent that Crawford and DeLucas were relying on the consummation of a loan with the insurance company to finance the development of the leased property and not on any loan or loans to be obtained by the Hub Ranch. Crawford was informed by Bray that the Hub Ranch had made an application for a loan from the insurance company in the sum of $60,000 and he was clearly relying on the insurance company to make the loan to him. He discussed the loan with Mr. Herman and testified that Herman told him he would deliver a check to him within 30 days after water was "on top of the ground". However, he admitted that Herman told him it was necessary that the application be changed to his (Crawford's) name and sent back to the home office of the insurance company for approval. There is nothing in the record to indicate that Hub Ranch refused to execute any loan document in connection with this loan. Herman testified that he told Crawford that the loans had to be approved by the home office by the loan committee and it would take 10 days or 2 weeks after the application was submitted with his recommendation. He testified that he had not stated to Crawford that he would give him a check within 30 days after water was "on top of the ground" and the land leveled and stated that he sent the loan application into the home office on November 29, 1949; and that the loan was rejected by the committee in the following language:

"Generally, we consider the entire proposition to be of a speculative type, and we cannot quite bring ourselves to invest the company's money in this venture. Also, we are not so pressed for good investments that we need take any loans on which there is the slightest semblance of reluctance to approve, and the general feeling of the committee is that we can well afford not to make this loan. The application is therefore declined."

This language indicates that the loan was not rejected because of the existence of the Cordoza trust deed but because of the speculative type of the venture. Crawford was aware of the reasons for the rejection of the loan as shown by his letter to Bray dated December 9, 1949, in which he stated that the loan had been held up on the grounds that the organizational setup of the Hub Ranch prevented them from approving such a loan. It seems clear that Crawford's failure to secure the loan from the insurance company did not constitute a breach of the lease by the defendants and that the defendants were not liable for any damages which Crawford may have suffered by reason of his failure to obtain such a loan. Furthermore, the evidence indicates that Crawford had planted his crop prior to May 5, 1950; that it was then two or three inches out of the ground and that the well had been drilled and a pump installed.

[5] Appellants contend that the damages awarded were excessive and totally unsupported by the evidence. Plaintiff claimed special damages in the sum of $49,360 and general damages in the sum of $250,000 and the sum of $134,640 was awarded by the jury. In reference to his claimed special damages plaintiff testified that he had records to show that he had spent the sum of $21,394.02 in his performance of the lease. However, the records were not produced in court. It was shown that total deposits and withdrawals in the bank accounts on which he drew during the time he was developing and occupying the leased premises was the sum of $9,827.-65. He claimed special damages in the sum of $25,000 for the loss of his barley crop on section 21. He bases this amount on the statement in the loan application filed by the Hub Ranch with the insurance company which contained a statement that Cordoza had produced 13,000 sacks of barley on the property and that it was sold for $70 per ton. However, the application does not show what sections were farmed or the conditions under which the crop was produced. Mr. Cordoza was called as a witness and testified that he had raised a crop of barley on section 21 in 1953 but he did not testify as to the amount of grain produced as the trial court ruled out and excluded evidence of profits from future crops on the ground that it was too remote. Section 21 had not been farmed previous to the time Crawford commenced his operations. There was evidence in the record that the well on it would produce sufficient water to irrigate it if the land had been properly prepared; and that plaintiff was unable to irrigate more than a few acres. While plaintiff and DeLucas testified that the land would produce a minimum of 1½ tons of barley to the acre, with a net profit to them of $27.50 per acre, the profits thus calculated would amount to only $17,600 a section.

Respondent argues that the lessees under the lease had a right to expect and anticipate the acquisition of several thousand acres of valuable land under the rental purchase provisions of the lease. In this connection there is no evidence that plaintiff was or would have been able to exercise the option to purchase and an award of damages on the assumption that the option would have been exercised cannot be sustained. Caspary v. Moore, 21 Cal. App.2d 694, 699, 700, 70 P.2d 224. Since the trial court excluded all evidence of profits and potential profits from crops to be raised on the leased property after the first year, there was no evidence upon which the jury could award damages therefor. It is our conclusion that a large part of the damages awarded by the jury was not supported by the evidence and was improperly awarded.

The respondent's principal contention herein is that the defendants caused his damage by failing to remove the Cordoza trust deed so that he could obtain a loan; that by reason thereof he was unable to irrigate his crops and they therefore failed. As heretofore pointed out the defendants insisted that paragraph 21 be inserted in the lease to provide for the payment of the indebtedness secured by the trust deed and reference to this indebtedness was made in the loan application to the insurance company. The evidence further shows that on May 5, 1950, Crawford had planted his crop, the grain was out of the ground two or three inches and he admitted that it was not then suffering from lack of water. He also admitted that a pump was to be installed as soon as he needed it and the fact that it was obtainable whenever he asked for it is shown by Norris' testimony. Between May 5 and May 12, 1950, Crawford attempted to irrigate the crop but found that he could not irrigate more than a few acres. There was testimony that the land was not properly prepared for such irrigation but that the well produced an adequate supply of water. The evidence herein is insufficient to show that plaintiff suffered damages proximately caused by a breach of the lease by the defendants. Furthermore, the damages awarded were excessive.

In view of what we have here said, it is not necessary to pass upon the other points raised by appellants.

The judgment is reversed and the order denying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is reversed as to appellant Eva M. Halliburton, executrix of the estate of Clair Emory Halliburton, deceased.

v.

Robert S. VOGEL, also known as Robert S.
Nellsen, Defendant and Appellant.*

Cr. 1028.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

July 11, 1955.

Rehearing Denied July 25, 1955.

Hearing Granted Aug. 10, 1955.

Prosecution for bigamy. From an order of the Superior Court, San Diego County, John A. Hewicker, J., granting conditional probation, and from an order denying a new trial, the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that probation condition that defendant absolve his purported marriage with a certain woman within one year was improper when it appeared that no marriage ceremony had been performed, and if performed a proceeding to annul it by defendant might necessarily contain an admission of fact which would subject him to a further prosecution for bigamy.

Orders affirmed as modified.

Cal.Rep. 285-286 P.2d-23

* Opinion vacated 299 P.2d 850.

1. Bigamy ⇨7

In bigamy prosecution, burden is on prosecution to show that defendant's subsequent marriage has occurred during continuance of a prior marriage.

2. Bigamy ⇨7

In bigamy prosecution, where a former marriage is proved there is a rebuttable presumption of its validity.

3. Bigamy ⇨7

In bigamy prosecution instituted on complaint of second alleged wife, burden was upon defendant to show that first marriage had been dissolved. Pen.Code, § 282.

4. Criminal Law ⇨1173(2)

In prosecution for bigamy, defendant could not be heard to complain because court refused to instruct jury concerning burden of proof imposed upon him when there was no competent evidence that defendant's first marriage had been previously dissolved, court had instructed jury that burden of proof was on prosecution to show that first marriage was in force and effect when second one was consummated, and there was no instruction that any burden rested on defendant to prove anything. Pen.Code, §§ 281, 282, subd. 2.

5. Criminal Law ⇨1170(2)

In prosecution for bigamy, no prejudicial error resulted from exclusion of driver's license obtained by first wife in her maiden name prior to second marriage by husband when evidence of that fact was before the jury.

6. Bigamy ⇨2, 11

In prosecution for bigamy, proffered testimony that first wife had lived with another man and that they had held themselves out as husband and wife and that wife had been admitted to a hospital as wife of other man, would not alone prove that marriage to defendant had been dissolved and even if defendant had known of those facts at time he remarried, proffered testimony would not be a defense, even if true. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1963.

7. Bigamy ⇨2

Good faith or a mistaken belief regarding existence of a previous marriage does not relieve one of, and is not a good defense to, criminal responsibility for a bigamous marriage.

11. Bigamy Ⓒ1

Intent involved in charge of bigamy is more or less limited to intent to do act of contracting the bigamous marriage, and not intent to violate the law.

13. Criminal Law Ⓒ1186(4)

In prosecution for bigamy, wherein evidence of purported second marriage by defendant to his first wife in Catholic church was admitted as further evidence of defendant's civil marriage to his first wife, no prejudicial error resulted from use of that evidence to bolster first wife's testimony that she had not secured a divorce from defendant because of her religious belief. Buttermore & Lightner, by Wesley B. Buttermore, Jr., San Diego, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Chief Asst. Atty. Gen., John S. McInerny, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

A jury convicted defendant of the charge of bigamy. The claim is that he married one Stelma Hayes, under the name of Stelma Roberts, at a time when he already had a lawful wife living, i. e., Peggy Vogel, who married defendant in 1944, in New Orleans, Louisiana, while defendant was in the military service. Apparently some form of second marriage was performed in the Catholic church on October 17, 1947, between the same parties. After the first marriage defendant left for overseas. After six months absence he returned and lived with Peggy as her husband in both California and New Orleans. He reported again for active duty in 1950, in St. Louis, Missouri, and after his discharge he moved to California in 1952. Peggy did not come with him. Between 1950 and 1951, the parties were not in contact with one another, but Peggy received allotment checks from the Government as defendant's wife. In April, 1952, Peggy was injured, and defendant drove to St. Louis, picked her up, and took her to New Orleans and lived with her until August 2nd, when he left her again to come to California. He called her on the telephone in November, 1952, and on January 19, 1953, wrote a most pleading letter endeavoring to effect a reconciliation, and implying that they were still married. Defendant married Stelma Hayes on March 6, 1953, in San Diego. Defendant intimates that the letter written to his former wife was not delivered to her but was later found in defendant's belongings by Stelma. Defendant and Stelma lived together about two weeks and then she left him. On June 30th she obtained a divorce from him. She is the complaining witness in this case.

On February 15, 1954, defendant secured a "proxy marriage" to one Mildred Harrington, in Tijuana, Mexico, and gave as his name "Robert Neilsen". She testified that no ceremony was performed. Both parties knew he was not divorced from Stelma at the time, and Mildred considered this "more like an engagement".

As a defense, defendant admitted his marriages to Peggy and Stelma, and claimed Peggy had legally divorced him, but he could not say when or where this claimed divorce took place. He testified his marriage to Peggy was basically an unhappy one and that in 1950, Peggy told him she was going to secure a divorce from him but that she was going to do it in such a manner as to prevent him from knowing about it so he could not contest her right to the custody of the children. Peggy denied making such a statement. Defendant said he took Peggy to St. Louis in 1950, and went back into the service, and from that time until May, 1952, when he learned of her accident, he neither saw nor heard from her despite repeated efforts by him to communicate with her; that he went to St. Louis from San Diego, where he was working, and drove her to New Orleans, lived with her a few months, and then came back to California. He admitted he never secured a divorce from her, but claimed that Peggy was now married to one Heck, but that he could not prove this as to date or place. He admitted he was sending her the allotment as his lawful wife in 1950-51, although he thought she was obtaining a divorce at that time.

A motion for new trial was denied. Judgment was not pronounced. Defendant was granted probation for ten years upon certain conditions.

[1] The main contention raised on this appeal is that the trial court erred in refusing to admit certain evidence proffered by defendant pertaining to the marital status between Peggy and defendant at the time of defendant's second marriage. Peggy, while testifying for the prosecution, stated she had never been divorced from defendant, and related considerable testimony as bearing on this claim and to meet the burden imposed on the prosecution to show that defendant's second marriage took place "during perdurance of that status". People v. LaMarr, 20 Cal.2d 705, 709, 128 P.2d 345, 347; People v. O'Neal, 85 Cal.App.2d 226, 229, 192 P.2d 833; People v. Huntley, 93 Cal.App. 504, 506, 269 P. 750; Commonwealth v. McGrath, 140 Mass. 296, 297, 6 N.E. 515.

[2] It appears from the authorities that there are three requisites to the establishment of the offense: (1) The alleged prior marriage must have been in existence as a matter of law, or in legal existence. (2) The prior spouse must have been alive at the time of the alleged bigamous marriage. (3) The previous marriage must not have been dissolved or annulled prior to the defendant's remarriage. Certain disputable presumptions have been held sufficient to prove a fact in criminal proceedings. Freeman v. Superior Court, etc., 44 Cal.2d 533, 282 P.2d 857. Where a former marriage is proved in a bigamy case, there is a rebuttable presumption of its validity. Whether there is a presumption in a criminal case that the marriage status continues to exist thereafter, in view of the conflicting presumption of innocence, may be questioned. 8 Cal.Jur.2d p. 313, sec. 27. It is there said, at page 314:

"As a matter of abstract logic, the presumption of innocence would require the prosecution to make full proof of the existence of both marriages, including proof of the fact that the prior or legitimate marriage, relied upon in the charge, was not dissolved either by the death of one of the spouses or by an annulment or divorce prior to the defendant's remarriage. While this is the law with regard to the proof that the prior spouse was alive, it is established that in criminal bigamy cases the prosecution need not prove the negative fact that the prior or legitimate marriage was not judicially dissolved or annulled before the defendant's remarriage. Any such dissolution or annulment must be raised as an affirmative defense and proved by the defendant."

[3] The purpose of this rule is well stated in People v. Velasquez, 70 Cal.App. 362, 367, 233 P. 359; and People v. T. Wah Hing, 47 Cal.App. 327, 190 P. 662. Under the circumstances of this case, as between the second alleged wife and defendant, the burden was upon the defendant to show that the first marriage had been dissolved. Section 282 Penal Code; 8 Cal.Jur.2d p. 292, sec. 12; 8 Cal.Jur.2d p. 313-314, sec. 27.

[4] Defendant raises some question as to the extent of the burden of proof that rests upon a defendant under section 282 of the Penal Code, i. e., whether defendant was called upon to prove the required facts by a preponderance of the evidence or whether there is imposed upon him the duty of going forward with evidence of such facts sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt in the minds of the jury as to the existence of these facts, citing People v. Deloney, 41 Cal.2d 832, 264 P.2d 532, a murder case where section 1105 of the Penal Code was being interpreted. The court said there that as to the burden being on the defendant to show mitigation, it was not the burden of persuasion but merely a duty of going forward with evidence of mitigating circumstances. See, also, People v. Fitzgerald, 14 Cal.App.2d 180, 195, 58 P.2d 718. Defendant in the instant case offered an instruction to this effect which was refused. Objection is made thereto. The court did read sections 281 and 282 of the Penal Code and instructed the jury in the general language of CALJIC No. 560 (modified) to the effect that:

"To prove a charge of bigamy, the prosecution must prove these facts:

"1. That the accused was twice married and that the two marriages were to different persons.

"2. That the wife of the first marriage was alive when the second marriage took place.

"3. That the first marriage was still in force and effect when the second one was consummated. * *

"5. * * * that if the second marriage was contracted under an erroneous assumption or belief by the accused that the first marriage was void or had been annulled or dissolved * * * that fact alone is not a defense to the charge." That

"It is not a defense to a charge of bigamy that the defendant believed that the alleged former marriage had been annulled, dissolved, terminated by death or otherwise, if the evidence shows that contrary to his belief such a marriage was in force and effect at the time he entered into a later and bigamous marriage.

"The only intent required by law as an element of the crime of bigamy is an intent to enter into the two marriages, the second of which is bigamous under the definition of the crime of bigamy previously stated to you."

The court then instructed the jury that there had been no evidence produced showing that the first marriage had been dissolved as set forth in subdivision 2 of section 282 of the Penal Code, and that accordingly that subdivision did not apply.

As far as the record indicates, there is no evidence of its dissolution. The prosecution offered no instruction and none was given indicating that the burden of proof was upon the defendant to prove any of the exceptions indicated. A general instruction on reasonable doubt was given to the effect that the defendant is presumed to be innocent until proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, and if not he is entitled to acquittal. Since there was no competent evidence that defendant's first marriage had been previously dissolved, and since the trial judge, in effect, either rightfully or wrongfully, told the jury that the burden of proof was on the prosecution to show that the first marriage was in force and effect when the second one was consummated, and refrained from instructing the jury that any burden rested on the defendant to prove anything, the defendant cannot be heard to complain because the court refused to instruct the jury as indicated in defendant's proffered instruction in respect to the burden of proof imposed upon him to prove the exceptions. The exceptions were neither proved by him nor by the prosecution.

[5,6] The question then arises as to the correctness of the court's ruling on the proffered testimony which defendant claimed did bear on the question as to whether or not his first marriage had been dissolved. Two witnesses, husband and wife, who maintained an apartment house in St. Louis, were produced by defendant. The record shows that if they had been permitted to testify they would have said that between January and April, 1952, Peggy lived with one Earl Heck in one of their apartments as Mr. and Mrs. Heck, and they held themselves out as husband and wife, and that in April, Peggy had a severe automobile accident and was admitted to a hospital under the name of Mrs. Heck. Further proof was offered that Peggy obtained a driver's license in her maiden name in 1951. It is the contention of the defendant that this evidence, together with the allowable presumptions under section 1963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, showed that they were married and that accordingly it must be presumed that Peggy did not violate the law, and accordingly it must be presumed she secured a divorce from the defendant. It was also offered on the theory of impeachment, as being contradictory to Peggy's testimony that she never used any other name during this period except Peggy Vogel. As to the driver's license, Peggy testified, without objection, that she did obtain it under her maiden name. The court refused the license in evidence. The evidence of this fact was before the jury and no prejudicial error resulted from the ruling of the trial court.

[7] A more serious question arises as to the court's ruling with reference to the other proffered testimony. It does appear therefrom that Peggy did use another name in 1952, and held herself out as being Mrs. Heck. Of course this fact, even if admissible for impeachment purposes, would not, in and of itself, prove that her marriage to defendant had been dissolved. People v. Huntley, 93 Cal.App. 504, 269 P. 750; People v. Van Wie, 72 Cal.App.2d 227, 164 P.2d 290. There is no showing that defendant had any knowledge of or relied upon these facts at the time he remarried. The evidence conclusively shows that he left her and came to California in 1952. He knew where she was living with her children at that time. In fact when she was injured he returned to her, took her from the hospital to her parents' home in New Orleans, and they lived together as husband and wife for several months. Had defendant believed she was divorced at that time it would have been a most natural and opportune occasion to inquire into that fact. The letter he wrote thereafter, on January 19, 1953, which was properly received in evidence, clearly indicates he did not believe she was then divorced from him. Even had defendant known of these facts, in this jurisdiction, contrary to some jurisdictions, good faith or a mistaken belief regarding the existence of a previous marriage does not relieve one of, and is not a good defense to, criminal responsibility for a bigamous marriage. People v. Kelly, 32 Cal.App.2d 624, 90 P.2d 605; 27 Cal.Law Review 746; 8 Cal.Jur.2d 287, sec. 11. Our research indicates that the proffered evidence, even if true, would not be a defense to the charge. It was said in 10 C.J.S., Bigamy, § 7-e, page 368, under recognized defenses to such charges, that "It is no defense * * * that at the time a man contracted a second marriage his first wife had deserted him and gone to live with another man"; or "that the first wife of accused had also contracted a bigamous marriage with another man * * *", citing United States v. Gaoiran, 17 Philippine 404; and Tanner v. State, 116 Ark. 452, 173 S.W. 200. See also People v. Kelly, supra.

[8,9] Under this principle the trial court was justified in its ruling. Although the presumptions relied upon by defendant in the instant case were not discussed in those cases, it is a well known principle of law that presumptions or inferences may not be based on other presumptions or inferences to prove a fact. Walsh v. American Trust Company, 7 Cal.App.2d 654, 659, 47 P.2d 323; 21 West's California Digest, Evidence, ¶54, page 116. Impeachment on immaterial facts is not allowable. People v. Ansite, 110 Cal. App.2d 38, 40, 241 P.2d 1036; People v. Pollock, 31 Cal.App.2d 747, 89 P.2d 128.

[10] Defendant proposed an instruction to the effect that a divorce could be obtained by service by publication and without the party divorced ever knowing about it. It was marked "Refused as is". There is no competent evidence in the instant case that such a procedure was followed, and accordingly there was no requirement that such an abstract statement of the law be given. People v. Talbott, 65 Cal.App.2d 654, 151 P.2d 317; People v. Shannon, 28 Cal.App.2d 677, 680, 83 P.2d 302; Penal Code, § 1093, subd. 6.

[11,12] Defendant complains because the court received evidence, over objection, of some "Tijuana transaction" involving defendant and a Mrs. Harrington. The full particulars of this transaction are not reported. The trial judge carefully protected the witness's right to refuse to testify in reference to it, and she exercised that right. Apparently this evidence was admitted upon the theory that it bore on the intent of the defendant in relation to his claimed bigamous marriage. There is some authority for it. People v. Jacobs, 11 Cal.App.2d 1, 14, 52 P.2d 945; People v. Burke, 43 Cal.App.2d 316, 110 P.2d 685. However, the intent involved in a charge of bigamy in this state is more or less limited to the intent to do the act of contracting the bigamous marriage, and not the intent to violate the law. People v. Hartman, 130 Cal. 487, 62 P. 823; 8 Cal. Jur.2d 287, sec. 11. After the jury returned for further instructions, apparently the trial judge considered that this evidence had been erroneously admitted or that the jury was not adequately informed of the purpose for which it was received, and ordered the jury to disregard it. This admonition came at a late hour since counsel for the People, in his argument to the jury, dwelt somewhat on this evidence in his appraisal of defendant and his actions. Since this evidence did not bear on the real question involved, i.e., whether defendant's previous marriage had been legally dissolved, no prejudicial error could be claimed. People v. McCalla, 63 Cal. App. 783, 797, 220 P. 436.

[13] Complaint is made of the ruling of the trial court admitting, over objection, evidence of a purported second marriage by defendant to Peggy in the Catholic Church. It apparently was admitted, in the first instance in chief, as further evidence of defendant's first marriage to defendant, and no complaint could be made in this respect. However, before the trial was over, this evidence furnished ground for unauthorized argument to and by the jury as bolstering Peggy's testimony that she had not secured a divorce from defendant because of her religious belief. The trial court should have limited the argument to the purpose for which this evidence was admitted. However, it does not appear that prejudicial error resulted. Art. VI, § 4½ Const.

[14,15] The last objection is that the court inflicted arbitrary and unreasonable terms in granting defendant probation. The condition that he serve a portion of that period in the county jail and support his minor children and not leave the State of California is authorized by Section 1203.1 of the Penal Code. The condition that defendant "absolve" his purported marriage with Mildred Harrington within one year is not authorized by that section, particularly where it appears that no ceremony was performed, and if performed a proceeding to annul it by the defendant might necessarily contain an admission of fact which would subject him to a further prosecution for bigamy. 5th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. This condition should be and is stricken as one of the conditions of probation. The order denying a new trial was proper.

Orders affirmed as modified.

TORRANCE NATIONAL BANK, a national banking association, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

ENESCO FEDERAL CREDIT UNION, a cooperative association, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 20706.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

July 11, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 1, 1955.

Hearing Denied Sept. 8, 1955.

Action by bank to recover from credit union on account of alleged overdraft. Credit union cross-complained. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Philbrick McCoy, J., rendered judgment and denied defendant's motion to vacate judgment and enter a different judgment, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that where treasurer of credit union, who had no actual authority to use credit union's money for his own business and who had no ostensible authority to make overdrafts on credit union's account, presented for payment a draft on credit union's account in excess of amount therein, and bank paid without questioning his authority, bank was not permitted to keep amount of union's deposit which it had applied in part payment of check.

Judgment reversed with directions.

Donald Armstrong, Torrance, McLaughlin & Casey, Los Angeles, for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Defendant, Enesco Federal Credit Union, a corporation (hereinafter called Enesco), has appealed from a judgment for $12,898.51 in favor of Torrance National Bank (hereinafter called the Bank).

The Bank sought to recover $19,516.93, the amount by which Enesco's account with the Bank was allegedly overdrawn. Enesco cross-complained for $7,628, the amount of a check made to its order, endorsed "Pay to the order of Torrance National Bank for Deposit to the account of Enesco Federal Credit Union", for which the Bank, upon its presentation by Joseph Alden, Enesco's treasurer, paid him the cash. Enesco cross-complained also for $10,483.07, the amount of its deposit which was applied by the Bank toward the payment of a certain $30,000 check to the Bank, drawn on Enesco's account, signed by said Alden, and presented by him to the Bank in exchange for $30,000 cash. The amount of the judgment is the difference between $19,516.93, with interest thereon from April 3, 1953, and $7,628, with interest thereon from March 31, 1953.

No appeal having been taken by the Bank, we will not consider or further discuss the court's decision that the Bank "is indebted to defendant in the sum of $7,628, together with interest on said sum from March 31, 1953, at the rate of 7 percent per annum".

Enesco is a credit union composed of some of the employees of National Supply Company (hereinafter called National), an industrial plant located in the City of Torrance. Enesco's office was in a small building on National's premises. Early in 1949, Joseph Alden became the treasurer of Enesco. The act under which Enesco was incorporated provided that "The Treasurer shall be the general manager * * * shall have custody of all funds * * * shall sign all checks, drafts, notes, and other obligations of the credit union * * *." Title 12 U.S.C.A. § 1761. Enesco's by-laws, Title 12 U.S.C.A. § 1758, provide that the treasurer shall be the general manager under the control and direction of the Board of Directors.

Spray, Gould & Bowers, Robert E. Ford, Los Angeles, for appellant.

On September 26, 1950, Enesco's board of directors passed a resolution and furnished a copy thereof to the Bank authorizing Joseph Alden or his wife, as treasurer and assistant treasurer, respectively, "to sign all checks and drafts of this corporation * * *."

Without conflict, the evidence is that at the close of business on Thursday, April 2, 1953, Enesco had on deposit with the Bank the sum of $10,483.07; that after three o'clock that afternoon, while the Bank was closed, Alden left with the Bank's teller an unnumbered check, dated April 3, 1953, drawn on the account of Enesco for $30,000, payable to the Bank, and its teller delivered to Alden $30,000 in cash packed in his own valise; that a few minutes later, while Alden was on the way from the Bank to Enesco's office, he was robbed of the $30,000; that on April 4, 1953, the check was charged by the Bank to the account of Enesco, creating an overdraft of $19,516.93; that the $30,000 was intended by Alden to be used in his own business of cashing pay checks and charging therefor; that Alden had been expressly directed by Enesco's board of directors not to use any of the corporation's funds for cashing pay checks; that the Bank knew Alden intended to use the $30,000 for cashing pay checks, had made no inquiry as to his authority, but did not know that Alden had been directed not to use Enesco's money for that purpose; that the check had been left by Alden with the Bank's teller pursuant to his understanding with the Bank's vice president and the vice president's instructions to the teller, that the check would be held in the teller's cash drawer without entering it in the Bank's records to give Alden time to cash pay checks for National's employees, deposit them with the Bank in another account, and exchange his check on such other account for the Enesco check so held by the Bank.

The other facts will be stated in connection with the discussion of the questions to which they are pertinent.

The Bank has the right to assume that any "check, receipt, or order of withdrawal", drawn by an agent "in the authorized form or manner * * * was drawn for a purpose authorized by the depositor and within the scope of the authority conferred upon such person." Financial Code, § 953.

Appellant contends that the paper involved was not drawn "in the authorized form or manner" for three reasons: (1) It was unnumbered; (2) It was postdated; and (3) It's amount was in excess of the balance of Enesco's deposit with the Bank.

[1] Numbers on checks, like notations of the purpose for which checks are drawn, are memoranda for the convenience of the maker and the absence thereof does not "restrict the bank's right to charge the maker's account with the amount thereof". 9 C.J.S., Banks and Banking, § 332, page 677; Boston Ins. Co. v. Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Co., 80 Cal.App.2d 59, 67, 181 P.2d 84.

[2,3] An essential characteristic of a check is that it be payable on demand. Civil Code, § 3265a; 7 Am.Jur. 794, § 10; Minturn v. Fisher, 4 Cal. 35. However, a postdated check is within the phrase "checks and drafts" used in the resolution on the signature card furnished the Bank by Enesco. It is also an "order of withdrawal" authorizing the Bank to assume authority as provided in Financial Code, § 953. Therefore, under the facts and circumstances of the instant action, the postdating of the check has no significance.

[4] An overdraft is in legal effect a loan by the bank to its depositor. 8 Cal.Jur.2d 108; Faulkner v. Bank of Italy, 69 Cal.App. 370, 231 P. 380, 383; Popp v. Exchange Bank, 189 Cal. 296, 208 P. 113.

[5] "Where a principal authorizes an agent to collect money and draw and indorse checks, the law is that such authorization does not empower the agent to create an overdraft". Faulkner v. Bank of Italy, supra, 69 Cal.App. 370, 376, 231 P. 380.

Respondent urges that the holding in the Faulkner case has no application to the case at bar because in the Faulkner case the written agreement on the signature card of joint tenants "authorized either * * * to withdraw * * * the entire sum represented by the account * * *"; the agreement did not authorize "either party to overdraw the account"; and "there is nothing in the agreement by which either party guaranteed to pay any overdraft".

[6,7] Examining the signature card furnished the Bank by Enesco in the instant action, we find that Alden was authorized to sign "checks and drafts". Section 953 of the Financial Code gave the Bank the right to assume that "any check, receipt, or order of withdrawal" signed by Alden was within the scope of his authority. "The original and fundamental idea and purpose" of checks, drafts and orders of withdrawal is that "the drawer has funds or effects in the hands of the drawee", and orders drawee to pay a portion or all of such debt or deposit to payee. 7 Am.Jur. 790, § 6. Ordinarily, the bank is not obligated or expected to honor any check, draft or order of withdrawal for an amount greater than the deposit against which it is drawn. The resolution of Enesco, copy of which was furnished the Bank on its signature card, as was said in the Faulkner case, supra, was "at once an authorization and a limitation." It contains no language authorizing Alden to borrow from the Bank for the account of Enesco, and no agreement on the part of Enesco to repay to the Bank any overdraft created by Alden's check or draft. Nor, do we find any language in section 953 of the Financial Code which gives the Bank the right to assume that Alden was authorized to overdraw Enesco's account or to borrow money for its account.

Respondent urges that the instant action is further distinguished from the Faulkner case, supra, by the fact that "there was nothing in that case on which any ostensible agency could be predicated".

In the instant action, the court concluded "That Joseph Alden had ostensible authority from Enesco to withdraw the $30,000 which he withdrew on April 2, 1953." That conclusion is based upon seven pages of detailed findings, most of which we will not repeat here. There is no finding, and no evidence in the record, to the effect that Enesco knew of or should have suspected the existence of the oral understanding between Alden and the Bank's vice president, or the custom which they had developed, pursuant to which, on the day before each of National's paydays from October, 1950, to April, 1953, Alden had left an unnumbered, postdated check of Enesco with the Bank to be held without entry in its records and picked up by Alden the next day. There is no finding, and no evidence in the record, that Enesco's bank statement had ever shown an overdraft, except the one created on April 4, 1953, by the $30,000 check involved on this appeal.

As we have hereinbefore indicated, in the absence of facts creating an estoppel as against the Bank, if Enesco had had $30,000 on deposit with the Bank on April 3, 1953, the date of the check, or on April 4, 1953, the date of the presentation of the check by the Bank as payee for payment by the Bank as drawee, the Bank was expressly authorized, under the provisions of its signature card and of section 953 of the Financial Code, to charge said check against the account of Enesco; but, Alden's actual authority did not extend to the creation of an overdraft.

[8] "Ostensible authority is such as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe the agent to possess." Civ.Code, § 2317. In the field of contracts, "the doctrines of ostensible agency or agency by estoppel are not based upon the representations of the agent but upon the representations of the principal." Boren v. State Personnel Board, 37 Cal.2d 634, 643, 234 P. 2d 981, 986. It was found that the Bank in the instant action never had or sought any communication from Enesco, except through Alden; and that Enesco's only communication with the Bank was the signature card authorizing Alden and his wife, as its treasurer and assistant treasurer, to sign its checks; and further that the Bank "never at any time had any knowledge or notice of any limitations upon the right of Joseph Alden to use monies of the defendant which were on deposit with plaintiff in connection with the check cashing activities described in these findings of fact."

There is no finding and no evidence in the record that the Bank had any knowledge that Enesco ever had engaged in the business of cashing pay checks for National's employees. The Bank's vice president, testified as a witness for the Bank, as follows:

"Q. Did you know at any time prior to April 3rd of 1953, that Joseph Alden had any interest in any check cashing operation?

A. I knew he was check cashing. I didn't know what person or what it was.

"Q. Well, tell us what you did know about that. A. Well, that has to go back a long while when at one time some of the armored cars came down and were cashing checks at the National Supply. They ceased their operations and Mr. Alden came over and said— * * * I don't exactly know the exact date now. He said that unless he could make some arrangements to continue the check cashing business for the Federal Credit Union, they would have no way of operating. I don't know what he meant by it. That's the sum and substance—that's what he came over and told us.

* * * * *

"Q. Now you made arrangements with Joseph Alden where he could come in and obtain monies to cash checks with, didn't you? A. That's right.

"Q. And under those arrangements you told him that he could leave a check on the Credit Union with the girl at—the teller there—take the cash; and then when he returned the checks which he had cashed, that the check of the Credit Union would be returned to him? A. That's right."

The evidence is also without conflict and the court found that said practice of obtaining the money for Enesco's check to be so held without entry was commenced "at some time after the 17th day of August, 1950 and during the year of 1950". There is no finding as to the increasing amounts, but the evidence is without conflict that "he started out getting amounts of five thousand. And then they were increased to ten thousand, and so forth. And finally up to thirty thousand". The evidence also shows without conflict that for at least six months prior to April, 1953 the amount of said checks had been $30,000 and that each of said $30,000 checks would have overdrawn Enesco's account if it had been charged in the regular manner.

The evidence is also without conflict, and the court found that on the day after National's pay day Alden would bring to the Bank the checks he had cashed, deposit them —not in Enesco's account upon which he had drawn the $30,000 check—but in another account, which would be charged upon the return of the Enesco check.

The record is devoid of any showing that Enesco knew or had reason to suspect that its money or credit was being used in any way in Alden's check cashing business, or that Enesco was ever informed that the Bank was holding in its teller's cash drawer Enesco's check which, if presented for payment would create an overdraft.

There is no finding of any act or omission on the part of Enesco which could have led the Bank to erroneously assume that Alden had authority to overdraw the account of Enesco.

Respondent urges that "The fact that the check created an overdraft does not alter the position of the parties in any way; particularly where overdrafts were customary in connection with these transactions." None of the cases cited by appellant in this connection is determinative of the appeal now before this court. As stated by respondent, appellant's credit had been used in the same manner for a period of years; but not one of the unnumbered, postdated checks so drawn by Alden on Enesco's account and left in the Bank teller's cash drawer, which would have created an overdraft if charged to appellant's account, had ever appeared on any statement sent to Enesco. Enesco had no knowledge of such practice, and could not have acquiesced therein.

[9] In the case of Hill v. Citizens National Trust & Savings Bank, 9 Cal.2d 172, 69 P.2d 853, the plaintiff and appellant had purchased land on contract from a corporation, other than the Bank, had been told that the bank had title to the land and that seller was acting as the bank's agent. Appellants had made substantial payments on the purchase price to such assumed agent and had expended several thousand dollars in improving the lot, when the trust deed of the large tract of which said lot was a part was foreclosed. Up to the time of foreclosure, appellant had not communicated with the bank in any way. It was there held that the seller was neither the actual nor ostensible agent of the bank. At page 177, of 9 Cal.2d at page 856 of 69 P.2d, the court said: "A third person, such as appellant, is not compelled to deal with an agent, but if he does so, he must take the risk. He takes the risk not only of ascertaining whether the person with whom he is dealing is the agent, but also of ascertaining the scope of his powers. The rule is cogently stated in 1 Mechem on Agency, (2d Ed.) § 743, p. 527, as follows: "An assumption of authority to act as agent for another of itself challenges inquiry. Like a railroad crossing, it should be in itself a sign of danger and suggest the duty to 'stop, look and listen.' It is therefore declared to be a fundamental rule, never to be lost sight of and not easily to be overestimated, that persons dealing with an assumed agent, whether the assumed agency be a general or special one, are bound at their peril, if they would hold the principal, to ascertain not only the fact of the agency but the nature and extent of the authority, and in case either is controverted, the burden of proof is upon them to establish it." Ernst v. Searle, 218 Cal. 233, 240, 22 P.2d 715, 717."

In the Hill case, supra, the purchaser built upon one of the lots in the subdivision to which the defendant had title, and, although the Bank posted a notice of nonresponsibility, it had no actual knowledge of the deal made between the assumed agent and the purchaser, and was held not to have been negligent in failing to inquire or to warn the purchaser of the agent's lack of authority. In the instant action, although Enesco had authorized Alden to withdraw its entire deposit, it had no knowledge of the Bank's custom of loaning money to Alden each pay day. It had made no representation which might lead the Bank to believe Alden had power to overdraw its account, or to borrow money for it. The Bank dealt with Alden, himself. It therefore remained for the Bank, as in the ordinary case, to inquire into the extent of Alden's authority. Such inquiry would have prevented the loss which occurred.

[10] The question whether an agent is acting under an ostensible authority is one of fact. 2 Cal.Jur.2d 708. Even though the finding of ostensible agency in the instant action appears in the conclusions of law, it is nevertheless entitled to the weight usually given a finding of fact, and if there is any substantial evidence in the record to sustain it as a finding of the trial court the question on appeal can go no farther.

Respondent's brief calls our attention to no evidence in the record tending to prove any act or omission on the part of Enesco upon which the Bank could reasonably have based its belief that Alden had authority to overdraw Enesco's account. We have carefully examined the entire record on appeal and there is none.

True, the court found "That the monies thus obtained by Joseph Alden were mingled with monies of the defendant in the defendant's office and place of business and were not kept separate and apart from other monies maintained by the defendant in its office and place of business for the purpose of making loans to its members and repaying deposits made by its members * * *." The only evidence we have been able to find in the record in this regard is the following testimony of Joseph Alden:

"A. I used whatever funds were in the office for cashing whatever checks were presented. There was no distinction made as to 'this money is for this and this money is for that.' Q. But you would then replenish the cash fund in the union. If you use their money temporarily, you'd replenish it? A. At the end of the day when I balanced my cash, the change fund was set up to its original figure."

The testimony and finding concerning that practice fall far short of showing that Enesco received or retained or benefited by the use of the moneys so loaned by the Bank to Joseph Alden. And, from Alden's description of his handling of the money, it is clear that at the end of the day when he balanced his cash, no trace of such practice remained in Enesco's office or records. None of the $30,000 Alden received for the check involved in this appeal ever reached Enesco's office.

Enesco's account with the Bank was at all times herein mentioned carried in its true corporate name, "Enesco Federal Credit Union".

Large portions of the reporter's transcript, the findings, and the briefs on appeal concern the opening of a bank account in October, 1950 by Alden and his wife. At that time, the Aldens signed and delivered to the Bank the signature card here quoted:

"Joseph R. Alden, president or Lila M. Alden, treasurer, of this Association are hereby authorized to sign all checks and drafts of this Association drawn on Torrance National Bank, Torrance, California, and that each of them is hereby authorized to endorse for deposit checks and drafts payable to this association.

"I hereby certify that the foregoing is a correct copy of a resolution duly adopted by the board of directors of the (1500) Enesco Service Fund at a regular meeting of said board held October 10, 1950, and that said resolution has not since been repealed or amended.

"Witness my hand and seal of said association.

"Dated: October 10, 1950 (signed) Lila M. Alden, Secretary."

It was in this account that the payroll checks cashed by Alden were deposited and it was this account upon which the debit was made on each occasion when the Enesco check, held without entry in the teller's cash drawer, was returned to Alden.

The court found:

"That the statutes of the United States with respect to the formation and operation of federal credit unions describe such organizations as 'associations', and the signature card which Joseph Alden presented to plaintiff at the time that the account was opened in the name of Enesco Service Fund was in such form as to cause plaintiff to believe that Joseph Alden and Lila M. Alden were officers of such an association, and that the bank account opened under the name of 'Enesco Service Fund' was an auxiliary account of Enesco Federal Credit Union. That plaintiff did believe at all times up to a date after April 3, 1953, that Joseph Alden, in withdrawing monies for his check cashing operations, including the $30,000.00 described in the Findings of Fact herein, was acting for and in behalf of the defendant."

There is no finding, and not one iota of evidence, to the effect that Enesco ever heard of any bank account in the name of "Enesco Service Fund". The Bank did not so inform Enesco, or question Alden's authority to so use its name for his own personal account. Certainly, under these circumstances, Enesco cannot be held responsible for the Bank's erroneous belief. To know its depositors is one of the duties of the Bank—not of its depositors whose names happen to be similar.

[11] There is no substantial evidence in the record that Alden had either actual or ostensible authority to overdraw Enesco's account with the Bank. Further, the detailed findings of the trial court do not support its finding, in the conclusions of law, that Alden had such ostensible authority.

For the reasons above-stated, the judgment in favor of the Bank should be reversed.

A further reason for reversing the judgment is that, even if the evidence were otherwise sufficient to support a judgment based on Alden's ostensible authority to overdraw Enesco's account, the Bank was negligent in failing to heed the "stop, look and listen" warning when Alden requested that his checks upon Enesco's account be held without entry and returned to him.

[12] As said in Citizens State Bank, Donna, Tex. v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 5 Cir., 172 F.2d 950, 952: "It is true that a principal will ordinarily be held liable for the acts of an agent acting within the scope or apparent scope of his authority when these acts cause loss to innocent persons. It is equally true, though, that where one acting for another not in, but contrary to, the interest of his principal, causes a loss, the principal will not be held accountable for it to one who aided and abetted, was derelict in his own duty, negligent, in respect to the wrongdoing, or, by his silence when he should have spoken, prevented the principal from ascertaining it in time to prevent the loss."

The Bank had the right to charge to Enesco's account Alden's checks up to the amount of the deposit, and it did not have the right to so charge checks which would create an overdraft of Enesco's account. Did the Bank have the right to apply the amount of Enesco's deposit in part payment of the $30,000 check drawn by Alden in excess of any actual or ostensible authority given to him?

[13,14] "In paying out a deposit account of a corporation, the bank must be satisfied that the officer withdrawing the deposit is authorized to do so; if it pays without question, it takes the risk of being held liable for the amount irregularly paid away." 7 Am.Jur. 361. In the transaction which gave rise to this litigation, the Bank was not only the payee who gave Alden the cash, but also the drawee of the check. The Bank knew at the time the cash was paid to Alden that the check, if presented for payment, would create an overdraft of the account of Enesco. The Bank knew that Alden had no express authority to overdraw the account of Enesco, and no act or omission on the part of Enesco could reasonably have caused the Bank to believe that Alden had such authority. Consequently, both at the time the Bank as payee cashed the check, and at the time the Bank as drawee charged the check to the account of Enesco, the Bank knew Alden had exceeded his authority in drawing a check on the account of Enesco for $30,000. If the Bank had made any inquiry before paying out the cash, there would have been no loss. It therefore seems only fair that the Bank should not be permitted to keep the amount of Enesco's deposit which it applied in part payment of said check; and Enesco should not be held responsible for payment of the whole or any part of the unauthorized check under the circumstances shown by the record on this appeal.

"When an agent exceeds his authority, his principal is bound by his authorized acts so far only as they can be plainly separated from those which are unauthorized." Section 2333, Civil Code.

The transaction now being considered involved only one check. It was unauthorized. The fact that any check for an amount less than or up to the amount of the deposit would have been authorized does not alter the fact that the check involved in the instant action was unauthorized. It is apparent, therefore, that to permit the deposit to be applied in part payment of the check would not only do violence to the intent of the legislature expressed in Section 2333 of the Civil Code, but would violate recognized principles of equity and justice.

The appeal from the order denying defendant's and cross-complainant's motion to vacate judgment and enter a different judgment is dismissed.

The judgment for plaintiff is reversed and the court below is directed to enter a judgment in favor of defendant on its cross-complaint for $18,111.07 together with interest on $7,628 thereof from March 31, 1953, and interest upon $10,483.07 thereof from April 4, 1953.

v.

John DE RITA, Executor of Last Will and Testament of Angelo Pipolo, deceased,
Defendant and Appellant.

L. A. 23642.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

July 12, 1955.

Action against executor for recovery of money allegedly loaned to testator as evidenced by two checks, one of which had been delivered by plaintiff to testator before testator's marriage and the other after his marriage. From judgment rendered by Superior Court, Los Angeles County, James G. Whyte, J., without a jury, in favor of plaintiff, the executor appealed. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that testimony by widow that her husband placed last check on her desk at his place of business and that she endorsed it with his name and deposited it in his personal account did not involve a communication between husband and wife, and was properly admitted.

Judgment affirmed.

Opinion, 277 P.2d 515, vacated.

1. Witnesses ⇨190

In action against executor for recovery of money allegedly loaned to testator as evidenced by two checks, one of which had been delivered to testator before testator's marriage and one after his marriage, testimony by widow, that husband placed last check on her desk at his place of business and that she endorsed it with his name and deposited it in his personal account, did not involve a marital communication and was properly admitted. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, and subd. 1.

2. Witnesses ⇨222

Party seeking to suppress evidence as confidential communication has burden to show that such evidence is within terms of statute. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, and subd. 1.

3. Limitation of Actions ⇨25(3)

Action against executor for recovery of money allegedly loaned to testator by plaintiff, evidenced by two checks with the word "loan" written upon their faces and endorsed by testator's wife, who had full authority to make such endorsement on his behalf, was not an action founded on an oral agreement and was governed by four-year limitations' statute. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 337, 339, subd. 1.

4. New Trial ⇨151

In passing on a motion for new trial upon ground of newly discovered evidence, no abuse of discretion is shown from fact that trial court chose to decide motion in accordance with allegations of plaintiff's counter affidavits rather than affidavits submitted by defendant in support of his motion.

5. Affidavits ⇨18

Affidavits are competent evidence where authorized by statute or where they are not objected to on proper grounds by party against whom they are offered.

SCHAUER, Justice.

[1] Defendant executor appeals from a judgment rendered by the court without a jury, by which plaintiff was awarded recovery of money allegedly loaned to defendant's decedent, Angelo Pipolo, and evidenced by two checks. Plaintiff's claim therefor had been rejected by defendant executor. We have concluded that the trial court did not err in admitting certain testimony of decedent's surviving wife, claimed by defendant to be a privileged marital communication; that other claims of error are likewise without merit; and that the judgment should be affirmed.

Plaintiff alleged and the trial court found that on November 10, 1949, plaintiff loaned Pipolo $6,000 by delivering plain-tiff's personal check to Pipolo in that amount; on December 16, 1949, plaintiff loaned Pipolo another $6,000 by delivery of a second check. Meanwhile, on November 26, 1949, Pipolo and his surviving wife, Olga, intermarried. She endorsed the two checks with Pipolo's name and deposited them in the Pipolo bank account.

At the trial Mrs. Pipolo, as plaintiff's witness, testified that the decedent, Pipolo, had operated two prescription pharmacies; that she had been his employe for some seven or eight years prior to their marriage and as such had done, among other duties, "all of his book work. * * * Shortly after I went to work for him, I should say in 1942 or '43 * * * He said he couldn't be bothered with the trivial book work and he wanted me to handle all of his deposits, all of the transactions pertaining to the bank. * * * [H]e gave me permission to [endorse his name and said that] * * * Rather than to trouble him when he was busy, he wanted me to sign his name and make his deposits for him." Thereafter "I handled all of his banking for him, and all of his book work," including "signing his name * * * On all occasions * * * Particularly in endorsing his name on checks and making his deposits. * * * [He said] That if he wasn't present at any time, I was to sign his name * * * [to] Anything pertaining to the pharmacy or anything pertaining to his personal business. * * *" The witness and decedent first became engaged to be married in 1945, and in 1949 they commenced building a home. Decedent lacked money to complete the home, and in October or November, 1949, before the marriage, decedent in the presence of the witness asked plaintiff "if he could lend him $12,000 in order to complete the home, and Mr. Tanzola agreed. * * * He said he would lend it to him with the understanding that if he needed the money, that Mr. Pipolo would pay it back on demand, and Mr. Pipolo said he would then borrow the money on the completed home, if it became necessary. * * * Mr. Tanzola agreed to let him have it, when he needed it, which Mr. Pipolo explained would be very soon, in the next few weeks." Thereafter, on November 11 or 12, 1949, the first $6,000 check from plaintiff arrived in the mail at one of the pharmacies. The check, payable to decedent, bore the word "loan" on its face, and after endorsing decedent's name on the back, the witness deposited the check in decedent's checking account at the bank.

Subsequently, on November 26, 1949, the witness became Mrs. Pipolo. Over objection by defendant on the ground that matters thereafter occurring constituted privileged communications between husband and wife within the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the trial court permitted the witness to further testify as follows: "Mrs. Pipolo, did you see a check which I now show you, dated December 16, 1949, in the sum of $6000? A. I did. * * *

"What and where did you see this particular check dated December 16, 1949? A. My husband brought it to me. He had called on Mr. Tanzola and picked it up * * *

"Q. By Mr. Most [Plaintiff's attorney]: Let me caution you to forget what your husband did. Where did you first see this check? A. It was placed on my desk at the pharmacy.

"Q. Approximately when? A. I believe on the same date that his check was picked up * * *

"Q. Where did you see this * * * [check] immediately before it came into your possession? A. In the hands of my husband * * * At the pharmacy * * *

"Q. I show you a signature on the back, 'Angelo Pipolo', and ask you who wrote that signature? A. I did. * * *

"Q. What did you do with that check after signing it? A. I took it to the Citizens National Bank and deposited it into Mr. Pipolo's [personal] account."

Mrs. Pipolo further stated that the word "loan" also appeared on the face of this second check when she first saw it; the check was payable to Angelo Pipolo.

Deposit of two $6,000 items in the Pipolo checking account on approximately the dates of the two checks was confirmed by testimony of a bank employe; the employe also stated that on February 2, 1949, decedent "gave a power of attorney to Olga Metrovitsch," the witness who later became Mrs. Pipolo. The power of attorney, addressed to the bank and signed by decedent, bore a sample signature of Olga Metrovitsch and stated that "with reference to my checking account" she "is hereby authorized to sign and endorse checks, notes and drafts, and transact all business with your bank in my name, as my attorney." There was no evidence that the power of attorney was revoked during Mr. Pipolo's lifetime. However, following the marriage and on December 7, 1949, the name of the account was changed from that of Angelo Pipolo only, to "Angelo or Olga Pipolo."

Defendant's first contention on appeal is that the testimony of Mrs. Pipolo concerning the check of December 16 (i. e., as to events occurring after the marriage) was admitted in violation of the provision of subdivision 1 of section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure that neither husband nor wife can, "during the marriage or afterward, be, without the consent of the other, examined as to any communication made by one to the other during the marriage * * *." The view of the trial court as expressed in ruling upon defendant's objections to such testimony was that it was admissible so long as it did not involve a communication between husband and wife, and that the wife can testify to matters she knows of her own knowledge in the absence of communication. In this view the court was correct.

In discussing the attorney-client privilege, likewise found in section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure, this court observed in City & County of San Francisco v. Superior Court (1951), 37 Cal.2d 227, 234-235, 231 P.2d 26, 25 A.L.R.2d 1418, that "This privilege is strictly construed, since it suppresses relevant facts that may be necessary for a just decision. [Citations.] It cannot be invoked unless the client intended the communication to be confidential [citations] * * *"

"The privilege is given on grounds of public policy in the belief that the benefits derived therefrom justify the risk that unjust decisions may sometimes result from the suppression of relevant evidence * * *

"The privilege embraces not only oral or written statements but actions, signs, or other means of communicating information by a client to his attorney. [Citations.] '(A)lmost any act, done by the client in the sight of the attorney and during the consultation, may conceivably be done by the client as the subject of a communication, and the only question will be whether, in the circumstances of the case, it was intended to be done as such. The client, supposedly, may make a specimen of his handwriting for the attorney's information, or may exhibit an identifying scar, or may show a secret token. If any of these acts are done as part of a communication to the attorney, and if further the communication is intended to be confidential * * *, the privilege comes into play.' (8 Wigmore, supra, § 2306, p. 590.)"

[2] It is further established that the burden is upon the party seeking to suppress the evidence to show that it is within the terms of the statute. (Sharon v. Sharon (1889), 79 Cal. 633, 677, 22 P. 26, 131; see also Dwelly v. McReynolds (1936), 6 Cal.2d 128, 131, 56 P.2d 1232; Collette v. Sarrasin (1920), 184 Cal. 283, 288-289, 193 P. 571; Samish v. Superior Court (1938), 28 Cal.App.2d 685, 695, 83 P.2d 305.) Any contrary implications found in People v. Mullings (1890), 83 Cal. 138, 140, 23 P. 229, must be deemed overruled.

As pointed out by defendant himself it was declared in In re De Neef (1941), 42 Cal.App.2d 691, 693-694, 109 P.2d 741, that "The privilege relating to testimony disclosing confidential communications between husband and wife is like that stated in the other subdivisions of section 1881 relating to attorney and client, physician and patient, and a clergyman and one making a confession. * * *"

It has also been held that the fact of communicating, as distinguished from the substance thereof, does not fall within the privilege. Thus, in Poulson v. Stanley (1898), 122 Cal. 655, 658, 55 P. 605, the court declared that "The delivery of a deed is not a 'communication' within the meaning of" section 1881. A wife, however, may not testify as to her husband's intent or purpose in making a conveyance. (Emmons v. Barton (1895), 109 Cal. 662, 669, 42 P. 303; Haller v. Haller (1929), 102 Cal.App. 370, 374, 283 P. 94.) In Estate of Pusey (1919), 180 Cal. 368, 374, 181 P. 648, a wife's testimony as to conversations between herself and her husband before as well as after they were divorced was held admissible, with the comment by the court that "It is to be noted, however, that the point sought to be shown by the communications here in question was the act of communicating and not the nature or character of the communications themselves, the purpose of the inquiry being to show that the appellant Pusey knew the whereabouts of his wife. These circumstances present a proper case for the application of the rule stated in 4 Wigmore on Evidence, section 2337: 'The privilege has for its object the security from apprehension of disclosure, a security in consequence of which confidences will be freely given and not withheld. The protection therefore extends only to communications, i. e., utterances, not acts—the reasoning being analogous to that which establishes a similar limitation for communication between attorney and client * * *' We think, therefore, that the purpose of the inquiry being to show the act of communicating and not the disclosures involved in the communications, the testimony does not come within the inhibition of the statute." In People v. Peak (1944), 66 Cal.App.2d 894, 903, 153 P.2d 464, it was stated with respect to letters passing between a husband and wife that "The purpose of section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure is to hold intact the confidence which naturally arises from the relationship of husband and wife. It is not the act of communication but the substance thereof that is held legally inviolate."

In an annotation in 10 A.L.R.2d 1389, 1390 (see also 4 A.L.R.2d 835), it is stated that "The cases considering the privilege appear to be roughly divisible into two classes, (1) those which require that, in order to be protected by the privilege, the information must have been conveyed intentionally, by a spouse actively relying upon the marital confidence, and (2) those which extend the privilege to all information derived by either spouse as a result of the marriage relation, and which would not have been known in the absence of such relation. * * * [P. 1396] The rule excluding a spouse's testimony as to communications from the other spouse has generally been held to prohibit only testimony as to the substance of the matter communicated * * *

Thus, in Sampson v. Sampson (1916), 223 Mass. 451, 112 N.E. 84, it was held that the statutory exclusion of "private conversations" between husband and wife did not prevent the wife from testifying to the fact of such a conversation, as well as to the action which she took as a result of the conversation, and that the court might properly draw inferences from the testimony of the conversation and the action taken as a result thereof.

With reference to business transactions, it was held in Lurty's Curator v. Lurty (1907), 107 Va. 466, 59 S.E. 405, 407, that where the husband had acted for himself and his wife in selling their joint property, a communication from him to her if it could "in any proper sense" be regarded as privileged "comes within the exception 'that the rule of privilege does not apply to communications between husband and wife with regard to a business matter in which he is acting as her agent.' [Citations.]" The action was by the wife to recover her share of the sale proceeds from her deceased husband's estate, and the statute in question, which prohibited husband or wife, without the consent of the other, from being "examined in any case as to any communication made by the one to the other while married," provided no exception (such as is contained in the California statute) in case of a civil action by one against the other.

Applying the various rules laid down by the cases to the situation here presented, the conclusion is inescapable that defendant failed to sustain his burden of showing that the evidence to which he objected called for or entailed a disclosure of any marital communication, either confidential or otherwise. The only testimony of Mrs. Pipolo which comes even close to the ambit of the privilege was that decedent brought the December 16 check to her and placed it on her desk at the pharmacy, that immediately before it came into her possession she saw it in the hands of her husband, and that except for bank stamps the check as produced at the trial was in the same form as when she first saw it—i. e., it was payable to Pipolo and bore the word “loan” on its face. From the facts that for a number of years before marriage Mrs. Pipolo had “handled all of his banking for him,” and that before the marriage took place arrangements for the $12,000 loan had been made in Mrs. Pipolo’s presence and the first $6,000 check had been received by her, endorsed with Pipolo’s name and deposited in his bank account, it seems apparent that she was already fully cognizant of the circumstances of the transaction, that in handling the second as well as the first of the two checks she was acting as his employe or business assistant, and that no communication from husband to wife as such was intended or effected when Pipolo placed the second check on her desk. Her subsequent endorsement of it with his name and deposit of it in the Pipolo bank account, pursuant to customary practice initiated and authorized by power of attorney long before the marriage, likewise clearly did not constitute a marital communication. No error appears in the admission of the testimony of which defendant complains.

[3] Defendant next contends that plaintiff’s causes of action were founded on an oral agreement rather than on written instruments, and so were barred by the two-year limitations’ statute found in subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This contention is without merit. Defendant concedes that the evidence is without conflict. The action is based upon two written instruments, i. e., checks with the word “loan” written upon their faces and both endorsed in writing by one to whom the evidence establishes decedent had given full authority, both oral and written, to make such endorsements on his behalf. Consequently, as held by the trial court, the four-year limitations’ statute applies. (Code Civ.Proc., § 337; see Lawrence Barker, Inc. v. Briggs (1952), 39 Cal.2d 654, 661, 248 P.2d 897; O’Brien v. King (1917), 174 Cal. 769, 773, 164 P. 631; Tagus Ranch Co. v. Hughes (1944), 64 Cal.App.2d 128, 148 P.2d 79; Hester & Wise v. Chinn (Tex.Civ.App.1942), 162 S.W.2d 450, 451.) The facts that plaintiff in his original complaint alleged that he and decedent “entered into an oral agreement whereby” plaintiff agreed to loan $12,000 to decedent and that pursuant to such oral agreement plaintiff delivered the two $6,000 checks to decedent does not establish this action as one upon an oral rather than written obligation; the oral agreement was obviously merely preliminary to the delivery of the written checks upon which the action is based, and by which, as plaintiff alleges in his amended complaint, the loan was made.

[4,5] Finally, defendant urges that the trial court abused its discretion in denying his motion for a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence. Affidavits submitted by defendant in support of his motion were answered by counter affidavits filed by plaintiff, and no abuse of discretion is shown from the fact that the trial court chose to decide the motion in accordance with the allegations of plaintiff’s affidavits rather than those of defendant. Affidavits are competent evidence where authorized by statute or where they are not objected to on proper grounds by the party against whom they are offered (Falk v. Falk (1941), 48 Cal.App.2d 780, 789, 120 P.2d 724; Soares v. Ghisletta (1934), 1 Cal.App. 2d 402, 404, 36 P.2d 668; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Sunset, etc., Co. (1917), 176 Cal. 461, 466, 168 P. 1037; Williams v. Hawley (1904), 144 Cal. 97, 102, 77 P. 762.)

v.

SHELL OIL COMPANY, Incorporated, a corporation, Charles E. Neuhaus, et al., Defendants and Respondents.

L. A. 23543.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

July 1, 1955.

Action by employee of independent contractor against oil company to recover for personal injuries suffered in accident occurring while independent contractor was working on land leased by oil company. The Superior Court, Ventura County, Gordon L. Howden, J., granted judgment of nonsuit. Employee appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that where oil company had retained no control over work being performed at time of accident, and no oil company employees or foremen were present at time of accident, and oil company's employees had no knowledge that independent contractor was using equipment in a dangerous manner, oil company was not liable to employee for his injuries.

Judgment affirmed.

Opinion, 275 P.2d 922, vacated.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨927(3), 989

On appeal from judgment of nonsuit, Supreme Court viewed the evidence in light most favorable to plaintiff, and disregarded conflicts in evidence.

2. Master and Servant ⇨5

An "independent contractor" is one who enters service in the course of an independent employment or occupation, following his employer's desires only as to results of the work, and not as to means whereby it is to be accomplished.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Independent Contractor".

3. Master and Servant ⇨315

The general supervisory right of an employer to control work being performed by an independent contractor so as to insure satisfactory completion in accordance with terms of contract does not make employer of independent contractor liable for the latter's negligent acts in performing details of work.

4. Master and Servant ⇨318(1)

An employer of an independent contractor is not liable for injuries resulting from defective appliances used unless he has supplied them to independent contractor or has the privilege of selecting them, or the materials out of which they are made, or unless employer exercises active control over the men employed or operations of equipment used by independent contractor.

5. Master and Servant ⇨318(2)

Owner may retain a broad general power of supervision and control as to results of work so as to insure satisfactory performance by independent contractor, including the right to inspect, the right to make suggestions or recommendations as to details of the work, the right to prescribe alterations or deviations in work, without changing the relationship from that of owner and independent contractor or the duties arising from that relationship.

6. Master and Servant ⇨321

Fact that oil company after accident in which employee of oil company's independent contractor was injured, recommended use by independent contractor of safety device, and that oil company's foreman criticized method of piling casings by independent contractor, did not change relationship from that of owner and independent contractor.

7. Master and Servant ⇨321

Where oil company had no control of work being performed by independent contractor at time employee of independent contractor was injured, no employees or foremen of oil company were present at time of accident, and oil company's employees had no knowledge that equipment was being used by independent contractor in dangerous manner, oil company was not liable to employee for his injuries.

SPENCE, Justice.

[1] Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of nonsuit granted at his third trial, the two previous trials having resulted in jury verdicts for plaintiff followed by the granting of motions for new trial. Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiff and disregarding conflicts in accordance with the settled rules applicable in testing the propriety of nonsuits, Huffman v. Lindquist, 37 Cal.2d 465, 468, 234 P.2d 34, 29 A.L.R.2d 485; Palmquist v. Mercer, 43 Cal.2d 92, 95, 272 P.2d 26, it nevertheless appears that the law precludes plaintiff from recovering damages from defendants Shell Oil Company and Neuhaus.

Plaintiff was an employee of Owens, an independent contractor engaged by defendant Shell to recover certain casing and to abandon an oil well located upon a Shell lease near Ventura. Plaintiff was injured while working, with three other employees of Owens, on a well-pulling rig owned by Owens. The rig and the four-man crew were furnished by Owens pursuant to his contract with Shell. The rig had a cathead, which is a revolving spool, and a catline, which is a piece of manila rope about an inch and a half thick. The catline had a hook on one end, and the other end was wrapped around the cathead. The cathead and catline were used to pick up equipment and pipe joints, and lay them down around the rig. The cathead had no safety clamp or lock to stop the lowering or raising operation and leave a weight on the catline. Such safety clamp will keep the catline in place so that the revolving cathead need not hold the weight. If the revolving cathead has no safety clamp, the catline is likely to burn as a result of the friction, and the object attached to the catline will fall. That is what happened here. Steel elevators weighing approximately 1,200 pounds were suspended on the catline about 24 to 30 feet in the air at the top of the drill pipe. No one was stationed at the controls of the cathead. The friction of the revolving cathead, which was worn and grooved, caused the catline to burn and break, so that the suspended elevators fell on plaintiff, resulting in his serious injury. This procedure was contrary to that customarily followed by Owens' employees and constituted a dangerous and unusual practice. It was adopted at the time in question under the order of Owens' driller, who was in charge of the crew's work. While under its contract with Owens, Shell had the right to have a foreman on the job at all times, neither its general production foreman, defendant Neuhaus, nor any other of its employees was present when the accident happened.

Shortly prior to the accident Owens' employees had obtained from Shell's warehouse a new rope, which was installed as a catline on the rig. There was no provision in the contract indicating that Shell should provide such items for Owens' use on the job, and it was simply borrowed for the time as other pieces of equipment had been borrowed on previous occasions. Plaintiff makes no claim that this new rope or catline was in any way defective or contributed to the cause of the accident. But plaintiff does contend that Shell and its agent Neuhaus had and exercised control over the operations of Owens and knew, or should have known, of the absence of the safety clamp, and the worn and grooved condition of the cathead. On the other hand, defendants maintain that they did not actively interfere with or direct Owens in his independent operations, that they had no duty to provide safe equipment or appliances for the use of plaintiff, who was the employee of Owens, the independent contractor, and that the sole proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries was the negligence of Owens and Owens' employees.

[2-4] An independent contractor is one who renders service in the course of an independent employment or occupation, following his employer's desires only as to the results of the work, and not as to the means whereby it is to be accomplished. Moody v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 204 Cal. 668, 670, 269 P. 542, 60 A.L.R. 299; S. A. Gerrard Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 17 Cal.2d 411, 413, 110 P.2d 377. The general supervisory right to control the work so as to insure its satisfactory completion in accordance with the terms of the contract does not make the hirer of the independent contractor liable for the latter's negligent acts in performing the details of the work. Green v. Soule, 145 Cal. 96, 99-100, 78 P. 337. An owner is not liable for injuries resulting from defective appliances unless he has supplied them or has the privilege of selecting them or the materials out of which they are made, Hard v. Hollywood Turf Club, 112 Cal.App. 2d 263, 274-275, 246 P.2d 716, or unless he exercised active control over the men employed or the operations of the equipment used by the independent contractor. Willis v. San Bernardino Lbr. & Box Co., 82 Cal. App. 751, 756, 256 P. 224.

Under the terms of his independent contract, Owens was obligated to furnish the well-pulling rig equipment and he did furnish it; the work which was being performed at the time of the accident was the very work which Owens was required to perform under his contract; no severable portion of the work over which Shell had retained control was being performed; there were no Shell employees or foremen present at the time of the accident, and they had no knowledge that the equipment was being used in such unusual and dangerous manner as it was when plaintiff was injured; and Shell at no time, under the evidence, affirmatively assumed control, interfered with or actively directed any details of the work being performed by Owens' crew.

Plaintiff argues that Shell retained control over the methods and manner of performance of the work by Owens' crew because defendant Neuhaus, its general production foreman, testified that he was in charge of the abandonment of the oil well in question and had the equipment under his observation; that Shell always had a working production foreman on the job, though he never gave any "orders or directions to any man on the job" but dealt directly with Owens' foreman; that the Shell foreman and Owens received the same work sheets; that Shell had authority under its contract to stop Owens if it considered the work unsatisfactory in any respect; that after the accident Shell conducted an investigation and its committee recommended the use of a catline clamp to replace riding the rope on the cathead, which safety device was thereafter installed by Owens' employees. Plaintiff further cites this provision in the contract between Shell and Owens as to "Inspection": "Without in any manner affecting Contractor's duties and obligations hereunder, material and workmanship at all times shall be subject to the inspection of Shell's representative, who shall be the sole judge and final authority concerning materials furnished and work done hereunder." Finally, plaintiff cites his own testimony as to his personal observation of a visit made to Owens' well-pulling rig by a Shell foreman; that the latter criticized the way in which the casing had been piled, stating to Owens' driller, "You know better than that, how to stack that casing"; that the Shell foreman then procured a truck and moved the casing.

[5, 6] However, the owner may retain a broad general power of supervision and control as to the results of the work so as to insure satisfactory performance of the independent contract—including the right to inspect, Callan v. Bull, 113 Cal. 593, 598-599, 45 P. 1017, the right to stop the work, Fay v. German General Ben. Soc., 163 Cal. 118, 122, 124 P. 844, the right to make suggestions or recommendations as to details of the work, S. A. Gerrard Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, 17 Cal.2d 411, 414, 110 P.2d 377, the right to prescribe alterations or deviations in the work, Green v. Soule, supra, 145 Cal. 96, 99-100, 78 P. 337—without changing the relationship from that of owner and independent contractor or the duties arising from that relationship. Accordingly, Shell under the above-quoted contract provision had the right to inspect; its foreman was given the same work sheets as Owens so it could keep account of the general progress of the work; and it could stop Owens' work if satisfactory results were not being produced. Shell's investigation after the accident merely followed its customary policy in such circumstances, and its committee's report was an intercompany communication rather than directed to the independent contractor Owens. But regardless of these factors, Owens' subsequent installation of the recommended safety device on the well-pulling rig merely accorded with Shell's right to make suggestions without assuming to direct the manner of performing the work. Likewise, the incident of criticism voiced by one of Shell's foremen with respect to the piling of the casing illustrates the exercise of control as to only the results of the work; he merely objected to the stacking as such and moved the casing, but he did not undertake to direct Owens or his employees as to the details of the method to be employed in accomplishing such work. All of these rights retained by Shell in the exercise of its general supervisory control accord with its interest in the ultimate result of the work without undertaking to direct the "means whereby it is to be accomplished". S. A. Gerrard Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, 17 Cal.2d 411, 413, 110 P.2d 377, 378.

Various factual situations in which an owner may be liable for injuries to the employee of the independent contractor should be distinguished: (1) This is not a case where the employee of the independent contractor was injured by some condition of the owner's premises over which the owner remained in control, and where the owner's duties to the employee were those owing to a business invitee, Austin v. Riverside Portland Cement Co., 44 Cal.2d 225, 282 P.2d 69; La Malfa v. Piombo Bros., 70 Cal. App.2d 840, 161 P.2d 964; Bondini v. Amship Corp., 81 Cal.App.2d 751, 185 P.2d 94; Oldham v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 85 Cal.App.2d 214, 192 P.2d 516; (2) Nor is this a case where the owner furnished the equipment or was obligated by contract to do so, and the equipment proved to be defective, causing injury to the employee of the independent contractor, Moran v. Zenith Oil Co., 92 Cal.App.2d 236, 206 P.2d 679; Martin v. Food Machinery Corp., 100 Cal. App.2d 244, 223 P.2d 293; (3) Finally, this is not a case where the owner actively interfered with or arbitrarily assumed to direct the employees of the independent contractor as to the manner and method of performing the work. Majors v. Connor, 162 Cal. 131, 121 P. 371; see annotation: 44 A.L.R. 932. Likewise distinguishable is Snow v. Marian Realty Co., 212 Cal. 622, 299 P. 720, where the owner's liability for damages stemmed not from responsibility for the negligent acts of the independent contractors but from the allowance of work on its property constituting a nuisance.

Plaintiff particularly relies on Hargrave v. Acme Tool & Tester Co., 125 Cal.App.2d 34, 269 P.2d 913, to support his claim. However, there the employee of the independent contractor sustained injury under wholly different circumstances. A particular water-testing operation was being conducted separate and apart from the work to be performed under the independent contract; the owner was obligated both by contract and by custom to select the testing company; the owner retained the right to control and instruct as to the details in manner and method of conducting the separate testing operation; and the owner actively participated with the testing company in allowing the employee of the independent contractor to use defective appliances, which resulted in the injury. In such situation it was deemed a question of fact whether the owner by "failure to supply the proper plugs and safety chains and by permitting [the injured workman] to use the makeshift plugs [was] guilty of negligence which was the proximate cause of the accident." 125 Cal.App.2d at page 40, 269 P.2d at page 917. But none of these determinative factors is present here.

[7] We conclude that the record before us shows no basis for establishing liability on the part of defendants Shell Oil Company or their agent Neuhaus; and that the trial court properly granted the motion for nonsuit of these defendants at the close of plaintiff's case. In view of this conclusion, it becomes unnecessary to consider the effect of plaintiff's receipt of a compensation award against Owens through the Industrial Accident Commission as a bar to his prosecution of the present action against Shell Oil Company because of his industrial injury. See Popejoy v. Hannon, 37 Cal.2d 159, 171-172, 231 P.2d 484.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, TRAY-NOR and SCHAUER, JJ., concur.

CARTER, Justice (concurring).

I concur in the judgment of affirmance. This is clearly an orthodox case where the sole cause of the injury was the negligence of the independent contractor (plaintiff's employer) and it does not fall within any of the situations in which an owner may be liable for injury to the employee of his independent contractor. Under the contract between defendant and Owens (plaintiff's employer) the latter was to remove the casing from defendant's oil well which was to be abandoned. Defendant had no right to and did not exercise any control over the performance by Owens of the contract; it did not own or have any control over the equipment to be used on the job, that equipment being owned and furnished by Owens, while defendant owned the oil well and premises on which it was located; the injury was not caused by any condition of the well or the premises, it being caused solely by the equipment owned and furnished by Owens; the injury was as much removed from defendant's sphere of responsibility as it would have been, had the injury occurred to one of Owens' truck drivers because of a defective truck furnished by Owens while he was hauling the equipment to the job site. There is no question of any nondelegable duty as the factors for the application of that rule are not present.

CENTRAL BANK, a corporation, Petitioner,
v.

SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California, In and for the COUNTY OF ALAMEDA, Respondent, Sam Perry, a Minor, etc., Real Party In Interest.

S. F. 19176.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

July 12, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 11, 1955.

Proceeding upon bank's application for writ prohibiting Superior Court from taking further action in guardianship proceeding in which court indicated that, in exercise of its probate jurisdiction, it would require bank to account for sum which minor's guardian had deposited in her personal account but which she was supposed to hold as trustee for minor until he was 21 or upon further order of court. The Supreme Court, Shenk, P. J., held that controversy between bank and guardian was one which should properly be determined by the Superior Court in exercise of its general jurisdiction, and, therefore, upon making of timely objection, the Superior Court, sitting in probate, should have transferred cause for trial or have it tried as court sitting in exercise of its general jurisdiction, so that jury would be available and that appeal could be taken in usual course.

Peremptory writ issued.

Opinions, 273 P.2d 906, 274 P.2d 904, vacated.

1. Courts ⇨200½

Guardian and Ward ⇨144

Generally, Superior Court, while sitting in probate, is without power to decide a disputed claim between an estate and a stranger thereto, and the same rule applies to guardianship proceedings under the Probate Code. Probate Code, § 1552.

2. Courts ⇨200½

If controversy is between an estate and those not strangers to the probate proceedings relating to the estate, the Superior Court, sitting in probate, has power to entertain the action and adjudicate the conflicting claims. Probate Code, §§ 613-615, 1431, 1552.

3. Courts ⇨198

Controversies, which are properly within an estate proceeding, should be adjudicated therein as necessary incidents of the proceeding.

4. Courts ⇨201

Controversy between estate or those acting in its behalf and the executor or administrator thereof acting in his personal capacity has sufficient connection with pending probate proceeding to be properly litigated therein.

5. Courts ⇨200½

The Superior Court, sitting in probate, is proper tribunal in which to determine controversies involving particular property claimed by estate and others where property is conceded by both parties to be or to have been acquired by claimant in course of the probate proceedings. Probate Code, § 202.

6. Guardian and Ward ⇨33

Power conferred, by Probate Code provisions pertaining to discovery and recovery of concealed or embezzled property of ward, upon the Superior Court, sitting in probate, ends with discovery of property and enforcement of the remedial powers of the statutes, and, where persons cited to appear and account in such proceedings are strangers to the estate, controversy must be determined by the Superior Court in exercise of its general jurisdiction. Probate Code, §§ 613-615.

7. Guardian and Ward ⇨123

Where minor's mother, who was guardian of his person and estate, had, without authority, deposited to her personal bank account check which stated that it was to be deposited in account of minor, with mother as trustee, and there to remain until minor became of age or upon further order of court, controversy between bank and mother, in her capacity as guardian, whether bank should be compelled to pay into an account for benefit of minor amount which mother had converted was one which should have been determined by the Superior Court in exercise of its general jurisdiction, not as court sitting in probate. Probate Code, §§ 613-615, 1552; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 7.

8. Jury ⇨14(1)

Action against bank, in which plaintiff alleged that bank had concealed and converted to its own use certain money due and owing plaintiff, bore earmarks of action in conversion and, as such, was one at law and subject to demand by either party for jury trial. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 7.

SHENK, Presiding Justice.

This is an application for the writ of prohibition to prevent the respondent superior court from taking further action in a guardianship matter in which it indicated that in the exercise of its probate jurisdiction it would require the petitioner Central Bank to account for $4,011.71, deposited therein by the guardian in her personal account.

In 1949 in a regular proceeding in the respondent court sitting in probate, Bennie L. Perry, the mother of Sam Perry, a minor, was duly appointed and qualified as the guardian of his person and estate, and furnished the required bond. Thereafter the court approved the compromise of a claim of the minor in an action for damages for personal injuries and entered the following order pursuant to section 1431 of the Probate Code: "It is further ordered that the net sum remaining, to wit, $4,011.71, be deposited in the Central Bank, * * * in a savings account in the name of said minor with the petitioner [Bennie L. Perry] as trustee thereof, without bond, and there to remain until said minor attains the age of twenty-one years, or upon further order of this court."

A copy of that order was not delivered to the Central Bank and there is no evidence that the Bank had knowledge of it prior to the present proceeding. A check in the amount of $4,011.71 made payable to the bank was delivered to the mother, Bennie L. Perry. On the back of the check the following notation had been typed: "To be deposited to the account of Sam Perry, a minor, with Benny L. Perry, as Trustee, said funds to remain until Sam Perry attains the age of twenty-one years, or upon further order of Court." The mother, without authority of court or otherwise, presented the check to the Central Bank for deposit in her own personal account and the amount thereof was so credited. On the reverse side of the check are two obviously rubber stamp endorsements, the first being, "Credited account of within named payee, absence of endorsement guaranteed by Central Bank, Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley and Robert S. Rutledge, Oakland, for petitioner.

No appearance for respondent.

Oakland, Calif.", and the second, "Pay to the order of any Bank, Banker or Trust Co. All prior endorsements guaranteed. Apr. 20 '49, 4001. Central Bank, Oakland, Calif." The check bears the notation "Paid" by perforation.

Thereafter the mother withdrew those funds (with the exception of $5 or less) from her personal account and converted them to her own use. The father of the minor child, who is the divorced husband of the mother, obtained information of the defalcation on the part of the mother and prepared to take proceedings against her to compel her to restore and preserve the funds for the benefit of the minor. The mother then, in her capacity as guardian of the minor and in his behalf, brought an action against the bank to compel it to pay into an account for the benefit of the minor the amount of money which she had converted to her own use from the proceeds of the check. The complaint stated facts above set forth and further alleged that "plaintiff is informed and believes and therefore alleges that the defendant has concealed and converted to its own use the aforesaid sum of money due and owing to the plaintiff." The prayer was that a citation issue, and the following citation was issued and directed to the bank: "You are hereby cited and required to appear in the above entitled proceeding * * *, then and there to show cause, if any you have, why you should not be required to be examined and to do the acts as prayed for in plaintiff's complaint herein."

Section 1552 of the Probate Code, relating to guardianship proceedings authorizes a court to cite a suspected person and to "examine and proceed against him on such charge in the manner provided in this code * * *." The court purported to proceed under that section and sections 613, 614 and 615 of the Probate Code. These latter sections relate to probate proceedings and as applicable here provide for the citation and examination of one to whom assets of an estate have been entrusted. The court may require such a person "to render a full account, on oath, of any moneys, accounts, or other property or papers belonging to the estate, which have come to his possession, and of his proceedings thereon * * *." § 615, Probate Code.

A hearing was had on the citation at which testimony was taken. The court later filed a memorandum in which it announced its intention of making a finding that the bank had notice of a trust impressed upon it and that it held the sum of $4,011.71 for the account of the minor. Thereupon the bank commenced the present proceeding and an alternative writ was issued.

[1, 2] The primary question is whether the respondent court sitting in probate can adjudicate a controversy between the bank and the guardianship estate under the undisputed facts, or whether the controversy must be decided by the court in the exercise of its general jurisdiction. It is the general rule that the superior court while sitting in probate is without power to decide a disputed claim between an estate and a stranger thereto. Schlyen v. Schlyen, 43 Cal.2d 361, 372, 273 P.2d 897; In re Estate of Dabney, 37 Cal.2d 672, 234 P.2d 962. The same rule applies to guardianship proceedings under the Probate Code. § 1552, Probate Code. But if the controversy is between an estate and those not strangers to probate proceedings relating to the estate, the court sitting in probate has power to entertain the action and adjudicate the conflicting claims. In such a case the contest is often referred to as between those in "privity" with the estate. In the Schlyen case, Schlyen v. Schlyen, supra, 43 Cal.2d 361, at page 373, 273 P.2d 897, at page 903, it is said: "The reasons for the * * * rule run through the numerous cases on the subject and are many. The determination of such a controversy is an incident to the proper settlement of the estate. Stevens v. Superior Court, supra, 155 Cal. 148, 99 P. 512. All of the parties to the proceedings are in privity with the estate and it is their distributive rights that are affected by the proceeding in probate. * * * It is because of the foregoing and perhaps other reasons that the courts have said that a controversy of this nature should be adjudicated in probate. It is certainly true that the court in a probate proceeding is concerned with the settlement of the estate and not with controversies between the estate and strangers, the adjudication of which is the function of the court in the exercise of its general jurisdiction."

[3] From the foregoing it follows that controversies properly within an estate proceeding should be adjudicated therein, that is, as necessary incidents of the proceeding. The question then is whether the bank in this case is in "privity" with the guardianship estate in the sense that the term has been employed in the decisional law on the subject.

[4] A review of the decisions reveals that in those cases where a controversy has been held to have a sufficient connection with a pending probate proceeding to be properly litigated therein the controversy is one of two particular types. The first and most common is that between the estate or those acting in its behalf and the executor or administrator thereof acting in his personal capacity. Schlyen v. Schlyen, supra, 43 Cal.2d 361, 273 P.2d 897; In re Estate of Roach, 208 Cal. 394, 281 P. 607; Bauer v. Bauer, 201 Cal. 267, 256 P. 820; In re Estate of Fulton, 188 Cal. 489, 205 P. 681; Stevens v. Superior Court, 155 Cal. 148, 99 P. 512; In re cf. Estate of Klumpke, 167 Cal. 415, 139 P. 1062, where the court apparently overlooked the fact that the surviving spouse was also the personal representative. The propriety of the determination by the court sitting in probate in such a situation is said to be "implied in the power to settle the final account" and the "power to determine as against an executor what property in his hands belongs to the estate." Stevens v. Superior Court, supra, 155 Cal. 148, 151, 99 P. 512, 517; see also In re Estate and Guardianship of Vucinich, 3 Cal.2d 235, 243, 44 P.2d 567; cf. Estate of Haas, 97 Cal. 232, 31 P. 893, 32 P. 327, distinguished and limited by Stevens v. Superior Court, supra, 155 Cal. at page 152, 99 P. 512 and by Estate of Burdick, 112 Cal. 387, 391, 44 P. 734. The essential privity in those cases is that arising out of the nature of the relationship existing between the parties to the controversy. It is often stated that the power of the court in such situations is limited to those cases "where the executor or other personal representative claims the property in his individual capacity." In re Estate and Guardianship of Vucinich, supra, 3 Cal.2d 235, 243, 44 P.2d 567, 570; see also Wilkerson v. Seib, 20 Cal.2d 556, 562, 127 P. 2d 904. In any event we are referred to no case wherein the essential relationship of the parties to an estate has been extended to include any other than an executor or administrator except perhaps in the case of one purporting to assert a personal right derived through the executor's or administrator's official capacity. Thus in Re Estate of Troy, 92 Cal.App. 352, 268 P. 426, the rule was applied to the claim of an attorney of the representative of the estate into whose hands property of the estate had come, and in Re Estate of De Barry, 43 Cal. App.2d 715, 111 P.2d 728, it was held that where the attorney was deceased the court sitting in probate could properly determine the validity of a similar claim asserted by the attorney's estate. See also In re Estate of Kafitz, 51 Cal.App. 325, 196 P. 790. But the rule has not been extended to include others, as for example, a surviving spouse of a decedent, where he or she was not also the representative of the estate although such surviving spouse may or may not also have been an heir of the estate with respect to other property than that involved in the immediate controversy. See In re Estate of Niccolls, 164 Cal. 368, 373, 129 P. 278; Merola v. Superior Court, 125 Cal.App.2d 1, 4, 269 P.2d 664; Wilson v. Superior Court, 101 Cal.App.2d 592, 225 P.2d 1002; In re Estate of Kurt, 83 Cal.App. 2d 681, 683, 189 P.2d 528. And it has been held that where one claims all the assets of an estate undergoing probate proceedings to be his property by virtue of a partnership agreement with the decedent he is a stranger to the estate and cannot be heard to assert such claim in those proceedings. In re Estate of King, 199 Cal. 113, 248 P. 519; In re Estate of Abdallah, 80 Cal.App.2d 634, 182 P.2d 596.

[5] The other situation in which the court sitting in probate has been held to be the proper tribunal in which to determine controversies involving particular property claimed by the estate and others is that where the property involved is conceded by both parties to be or to have been acquired by the claimant in the course of probate proceedings. The essential element of privity in such cases arises out of the nature of the claim to the property, rather than the nature of the relationship of the parties involved as in the first situation. Thus in Heydenfeldt v. Superior Court, 117 Cal. 348, 49 P. 210, the rule was applied to a distributee who had received property of the estate under a decree afterwards set aside. And in Re Estate of Troy, supra, 92 Cal.App. 352, 268 P. 426 and In re Estate of De Barry, supra, 43 Cal.App.2d 715, 111 P.2d 728, the attorneys for the representatives of the estates admittedly withheld assets of the estate but claimed they were entitled to do so as set-offs against their purported claims for fees due them. Privity of this nature is also recognized in a line of cases involving the transfer of community property upon the death of one spouse. It is stated that the surviving husband's claim to his share of community property is adverse to the estate as it is not subject to administration and does not pass through probate proceedings. Makeig v. United Security Bank & Trust Co., 112 Cal.App. 138, 296 P. 673. As such he is not claiming in privity with the estate but adversely to it since his community interest does not pass through the probate proceedings and his claim cannot be litigated therein if objection be made. In re Estate of Klumpke, supra, 167 Cal. 415, 421, 139 P. 1062; In re Estate of Kurt, supra, 83 Cal.App.2d 681, 683, 189 P.2d 528; see also In re Estate of King, supra, 199 Cal. 113, 117-118, 248 P. 519. But a surviving wife's claim to her share of the community property is said to come to her through probate, Probate Code, § 202, so that her claim is in privity with the estate and should be litigated therein. In re Burdick's Estate, supra, 112 Cal. 387, 44 P. 734; In re Estate of Kurt, supra, 83 Cal.App.2d 681, 684, 189 P. 2d 528; Colden v. Costello, 50 Cal.App.2d 363, 122 P.2d 959.

In the present case there is no relationship between the bank and the estate such as would bring the bank into privity similar to that of the representative of the estate, and no reason appears why the doctrine should be broadened to include one who stands in the position of the bank. Nor does privity attach by the nature of the claims asserted to particular property conceded to be or to have been derived through the guardianship proceedings. It is claimed by the guardian but vigorously denied by the bank that it had notice of the trust condition imposed on the fund or that the money thereof was deposited as an asset of the guardianship estate. It is without question that the $4,011.71 represented by the check was deposited in the personal account of Bennie L. Perry and has been dissipated by withdrawals by her to the point where for all practical purposes that particular fund no longer exists. The bank refuses to concede that the money now sought was derived through the guardianship estate. Its claim of right to title to the fund sought by the plaintiff is entirely independent of the guardianship proceedings and does not fall, therefore, into that class of privity with estate proceedings arising out of the nature of the claims asserted by the parties.

[6] As stated, the proceedings in the respondent court purport to have been commenced under the authority of sections 613-615 and 1552 of the Probate Code. Where the persons cited to appear and account in such proceedings are strangers to the estate the code sections create no exception to the rule requiring that the controversy be determined by the court in the exercise of its general jurisdiction. The power which they confer on the court sitting in probate ends with the discovery of the property and the enforcement of the remedial powers of the statute. Pursuant to such authority the court cannot determine issues of title nor order property to be deposited or delivered to the executor or administrator. Ex parte Casey, 71 Cal. 269, 271, 12 P. 118; Merola v. Superior Court, supra, 125 Cal.App.2d 1, 4, 269 P.2d 664; McCarthy v. Superior Court, 64 Cal.App.2d 468, 472, 149 P.2d 55.

[7] From the foregoing it follows that the controversy in the present case is one which properly should be determined by the court in the exercise of its general jurisdiction. The bank does not deny that as a stranger to the estate a claim against it may be adjudicated independently of the guardianship proceeding. Such an action was in fact commenced against the bank in the respondent Superior Court on March 8, 1954, by Sam Perry, through his mother as his guardian. That action is now pending and summons has been issued. Its purpose is the recovery of the identical fund sought in the guardianship proceeding.

[8] Not only is the foregoing conclusion compelled by an analysis of the decisional law, but also it is the better rule for practical reasons and in fairness and justice to the parties. The only allegation as to the liability of the bank is that it has "concealed and converted to its own use the aforesaid money due and owing the plaintiff." The action is one in which issues of fact have been joined and bears all the earmarks of an action in conversion. See Lowe v. Ozmun, 137 Cal. 257, 260, 70 P. 87; Perkins v. Maier & Zobelein Brewery, 134 Cal. 372, 375, 66 P. 482; 24 Cal. Jur. 1038 and cases there cited. As such it is an action at law (24 Cal. Jur. 1034) and subject to a demand by either party for a trial by jury Const. art. I, § 7; See Vallejo & N. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 545, 556, 147 P. 238; Koppikus v. State Capitol Com'rs, 16 Cal. 249; 15 Cal. Jur. 323, 325, and to the right of an appeal from a judgment on issues properly framed. In Ex parte Casey, supra, 71 Cal. 269, 12 P. 118, the court sitting in probate had ordered Mrs. Casey to pay over to an estate certain monies which she claimed to have come to her independently of the probate proceedings. She refused to obey the order on the ground that the court lacked authority to make it in a proceeding pursuant to sections 1459, 1460 and 1461 of the Code of Civil Procedure (now §§ 613, 614 and 615 of the Probate Code), and was cited for contempt. On appeal this court held that the trial court could not hold Mrs. Casey in contempt unless it could properly determine title to the property, which it could not do in a probate proceeding. As reason for its decision the court stated, 71 Cal. at page 270, 12 P. 118: "The title upon which his adverse claim was founded may be invalid. It may have been obtained by fraudulent and corrupt practices. It is a principle which underlies all institutions and forms of government that no man can be deprived of his property, except in proceedings according to law, unless it be confiscated for the necessities or good of the public. If his title is claimed to be invalid or fraudulent and void, he is entitled to be heard according to the forms of law. Proceedings to punish him for contempt, for not delivering it up without a trial according to law, to another who claims it, are not the appropriate proceedings for the trial of an issue of title. The issue as to such title should be tried in an appropriate action, in which the verdict of a jury or the findings of the court may be had upon issues properly framed for the purpose of definitely determining the question of title." Ex parte Hollis, 59 Cal. [405] 406-413." See also Wilson v. Superior Court, supra, 101 Cal. App. 2d 592, 225 P. 2d 1002. It is to be noted, of course, that had the bank in the present case refused to obey the threatened order of the respondent court it would have found itself in the same position as Mrs. Casey. The same reasons are here present for requiring that title to the fund involved be tried in the court in the exercise of its general jurisdiction.

It is concluded that the respondent court sitting in probate could not properly adjudicate the rights of the claimants to the fund in the guardianship proceedings, and that it was the duty of the court, when objection to its jurisdiction was, as here, timely made, to have transferred the cause for trial or to have tried it as a court sitting in the exercise of its general jurisdiction where a jury could be made available and an appeal taken from the judgment in the usual course.

Let the peremptory writ issue for the limited purpose of prohibiting the respondent court from adjudicating the pending cause in the exercise of its probate jurisdiction.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

July 1, 1955.

Actions by linemen employees of an independent contractor against the power company for injuries caused by fall of power pole negligently set by contractor for company. From judgment for defendant in Superior Court, Los Angeles County, H. S. Farrell, J. pro tem., the employees appealed. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that order of Public Utilities Commission requiring that power poles be set in soil to a minimum depth imposed a non-delegable duty upon power company and question of whether company had complied with statutory requirement of doing everything necessary or proper to see that rules of Commission were complied with should have been submitted to the jury.

Reversed.

Opinion, 276 P.2d 638, vacated.

1. Electricity ⚡17

Where statute required that public utility do everything necessary or proper to see that rules of Public Utilities Commission are complied with and the rule of such Commission required the setting of power poles at a minimum depth, statute imposed upon the public utility a duty which could not be delegated to an independent contractor and did not relieve utility from liability for contractor's failure to comply with such rule. Public Utilities Code, §§ 702, 2106, 2107.

2. Public Service Commissions ⚡8

Rules of Public Utilities Commission are promulgated for safety of workmen as well as public.

3. Public Service Commissions ⚡6.6

Utilities may not operate except by permission of Public Utilities Commission.

4. Public Service Commissions ⚡8

Statute requiring utility to do everything necessary or proper to secure compliance with rules of Public Utilities Commission does not mean that utility may evade the duty by hiring an independent contractor. Public Utilities Code, §§ 702, 2106, 2107.

5. Electricity ⚡19(6)

In action by linemen employees of independent contractor against utility company for injuries caused by falling of power pole set by contractor for utility at less than required minimum depth, question of whether utility did everything necessary or proper, as required by statute, to secure contractor's compliance with rule respecting minimum depth for poles, presented a factual question for jury. Public Utilities Code, § 702.

6. Electricity ⚡19(13)

In actions by linemen employees of an independent contractor against power company for injuries caused by fall of power pole which had been set by contractor for company at less than required depth, requested instructions that it was power company's duty to do everything necessary and proper to secure compliance with rule respecting minimum depth at which power pole was set and if it failed to do so it was negligent as a matter of law and that it was not sufficient discharge of such duty by company to merely enter into a contract with independent contractor to do job, should have been given. Public Utilities Code, § 702.

CARTER, Justice.

Plaintiffs, Snyder and Gradich, appeal from judgments entered upon verdicts by a jury for defendant, Southern California Edison Company, in consolidated actions, to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence.

Defendant is a public utility engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution of electricity to the public. It entered into a contract with the J. W. Wilson Company under which that company as independent contractor was to repair and construct power lines for defendant on its premises along Latigo road and agreed to comply with all the rules and regulations of the Public Utilities Commission and all the laws pertaining to public utilities in carrying out the contract and to be liable for failure to do so. About 99% of Wilson Company's work was for defendant. Wilson furnished the men and equipment, and defendant the material such as poles. In connection with the work defendant employed an inspector whose duty it was to see that the work complied with the contract and specifications.

In the instant case Wilson was engaged, under the contract, in the Santa Monica Mountains in installing a new feeder power line and replacing deteriorated poles in a 16,000-volt line. Plaintiffs were two of its employees on that project.

While plaintiffs, as linemen, were installing switches at the top of a wire-supporting pole on the feeder line which had been installed earlier that day, the pole began to lean toward the 16,000-volt line. The workmen below endeavored successfully to prevent its contact with the 16,000-volt line but the pole fell to the ground injuring plaintiffs. The 50-foot pole had been installed by Wilson under its contract. The upper part of the soil at the point of installation was loose shale. The pole was less than 6½ feet in the ground. Rule 49.1C of General Order No. 95 of the Public Utilities Commission requires that 50-foot poles be placed in firm soil at a minimum depth of 6½ feet and that "deeper settings or special methods of pole setting * * * be resorted to" where the soil is not firm. Defendant's inspector was on the job in the general area but was not near the pole in question. The record shows that it was not his policy to examine the pole setting depths. In adopting Order 95 the commission stated: "Rules of the character here before the Commission, for modification and revision, find a wide application in public utility operation and service. In these respects, the rules not only provide a standard of safety, both to the workman and to the public, but likewise materially contribute to the standard of service rendered and also afford a means of coordination between different types of lines, such as power and communication." (Emphasis added; 43 C.R.C. 872, 874.) Rule 95 itself provides that the purpose of the rules " * * is to formulate * * * uniform requirements for overhead line construction, the application of which will * * * secure safety to persons engaged in the construction, maintenance, operation, or use of overhead electrical lines and to the public in general.*" (Emphasis added.)

The public utilities law¹ provides: "Every public utility shall obey and comply with every order, decision, direction, or rule made or prescribed by the commission in the matters specified in this part, or any other matter in any way relating to or affecting its business as a public utility, and shall do everything necessary or proper to secure compliance therewith by all of its officers, agents, and employees." Pub.Util.Code, § 702; formerly Public Utilities Act, Stats. 1915, p. 115, § 30. "Any public utility which does, causes to be done, or permits any act, matter, or thing prohibited or declared unlawful, or which omits to do any act, matter, or thing required to be done, either by the Constitution, any law of this State, or any order or decision of the commission, shall be liable to the persons or corporations affected thereby for all loss, damages, or injury caused thereby or resulting therefrom. If the court finds that the act or omission was

1. We refer to that law as appearing in the Public Utilities Code although at the time here involved that code had not been adopted but the prior statute was the same.

wilful, it may, in addition to the actual damages, award exemplary damages. An action to recover for such loss, damage, or injury may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction by any corporation or person.

"No recovery as provided in this section shall in any manner affect a recovery by the State of the penalties provided in this part or the exercise by the commission of its power to punish for contempt." Pub.Util. Code, § 2106; formerly Public Utilities Act, supra, § 73. "Any public utility which violates or fails to comply with any provision of the Constitution of this State or of this part, or which fails or neglects to comply with any part or provision of any order, decision, decree, rule, direction, demand, or requirement of the commission, in a case in which a penalty has not otherwise been provided, is subject to a penalty of not less than five hundred dollars ($500) nor more than two thousand dollars ($2,000) for each offense." Pub.Util.Code, § 2107; formerly Public Utilities Act, supra, § 76. "Every officer, agent, or employee of any public utility, who violates or fails to comply with, or who procures, aids, or abets any violation by any public utility of any provision of the Constitution of this State or of this part, or who fails to comply with any part of any order, decision, rule, direction, demand, or requirement of the commission, or who procures, aids, or abets any public utility in such violation or non-compliance in a case in which a penalty has not otherwise been provided for such officer, agent, or employee, is guilty of a misdemeanor and is punishable by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars ($1,000), or by imprisonment in a county jail not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment." Pub.Util.Code, § 2110; formerly Public Utilities Act, supra, § 77.

The jury was instructed at defendant's request that rule 49.1C of Order 95 and sections 702 and 2106 of the Public Utilities Code contained the provisions heretofore set forth but was also instructed that if the pole was set in violation of the rule by Wilson, an independent contractor, and if defendant did not instruct or order Wilson to so set it defendant was not negligent. Plaintiffs' requested instructions that if the rule was violated defendant would be negligent as its duty under the rule and statute could not be delegated to an independent contractor, were refused. The main question presented, therefore, is whether the duty imposed upon defendant by the statute and commission could be delegated to an independent contractor so as to insulate defendant from liability because of the failure of the contractor to perform the duties.

This court recently stated: "The general rule of nonliability of an employer for the acts of an independent contractor is subject to numerous exceptions. See Brown v. George Pepperdine Foundation, 23 Cal.2d 256, 143 P.2d 929; McCordic v. Crawford, 23 Cal.2d 1, 142 P.2d 7; Taylor v. Oakland Scavenger Co., 17 Cal.2d 594, 110 P.2d 1044; Snow v. Marian Realty Co., 212 Cal. 622, 299 P. 720; Luce v. Jordan, 181 Ala. 570, 61 So. 938], 23 A.L.R. 984. * * *

"It is well settled that the possessor of land is answerable for the negligent failure of an independent contractor to put or maintain buildings and structures thereon in reasonably safe condition. See Rest., Torts, § 422." Knell v. Morris, 39 Cal.2d 450, 456, 247 P.2d 352, 354. The rule was specifically applied to the operation by a highway common carrier, a public utility, of some of its trucks through an independent contractor. The court stated: "Plaintiffs, on the other hand, contend that under both the common law and certain regulations of the Public Utilities Commission, C.M.T., as a highway common carrier, could not delegate its duties to an independent contractor so as to escape liability for their negligent performance.

"The common law principle upon which plaintiffs rely has been enunciated in section 428 of the Restatement of Torts,² and has

2. "An individual or a corporation carrying on an activity which can be lawfully carried on only under a franchise granted by public authority and which frequently been applied to impose liability upon franchised common carriers who have engaged independent contractors to transport goods over the public highways. * *

"C.M.T., operating as a highway common carrier, is engaged in a 'business attended with very considerable risk' * * * and the Legislature has subjected it and similar carriers to the full regulatory power of the Public Utilities Commission to protect the safety of the general public. * * * The effectiveness of safety regulations is necessarily impaired if a carrier conducts its business by engaging independent contractors over whom it exercises no control. If by the same device it could escape liability for the negligent conduct of its contractors, not only would the incentive for careful supervision of its business be reduced, but members of the public who are injured would be deprived of the financial responsibility of those who had been granted the privilege of conducting their business over the public highways. Accordingly, both to protect the public from financially irresponsible contractors, and to strengthen safety regulations, it is necessary to treat the carrier's duties as nondelegable." Eli v. Murphy, 39 Cal.2d 598, 599-600, 248 P.2d 756, 757. The rule of nondelegable duty has been applied to the maintenance of premises by a landlord through an independent contractor with respect to his tenants or their employees, Brown v. George Pepperdine Foundation, 23 Cal.2d 256, 143 P.2d 929; Finnegan v. Royal Realty Co., 35 Cal. 2d 409, 218 P.2d 17; to the owner of an amusement concession operated by an independent contractor when a patron was injured, McCordic v. Crawford, 23 Cal.2d 1, 142 P.2d 7; Bayse v. Craft's Golden State Shows, 43 Cal.App.2d 782, 111 P.2d 746; to the owner of property who, through an independent contractor, so repaired part of the premises as to cause damage to the one occupying the floor below. Knell v. Morris, supra, 39 Cal.2d 450, 247 P.2d 352. Where an activity involving possible danger to the public is carried on under public franchise or authority the one engaging in the activity may not delegate to an independent contractor the duties or liabilities imposed on him by the public authority, Eli v. Murphy, supra, 39 Cal.2d 598, 248 P.2d 756; Finnegan v. Royal Realty Co., supra, 35 Cal.2d 409, 218 P.2d 17; Taylor v. Oakland Scavenger Co., 17 Cal.2d 594, 110 P.2d 1044; Snow v. Marian Realty Co., 212 Cal. 622, 299 P. 720; Luce v. Holloway, 156 Cal. 162, 103 P. 886; Colgrove v. Smith, 102 Cal. 220, 36 P. 411, 27 L.R.A. 590; Spence v. Schultz, 103 Cal. 208, 37 P. 220; Lehman v. Robertson Truck-A-Way, 122 Cal.App.2d 82, 264 P.2d 653; Smith v. San Joaquin etc. Power Corp., 59 Cal.App. 647, 211 P. 843; Kirk v. Santa Barbara Ice Co., 157 Cal. 591, 108 P. 509; Barrabee v. Crescenta Mutual Water Co., 88 Cal.App.2d 192, 198 P.2d 558; Gilbert v. Rogers, 117 Cal.App.2d 712, 256 P.2d 574, and generally speaking there are many situations in which the person cannot absolve himself from liability by delegating his duties to an independent contractor. 27 Am.Jur., Independent Contractors, §§ 48-50; 23 A.L.R. 985; 29 A.L.R. 736; 20 A.L.R.2d 868; Rest., Torts, §§ 410-429; Prosser on Torts, p. 486 et seq.; Harper, Law of Torts (1933) § 292. The matter is discussed by Harper, as follows: " * * * one who employs an independent contractor is, as a general rule, not liable for the misconduct of the latter or of his servants while acting within the scope of the contract. The idea responsible for this general rule of nonliability is the want of control and authority of the employer over the work, and the consequent apparent harshness of a rule which would hold one responsible for the manner of conducting an enterprise over which he wants the authority to direct the operations. Again, so far as the activity immediately causing the injury is concerned, it is the contractor rather than the contractee who is the entrepreneur and who should ordinarily carry the risk. * * *

"[There are] certain exceptions and apparent exceptions which, with increasing tendency, seem likely to overshadow in importance and scope the rule itself. * *

involves an unreasonable risk of harm to others, is subject to liability for bodily harm caused to such others by the negligence of a contractor employed to do work in carrying on the activity.'"

Cal.Rep. 285-286 P.2d-25

A number of situations exist, however, which are actual cases of vicarious liability, that is, liability for the misconduct of the independent contractor and his servants although the contractee has himself been free from personal fault. A number of factors concur to constitute the grounds of policy for such allocation of risk from the immediate to the general entrepreneur. These considerations, in fact, constitute such a powerful argument for the liability of the employer of an independent contractor that it would seem highly desirable for the courts to adopt the rule of liability and confine nonliability to a few exceptional cases. This, the American courts, at least, have not yet done, but there is every reason to believe that sound social policy will induce the courts to make further inroads upon the rule of nonliability in this class of cases.

"The first genuine case of liability for misconduct of an independent contractor or his employees is the case of the so-called 'nondelegable' duty. Where the law imposes a definite, affirmative duty upon one by reason of his relationship with others, whether as an owner or proprietor of land or chattels or in some other capacity, such persons can not escape liability for a failure to perform the duty thus imposed by entrusting it to an independent contractor. * * * It is immaterial whether the duty thus regarded as 'nondelegable' be imposed by statute, charter or by common law. Thus where a railroad company was required by statute to construct fences along its right of way and it employed a contractor to construct the fences, the company was liable for the loss of a cow killed by reason of the contractor's failure to build the fences as required by the statute. The same rule applies to the duty imposed upon railroads to erect gates at crossings, to construct cattle guards, and to maintain crossings in good condition. So, too, the owner of land is liable for the failure of an independent contractor to perform affirmative duties toward invitees and others to whom the occupier is bound to keep his premises in a reasonably safe condition. * * *

"Another large group of cases predicate liability on the part of the employer of an independent contractor for the misconduct of the latter in the performance of certain 'intrinsically dangerous' work. The policy of allocating to the general entrepreneur the risks incident to his activity is obvious when the activity carries with it extraordinary hazards to third persons. * * * [T]he principle may be generalized that one who employs an independent contractor to perform work which is either extra-hazardous unless special precautions are taken or which is inherently dangerous in any event is liable for negligence on the part of the independent contractor or his servants in the improper performance of the work or for their negligent failure to take the necessary precautions. This broad principle has been applied not only to excavations on private property, but on the public highway as well, to blasting operations, to the construction of a dam, to the use of fire in clearing land, to the demolition of walls and old buildings, and to several other types of intrinsically dangerous enterprises.

"In both of the above types of situation in which the employer of an independent contractor is liable for the negligence of the contractor or his servants, there is the limitation that such liability extends only to negligence in the failing to take the necessary precautions, failing to adopt a reasonably safe method, or in failing to produce a result which it is the duty of the employer—contractee to have attained. Such liability does not ordinarily extend to so-called 'collateral' or 'casual' negligence on the part of the contractor or his servants in the performance of the operative detail of the work. The negligence for which the employer is liable, as general entrepreneur, must be such as is intimately connected with the work authorized and such as is reasonably likely from its nature. Negligence in the doing of ordinary acts, not necessarily incidental, but only accidentally connected with the work, do not fall within the policy of the law which imposes the extraordinary liability upon the employer.

"The distinction between 'collateral' or 'casual' negligence and negligence of the contractor so intimately connected with the work to be done that the employer-contractee is liable therefor is a shadowy one at best." (Harper, Law of Torts (1933), § 292.)

[1-3] Contrary to defendant's contention the statutes and rules of the commission do impose a direct and positive duty on the operator of a utility. This is evident from the regulations heretofore quoted. The rules were promulgated for the safety of workmen as well as the public and civil penalties are imposed on the utility for failure to comply with them and criminal penalties are imposed on the officers and employees of the utility. Utilities may not operate except by permission of the commission which imposes the duties heretofore set forth together with other regulations pertinent to the operation of such organizations.

[4] Utility companies, either electric, telephone, or telegraph, are responsible for nearly all pole installations. In the law relating to such utilities there is no express provision that such duties may be delegated. The requirement in section 702 of the Utilities Code, supra, that the utility must do everything necessary to secure compliance with the law and rules by its agents and officers is nothing more than an additional precautionary measure to prompt the utilities with regard to compliance by those persons. It does not mean that it may evade the duty by the independent contractor device or limit the scope of its duties thereby. It does not negate the existence of a non-delegable duty. The case of Hard v. Hollywood Turf Club, 112 Cal.App.2d 263, 246 P.2d 716, while containing some dictum concerning the delegability of duties, holds that the Labor Code provisions requiring a safe place to work for employees did not apply to an independent contractor where a subcontractor's employees were concerned because the word "employer," as used in the Labor Code, was interpreted to include only the one who had employees and not contractors. Thus it is readily distinguishable from the case at bar for here there is no doubt that the duty was imposed on the defendant.

Defendant contends that the rules set forth in Eli v. Murphy, supra, 39 Cal.2d 598, 248 P.2d 756, and Knell v. Morris, supra, 39 Cal.2d 450, 247 P.2d 352, as well as other authorities heretofore cited are not in point because they involved either the duty imposed on a landlord to comply with certain laws with respect to permanent conditions on the leased property where no activity by a contractor was involved or that the activity of defendant utility here involved was merely incidental and not a part of the business authorized by its franchise, the production, transmission and sale of electricity, and that such incidental duties are delegable. If by incidental action of the independent contractor it is meant that the activity in question is not necessarily part of the duty imposed, we do not have such a situation here where the duty to install the poles in a certain manner was squarely imposed. The construction and maintenance of lines, which includes poles, is a necessary part of the utilities' business. It needs them to transmit electricity, the commodity in which it deals. The duty imposed expressly includes the placing of poles and states that their placement involves the safety of both the workmen and public, indicating that unless they are properly installed "considerable risk" or danger will exist. Whether we speak of the existence of a nondelegable duty as arising from defendant's franchise to do business or a special duty imposed by statute or rule or as a common law principle is not important as indicated by the above discussion. If a common law principle is involved, defendant, as the possessor of land, is answerable for the negligent failure of Wilson the independent contractor to put or maintain structures, the pole, in reasonably safe condition. Knell v. Morris, supra, 39 Cal.2d 450, 456, 247 P.2d 352.

The cases relied on by defendant are not controlling. In Neubar v. Royal Realty Co., 86 Cal.App.2d 596, 195 P.2d 501; Scholey v. Steele, 59 Cal.App.2d 402, 138 P.2d 733; Singer v. Eastern Columbia, Inc., 72 Cal. App.2d 402, 164 P.2d 531, and Runyon v. City of Los Angeles, 40 Cal.App. 383, 180 P. 837, the court was concerned with the question of the duty of a landlord with respect to the condition of the premises, liability for the lessee's activity or the landlord's duty to repair. Donahoo v. Kress House Moving Corp., 25 Cal.2d 237, 153

P.2d 349, merely involved the liability of an independent contractor to the tenant of a house he was moving for the landlord and which was occupied by the tenant. Houghton v. Loma Prieta Lumber Co., 152 Cal. 500, 93 P. 82, 14 L.R.A.,N.S., 913, involved the liability of the owner of land in an uninhabited area for blasting done thereon for him by an independent contractor and it was held the owner was not liable for the contractor's negligence. The court seems to imply that there must be a nuisance or absolute liability before a nondelegable duty exists, but this is contrary to the later cases. The same comment applies to Louthan v. Hewes, 138 Cal. 116, 70 P. 1065; Barrabee v. Crescenta Mutual Water Co., 88 Cal.App. 2d 192, 198 P.2d 558, held the independent contractor insulated the owner from liability because no duty was imposed on the owner and no peril was inherent in the work. That is not true here. Moreover, the case is of doubtful authority in view of the authorities heretofore cited, especially the case of Knell v. Morris, supra, 39 Cal.2d 450, 247 P.2d 352.

Another point is made by plaintiffs. They claim that inasmuch as under section 702 of the Public Utilities Code, supra, defendant is required to "do everything necessary or proper" to secure compliance with the statutes and rules of the commission by its "employees" it should have been left to the jury to determine whether defendant did everything necessary and proper to secure compliance by its employees, such as its inspector, as distinguished from its independent contractor. It will be recalled that there is evidence that defendant's inspector did not inspect the installation of the pole in question and that it was not customary for him to inspect the depth at which poles were set. The jury, plaintiffs argue, should decide whether defendant gave its inspector duties sufficiently broad to assure compliance with the rules.

Defendant contends that as a matter of law it did everything proper and necessary to secure compliance with the rules and refers to the maintenance by it of an inspector on the job; that Wilson was given detailed plans and specifications for the work; and the competency of Wilson for the job. It concedes, however, that whether everything necessary and proper was done was "a factual question for the jury."

[5, 6] It would seem the question should have been submitted to the jury, but defendant asserts plaintiffs' instruction, which was given, advised the jury on the subject. That instruction did not cover the subject since it told the jury that any negligence on the part of Wilson would be imputed to defendant if defendant had instructed Wilson to set the pole at less than the minimum depth. It also refers to an instruction in the language of section 702 of the Utilities Code but that instruction did not contain elements of what was meant by doing everything necessary and proper except as it appeared in section 702 and it was followed by instructions which told the jury that the duty could be delegated. Plaintiffs offered, but were refused, instructions that under the law (public utilities law) just mentioned it was defendant's duty to do everything necessary and proper to secure compliance with rule 49.1C and if it failed to do so it was negligent as a matter of law; that it was not sufficient for defendant, in that respect, to have done nothing more than enter into the contract it made with Wilson. Defendant criticizes those offered instructions as intimating that defendant did nothing toward doing everything necessary and proper other than make the contract with Wilson. The instructions do not so state or indicate.

From the foregoing it appears the judgments must be reversed for both reasons mentioned.

The judgments are reversed.

v.

Jack Wayne BIRDWELL, C. W. Birdwell, and Geraldine Birdwell, Defendants and Appellants.

S. F. 19252.

Supreme Court of California,

In Bank.

July 5, 1955.

Personal injury action arising out of accident, occurring while minor plaintiff was guest in automobile driven by minor defendant. The Superior Court, Contra Costa County, Hugh H. Donovan, J., entered judgment adverse to defendants and they appealed. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that giving of instructions confusing negligence and wilful misconduct, although action was based on wilful misconduct only, was not prejudicial, where it was presumed that defendants requested instructions, since record did not reveal source of request, and where jury was told that negligence alone would not support verdict for plaintiffs.

Judgment affirmed.

Opinion, 278 P.2d 36, vacated.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨1032(3)

In personal injury action arising out of automobile accident, failure of defendants to show source of instructions given comparing negligence and willful misconduct, was insufficient to meet burden assumed by defendants, as appellants, of establishing error prejudicial to them in such instructions.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨900

Error will not be presumed in favor of reversing a judgment.

3. Appeal and Error ⇨882(1)

Invited error cannot be complained of on appeal.

4. Trial ⇨269

Each instruction should be identified by a number and should indicate by whom it was requested or that it was given by court of its own motion, and on each requested instruction the trial judge should endorse fact as to whether it was given or refused or given as modified, with modification, if any, clearly indicated.

5. Appeal and Error ⇨928(4)

In personal injury action arising out of automobile accident where record failed to show who requested given instructions which compared negligence with willful misconduct, it must be presumed by reviewing court that instructions were given at appellants' own request.

6. Negligence ⇨1, 11

Negligence and willful misconduct are mutually exclusive.

7. Appeal and Error ⇨882(12)

Trial ⇨296(3)

In personal injury action by guest involved in automobile collision, giving of instructions confusing negligence and willful misconduct, although action was based on willful misconduct only, was not prejudicial, where it was presumed that defendants requested instruction, since record did not reveal source of request, and where jury was told that negligence alone would not support verdict for plaintiff.

8. Appeal and Error ⇨930(2)

Where jury was cautioned that they were to consider all instructions as a whole and to regard each in light of all others, it must be presumed that they did so.

9. Automobiles ⇨168(1)

Isolated act of driving automobile at an excessive speed does not constitute willful misconduct.

10. Trial ⇨296(3)

In personal injury action by guest involved in automobile accident, defendants were not prejudiced by trial court's instruction that excessive speed under certain circumstances may amount to willful misconduct, where such instruction was immediately followed by further instruction, that all circumstances, including speed, must be considered in determining defendant's willful misconduct.

11. Evidence ⇨546

In action to recover for personal injuries sustained by minor plaintiff who was guest in automobile driven by minor defendant, trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting expert witness to testify as to his conclusions drawn from skid marks on road.

12. Appeal and Error ⚡971(2)

Evidence ⚡546

It is for trial court to determine, in exercise of sound discretion, competency and qualification of expert witness to give his opinion in evidence, and its ruling will not be disturbed upon appeal unless a manifest abuse of that discretion is shown.

13. Appeal and Error ⚡207, 237(1)

In personal injury action, witness' mention of insurance was not reversible error, where no objection had been made and where there had been no motion to strike.

14. Appeal and Error ⚡1060(2)

In action to recover for injuries sustained by minor plaintiff who was riding as guest in automobile driven by minor defendant, defendants were not prejudiced by plaintiffs' attempt to introduce evidence of prima facie speed limit on mountain road on which automobile was traveling, since prima facie speed limit was a factor for consideration with other pertinent facts in determining issue of willful misconduct. Vehicle Code, § 403.

15. Appeal and Error ⚡1060(1)

In personal injury action, defendants were not prejudiced by argument of counsel for plaintiffs regarding defendants' objection to having jury view scene of accident, where trial court thereupon again read to jury stipulation between parties concerning condition of road at time of automobile accident, and changes to it thereafter, and where trial court ruled that stipulation took the place of viewing scene of accident.

16. Appeal and Error ⚡1060(1)

In personal injury action, reference in plaintiffs' closing argument to fact that doctor had examined minor plaintiff on behalf of defendants but had not been called to testify was not prejudicial to defendants, where no claim was made concerning extent of injuries or that verdict was excessive with respect thereto.

17. Trial ⚡345

In action by minor plaintiff to recover damages for personal injuries sustained in automobile accident, defendants waived any right to complain as to form of verdict where record indicated that blank forms of possible verdicts were shown to counsel for both parties before case went to jury, and that when jury returned its verdict court conferred at bench without both counsel concerning it and defendants made no objection on either occasion.

18. Damages ⚡220

In action by minor plaintiff and his father against minor defendant and his parents for personal injuries in which minor plaintiff's father sought award of $3,354.16, as special damages incurred by such father, award of $13,354.16 to minor plaintiff as general damages did not show on its face that jury gave special damages claimed by father also to son.

19. Appeal and Error ⚡1070(1), 1073(1)

In action by minor plaintiff and his father against minor defendant and his parent for personal injuries, where parents of minor defendant were not entitled to any right of subrogation against minor defendant, there was no prejudice to them from separate verdicts and judgments. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 664; Vehicle Code, §§ 352, 402.

Weinmann, Rode, Burnhill & Moffitt, Oakland, and Cyril Viadro, San Francisco, for appellants.

Evans, O'Gara & McGuire and E. James McGuire, San Francisco, for respondents.

SCHAUER, Justice.

In this action to recover for personal injuries resulting from an automobile accident, defendants appeal from an adverse judgment entered upon a jury verdict. We have concluded that defendants suffered no prejudice from various asserted errors upon which they rely, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

The minor plaintiff, John M. Lynch, Jr., was injured when an automobile in which he was riding as a guest and which was being driven by the minor defendant, Jack Wayne Birdwell, plunged off the highway while descending Mount Diablo. The action is based on alleged wilful misconduct of the minor defendant (Veh.Code, § 403), and was brought to recover both general damages of the minor plaintiff and special damages of his father, consisting of the costs of treatment of his injured son. Recovery is also sought against the parents of the minor defendant, who had signed and verified his application for a driver's license. (Veh. Code, § 352.)

There is evidence, although conflicting, sufficient to establish that the car went off the road because defendant driver with wanton disregard for the probable consequences of his conduct persisted after warnings in driving too fast down and around the sharp curves of the mountain road; that he entered the curve where the car finally left the road at 40 or 45 miles an hour; that nearer the top of Mount Diablo he had driven as fast as 58 or 60 miles an hour; that he was warned on the way down and before the accident occurred that he was going too fast, but instead of slowing down he laughed and speeded up.

Defendants first contend that since the action is based on a charge of wilful misconduct, the court erred to their prejudice in giving a lengthy jury instruction defining negligence,¹ "without making it clear that negligence was not an issue in the case." Following the instruction of which defendants complain, the court defined proximate cause to the jury, and then proceeded: "In a case as here presented, there is no legal presumption of wilful misconduct on the part of the defendant * * *. [T]he mere happening of an accident, or the filing of a complaint and answer, or the fact that injuries have been sustained, raises no presumption of wilful misconduct * * *." The nature of direct and indirect evidence, of presumptions and inferences, and of expert testimony, was next explained. It was then stated that the minor plaintiff was a guest in the automobile and that "the host is not legally obligated to his guest to exercise ordinary care in the operation of the vehicle. The driver's only legal obligation to the guest is to refrain from being intoxicated and from wilful misconduct.

"No issue of intoxication being involved in this case, you may award damages to plaintiffs only in the event that you should find that said plaintiffs have suffered injury, of which some wilful misconduct on the part of the defendant * * * was a proximate cause.

"The words 'wilful misconduct' have a meaning in the law, additional to that which

1. Such instruction, given on the court's own motion, reads as follows:

"Negligence as that term is used in these instructions means, and is defined to be, the omission to do something which an ordinarily reasonable and prudent person guided by those considerations which usually regulate the conduct of human affairs, would have done, or the doing of something which such a person would not have done in the same situation.

"It is not absolute or intrinsic or to be measured in all cases in accordance with some precise standard, but always relates to some circumstance of time, place or person. Its application depends upon the situation and the knowledge of the parties, the attendant circumstances and the degree of care and prudence which the circumstances of the case reasonably impose.

"The conduct must be compared to that of an assumed person of ordinary prudence and must be considered with relation to all the circumstances attending the occasion which might reasonably be taken into consideration by such a person of ordinary prudence in determining what his conduct should be.

"The circumstances to be considered are those which the evidence shows may reasonably be supposed to have been known to such person whose negligence is in question and to have influenced his mind and actions at the time, and are not such circumstances which afterwards, in the retrospective light of the event, can be seen should have been known to him and should have influenced his conduct.

"By the term 'ordinary care' is meant such care, effort, diligence, and caution as would have been exercised by a person of ordinary sense or prudence under the same or similar circumstances as those disclosed by the evidence."

they have in common usage. If we were to use the words in their ordinary sense, they would mean simply the indulging in wrongful conduct by conscious choice. Such conduct might consist of doing something that ought not to be done or in failing to do something that ought to be done. But in order to be a basis for liability to a guest under our law, the misconduct must be something more than intentional and wrongful; it must be done under circumstances which show either knowledge that serious injury to the guest probably will result, or a wanton and reckless disregard of the possible results.

"You will note from the foregoing that although wilful misconduct is a form of negligence [a patently erroneous concept hereinafter discussed], it is something more than negligence; more even than what might be called gross negligence. A guest may not recover against his host-driver for negligence, however it might be classified, unless that negligence amounted to wilful misconduct, and that means intentional, wrongful conduct, done either with knowledge that serious injury to the guest probably will result, or with a wanton and reckless disregard of the possible results. [Paragraph No. 42 of instructions.]

"In determining the question as to whether the defendant, Jack Wayne Birdwell, conducted himself with knowledge that serious injury to the plaintiff, John M. Lynch, Jr., would result from said defendant's conduct, proof of such knowledge does not have to be by direct evidence. You have a right to infer that the defendant, Jack Wayne Birdwell, had such knowledge if such an inference may reasonably be drawn from facts in evidence and if your judgment so directs.

"It follows, therefore, that if you should find that defendant was negligent, and if you should find that he intentionally did something that was wrongful and which was a proximate cause of injury to plaintiff, still a case of wilful misconduct is not established unless you further find that defendant's conduct was characterized by the element of wantonness as heretofore described. But if it was, then defendant is liable. [Paragraph No. 44 of instructions.]

"Said defendant Jack Birdwell's conduct is in reckless disregard of the safety of another if he intentionally does an act or fails to do an act which it is his duty to the other to do, knowing or having reason to know of facts which would lead a reasonable man to realize that his conduct not only creates an unreasonable risk of bodily harm to the other, but also involves a high degree of probability that substantial harm will result to the other person.

"In determining whether the circumstances in this case are sufficient to disclose implied knowledge on the part of the defendant, Jack Wayne Birdwell, as to the probability of injury resulting to the minor plaintiff, John M. Lynch, Jr., by reason of the conduct of said defendant, an external standard is applied. That is to say, it is not necessary that the defendant, Jack Wayne Birdwell, himself have recognized his conduct as being extremely dangerous. It is sufficient that he knew or had reason to know of circumstances which would bring home to the realization of the ordinary, reasonable man the highly dangerous character of his conduct."

[1-4] Although the record shows that defendants themselves proposed several refused instructions comparing negligence and wilful misconduct, there is no indication in the record as to whether the various instructions which were given were proposed by plaintiffs or by defendants or were given on the court's own motion. The parties did stipulate, when this case was before the District Court of Appeal, that the instruction set forth hereinabove in footnote No. 1 was given on the court's own motion and that instructions on the subject of speed, hereinafter discussed, were proposed by plaintiffs. But showing the source of only a portion of the instructions given or requested is obviously insufficient to meet the burden assumed by an appellant; i. e., the burden of establishing error prejudicial to him. Error, it is elementary, will not be presumed in favor of reversing a judgment (Brokaw v. Black-Foxe Military Institute (1951), 37 Cal.2d 274, 280, 231 P.2d 816; Philbrook v. Randall (1924), 195 Cal. 95, 104, 231 P. 739; Bacon v. Grosse (1913), 165 Cal. 481, 490, 132 P. 1027; Cutting Fruit Packing Co. v. Canty (1904), 141 Cal. 692, 695-696, 75 P. 564; 4 Cal.Jur.2d 426, § 559, and cases there cited) and invited error cannot be complained of by the appellant (Nevis v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1954), 43 Cal.2d 626, 630, 275 P.2d 761; Jentick v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1941), 18 Cal.2d 117, 114 P.2d 343; see also 4 Cal. Jur.2d 420-424 and 3 Cal.Jur.2d 821, and cases there cited). As declared in Vaughn v. Jonas (1948), 31 Cal.2d 586, 596, 191 P.2d 432, in making up the record on appeal "Each instruction should be identified by a number and should indicate by whom it was requested or that it was given by the court of its own motion; on each requested instruction the trial judge should endorse the fact as to whether it was given or refused or given as modified, with the modification, if any, clearly indicated." (See also 4 Cal.Jur.2d 101-102.)

[5-8] As in the Vaughn case, the reporter's transcript here sets forth in the form of a single instruction, covering approximately twenty-five pages, a congeries of propositions of law which made up the entire charge given to the jury, and there is no indication as to who requested statement of any of the various legal principles contained therein. Thereafter there is set forth a group of "Instructions Requested by Defendants but Refused by the Court," each of which bears a number; in no other respect is any portion of the instructions appearing in the record designated by an identifying number or source. Since the record fails to show who requested the instructions which were given it must be presumed by a reviewing court (except as to the matters covered by stipulation as hereinabove noted) that the instructions which for convenience we have designated as paragraphs 42 and 44 (and which compare negligence with wilful misconduct) were given at appellants' (defendants') own request. (See Deevy v. Tassi (1942), 21 Cal.2d 109, 124, 130 P.2d 389; 4 Cal.Jur.2d 441-442, § 569, and cases there cited.) The most egregious errors in the instructions appear in those two paragraphs, in which the concepts of negligence on the one hand and of wilful misconduct on the other are extensively confused. It will be noted, however, that the error in paragraph number 44 is mitigated by telling the jury that a case of wilful misconduct is not established by a finding of negligence plus a finding of an intentional wrongful act by plaintiff, unless the element of wantonness was also found to characterize defendant's conduct. Although this instruction is far from being a model it tends to rectify some of the error already invited by defendants and its objectionable features cannot be complained of by defendants, who, we must presume, requested it. (See Nevis v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1954), supra, 43 Cal.2d 626, 630, 275 P.2d 761; see also 4 Cal.Jur.2d 422, 423, § 557, and cases there cited; 3 Cal.Jur.2d 820-821, § 276.) Also the jury were told that plaintiff was a guest in defendant's car and that a guest may not recover for negligence, but only for wilful misconduct. Although the statements in paragraph number 42 that "wilful misconduct is a form of negligence," and that a "guest may not recover against his host-driver for negligence, however it might be classified, unless that negligence amounted to wilful misconduct," erroneously suggested to the jury that negligence is included in wilful misconduct, whereas in truth "the two types of behavior are mutually exclusive" (see Mercer-Fraser Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm. (1953), 40 Cal.2d 102, 120, 251 P.2d 955; Hawaiian Pineapple Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm. (1953), 40 Cal.2d 656, 663, 255 P.2d 431), nevertheless, since we must presume that defendants requested the instruction, it cannot be held to have prejudiced them. Nor, inasmuch as the word "negligence" appeared in various of the instructions explaining to the jury the nature of wilful misconduct, was there error in defining the term to them, especially since they were plainly told that negligence alone would not support a verdict for plaintiffs. (See Burrell v. Southern California C. Co. (1917), 35 Cal.App. 162, 166, 169 P. 405.) The jury were cautioned that they were to consider all the instructions as a whole and to regard each in the light of all the others, and it must be presumed that they did so. (Kimic v. San Jose-Los Gatos, etc., Ry. Co. (1909), 156 Cal. 273, 276, 104 P. 312; Zuckerman v. Underwriters at

[9, 10] Defendants also complain of an instruction (stipulated to have been requested by plaintiffs) that "excessive speed, under certain conditions, may amount to wilful misconduct." This statement, however, was immediately followed by the further instruction that "all of the circumstances, including the speed at which the defendant * * * was driving, may be considered by you when determining the question of whether said defendant was guilty of wilful misconduct." Although it is of course true that the isolated act of driving at an excessive speed does not constitute wilful misconduct (Robertson v. Brown (1940), 37 Cal.App.2d 189, 193, 99 P.2d 288; Stacey v. Hayes (1939), 31 Cal. App.2d 422, 427, 88 P.2d 165; McLeod v. Dutton (1936), 13 Cal.App.2d 545, 549, 57 P.2d 189), nevertheless, since the court's statement was modified by the phrase "under certain conditions," and by telling the jury also that "all of the circumstances, including the speed" may be considered, no prejudice to defendants appears. As already shown, the jury were instructed on the essential elements of wilful misconduct.

[11, 12] Defendants next make various charges of prejudicial rulings of the trial judge as well as prejudicial conduct on the part of counsel for plaintiffs, all of which they contend denied them a fair trial. No merit appears in this contention. First, no error is shown in permitting Mr. Bassett, Chief Ranger of Mount Diablo State Park for the past seven years, to testify that in his opinion, on the basis of the "skid marks" which he found on the road, the car "was already going sidewise before the brakes were applied." The witness testified that he had been a police officer in the city of Santa Barbara where he was traffic officer for two years and lieutenant of traffic for six years more; his duties included investigating all vehicle accidents in that city. He had made approximately 1,000 road tests to determine the length of "skid marks." As Chief Ranger he has charge of roadways in the park, including investigating accidents and observing "skid marks." Although he had not made speed tests for some twenty years, it was not with reference to speed that defendants complain he was improperly permitted to testify. "It is for the trial court to determine, in the exercise of a sound discretion, the competency and qualification of an expert witness to give his opinion in evidence [citation], and its ruling will not be disturbed upon appeal unless a manifest abuse of that discretion is shown." (Huffman v. Lindquist (1951), 37 Cal.2d 465, 476, 234 P.2d 34, 29 A.L.R.2d 485.) No such abuse appears here.

[13] Besides plaintiff and the minor defendant, there were four other boys in the car, one of whom was plaintiff's brother. Of the remaining three, two of them testified for plaintiff and one for defendant. The incidental reference to insurance, made by the two boys who testified for plaintiff, provides no ground for reversal. The first reference was made by the witness on redirect examination, in response to a request to recount a conversation which occurred between four of the boys immediately after the accident, and the witness volunteered that one of the boys "said something about having good insurance," and one of the others "said something about the insurance is going to have to pay for everything and all." Defendant interposed no objection or motion to strike. Near the end of the trial, on cross-examination, the other boy who testified for plaintiff volunteered that defendants' insurance "had failed to pay off." Although defendants neither objected to nor moved to strike this testimony, they did immediately bring out by further cross-examination supplemented by questions from the court that the witness did not know "whether there's any insurance or not." In addition it may be noted that the trial court denied defendants' motion for new trial. There appears to have been no deliberate effort by plaintiffs to elicit the fact of insurance and no prejudicial misconduct is shown by the incidental references to which defendants point. (See Speck v. Sarver (1942), 20 Cal.2d 585, 589-590, 128 P.2d 16.)

road, and argument was had before the jury, after which the court ruled that such a violation "probably would be negligence, but not necessarily wilful misconduct," refused to admit the evidence, and admonished the jury to disregard the discussion on the matter. Since a prima facie speed limit "is a factor proper for consideration with other pertinent factors, in determining the issue of wilful misconduct" (Anderson v. Newkirch (1950), 101 Cal.App.2d 171, 178, 225 P.2d 247), no error to defendants' prejudice is shown. During closing argument counsel for plaintiffs commented on the fact that defendants had objected, because of changed circumstances, to having the jury view the scene of the accident. The court thereupon again read to the jury a stipulation between the parties concerning the condition of the road at the time of the accident, and changes to it thereafter, and stated that "The Court has ruled that this stipulation takes the place of viewing the scene of the accident." No prejudice appears to defendants from this occurrence in view of the court's prompt comments to the jury. Nor would the reference in plaintiffs' closing argument to the fact (although not in evidence) that a doctor had examined the minor plaintiff on behalf of defendants but had not been called to testify prejudice defendants, since no claim is made concerning the extent of the injuries or that the verdict is excessive with respect thereto.

Defendants' final contention is that the judgment in favor of the minor plaintiff is erroneous because it includes an award of $3,354.16, the stipulated amount of special damages sustained by plaintiff father, and in that it awards $1,645.84 against the parents of the defendant minor over and above the award against the minor. The court instructed the jury that the liability of defendant parents was joint and several with that of their minor son for any claim against him and that "your award must be in the same amount as against all," with the exception that any verdict against the parents must not exceed the statutory limit of $5,000 (Veh.Code, § 352), even though a greater or additional amount might be awarded against the son. Further instructions were that the claims of the minor plaintiff and that of plaintiff father should be considered as separate and distinct from each other, that any verdict in favor of the father should cover only the special damages consisting of the costs of treatment, that any verdict in favor of the minor plaintiff should include compensation for various items of damage mentioned by the court but not including the treatment costs. Forms of verdict were provided for and read to the jury, who returned a verdict by simply filling in the amounts which had been left blank on one of such forms. As so completed, the verdict reads: "We, the Jury * * *, find for the plaintiff John M. Lynch, Jr. [minor], and against the defendants and assess said plaintiff's damages against defendant Jack Wayne Birdwell [minor] in the sum of $13,354.16 and against defendants C. W. Birdwell and Geraldine Birdwell [parents] in the sum of $1,645.84.

"And we further find for the plaintiff John M. Lynch, Sr., as and for his special damages herein and against the defendants and assess said plaintiff's damages against Jack Wayne Birdwell in the sum of $0.00 and against defendants C. W. Birdwell and Geraldine Birdwell in the sum of $3,354.16."

Judgment was thereupon entered (see Code Civ.Proc. § 664), following the language of the verdicts, that the minor plaintiff recover from the minor defendant the sum of $13,354.16 and from the defendant parents the sum of $1,645.84 and that plaintiff father "recover for his special damages of and from" the parent defendants the sum of $3,354.16.

[17, 18] Although the record indicates that the blank forms of possible verdicts were shown to counsel for both sides before the case went to the jury, and that when the jury returned with its verdict the court conferred at the bench with both counsel concerning it, defendants do not suggest and the record does not show that they offered any objection on either occasion. Under such circumstances it appears to be the settled rule that they have waived any right to complain as to its form. (See Crowe v. Sacks (1955), 44 Cal.2d 590, 283

P.2d 689; Brown v. Regan (1938), 10 Cal. 2d 519, 523, 75 P.2d 1063; Broome v. Kern Valley Packing Co. (1935), 6 Cal.App.2d 256, 261-262, 44 P.2d 430; Brand v. Norris (1953), 121 Cal.App.2d 367, 369, 263 P.2d 456.) Defendants assert, nevertheless, that they do not object to the form of the verdict, but only that the award in favor of the minor plaintiff "was not supported by the evidence since it included an award of special damages * * * although such an award could have been made only in favor of his father and in fact was made in" the father's favor. Nothing in the record necessarily establishes, however, that the $13,354.16 award in favor of the minor plaintiff did include the special damages. It may further be noted that the sums awarded against the defendant parents ($1,645.84 in favor of the minor plaintiff and $3,354.16 in favor of his father) exactly total the $5,000 limitation imposed by Vehicle Code, section 352, as to which the jury were instructed, and plaintiffs have not objected to the division thus made. Likewise, the sums awarded the minor plaintiff ($13,354.16 against the minor defendant and $1,645.84 against the defendant parents) total $15,000, which so far as appears from the record the jury may have intended as general damages to the minor plaintiff.

[19] In reliance upon Aynes v. Winans (1948), 33 Cal.2d 206, 200 P.2d 533, defendants also urge that an objection to a judgment entered upon the verdict can be made for the first time by a motion for new trial. Although the present record shows the making by defendants of such a motion and the denial thereof by the court, there is no showing that the form or amounts of either the verdict or the judgment were mentioned during the proceedings. Further, in the cited case, in which the judgment entered by the court after construing the verdict was reversed and remanded for a new trial on the issue of damages alone, the court was dealing with the statutory liability of a motor vehicle owner under the imputed negligence provisions of section 402 of the Vehicle Code. That section provides, in favor of the owner, that upon "recovery of judgment, recourse shall first be had against the property of * * * [the] operator * * * [who has been] served," and also that an owner against whom recovery is had is subrogated to all the rights of the person injured and may recover from the operator the amount of any judgment and costs recovered against the owner. No such provisions in favor of parents, who, as here, are held liable under section 352 by reason of signing and verifying a minor's application for a license, are contained in that section, and consequently no prejudice to them from separate verdicts and judgments, as was held to exist in the Aynes case, is shown.

For the reasons stated, the judgment is affirmed.

D. Brandon Bernstein, Beverly Hills, and Robert P. Dockeray, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Norman H. Sokolow and William E. James, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

Appeal by defendant Mary Penny from a judgment of conviction of involuntary manslaughter.

Defendant was charged with a violation of section 192, subdivision 2, of the Penal Code. That section provides that manslaughter is the unlawful killing of a human being, without malice. "2. Involuntary—in the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to felony; or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection; provided that this subdivision shall not apply to acts committed in the driving of a vehicle."

For seven years defendant had been engaged in "face rejuvenation" in the city of Los Angeles. It is conceded that she had no license from either the Cosmetology Board or the Medical Board of this state; she did have a business license from the city of Los Angeles for the business of "Face Rejuvenation."

Defendant had a year's training with a Madame Bergeron (now deceased) in Los Angeles and approximately three months training with one Geraldine Gorman in New York. In New York, she received the formula which she used in her work. The formula consisted of one ounce of water, a heaping tablespoon of resorcinol (of the same chemical group) and sixteen drops of phenol (carbolic acid).

Kay Stanley, the victim, had consulted with defendant some seven months earlier about having her face treated to remove wrinkles and pock marks, but did not have the money to do it at that time. Around Easter time of 1953, she again asked defendant to treat her face, but defendant was to be away and could not do it then. On the morning of May 4, 1953, Kay Stanley arrived at about ten in the morning at defendant's home where she was to stay during the treatment. Kay's face was first washed with warm water and soda; the formula was then applied with a cotton wrapped wooden applicator to Kay's cheeks, a square inch at a time. After each application, the area was pressed with sterile gauze to remove excess moisture. The entire forehead was covered as well as the eyelids, the process taking about two hours. The treated area was then covered with gauze and taped with small pieces of tape which overlapped and covered the area; regular waterproof adhesive tape was then put on over the other tape; this formed a mask over the upper portion of the patient's face. After the taping had been completed, Kay walked to an adjoining room where she had lunch, listened to the radio and looked at magazines. At approximately six in the evening, defendant proceeded to treat the lower half of Kay's face in the same manner as she had treated the upper portion which took about three quarters of an hour. When the treatment was completed, Kay asked defendant if she could sit up for awhile before the taping was started; she sounded sleepy. The defendant told her she could and said she would get her a glass of water. When defendant returned with the water, Kay said, "I feel a little bit faint" and lay back as though in a faint. Defendant asked her how she felt but received no answer. When defendant tried to lift her she found she was dead weight and felt that she had fainted. Defendant tried unsuccessfully to call a Dr. Wallace and left a message for him; she then called a nurse-an aesthetist who arrived at the house about ten or fifteen minutes later. Mrs. Jevne, the nurse, tried to take the patient's pulse without success; there was no respiration. She then administered Coramine, a heart stimulant by hypodermic needle, in the arm; she then gave a hypodermic injection of Metrazol, another stimulant; she then tried artificial respiration and caffeine benzoate. She told defendant to call the doctor again. Dr. Wallace arrived about an hour after Mrs. Jevne did and examined the lady whom he found lying on the treatment table. He was able to feel no pulse and there was no respiration. He noticed signs indicating death had existed for some period of time.

Defendant called her attorney who called the police.

The finding, after an autopsy had been had, was that the immediate cause of death was phenol (carbolic acid) poisoning and edema of the glottis due to "application of phenol-containing mixture to the face and neck." Other findings were that 5.1 milligrams of phenol per 100 grams were found in the liver and 2.9 milligrams of phenol per 100 grams were found in the blood of the victim. It was the opinion of Dr. Newbarr, prosecution witness and Chief Autopsy Surgeon for the Los Angeles coroner's office, that these findings were the result of the application of a solution containing more than 10% phenol to the face and neck of the victim. It was the opinion of Mr. Abernathy, the toxicologist, that the reddish-brown discoloration of the victim's face was a third degree burn caused by phenol, and that the normal finding of phenol in a normal human being would be practically zero.

There was evidence in the record which showed that the victim had been taking reducing pills prescribed by a Texas doctor; that in order to obtain replacement of the pills, it was necessary for her to have her heart examined and blood pressure taken by a local doctor; that prior to going to the defendant's home for the face rejuvenation treatment she had had her heart and pulse examined and her blood pressure taken and that all findings were normal.

[1] The defendant testified that when she first received the formula for face rejuvenation she had it analyzed and that it contained only 3.1% phenol. The defense also took the position that the victim may have had an allergy to phenol which was the cause of death. Dr. Newbarr testified for the prosecution and gave, as his opinion, that the solution contained over 10% phenol and that the findings were not consistent with the theory of allergy. Dr. Johnstone testified for the defense and it was his opinion that the solution contained approximately 3% phenol; that when applied to the skin it would not cause death; that all autopsy findings were consistent with the theory that the victim was allergic to phenol. Without going into great detail, it seems sufficient to note that the medical testimony was in direct conflict. Defendant's argument that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment insofar as the cause of death is concerned is without merit. The testimony is ample to show that the victim died of phenol poisoning.

[2, 3] Defendant's argument that Dr. Newbarr was "allowed" to give an "unsupported and incompetent opinion" that the solution contained more than 10% phenol is also without merit. Dr. Newbarr was found to be qualified by the trial court; his opinion was based on his reading on the subject, his own observation of the victim, and his own previous experiences. The qualifications of an expert witness are for the trial court, People v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 27 Cal.App.2d 725, 81 P.2d 584, and any question as to the degree of his knowledge goes to the weight of his testimony rather than as to its admissibility. Howland v. Oakland Consol. St. Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 513, 42 P. 983; Pfingsten v. Westenhaver, 39 Cal.2d 12, 244 P.2d 395; In re Estate of Johnson, 100 Cal.App.2d 73, 223 P.2d 105. Defendant's argument that the testimony of her witness, Dr. Johnstone, was uncontradicted is also without merit. Dr. Johnstone's testimony merely created a conflict in the evidence and it was the function of the trier of fact to resolve that conflict.

Instructions:

Defendant contends that the following instruction was without basis in the evidence. "Any licensed cosmetologist who applies to any human being a solution of phenol greater than ten per cent is guilty of a misdemeanor.

"This is an unlawful act not amounting to a felony. Business & Professions Code, Section 7415." (Emphasis added.)

As heretofore pointed out, it is admitted that defendant was not licensed as a cosmetologist.

It is contended that the just quoted instruction was calculated to mislead and confuse the jury when considered with the following instruction: "Every person who engages in, or attempts to engage in, the practice of cosmetology or any branch thereof without a license therefore issued by the State Board of Cosmetology or in an establishment other than one licensed by the State Board of Cosmetology is guilty of a misdemeanor.

"The art of cosmetology includes the beautifying of the face, neck, arms, bust or upper part of the human body, by the use of cosmetic preparations, antiseptics, tonics, lotions or creams.

"A violation of this law is an unlawful act not amounting to a felony. Business & Professions Code, Section 7325; Business & Professions Code, Section 7321(b) [sic] [c]."

It is argued that under these two instructions defendant could have been convicted (1) if the jury believed she used a solution containing more than 10% phenol and had a license; or (2) that she was guilty because she was required to have a license and had none.

[4-6] There can be no doubt but that the instruction concerning a "licensed" cosmetologist was erroneous and that it had no foundation in the evidence. On the issue of defendant's guilt, the jury could well have inferred that she was guilty of the crime by reasoning that even a licensed cosmetologist could not use a solution containing more than 10% phenol. So far as the second instruction is concerned, it is supported by the evidence and correctly stated the law as it relates to those practicing cosmetology and the persons considered engaged in that practice. It appears to us that as a matter of law, defendant was engaged in the practice of cosmetology and the jury should have been so instructed.

We said in People v. Thomas, 25 Cal.2d 880, 897, 156 P.2d 7, that the responsibility of statutory construction should not be left to the jury; that the interpretation of a statute and the question of its applicability to any given set of facts are exclusively the province of the court.

[7] The next question which presents itself is whether defendant's lack of a license (and the fact that she was, therefore, guilty of a misdemeanor) was the cause of Mrs. Stanley's death. Section 192, subd. 2 of the Penal Code provides that a person is guilty of involuntary manslaughter if a human being is unlawfully killed "in the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to felony; * * *." The jury was instructed that defendant's conduct must have been the proximate cause of the death. The People argue that the law requiring licensing of those practicing cosmetology was designed to prevent injury to others and that one who violates such a law may be guilty of manslaughter if death is caused thereby, citing People v. Mitchell, 27 Cal.2d 678, 683, 166 P.2d 10, 13. The Mitchell case involved section 500 of the Vehicle Code which provided "When the death of any person ensues within one year as the proximate result of injuries caused by the driving of any vehicle with reckless disregard * * *," and is not applicable here. Moreover, in the Mitchell case it was specifically noted that the provisions of the Penal Code, § 192, defining involuntary manslaughter should not apply to homicide caused by the driving of any vehicle. In People v. Kerrick, 86 Cal.App. 542, 548, 261 P. 756, 758, a case factually dissimilar to the one under consideration, the court said: "We cannot ignore the element of causation in the unlawful act necessary to connect it with the offense. In our ordinary phraseology we refer to the result of this element by saying it must be the probable consequence naturally flowing from the commission of the unlawful act." A causal connection was also held essential in People v. Goodale, 33 Cal.App.2d 80, 83, 91 P.2d 163, People v. Hurley, 13 Cal.App.2d 208, 56 P.2d 978, and People v. Freudenberg, 121 Cal. App.2d 564, 263 P.2d 875. It is extremely dubious that defendant's lack of a license had any causal connection with Mrs. Stanley's death and yet it should be noted that the statute, Bus. & Prof.Code, § 7415, provides that if a licensed cosmetologist uses a solution of phenol greater than 10% on any human being, he, or she, is guilty of a misdemeanor. Had defendant been a licensed cosmetologist, under the evidence she would have been guilty of a misdemeanor, and, as a result, the first clause of section 192, subd. 2 of the Penal Code would have been directly applicable.

Another question which presents itself is whether defendant was guilty of an unlawful act in applying a solution containing phenol and resorcinol to the human face and neck with the knowledge that both chemicals were poisonous. The statute providing that a licensed cosmetologist may not use a solution containing greater than 10% phenol without being guilty of a misdemeanor sets the standard for licensed persons in that profession or occupation. In discussing the violation of a criminal statute as a basis for a suit for civil damages, we said in Clinkscales v. Carver, 22 Cal.2d 72, 75, 136 P.2d 777, 778, "When a legislative body has generalized a standard from the experience of the community and prohibits conduct that is likely to cause harm, the court accepts the formulated standards and applies them [citations], except where they would serve to impose liability without fault." Is defendant, who was as a matter of law, practicing cosmetology, to be judged by the same standards as a licensed cosmetologist? The record shows that face rejuvenation, as practiced by defendant, was done to make the face look younger and fresher. The "art of cosmetology" is defined as that which beautifies the face, or neck, by the use of "cosmetic preparations, antiseptics, tonics, lotions or creams." It would appear that the legislative standard set for licensed cosmetologists in the interest of the public health and safety, could, conceivably, be considered applicable to defendant had the jury been so instructed.

Due Caution and Circumspection:

The second clause of section 192, subd. 2 of the Penal Code provides that one is guilty of manslaughter if a human being is killed in the commission of a "lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection * * *." It has been held that without "due caution and circumspection" is the equivalent of "criminal negligence", People v. Driggs, 111 Cal.App. 42, 295 P. 51; People v. Hurley, supra, 13 Cal.App.2d 208, 56 P.2d 978, and the jury was so instructed. However, the jury was also instructed that "Due caution and circumspection * * * mean such caution and circumspection as are reasonably appropriate to avoid injury to one's self and others, under the conditions at hand as they would be viewed by an ordinarily reasonable person in the same situation as the person whose conduct is in question. To exercise due care and circumspection is to take those proper precautions which a person of ordinary prudence would use in the same circumstances." Defendant contends this instruction was prejudicially erroneous in that it gave the jury the civil standard of negligence as a guide in a case where criminal negligence was involved.

If we assume that a treatment aimed at removing wrinkles from the human face is a "lawful act," it must next be determined whether such act was one which "might cause death." Defendant admitted she knew the substances used were poisons; that they were dangerous substances; that their indiscriminate use could be dangerous. Inasmuch as defendant was knowingly using poison in her treatment solution, the jury could have concluded that her treatment was one which could have caused death.

The jury was also instructed that "The doing of an act ordinarily lawful which results in the death of a human being may be manslaughter where the act, being one which might cause death, is performed in an unlawful manner or without due caution and circumspection. When a person is doing anything dangerous in itself or has charge of anything dangerous in its use and acts with reference thereto without taking those proper precautions which a person of ordinary prudence would have used under the circumstances and the death of another results therefrom, his act or neglect is a criminal act against the person so killed." The People contend that these two instructions harmonize with the case of People v. Pociask, 14 Cal.2d 679, 683-684, 96 P.2d 788. The Pociask case involved a death resulting from a violation of section 500 of the Vehicle Code then in effect which referred to the driving of any vehicle in a "negligent manner." The court there said in answering the question of what constitutes criminal negligence, that the court is bound to apply an appropriate definition enacted by the Legislature and that section 500 of the Vehicle Code had made criminal the negligent driving of a vehicle which caused injuries to another proximately resulting in death within the time specified in the section.

While the last quoted instruction was substantially¹ that which was used in People

1. The following words were omitted from the instruction in the instant case: "even though his negligence does not amount to a wanton or reckless disregard of human safety or life."

v. Wilson, 193 Cal. 512, 226 P. 5 (an automobile case) and approved in the Pociask case, the court specifically noted that what might "amount to a lack of 'due caution and circumspection' in cases of involuntary manslaughter committed in the doing of a lawful act, or what may constitute the driving of a vehicle 'in a negligent manner', are questions to be decided by the jury according to the particular facts in each case guided by appropriate instructions from the court." [14 Cal.2d 679, 96 P.2d 792.]

Defendant relies on the rules set forth in People v. Driggs, supra, 111 Cal.App. 42, 295 P. 51, and People v. Hurley, supra, 13 Cal.App.2d 208, 56 P.2d 978, wherein the rule was said to be: "In order to constitute criminal negligence, there must enter into the act some measure of wantonness or flagrant or reckless disregard of the safety of others, or willful indifference. If no one of these elements enter into the act, the person charged cannot be held guilty of criminal negligence." People v. Driggs, 111 Cal. App. at page 47, 295 P. at page 53. As we read the Pociask case which approved the instruction given in People v. Wilson, supra, 193 Cal. 512, 226 P. 5, which was almost² the same as that here given, wherein it is said, 14 Cal.2d at page 684, 96 P.2d at page 792, "Anything in the Driggs and Hurley cases inconsistent therewith must be deemed to be disapproved" it appears that the requirement of wantonness, flagrant or reckless disregard of the safety of others, or wilful indifference, was deleted from the definition of criminal negligence or lack of due care and circumspection.

The law in California as to what constitutes "criminal negligence" or a lack of "due caution and circumspection" is confused.

The cases of People v. Driggs, supra, 111 Cal.App. 42, 295 P. 51, and People v. Hurley, supra, 13 Cal.App.2d 208, 56 P.2d 978, which held that some measure of wantonness or flagrant or reckless disregard of the safety of others must enter into defendant's conduct before he could be held guilty of criminal negligence, were disapproved in People v. Pociask, supra. The Driggs case involved assault with intent to commit murder; the Hurley case involved death caused by the driving of an automobile. The Pociask case which disapproved them involved the negligent driving of an automobile and the interpretation of a statute (former section 500, Vehicle Code) which specifically made criminal the negligent driving of a vehicle. The instruction in People v. Wilson, supra, 193 Cal. 512, 226 P. 5) which is substantially the same as the one here involved) was approved by the Pociask case. The Wilson case was a manslaughter conviction arising out of the negligent driving of a motor vehicle. The court in the Pociask case, supra, comments on the opinion of the Supreme Court in denying a hearing in the case of People v. Seiler, 57 Cal.App. 195, 207 P. 396, 399, wherein it was said: "The statute (Pen. Code, § 192, subd. 2) defines involuntary manslaughter of this specific character as the unlawful killing of a human being, involuntarily, but 'in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death * * * without due caution and circumspection.' In order to constitute this kind of manslaughter the act may be lawful, but it must be one which might produce death, and which does produce death, and it must be committed without due caution and circumspection. The lack of due caution and circumspection need not go to the extent of being wanton or reckless, although it might possibly be such as would be defined as culpable." (Emphasis added.) In 1941 the negligent homicide statute, Veh.Code, § 500, was amended by deleting the words "in a negligent manner or in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to felony" and substituting therefor "with reckless disregard of, or wilful indifference to, the safety of others". In People v. Young, 20 Cal.2d 832, 129 P.2d 353, the court concluded that in amending the statute the Legislature intended that something more than ordinary negligence was to be required as a basis for criminal liability thereunder and that the phrase used in the amendment must be considered as being similar in meaning to wilful misconduct. People v. Murray, 58 Cal.App.2d 239, 136 P.2d 389; People v.

2. See previous footnote.

Freeman, 61 Cal.App.2d 110, 142 P.2d 435. In 1943, the negligent homicide statute, Veh.Code, § 500, was repealed, Stats.1943, ch. 421, § 1. At the same time, the Legislature, Stats.1943, ch. 421, § 2, amended the Penal Code, section 193, so that it provided a smaller penalty for involuntary manslaughter resulting from the operation of a vehicle. In 1945, Penal Code section 192 was amended, Stats.1945, ch. 1006, pp. 1942-1943, to its present form. At present, different standards are set forth for deaths caused through the operation of a vehicle and deaths otherwise caused. We are here concerned with a death occurring other than by vehicle and with the meaning of the words "due caution and circumspection". It would appear that a definite line should be drawn as to the meaning to be given the words "due caution and circumspection" and the words "gross negligence" as used in the sections involving vehicles, 192, subd. 3(a, b), and that a workable and usable rule of law should be formulated for the future. A resume of the cases will show the confusion which exists with respect to the proper definition of criminal negligence or lack of due caution and circumspection as it relates to involuntary manslaughter.

People v. Driggs, supra, 111 Cal.App. 42, 47, 295 P. 51, 53, involved an assault with intent to commit murder. The rule was said to be: "In order to constitute criminal negligence [lack of due caution and circumspection], there must enter into the act some measure of wantonness or flagrant or reckless disregard of the safety of others, or willful indifference. If no one of these elements enter into the act, the person charged cannot be held guilty of criminal negligence." This rule was erroneously, 28 Cal. L.Rev. 418, 520, disapproved in People v. Pociask, supra, 14 Cal.2d 679, 684, 96 P.2d 788. The Pociask case involved the interpretation of former section 500 of the Vehicle Code which made mere negligent driving a criminal offense.

In People v. Anderson, 58 Cal.App. 267, 208 P. 324, there are no facts set forth from which it can be ascertained how the homicide was accomplished, but it is obvious that it was not by motor vehicle. The court there held, citing a motor vehicle case (denial of petition for hearing, opinion by Supreme Court, People v. Seiler, supra, 57 Cal.App. 195, 207 P. 396), that the lack of due caution and circumspection need not go to the extent of being wanton or reckless, although it might possibly be such as would be defined as culpable. The court concluded it was not necessary to instruct the jury on the meaning of due caution and circumspection.

In People v. Sidwell, 29 Cal.App. 12, 154 P. 290, defendant was charged with involuntary manslaughter; the death occurred through the medium of a revolver. It was there held, 29 Cal.App. at page 17, 154 P. at page 292, that "it will be observed that, while involuntary manslaughter may be committed in two different ways, the Legislature has not recognized, as between those two ways [192.2], any distinction in the degree of turpitude characterizing that crime. In other words, the crime is that of involuntary manslaughter whether the killing be committed in the execution of an unlawful act, etc., or in the execution of a lawful act, etc., or where death, not willfully or intentionally produced, is, nevertheless, caused by the gross or culpable negligence of the defendant—negligence which, in degree, goes so far beyond that negligence merely which suffices to impose a civil liability for damages as to constitute it criminal negligence for which the party guilty of it may be held criminally liable." (Emphasis added.)

In People v. Sica, 76 Cal.App. 648, 651, 245 P. 461, 462, it was held that the "reckless" handling of firearms so as to cause death constituted manslaughter committed in the commission of a lawful act, which might produce death, "without due caution and circumspection".

In People v. Searle, 33 Cal.App. 228, 231, 164 P. 819, 820, the homicide was committed through criminal negligence in handling a gun. The court said, "An unintentional homicide committed through the negligent handling of a firearm in a way indicating a reckless disregard of life is manslaughter. It is negligence to point a firearm at another without examining to see whether or not it is loaded, or to handle or use it in a place where a discharge is likely to injure another, as in a highway.' Michie on Homicide, vol. 1, p. 253."

In People v. Mount, 93 Cal.App. 81, 269 P. 177, 180, a death resulted because of an abortion and defendant was convicted of manslaughter. It was noted that the deceased came to her death by reason of the "gross negligence" of defendant and his "negligence" and "careless and incompetent treatment".

In People v. Montecino, 66 Cal.App.2d 85, 102, 152 P.2d 5, 14, which involved the death of an elderly, bedridden woman by reason of the brutal treatment and lack of care on the part of defendant, the court held that "it is established in the State of California that involuntary manslaughter may result even though the conduct of the offender is not wanton or reckless. See comment by the Supreme Court in denying a hearing in People v. Seiler, 1922, 57 Cal.App. 195, 201, 207 P. 396, 399 * * *." The Seiler case, as heretofore noted, was a negligent driving case.

In People v. Chavez, 77 Cal.App.2d 621, 628, 176 P.2d 92, 96, defendant was convicted of involuntary manslaughter because she failed to use "due care" or "any of the care" necessary for the welfare of her newborn baby. It was said: "While it is conceivable that in some such cases the mental and physical condition of a mother, at the time, might prevent her from exercising that reasonable care which would ordinarily be required * * *" that such was not the case at hand. (Emphasis added.)

In People v. Neff, 117 Cal.App.2d 772, 257 P.2d 47, death occurred by reason of carbon monoxide escaping from a badly vented gas heater. The court there cited the automobile-manslaughter cases, particularly People v. Pociask, supra, 14 Cal.2d 679, 96 P.2d 788, and People v. Seiler, supra, 57 Cal.App. 195, 207 P. 396, in discussing the instructions given. The following instruction was given there [117 Cal.App.2d 772, 257 P.2d 53]: "Due caution and circumspection, as those words are used in the instruction just given, mean such caution and circumspection as are reasonably appropriate to avoid injury to one's self and others, under the conditions at hand as they would be viewed by an ordinarily reasonable person in the same situation as the person whose conduct is in question. To exercise due care and circumspection is to take those proper precautions which a person of ordinary prudence would use in the same circumstances. [Conduct does not need to amount to wantonness or to recklessness to show and to constitute a lack of due care and circumspection.]" The District Court of Appeal there held: "The court should not have included in its instructions the statement to the effect that [a lack of] due caution and circumspection need not amount to wantonness or recklessness. People's instruction No. 16, except for the statement therein in brackets (to the effect that the conduct need not amount to wantonness or recklessness), was a proper instruction." 117 Cal.App.2d at page 785, 257 P.2d at page 55. This statement could mean an approval of former decisions that wantonness or recklessness was necessary, or just an attempt to satisfy former decisions as they related to vehicle-manslaughter.

In People v. Freudenberg, supra, 121 Cal. App.2d 564, 580, 263 P.2d 875, 885, where death resulted from a firearm, the jury was held properly instructed as follows: "The doing of an act ordinarily lawful which results in the death of a human being may be manslaughter where the act, being one which might cause death, is performed in an unlawful manner or without due caution or circumspection. When a person is doing anything dangerous in itself or has charge of anything dangerous in its use and acts with reference thereto without taking those proper precautions which a person of ordinary prudence would have used under the circumstances, and the death of another results therefrom, his act or neglect is a criminal act against the person so killed even though his negligence does not amount to a wanton or reckless disregard of human safety or life."³ (Emphasis added.)

In People v. Mahoney, 201 Cal. 618, 629, 258 P. 607, defectively constructed grandstands collapsed and a woman was killed as a result thereof. While very few facts appear in the opinion, the court said: "The prosecution of the appellant was had under section 192 of the Penal Code, defining the crime of manslaughter, and upon the theory that in the erection and construction of the stands the appellant did not exercise due caution and circumspection. We deem it unnecessary to review the nearly 2,000 pages of testimony taken in the court below. It suffices to say that there is evidence from which the jury might well conclude that the grandstand which collapsed was so negligently constructed as to be unable to carry the tremendous load placed upon it." (Emphasis added.) It would appear that in this particular case, "negligence" and "due caution and circumspection" were considered synonymous.

3. Emphasized portion is not found in instruction in present case.

In People v. McGee, 31 Cal.2d 229, 238, 187 P.2d 706, 712, which involved a manslaughter conviction it was held proper to give the code definition of involuntary manslaughter, Pen.Code, § 192, subd. 2, because "If defendant, as he testified, discharged the pistol with intent only to frighten and not to shoot, deceased, and such act was not done in the exercise of defendant's right of self-defense, he could be found guilty of involuntary manslaughter. (See Davis v. Commonwealth, 193 Ky. 597, 237 S.W. 24, 23 A.L.R. 1551, 1554; Hamilton Fire Ins. Co. v. Greger, 246 N.Y. 162, 158 N.E. 60, 55 A.L.R. 921.) The instruction appropriately covers evidence which the jury could—and may—have found true."

In People v. Southack, 39 Cal.2d 578, 584, 248 P.2d 12, 15, a manslaughter case involving a gun the court said: "The above summarized evidence is sufficient to support a finding of manslaughter, either voluntary in 'heat of passion', Pen.Code, § 192, subd. 1, or involuntary. The involuntary manslaughter might be 'in the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to felony' (Pen.Code, § 192, subd. 2), for it could be found that defendant unlawfully exhibited the gun in an angry manner, a misdemeanor (Pen.Code, § 417), or it might be 'in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection' (Pen.Code, § 192, subd. 2), for it could be found that defendant was simply holding the gun but that he was negligent in so doing. (See People v. McGee (1947), 31 Cal.2d 229, 238, 187 P.2d 706; People v. Carmen (1951), 36 Cal.2d 768, 774, 228 P.2d 281.)" (Emphasis added.)

We have here endeavored to set forth as many cases involving involuntary manslaughter by means other than vehicle as could be found in the California Reports to show the earliest and latest pronouncements of this court and any appellate court on the subject. The earliest case found on the subject was People v. Keefer, 1861, 18 Cal. 636, wherein the court said: "We know nothing of the facts of the case, and intimate no opinion as to the merits of the controversy." It was also said, by way of discussion, that "No doubt exists that a man may be guilty of manslaughter under some circumstances by his mere carelessness. But this rule has no application to a statutory offense like that of which the defendant was convicted." (Emphasis added.) The Driggs case, supra, since overruled, pointed out that some measure of wantonness, recklessness, or the like must enter the picture before one could be guilty of criminal negligence, or a lack of due caution and circumspection. So far as the latest cases are concerned, it appears that mere negligence is sufficient to constitute a lack of due caution and circumspection under the manslaughter statute, Pen.Code, § 192, subd. 2. This does not appear to be a correct rule. Something more, in our opinion, is needed to constitute the criminal negligence required for a conviction of manslaughter.

A note in 161 A.L.R. 10, entitled "Homicide Through Culpable Negligence" seeks to reconcile the California cases. It is suggested, at page 50, that section 20 of the Penal Code provides that "In every crime or public offense there must exist a union, or joint operation of act and intent, or criminal negligence"; that section 7, subdivision 2, of the Penal Code provides that "The words 'neglect,' 'negligence,' 'negligent,' and 'negligently' import a want of such attention to the nature or probable consequences of the act or omission as a prudent man ordinarily bestows in acting in his own concerns;" and that these two sections have "perhaps" influenced the California courts' interpretation of "criminal negligence." It is pointed out that the general rule is that something more than ordinary negligence is needed to constitute either culpable negligence or criminal negligence under involuntary manslaughter statutes.

Two law review notes, 25 Cal.L.Rev. 1; 28 Cal.L.Rev. 518, seek to harmonize the negligent homicide decisions (under the Vehicle Code) with the involuntary manslaughter ones in California. It should be noted that these articles were both written prior to 1945 when the involuntary manslaughter statute was enacted in its present form.

It is pointed out in 28 Cal.L.Rev. 518, 519, that a review of the available authority of the half century prior to 1872 (when section 20 of the Penal Code was enacted) supports the conclusion that "criminal negligence" had a common-law meaning at that time which must be referred to in determining the effect of its inclusion in section 20. The English reports of the period reveal a well-established rule that gross negligence is necessary in criminal prosecutions, and that the term "criminal negligence" was used along with many others to characterize the degree of neglect required. It is said that there was nothing to show that the Legislature intended to except section 192 of the Penal Code from the operation of section 20 of the same code. In speaking of People v. Pociask, 14 Cal.2d 679, 96 P.2d 788, it was noted that "having disposed of the defendant's argument by holding that 'criminal negligence' was not necessary under section 500 of the Vehicle Code, it was not necessary for the court to resolve the conflict between the Driggs and Hurley cases, requiring an element of wantonness as contended by defendant, and previous cases holding that deliberate disregard of the safety of others is not necessary to a prosecution for manslaughter; yet the court took the occasion to repudiate the two cases relied upon by defendant. Neither the previous authority nor the principal case hold that civil negligence is sufficient in manslaughter cases, but only that offered definitions of 'due caution and circumspection' were incorrect or else did not add anything. Still other California cases, never overruled, require a degree of negligence beyond that necessary to civil liability, so there is still room for doubt as to how the court conceives 'criminal negligence' to be defined in section 192." It is concluded that an instruction that a defendant should not be convicted of manslaughter for the usual lack of ordinary care would be much more favorable to the defendant, more understandable and more in accord with the established practice in most other jurisdictions than the supposedly self-explanatory "due caution and circumspection".

In the other note, 25 Cal.L.Rev. 1, 30, is found this statement: "The main question is, therefore, what does 'without due caution and circumspection' mean; what degree of culpability is required? The law on this point seems in California to be less settled and less clear than in other jurisdictions." After quoting an instruction identical with the one in the present case except for the words "even though his negligence does not amount to a wanton or reckless disregard of human safety or life" which are not present in our case, the writer notes that "It is not easy to understand the true significance of this rule. Did the supreme court therein formulate the proposition that ordinary (civil) negligence would suffice to constitute manslaughter? Certainly California has widened the concept of criminal negligence necessary to constitute manslaughter further than most of the other jurisdictions. But it does not seem correct to say that the quoted passages from People v. Seiler and People v. Wilson [both automobile-manslaughter cases] are authority for the proposition that the negligence which suffices as the basis for civil liability and the negligence which is the foundation for criminal liability under the manslaughter statute are of the same degree. To be sure the language of the court contains a term which is customarily used in the definition of civil negligence, namely, the following: 'precautions which a person of ordinary prudence could have used under the circumstances.' But as a whole the definition differs from that of ordinary negligence, including, as it does, the element of something dangerous in itself or in its use. Furthermore, the court admitted in the quoted passage from People v. Seiler that the lack of due caution and circumspection might be such as would be defined as culpable, even though this word was not considered to be a proper term to convey the significance of due caution and circumspection."

In the two most recently filed civil liability cases before this court, Jensen v. Minard, 44 Cal.2d 325, 282 P.2d 7, and Warner v. Santa Catalina Island Co., 44 Cal.2d 310, 282 P.2d 12, we were concerned with personal injuries occurring because of the negligent handling of dangerous instrumentalities (a gun, and shooting gallery cartridges). We concluded, in both cases, that the standard of care in such cases was so great that a slight deviation therefrom would constitute negligence. In the case at hand, the jury was instructed in part that "When a person is doing anything dangerous in itself or has charge of anything dangerous in its use and acts with reference thereto without taking those proper precautions which a person of ordinary prudence would have used under the circumstances and the death of another results therefrom, his act or neglect is a criminal act against the person so killed." It appears that this instruction is the same principle we have so recently applied in civil liability cases.

[8,9] The statute, Pen.Code, § 192, subd. 2, provides (in part) that in order to convict a person of involuntary manslaughter, there shall be an unlawful killing of a human being in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death without due caution and circumspection. The words lack of "due caution and circumspection" have been heretofore held to be the equivalent of "criminal negligence", Pen.Code, § 20. The general rule is set forth in 26 Am.Jur., Homicide, § 210, p.

299, as follows: "The authorities are agreed, in the absence of statutory regulations denouncing certain acts as criminal, that in order to impose criminal liability for a homicide caused by negligence, there must be a higher degree of negligence than is required to establish negligent default on a mere civil issue. The negligence must be aggravated, culpable, gross, or reckless, that is, the conduct of the accused must be such a departure from what would be the conduct of an ordinarily prudent or careful man under the same circumstances as to be incompatible with a proper regard for human life, or, in other words, a disregard of human life or an indifference to consequences." The article continues thus: "Aside from the facts that a more culpable degree of negligence is required in order to establish a criminal homicide than is required in a civil action for damages and that contributory negligence is not a defense, criminal responsibility for a negligent homicide is ordinarily to be determined pursuant to the general principles of negligence, the fundamental of which is knowledge, actual or imputed, that the act of the slayer tended to endanger life. The facts must be such that the fatal consequence of the negligent act could reasonably have been foreseen. It must appear that the death was not the result of misadventure, but the natural and probable result of a reckless or culpably negligent act."

[10] We hold, therefore, that the general rule just quoted, sets forth the standard to be used in California for negligent homicide, Pen.Code, § 192, subd. 2, in other than vehicle cases. Defendant here was charged with a violation of section 192, subdivision 2, of the Penal Code. The jury should have been instructed according to the rule which generally prevails in this country as to what constitutes criminal negligence, or lack of due caution and circumspection so that her guilt or innocence might be determined in accord therewith.

Because of the errors heretofore noted, the judgment is reversed.

Cr. 989.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

July 13, 1955.

Prosecution for leaving the scene of an accident without complying with requirements of law. The Superior Court, San Bernardino County, Jesse W. Curtis, Jr., J., granted motion to dismiss information. State appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that evidence that accused was driver of vehicle involved in accident resulting in injury to another driver, and that accused did not comply with requirements of statute providing for identification and rendering assistance to injured, was sufficient to support information.

Order reversed.

1. Indictment and Information ☞10.2(8)

In prosecution for leaving the scene of an accident without making proper identification and rendering assistance to injured, evidence that accused was driver of automobile involved in accident that resulted in injury to other driver, and that accused failed to comply with requirements of law was sufficient to support information. Vehicle Code, §§ 480, 482(a).

2. Criminal Law ☞412(1)

In prosecution for leaving the scene of an accident without complying with requirements of law, evidence of statements of accused made to officer at time accused filed accident report were admissible, although report itself was not admissible. Vehicle Code, §§ 480, 482(a), 488.

County, and Edward F. Taylor, Deputy Dist. Atty., San Bernardino, for appellant.

Julius J. Novack, San Bernardino, for respondent.

MUSSELL, Justice.

Defendant was charged with the crime of violation of section 480 of the California Vehicle Code. It was alleged in the Information that Robert Chase Misner "On or about the 1st day of October, 1954, in the said County of San Bernardino, State of California, being then and there the driver of a vehicle upon a public highway, which said vehicle was then and there involved in an accident resulting in injury to a human being, to wit: Wayne Edwin Ledyard, did then and there wilfully, unlawfully and feloniously fail to fulfill the requirements of section 482(a) of the California Vehicle Code.

Section 480 of the Vehicle Code provides as follows:

"Accidents Involving Death or Personal Injuries. The driver of any vehicle involved in an accident resulting in injury to * * * or death of any person shall immediately stop such vehicle at the scene of such accident and shall fulfill the requirements of section 482(a) hereof and any person failing to stop or to comply with said requirements under such circumstances is guilty of a public offense and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment in the state prison for not less than one year nor more than five years or in the county jail for not to exceed one year or by fine of not to exceed five thousand ($5000) dollars or by both."

Section 482(a) of said code provides as follows:

"[Accident resulting in injury to or death of person.] The driver of any vehicle involved in an accident resulting in injury to or death of any person shall also give his name, address and the registration number of the vehicle he is driving, the name of the owner, and shall upon request and if available exhibit his operator's or chauffeur's license to the person struck or the driver or occupants of any vehicle collided with or shall give such information and exhibit such license to any traffic or police officer at the scene of the accident and shall render to any person injured in such accident reasonable assistance, including the carrying or the making arrangements for the carrying of such person to a physician, surgeon or hospital for medical or surgical treatment if it is apparent that such treatment is necessary or if such carrying is requested by the injured person."

Defendant was arraigned in the Superior Court and moved to dismiss the information upon the ground that he had been committed without reasonable or probable cause. The motion to dismiss was granted, the court holding that "The transcript does not show or give reasonable suspicion of an offense having been committed." The People appeal from this order.

The transcript of the preliminary examination shows that at about 10:00 o'clock p. m. on October 1, 1954, W. E. Ledyard was driving his automobile in an easterly direction on Kendall Drive near the city of San Bernardino. Kendall Drive runs generally east and west and intersects Devil's Canyon Road, which runs north and south. When Ledyard was about 200 feet from this intersection he observed a car approaching it from the south on Devil's Canyon Road. The driver of the northbound car did not stop his car at the boulevard stop sign as he entered the intersection and his car struck the eastbound car on the right side. Ledyard's eastbound car came to rest facing in a westerly direction in the westbound lane of Kendall Drive and at a point approximately 100 feet east of the intersection. Ledyard was thrown to the floor boards of his car, his back was injured and his head was cut. He crawled out of the door on the righthand side of his car and went over to the other car involved in the collision. He observed that the motor was still running in the Chrysler sedan and that there was no driver in it. He turned off the ignition, and then noticed a Ford automobile on the south side of Kendall Drive and a man standing beside it. He talked with this man (W. B. Murrel) and told him that the fellow who was driving the Chrysler was probably thrown out and that they should walk around the car a couple of times to make sure. Ledyard testified that they circled the Chrysler and found no one there; that he walked back to his car; and that he was not "feeling too good at the time."

Walter Baker Murrel, who was a passenger in the Ford car, testified that he observed the two cars collide; that he saw the Chrysler "run the stop sign"; that he saw Ledyard "cut the switch off at the Chrysler"; that he and Ledyard walked back to the Chrysler to see if they could find the driver; that he observed a man, whom he could not identify, lying on the ground about 20 feet from the Chrysler; that this man "got up and took off across the field", apparently staggering.

Sergeant Hickey of the California Highway Patrol testified that he saw the defendant on October 2, 1954, in the Highway Patrol office in San Bernardino; that Misner asked him if the form on the office counter was the report he had to fill out to report an accident; that he told Misner it was and at the same time asked him his name and the location of the accident; that Misner then told him that the accident had occurred at Devil's Canyon Road and Kendall Drive and that his name was Robert Misner; that he told Misner that in addition to the report which Misner had begun to fill out that he, Hickey, had some information he wanted to obtain from him for their own police report; that he asked Misner for his driver's license and also asked him how the accident occurred; that Misner stated he was driving north on Devil's Canyon Road and that his brakes had failed when he applied them at the stop sign at the entrance to Kendall Drive; that he asked him about running away from the accident and Misner stated that he "had not run, he had walked"; that the information he received from Misner was written into a Highway Patrol report separate from that written out by Misner.

[1] Appellant contends that the order of the trial court dismissing the information is unsupported by the record. We are in accord with this contention.

In Bompensiero v. Superior Court, etc., 44 Cal.2d 178, 183, 281 P.2d 250, 254, the court said:

"Probable cause is shown if a man of ordinary caution or prudence would be led to believe and conscientiously entertain a strong suspicion of the guilt of the accused. People v. Nagle, 25 Cal.2d 216, 222, 153 P.2d 344. An indictment will not be set aside or a prosecution thereon prohibited if there is some rational ground for assuming the possibility that an offense has been committed and the accused is guilty of it. Lorenson v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 49, 56, 59, 216 P.2d 859; cf. Greenberg v. Superior Court, 19 Cal.2d 319, 322, 121 P.2d 713."

In People v. Wisecarver, 67 Cal.App.2d 203, 209, 153 P.2d 778, 781, it was held:

"In a criminal action the sovereign has the same right to have the truth of its accusation against the defendant determined by a trial court to the same extent and in the same degree as is the accused. People v. Stoll, 143 Cal. 689, 696, 77 P. 818; People v. Pruitt, 55 Cal. App.2d 272, 275, 130 P.2d 767; People v. Borrego, 211 Cal. 759, 765, 297 P. 17. It is as much a technical breach of the rules of procedure to deny the People a trial upon an information based upon such facts as might reasonably convince a jury of defendant's guilt as it would be to convict a defendant upon the mere filing of an indictment. It is the duty of the magistrate to commit the accused 'if it appears from the examination that a public offense has been committed.' The question of guilt is utterly one for the determination of the superior court. Penal Code, § 872."

Applying the rules set forth in the foregoing decisions it is apparent that there was ample evidence to support the information and that as a result, the order setting it aside must be reversed. People v. Platt, 124 Cal.App.2d 123, 134, 268 P.2d 529. Misner was the driver of a vehicle involved in an accident resulting in injury to another driver (Ledyard) and failed to comply with the requirements of section 482(a) of the Vehicle Code. In People v. Green, 96 Cal.App.2d 283, 288, 215 P.2d 127, 130, this court held that the purpose of the "hit and run" statute is to prevent the driver of an automobile from leaving the scene of an accident in which he participates or is involved without proper identification and to compel necessary assistance to those who have been injured.

[2] It is the contention of respondent that there was no evidence other than the admission of Misner to officer Hickey to show that respondent was the driver of the Chrysler automobile and that the testimony of the officer concerning respondent's admission that he was the driver was inadmissible under the provisions of section 488 of the Vehicle Code. However, as was said in Stroud v. Hansen, 48 Cal.App.2d 556, 559, 560, 120 P.2d 102, 104:

"* * * Section 488 provides that no such report shall be used as evidence in any trial arising out of such accident. But it was not a report so provided to be made that was offered but rather the testimony of the officer as to the statements made by the driver to him. No evidence of the facts that occurred at the time of a vehicular accident is privileged. Only those reports are confidential which are so made by section 488 of the Vehicle Code. To make a statement privileged and inadmissible it must come within the express terms of the section. Dwelly v. McReynolds, 6 Cal.2d 128, 131, 56 P.2d 1232; Inouye v. McCall, 35 Cal.App.2d 634, 636, 96 P.2d 386." See also Carroll v. Beavers, 126 Cal. App.2d 828, 836, 273 P.2d 56.

In the Stroud case, as here, it was not a report which was received in evidence but rather the testimony of the officer that Misner had told him he was driving the Chrysler at the time of the accident.

The order dismissing the information is reversed.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

July 26, 1955.

Prosecution for selling marihuana cigarettes in violation of Section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code. From a judgment of conviction and order denying motion for new trial of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Charles W. Fricke, J., the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that where witness had only been interested in the purchase of the marihuana and received no compensation from accused by reason of the sale, witness was not an accomplice as he was not liable to prosecution for identical offense charged against accused, and refusal of defendant's requested instructions in regard to an accomplice was not error.

Judgment and order denying motion for new trial affirmed.

1. Criminal Law §507(1)

An accomplice must stand in the same relation to the crime as the person charged therewith and must approach it from the same direction and similarity of offenses is not the same as identity.

2. Criminal Law §507(1)

To be an accomplice one must knowingly, voluntarily, and with common intent unite with the principal offender in the commission of the crime.

3. Criminal Law §780(1)

In prosecution for selling marihuana cigarettes, witness who had only been interested in the purchase of the marihuana and had received no compensation from accused by reason of the sale was not an accomplice as he was not liable for prosecution for identical offense charged against accused, and refusal of defendant's instructions in regard to an accomplice was not error. Health and Safety Code, § 11500; Pen.Code, § 1111.

4. Criminal Law §742(2)

Where facts with respect to the participation of a witness in the crime for which the accused is on trial were clear and not disputed, it was for the trial court to determine whether witness was an accomplice.

5. Criminal Law §742(2)

Where there is evidence tending to connect the witness with a crime, but the facts are disputed or susceptible of different inferences, then the question of complicity should be submitted to the jury.

Stanley R. Malone, Jr., Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Marvin Gross, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

In an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, defendant was accused of a violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code of California, in that on or about September 18, 1954, he sold, furnished and gave away a quantity of marihuana cigarettes. Following entry of a plea of not guilty the cause proceeded to trial before a jury which returned a verdict finding defendant guilty as charged. Motion for a new trial was denied. From the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial defendant prosecutes this appeal.

We consider the following a fair statement of the evidence given in this prosecution. Defendant was employed as a parking lot attendant at a cafe in the City of Los Angeles on the night of September 18, 1954. Barney Kessel, employed as a musician at the above mentioned cafe testified that as he was passing through the parking lot on his way to work that night, defendant Lamb asked him to tell Robert Shevak that Lamb wanted to see him, and that at or about 10:30 p. m. on the same night, Kessel informed Shevak of this message.

Robert Shevak, also employed as a musician at the same cafe, testified that he received the above message from Kessel and that shortly thereafter, went out to the parking lot; that Lamb showed him a bundle of about 28 cigarettes and gave him one to try. Shevak testified he told Lamb there were too many and that he couldn't take them all, but that Geordie would probably like to look at them.

Shevak further testified that he shared the one cigarette with Geordie Hormel; that after another "set" (of music) was played, Hormel and Shevak went to the parking lot where Hormel gave Shevak $20 which Shevak in turn handed to Lamb; that a minute or so later while all three were still together, Lamb handed Shevak a rubber band-wrapped bundle of about 28 cigarettes; that at Hormel's suggestion, Shevak took about half, handing the remaining approximately 13 or 14 cigarettes to Hormel. Shevak testified that he thereafter threw his cigarettes into some nearby bushes.

Shevak also testified he had obtained marihuana from Lamb prior to September 18, 1954.

Matthew O'Connor, Narcotics Investigator for the Department of Justice, State of California, Los Angeles Office, testified that he and Officer O'Grady observed Lamb at the parking lot at the aforesaid cafe from across the street on the night of September 18, 1954. He further testified that on the night in question, he observed several different persons drive into the lot, and walk into the lot and have a conversation with Lamb; whereupon Lamb would depart and at times walk to a lamp post and at other times to a car wheel, stoop down, then stand up, walk back to the persons, and then these persons would leave the parking lot without entering the cafe. Officer O'Connor further testified that he later examined the aforesaid lamp post but found nothing of a contraband nature. That on the following morning, in company with police officer O'Grady, they searched the home of defendant and again found no marihuana or other narcotics.

John E. O'Grady testified that he was a police officer of the City of Los Angeles assigned to the Narcotics Division; that he observed defendant in the parking lot on September 18, 1954, that he arrested

Hormel and conducted a search of the latter's automobile in which he found thirteen or fourteen paper-wrapped cigarettes with a rubber band around them.

William G. Penprase, a chemist for the Los Angeles Police Department, testified that he received the aforesaid cigarettes, selected six of the thirteen at random, examined them and found that they contained marihuana.

As a witness in his own behalf, defendant Lamb testified that he did not sell any marihuana to any person on the night in question; that he did not ask Kessel to deliver any message to anyone. He further denied talking to Shevak and Hormel together that night except that as they passed through the parking lot on their way to work when they "spoke and I spoke".

Appellant's sole ground for reversal is that the court erred to his prejudice in refusing to give his proffered instructions regarding the testimony of the witness Shevak, who, it is urged, was an accomplice.

Section 1111 of the Penal Code defines an accomplice as one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial in the cause in which the testimony of the accomplice is given.

In the instant proceeding appellant Lamb was on trial upon the specific charge of selling, furnishing and giving away marihuana. In other words, he was charged with the sale of marihuana, while the witness Shevak was interested in the purchase of marihuana from appellant.

[1] In People v. Baskins, 72 Cal.App. 2d 728, 731, 165 P.2d 510, 511, it was held, "* * * An accomplice must stand in the same relation to the crime as the person charged therewith and must approach it from the same direction. Similarity of offenses is not the same as identity. People v. Galli, 68 Cal.App. 682, 684, 230 P. 20. * * *" (Emphasis added.) See also, People v. Cowan, 38 Cal.App.2d 231, 242, 101 P.2d 125; People v. Brown, 61 Cal.App. 748, 752, 216 P. 58.

[2] It is manifest that while the witness Shevak may well be guilty of some crime nevertheless, under the requirements of identity of offense as distinguished from a mere similarity, he cannot be classed as an accomplice. To be an accomplice one must knowingly, voluntarily, and with common intent unite with the principal offender in the commission of the crime. People v. Shaw, 17 Cal.2d 778, 799, 112 P.2d 241; People v. Frahm, 107 Cal.App. 253, 263, 290 P. 678; People v. Walker, 88 Cal.App.2d 265, 268, 198 P.2d 534.

[3] In the case at bar there was no "common intent" between appellant and Shevak, nor a "uniting" in the commission of the crime charged against the former. As heretofore pointed out, Shevak was interested in the purchase of marihuana and not in its sale. Shevak received nothing from appellant by way of compensation for the sale. It was after the sale to Hormel was consummated by appellant that Shevak took one-half of the cigarettes as a gift from Hormel. Applying the facts and circumstances here shown in evidence with the definition set forth in section 1111 of the Penal Code, the conclusion is inescapable that Shevak was not liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against appellant, who was guilty of selling, People v. Abair, 102 Cal.App.2d 765, 772, 773, 228 P.2d 336. There was therefore, no error in refusing the requested instructions.

[4, 5] Where, as in the instant case, the facts with respect to the participation of a witness in the crime for which the accused is on trial are clear and not disputed, it is for the court to determine whether he is an accomplice. It is only when although there is evidence tending to connect the witness with the crime, the facts are disputed or susceptible of different inferences, that the question of complicity should be submitted to the jury, People v. Swoape, 75 Cal.App. 404, 413, 414, 242 P. 1067; People v. Allison, 200 Cal. 404, 408, 253 P. 318; People v. Frahm, supra, 107 Cal.App. at page 264, 290 P. at page 682.

The judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are, and each is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

July 8, 1955.

Rehearing Denied July 29, 1955.

Hearing Denied Sept. 1, 1955.

Proceeding by corporation for judicial supervision of winding up of its affairs and its dissolution. From adverse orders of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Frank G. Swain and Arnold Praeger, JJ., the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that Superior Court had jurisdiction to entertain proceeding by corporation for judicial supervision of the winding up its affairs and its dissolution notwithstanding provision in articles of incorporation that no exchange or other disposition of all or substantially all of property or corporation could be made unless approved by vote of all shareholders or by their written consent, which four shareholders refused to give.

VALLÉE, Justice.

This proceeding was commenced on February 17, 1954 by Mayellen Apartments, Inc., a corporation, for judicial supervision of winding up its affairs and its dissolution pursuant to the provisions of sections 4607-4619 of the Corporations Code.

Mayellen Apartments, Inc., is a California corporation organized January 31, 1948 for the purpose of owning and operating an apartment house with 16 apartments in Los Angeles. It is authorized to issue 16 classes of stock, each class having one share. The holder of a share of stock has the exclusive right to use and occupy one of the 16 apartments, which apartment is named in the certificate evidencing the share of stock so held.¹ Each of the 4 appellants owns a share of stock. The articles of incorporation provide that any shareholder desiring to sell his share of stock shall first make it available to a co-owner, then to the corporation, then to other shareholders, each with the right to purchase at par plus $100 and improvements, or less if acceptable to the seller. They further provide that no sale or other disposition of all or substantially all of the property of the corporation shall be made unless approved by the vote of or written consent of all the shareholders entitled to exercise the entire voting power of the corporation.

1. The articles provide: "The holders of each class of stock shall be entitled to the use and exclusive right to occupy the apartments set opposite the class of stock as follows: * * * Said apartments being located in the structure at 1243 West 24th Street, and on the real estate above described in Article Two hereof, as long as said occupancy does not violate any laws regulating the occupancy of apartment houses and/or the apartments located therein."

About August 24, 1953 the corporation elected to wind up its affairs and voluntarily dissolve. Twelve of the 16 shareholders consented in writing to the election. (See Corporations Code, § 4600.) The reasons for the dissolution are stated in the margin.² Thereafter the required steps precedent to judicial supervision of winding up and dissolution were taken.

The minority shareholders, who are the appellants here, answered the petition for judicial supervision, objecting thereto. Among other things, they prayed that if the court took jurisdiction it ascertain the value of the share of each shareholder and they be given their right to purchase the shares of the majority in accordance with the articles. On April 7, 1954, after a hearing at which appellants were represented, an order was made continuing the hearing on the petition to April 21 on condition that if appellants on or before 5:00 p. m. on April 14 deposited $39,075 with the county clerk for the purpose of purchasing the shares of the majority, and if on or before 5:00 p. m. on April 20 the majority consent in writing to the purchase for that sum, then the $39,075 would be held for distribution to the majority. The minority shareholders did not deposit the $39,075 with the county clerk. On July 20, 1954 an order was made adjudging that the court take "jurisdiction of and supervision of winding up proceedings and may make orders and adjudge as to any and all matters concerning the winding up of the affairs of the corporation." This order became final. On August 13, 1954, after a hearing at which appellants were represented, an order was made approving the sale of the assets of the corporation to one Garrett for $50,500.

On July 26, 1954 Pacman, one of the minority shareholders, filed an action, Number 631227, in the superior court in which he sought a decree ordering the officers of the corporation "to cause a Revocation of Election To Wind Up" and "to cancel attempted sale of all corporate assets" or, in the alternative, for general and special damages. On September 15, 1954 the court in this proceeding issued a preliminary injunction restraining Pacman from prosecuting action 631227 until the final determination of this matter.

On September 16, 1954 Pacman regularly moved the court for an order vacating the order approving the sale of the assets and subjecting the corporation "to Supervision of Court of Winding Up Proceedings" on the ground the court was without jurisdiction to make it. All appellants were represented at the hearing. The motion was denied.

The minority shareholders appeal from the order denying the motion to vacate the order approving the sale of the assets of the corporation and from the order granting the preliminary injunction.

[1] Appellants assert that because of the provisions of the articles the court was without jurisdiction of the proceeding and that the proceeding is an attempt by the majority shareholders and the officers of the corporation to take their property from

2. "That a schism has arisen between the majority stockholders and the minority stockholders which has prevented the harmonious administration of the affairs of the corporation and disrupted the normal and peaceful living of the occupants of the apartment house building owned by the Petitioner, said occupants being the shareholders; that because of said disunity among the stockholders, individual stockholders who desired to sell their respective shares of stock have been unable to secure buyers because of the fact that prospective buyers do not desire to occupy the premises where a spirit of bickering and disunity prevails."

them without due process of law. They say their property consists of the right, as shareholders, to the use and exclusive occupancy of their apartments as provided in the articles of incorporation. They say further the proceeding constitutes a breach of the contract between the corporation and its shareholders and a fraud on their rights as shareholders in that it was agreed in the articles that no sale of the assets shall be made unless all the shareholders consent thereto in writing.³

A corporation may elect to wind up its affairs and voluntarily dissolve by the vote or written consent of shareholders representing 50 per cent or more of the voting power. Corp.Code, § 4600.⁴ When voluntary proceedings for winding up or dissolution have been commenced the board of directors continues to act as a board and has full power to wind up and settle its affairs. Corp.Code, § 4800. After the commencement of such proceedings the directors have power "[t]o sell at public or private sale, exchange, convey, or otherwise dispose of, all or any part of the assets of the corporation, upon such terms and conditions and for such considerations as such board deems reasonable or expedient, and to execute bills of sale and deeds of conveyance in the name of the corporation" and "[i]n general, to make contracts and to do any and all things in the name of the corporation which may be proper or convenient for the purposes of winding up, settling, and liquidating the affairs of the corporation." Corp.Code, § 4801(g), (h). When judicial supervision is invoked the board of directors acts under the supervision of the court. Corp.Code, §§ 4607-4619. Section 4607 reads:

"If a corporation is in the process of voluntary winding up, the superior court of the county in which the principal office of the corporation is located, upon the petition of (a) the corporation, or (b) the holders of 5 percent or more of the number of its outstanding shares, or of (c) three or more creditors, and upon such notice to the corporation and to other persons interested in the corporation as shareholders or creditors as the court may order, may make orders and adjudge as to any and all matters concerning the winding up of the affairs of the corporation."

The Code provides that the court has jurisdiction to determine the rights of all shareholders in and to the assets of the corporation, the settlement or determination of all claims of every nature against the corporation or any of its property, and the amount of money or assets available for distribution among shareholders. Corp.Code, §§ 4609, 4610.

The Constitution provides that the superior courts shall have original jurisdiction in all civil cases and proceedings and of all such special cases and proceedings as are not otherwise provided for. Const. art. VI, § 5. There can be no doubt that section 4607 is valid and that the superior court had jurisdiction to entertain this proceeding. Wright v. Central California C. W. Co., 67 Cal. 532, 533, 8 P. 70; Wickersham v. Brittan, 93 Cal. 34, 39, 28 P. 792, 29 P. 51, 15 L.R.A. 106, in which it was held the superior court has jurisdiction to entertain a proceeding under former Civil Code sections 312 and 315 to determine the validity of an election to the board of directors of a corporation; *Whitehead v. The articles provide: "No sale, lease, conveyance, transfer, exchange or other disposition (except by way of hypothecation) of all or substantially all of the property and assets of this Corporation shall be made unless approved by the vote of or written consent of all of the shareholders of this Corporation entitled to exercise the entire voting power of this Corporation, except that the Corporation may lease individual apartments, the control of which the Corporation has acquired under subparagraphs (e) and (f) of Article Five aforesaid or under the powers herein granted."

Corporations Code sections 4607-4619 are a re-enactment of former Civil Code section 403.⁵ Speaking of former Civil Code section 403, the court in In re San Joaquin Light & Power Corp., 52 Cal.App.2d 814, at page 824, 127 P.2d 29, at page 36, stated:

"A petition was filed as authorized by section 403 of the Civil Code and the superior court then had 'power to order and adjudge as to any or all matters in and for the winding up of the affairs of the corporation,' including '(3) the determination of the rights of shareholders * * * in and to the assets of the corporation.' An absolute right to petition for such supervision and direction is impliedly given and we think it follows that the court not only has the power to order and adjudge as to all matters thus presented, but that the duty of so doing is imposed upon the court."

Daugherty v. Superior Court, 56 Cal.App.2d 851, at page 856, 133 P.2d 827, at page 830, says:

"The latter section [former Civil Code, § 403] gives to a superior court power to order and adjudge as to any and all matters in connection with the winding up of a corporation, including many specified matters which involve the adjudication of disputes which may arise between any of the interested parties."

[2-4] The Constitution authorizes the Legislature to provide for the formation, organization, and regulation of private corporations and to prescribe their powers, rights, duties, and liabilities and the powers, rights, duties, and liabilities of their officers and shareholders. Const. art. XII, § 1. The power of the Legislature under the constitutional reservation of power to provide for voluntary dissolution of corporations and for judicial supervision of winding up, notwithstanding contractual rights of shareholders created by the articles, is not open to question. The relation of a shareholder to the corporation is one of contract. (12 Cal.Jur.2d 748, § 186.) The contract is defined by the articles, the bylaws, and applicable statutes. Thomas v. Wentworth Hotel Co., 158 Cal. 275, 280, 110 P. 942; Fawkes v. Farm Lands Invest. Co., 112 Cal. App. 374, 378-379, 297 P. 47. The provisions of the Constitution and sections 4607-4619 of the Corporations Code form part of the contract between the corporation and its shareholders. Schroeter v. Bartlett Syndicate Bldg. Corp., 8 Cal.2d 12, 14, 63 P.2d 824; DeMello v. Dairyman's Co-op. Creamery, 73 Cal.App.2d 746, 750, 167 P.2d 226; Silva v. Coastal Plywood & Timber Co., 124 Cal.App.2d 276, 278, 268 P.2d 510. Appellants' contracts with the corporation were subject to the constitutional reservation of power and to all laws relative to dissolution of a corporation. An analogous state of facts was before the court in Silva v. Coastal Plywood & Timber Co., supra, 124 Cal.App.2d 276, 268 P.2d 510. There the articles provided that only one share of stock could be issued to or owned by any shareholder, who had to be an active employee of the corporation or a person acceptable to the board of directors as a future active employee. There were extensive provisions in the bylaws having to do with the minimum and maximum wages to be paid shareholder employees and job tenure. The corporation ran into difficulties and the board of directors called a shareholders' meeting for the purpose of approving an amendment to the articles so that shares of stock could be sold without restriction and that any person could own any number of shares. The suit was to enjoin the proposed act of the board. The court, speaking through Mr. Justice Peek, said, 124 Cal. App.2d at page 279, 268 P.2d at page 512:

"Plaintiffs do not contend, nor could they, that their rights are property rights existing separate and apart from their contract rights as shareholders. Without that element it cannot be said that there has been such impairment of their contract as would come within constitutional prohibitions. Mere interference with their contract rights as shareholders cannot overcome the reserved right of the state to exercise what it determines to be in the public welfare under the power reserved to it in the constitution. Thus the problem is not as to whether 'vested' rights or the 'fundamental nature' of the corporation will be affected, but whether or not the amendment falls within the scope of the applicable statute. Inherent in the statute is the possibility of change. There can be no other reason for the reservation. The wisdom of enactment is the concern of the legislature, not the courts."

Schroeter v. Bartlett Syndicate Bldg. Corp., supra, 8 Cal.2d 12, 63 P.2d 824, 825, was an action by a shareholder to recover assessments paid by him on his stock. At the time the plaintiff's stock was issued, the law permitted the levy and collection of assessments. At the time the assessment was made, the law had been changed to provide that shares were assessable only when the articles expressly conferred such authority. The articles did not, at that time, confer the authority. It was contended by the corporation that its right to assess had to be measured by the law existing at the time the stock was issued, that to hold otherwise "would be a violation of article 1, § 10, and the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution as well as section 16 of article 1 of the California Constitution" and would impair the obligation of the contract of the corporation with its stockholders within the constitutional inhibition. Answering, the court stated, 8 Cal.2d at page 14, 63 P.2d at page 825:

"The fallacy in this reasoning is that it does not take into consideration section 1 of article 12 of the California Constitution, which reads: * * * This provision was also a part of the contract between the corporation and its stockholders. * * * The state reserved the right to amend or repeal the then existing statute authorizing the levy of assessments and there was no impairment of the obligation of contract by the legislative exercise of this right. The amended statute did not take from the corporation the right to assess its stockholders. It only requires, as a basis for the assessment of corporate stock, that the articles of incorporation must expressly confer authority therefor. No limitation was placed upon the corporation to amend its articles of incorporation. No obligation of contract was impaired; no vested right was interfered with."

In DeMello v. Dairyman's Co-op. Creamery, supra, 73 Cal.App.2d 746, 167 P.2d 226, it was held that the reorganization of a cooperative business association into a non-profit cooperative marketing association did not violate the vested rights of dissenting members where it was necessitated by a membership structure resulting in dissension, hampered operations, and unnecessary payment of taxes, and where such members could remain with a full proportionate interest in the assets or withdraw and receive a cash payment equal to the full amount recoverable under the former association's by-laws and an additional credit for the balance of the value of their interest.

One of the questions in Stubbs v. Jones, 121 Cal.App.2d 218, 263 P.2d 100, was whether a corporation had been validly dissolved. It was contended it had not been because of the existence of a trust indenture executed by the sole shareholder by which the assets of the corporation were to be controlled and distributed by a trustee. Holding the corporation had been validly dissolved, the court quoted from 16 Fletcher, Cyclopaedia of Corporations, perm. ed., § 8022, 121 Cal.App.2d at page 222, 263 P.2d at page 102:

"The general rule is that where a statute confers power on a majority, or a certain per cent, of the stockholders to dissolve, the right is absolute, so far as the motives of the majority are concerned, in the absence of actual fraud, and not subject to judicial review on behalf of minority stockholders."

"The statutes lay down no conditions for the dissolution of corporations other than that the specific statutory requirements be met, and they declare that when that has been done and when winding up has been completed, and the certificate to that effect has been filed where required, the 'corporate existence shall cease'. Sec. 5201, Corp. Code."

[5] The exercise of the court's jurisdiction in supervising the winding up and dissolution of the corporation does not violate any vested contract or property right of appellants. Their contract and property rights are subject to all statutory provisions relative to winding up and dissolution of the corporation.

[6] It is argued that section 3901 prohibits the sale of all the property and assets of the corporation without the approval of all the shareholders. Section 3901 provides that a corporation shall not sell or otherwise dispose of all or substantially all of its property and assets except by vote or written consent of the shareholders entitled to vote, with the proviso that "the articles may require for such approval the vote or consent of a larger proportion of the shareholders or the separate vote of a majority or a larger proportion of any class or classes of shareholders." As we have noted, the articles of respondent provide that no sale or other disposition of all or substantially all of its property and assets shall be made unless approved by the vote or written consent of all the shareholders. It is manifest that section 3901 applies to an existing, going corporation and not to a corporation in process of winding up its affairs and dissolution. Section 4801, which is found in part 9, division 1 of title 1 of the Corporations Code, treating of "Winding Up and Dissolution", imposes no restriction on the power of the directors to sell all the property and assets of a corporation in the process of winding up its affairs and dissolution, except in case a sale for profit is made for any consideration other than money. Section 4801, and not section 3901, controls in the present instance. The court had the power under section 4801 to order sale of the assets without the consent of all the shareholders.

[7] Appellants claim the evidence shows the entire proceeding for dissolution was conceived in fraud, and for that reason the order denying their motion to vacate the order approving the sale of the assets should be reversed. The claim of fraud is based on the assertion that the corporation commenced the process of dissolution and the proceeding for judicial supervision "solely for the purpose of avoiding its contractual obligations to" appellants for the "use and exclusive occupancy" of their apartments. We find no support in the record for this contention. This question was made an issue by the petition for judicial supervision and the answers of appellants thereto. The court, in ordering that it take jurisdiction, necessarily found the proceedings prior to the filing of the petition were fair and regular and no fraud had been practiced. No appeal was taken from that order and it became final. Thereafter the corporation petitioned for an order approving the sale of its assets to Garrett. Appellants answered the petition, objecting thereto, and again pleaded fraud. Following a hearing at which appellants were represented, the court found the sale of the assets to Garrett was for the best interest of the corporation, two-thirds of the shareholders had consented to the sale and approved the same, and an order ratifying and approving the sale followed. No appeal was taken from that order and it became final. The present appeal is from an order denying Pacman's motion to vacate the order approving the sale. Having had their day in court on the hearing of the petition for judicial supervision and on the hearing of the petition for approval of the sale of the assets, and having failed to appeal from either of those orders, appellants cannot now raise the question of fraud.

It is argued that the corporation will receive less from the sale approved than it would have realized had the sale been made to appellants. The obvious answer is that shortly after the petition for judicial supervision was filed and before an order was made on the petition, appellants were given the opportunity to purchase the shares of the majority. They failed to take advantage of the opportunity and did not deposit the necessary funds with the county clerk. They cannot complain that the sale was not made to them. There is no showing that the sale price approved by the court is not the fair market value of the assets.

[8] The contention that the court was without jurisdiction to enjoin the prosecution of action 631227 is without merit. That is an action by appellant Pacman against the corporation and its officers "to cause a Revocation of Election To Wind Up," "to cause a Revocation of inequitable amendments," "to cancel attempted sale of all corporate assets," "to henceforth abide by the Articles of Incorporation and the By-Laws," or, in the alternative, for general and special damages. The complaint alleges substantially the same matters as are alleged in appellants' answers to the petition for judicial supervision and in their objections to the petition for sale of the assets. Section 4616 specifically provides:

"The jurisdiction of the court includes staying the prosecution of any suit, proceeding, or action against the corporation and requiring the parties to present and prove their claims in the manner required of creditors."

It is manifest the court had jurisdiction to stay the prosecution of the action. It was entirely competent for the Legislature to provide for the suspension of rights which claimants would otherwise have to pursue and require them to assert their rights, if at all, in the dissolution proceeding. Hare & Chase v. Bankers' Discount Corp., supra, Ohio App., 56 N.E.2d 943, 949-950. The purpose of this limitation of remedies is to preserve the assets for the payment of all the creditors ratably rather than to permit one creditor to seize the assets and obtain an unfair preference, and to protect the orderly liquidation of the corporation from suits by dissatisfied shareholders. (Ballentine, Corporations, 731, § 317. See American Bar Association Committee on Business Corporations, Model Business Corporation Act (Rev.1950) § 80 (b) comment; 9 Uniform Laws Anno., Model Business Corporation Act, § 50.) All the matters complained of in action 631227 are subject to determination in this proceeding.

Action against police chief for false arrest and false imprisonment. The Superior Court, Santa Clara County, Edwin J. Owens, J., entered judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that in the absence of evidence that police chief had had any knowledge, while plaintiff was in jail, that plaintiff had not been brought before a magistrate, evidence was insufficient for jury on issue whether police chief had co-operated in or countenanced the delay in bringing plaintiff before a magistrate.

Judgment affirmed.

Robert E. Michalski, City Attorney, Palo Alto, for respondents.

DOOLING, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of nonsuit in an action for false arrest and false imprisonment. The action was tried only against the chief of police of the City of Palo Alto and the company which furnished his official bond.

Appellant suffered a paralytic stroke at about 8 a. m. while driving to work in his truck. He lost the use of his legs, hip and voice. He was unable to take his foot off the gas pedal so he turned off the ignition and drove his truck into a gasoline station. He remained there helpless in his truck until about 10 a. m. when the proprietor of the station called the police. A police officer answered the call and from appellant's appearance concluded that he was intoxicated. He was arrested and taken to the Palo Alto Police Station where he was booked on a charge of violating section 502, Vehicle Code (driving while intoxicated). The police officer got permission from the respondent Zink, as chief of police, to take appellant to the Palo Alto Hospital for a blood-alcohol test, and this was done. The blood specimen was taken by a technician who came to the police car for that purpose. Appellant was then locked up in a cell where he remained until 6 p. m. when he was released to his brother and taken to a hospital. During his confinement appellant was not taken before a magistrate although there was one in the same building.

[1] The parties are agreed that under Michel v. Smith, 188 Cal. 199, 205 P. 113, 114, and the cases which have since followed it, a chief of police is not personally liable for the tortious acts of his subordinates "unless he has directed such acts to be done, or has personally co-operated therein." Later cases have added to the statement the word "countenanced" so as to place liability on the superior officer if he "has directed or countenanced the tortious acts * * * or has co-operated therein." Noack v. Zellerbach, 11 Cal. App.2d 186, 188, 53 P.2d 986, 987; Reed v. Molony, 38 Cal.App.2d 405, 410, 101 P.2d 175.

We need not concern ourselves with the question whether the original arrest was legal because there is no showing in the record that respondent Zink at any time knew of the circumstances surrounding that arrest. Without such knowledge he could not be said to have "countenanced" it or "cooperated" in it.

[2-4] Appellant's main argument is that in any event the failure to bring him before a magistrate from about 10 a. m. to 6 p. m. was sufficient to raise a jury question as to whether he was brought before a magistrate without unnecessary delay as required by Penal Code, section 849. Such unreasonable delay would make his confinement false imprisonment. Kaufman v. Brown, 93 Cal.App.2d 508, 209 P.2d 156. The trial court found that there was no substantial evidence in the record which would support a finding that respondent Zink cooperated in or countenanced the delay in bringing appellant before a magistrate. With this conclusion we agree.

Appellant relies upon the following facts developed in the testimony to establish a case for the jury on the question whether respondent Zink countenanced or cooperated in the failure to bring appellant before a magistrate: 1. the authorization to take appellant from the jail for a blood test; 2. the fact that at some time during his incarceration appellant testified that Zink saw him in the jail cell and smiled at him; 3. testimony of statements made afterward by Zink that they had made a mistake; 4. the refusal of Zink to permit an investigator to see the police records or to disclose the name of the arresting officer; 5. respondent Zink did not reprimand the officers involved; 6. an equivocal answer by Zink to the question "it was part of the job of the Chief of Police to see that the men were taken to the magistrate to be told what they were charged with, was it not?" to which Zink replied: "Always they are supposed to be taken before the magistrate, yes."

None of the evidence enumerated under numerals 1 to 5 shows that Zink had any knowledge while appellant was in jail that he had not been brought before a magistrate. Without evidence of such knowledge the jury could not find that he either countenanced or cooperated in the failure to bring him before a magistrate. The answer to the question under numeral 6 was not responsive. Zink simply stated the generality that prisoners are supposed to be brought before a magistrate without stating that it was his duty in all cases to see that this was done. Counsel did not pursue the question further and there is other evidence that this duty actually rested on the superintendent of police, one Atwood. We are satisfied that appellant did not make a case to go to the jury against respondents.

Judgment affirmed.

Appellant.

Cr. 5305.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

July 19, 1955.

Hearing Denied Aug. 17, 1955.

Defendant was convicted of robbery while armed with a deadly weapon. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Leroy Dawson, J., rendered judgment and denied motion for new trial, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that evidence sustained conviction.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ☞1159(6)

Where circumstances reasonably justify an inference of guilt, as found by jury, fact that inference of innocence might likewise be reasonably drawn therefrom does not present a question of law for review by reviewing court any more than does a verdict based upon conflicting direct evidence, and in neither case will verdict be disturbed.

2. Robbery ☞24(1)

Evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction for robbery while armed with a deadly weapon.

3. Criminal Law $\S$ 878(2)

Where defendant was charged with two counts of robbery, each perpetrated upon different person, but first count was dismissed and, at trial, all evidence related to second count, verdict that defendant was guilty of robbery as charged in information, without specifying which count, was not defective.

Dismissal of count in information had effect of striking out that count, leaving only an information consisting of remaining count.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Defendant Howard S. Robinson was charged by information with two counts of robbery, and it was alleged that he had suffered three prior convictions of felony. Count I charged the robbery of one Zou-hire. Count II charged robbery of one John R. Campbell and that at the time of the robbery defendant was armed with a deadly weapon. After a jury trial the defendant was convicted of Count II of the information and Count I was dismissed by the court. The judgment of conviction on Count II was subsequently reversed by the Supreme Court. People v. Robinson, 42 Cal.2d 741, 269 P.2d 6. The case was reset for trial and the jury returned a verdict finding defendant guilty of "robbery, a felony, as charged in the information," that it was of the first degree, and that defendant was armed at the time of the offense. The court entered a judgment on the verdict stating that defendant had been found guilty of Count II of the information, Count I having been dismissed. Defendant was duly sentenced. Defendant's motion for a new trial was denied and he appeals from the judgment of conviction and order denying the motion for a new trial.

The principal evidence was that of John R. Campbell, a newspaper vendor, who identified defendant as one of the two men who beat him and robbed him of approximately $23.80. An eyewitness observed the robbery and noted the license number of the car in which the defendant and another man fled. A short time later defendant was arrested nearby, sitting in this car. Defendant's fingerprints were taken from the steering wheel of the car and from a wine bottle in the car and were introduced in evidence. Campbell's wallet was found in the car. Appellant's defense was that he was leaving a restaurant on his way to work when arrested, that he had not previously seen nor driven the car in question, that he had been forced to get into it by an officer, and that he had not seen Mr. Campbell before.

[1,2] Appellant contends that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict. He argues that it was just as reasonable for the jury to conclude that he was innocent as that he was guilty, and that where two inferences may be drawn from the evidence, one of guilt and one of innocence, the court should have given him the benefit of the inference of innocence. This contention is untenable. It is based to a large degree on the statement of the Supreme Court in the original appeal that "the evidence was sufficient to support either a conviction or an acquittal * * * on either or both counts." People v. Robinson, supra, 42 Cal.2d 741, 742, 269 P.2d 6, 7. In such a situation the finding of the jury is conclusive. The rule is correctly stated in People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 683, 104 P.2d 778, 780, where the court quoting People v. Martinez, 20 Cal.App. 343, 128 P. 952, stated that "Where the circumstances are such as to reasonably justify an inference of guilt, as found by the jury, the fact that an inference of innocence might likewise be reasonably drawn therefrom does not present a question of law for review by an appellate court any more than does a verdict based upon direct conflicting evidence. In neither case will the verdict be disturbed.'” The fact that the evidence was capable of two inferences as contended here does not warrant a reversal. People v. Crawford, 41 Cal.App.2d 198, 205, 106 P.2d 219; People v. Stanhope, 37 Cal.App. 2d 631, 634, 635, 99 P.2d 1075. Here it cannot be said that the evidence was insufficient to support a verdict of guilty.

[3] Appellant next urges that the verdict was not responsive to the charge, requiring a reversal. The jury returned a verdict of “guilty of robbery, a felony, as charged in the information,” without specifying upon which count. The verdict was not defective. All the evidence offered at the second trial related to the offense charged in Count II of the information, i. e., robbery of John R. Campbell. The exhibits offered in evidence related to this charge. No evidence was offered tending to prove that defendant perpetrated the robbery of Abe Zouhire, originally charged in Count I.

[4, 5] The clerk’s minutes show that the information was read, exclusive of the allegations of the former convictions. It was the duty of the clerk to omit reading the charge set forth in Count I which had been dismissed. The dismissal had the effect of striking out that count and the information would then consist of Count II alone. It must be presumed that the clerk performed his duty and read only Count II. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 15; People v. Hudson, 120 Cal.App.2d 870, 262 P.2d 23. The verdict finding defendant guilty as charged in the information was not irregular. It was responsive to the only issue that was tried and, presumably, the only one of which the jury had knowledge.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff sued for damages for the disparagement of title to real property alleging actual damages in the sum of $250 for attorney’s fees and seeking exemplary damages in the sum of $2,500. The total amount involved, therefore, was the sum of $2,750. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend and this appeal was taken from that order.

Only two questions arise on this appeal:

[1] (1) The appeal is taken from a non-appealable order. Section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure which determines the matters from which an appeal can be taken from the Superior Court does not include an appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer. Since no final judgment has been entered herein, the appeal from the order sustaining the demurrer must be dismissed.

[2] (2) The complaint to which the demurrer was sustained does not state a cause of action within the jurisdiction of the Superior Court. The jurisdiction of such courts is limited to actions of this character in which the matter in controversy amounts to $3,000 or more. When the amount prayed for is less than that sum, the jurisdiction is limited to the Municipal Court.

Appeal dismissed.

PER CURIAM.

[1] Upon petition of Herbert L. Singer and wife, parents of Sharon Singer, for a writ of habeas corpus on behalf of their daughter, a writ was issued directed to David Bogan, Superintendent of Juvenile Hall of the County of Los Angeles. A return has been filed by said respondent and a hearing has been held, upon which it was stipulated that the petition and supplemental petition be treated as a traverse to the return. The allegations of the petition and supplemental petition insofar as they have not been placed in issue by the return will be taken as true. In re Smith, 143 Cal. 368, 77 P. 180; In re Hoffman, 155 Cal. 114, 99 P. 517; In re Application of O'Connor, 80 Cal.App. 647, 252 P. 730; Carlson v. Landon, 9 Cir., 186 F.2d 183; Daly v. Elton, 195 U.S. 242, 25 S.Ct. 22, 49 L.Ed. 177.

The facts bearing upon the detention of Sharon Singer by the authorities are the following. The minor, 8 years of age, was residing with her parents in a fit and proper home and was receiving proper and sufficient parental care, support, supervision and control; her parents were fit and proper persons to have custody of the minor and her home environment was unobjectionable. On June 23, 1955, at about 8:00 p. m., the minor was taken into custody and placed in Juvenile Hall and she remained in the custody of the superintendent of Juvenile Hall until she was released to the custody of her parents under order of this court on July 7. No petition that the minor be made a ward of the Juvenile Court was filed until on or about June 29, 1955, when the judge of the Juvenile Court granted a writ of habeas corpus for said minor and set the same for hearing at 9:30 a. m., June 30, and at that time proceeded to conduct a hearing "for the purpose of determining the reasons for the necessity of the detention of the minor", § 729.5, Welfare and Institutions Code, and a hearing on the writ of habeas corpus; that no notice of the hearing was given to the parents of said minor; the court then discharged the writ of habeas corpus, ordered the minor to be detained in said Juvenile Hall and set for hearing on July 13 the petition to have said minor made a ward of the Juvenile Court. During said detention of the minor neither her parents nor their attorney have been allowed to speak privately with her. At the hearing on June 30 an officer having charge of the minor prevented the parents from speaking with her and when she signaled a greeting to them, removed her from the room. On July 7 at the time this court issued its writ of habeas corpus, the court also made an order for the release of said minor to the custody of her parents upon their written agreement to produce said minor before this court upon the hearing of the writ.

It has been made to appear to the satisfaction of this court that the sole purpose of the detention of said minor and of the filing of the petition to have her made a ward of the Juvenile Court and all proceedings had thereunder was and is to keep her in custody for use as a witness in a criminal action against David Ely Singer, the paternal grandfather of the minor, who was accused by complaint filed June 24 of an offense committed against said minor in violation of section 288 of the Penal Code while the child was visiting her grandparents. On July 1 said minor did testify as a witness at the preliminary hearing of said accused on said charge and upon the conclusion of said hearing said minor was retained in custody by Juvenile Court authorities, was placed in a private home under their jurisdiction, and the parents of said minor were denied all information as to the place where said minor was retained and as to the identity of the person or persons in whose custody she was held. It is alleged in the petition and not denied that a deputy district attorney has threatened to cause said minor to be detained in custody by placing a "District Attorney's Hold" against her with the Superintendent of Juvenile Hall and that such "hold" orders have been and will be accepted by said Superintendent as authority for holding juveniles in custody solely as witnesses and subject to the orders of the district attorney.

In reaching our conclusions as to the lawfulness of the detention of said minor and the purposes and motives of the authorities involved, we have taken into consideration certain additional facts which are known to the court, namely, when this court in conference decided to issue a writ of habeas corpus, the court was advised of the fact that said minor had been placed in the custody of a person or persons and in a home unknown to the petitioners and the court made inquiries of the Superintendent of Juvenile Hall and requested that the court be advised as to the person or persons having custody of said minor at that time; said inquiries met with delay, evasion, opposition and lack of cooperation.

From all the facts made known to the court, this court has concluded that the pending proceeding purporting to be one to have said minor declared a ward of the Juvenile Court was instituted as a mere device and means to retain said minor in custody solely for the purpose of separating her from her parents, the petitioners, and keeping her available as a witness at the trial of said David Ely Singer.

Section 700 of the Welfare and Institutions Code sets forth the conditions and circumstances in which any person under the age of 21 years is within the jurisdiction of the Juvenile Court. The described conditions are 14 in number and need not be enumerated. Suffice it to say that it appears from the facts divulged to the court that the detention of said minor as related above has not been and is not based upon the existence of any of the conditions specified in section 700 of the code. The same is true with respect to the conditions under which a person under the age of 21 years may be declared free from the custody and control of either or both parents as specified in section 701 of the code.

1. "§ 729.5. Whenever a minor under the age of eighteen years is taken into custody by any peace officer or probation officer, such minor shall be released within forty-eight hours after having been taken into custody, excluding Sundays and nonjudicial days, unless within said period of time a petition in accordance with subdivision (a) of Section 720 concerning him is filed with the clerk of the superior court or a criminal complaint against him is filed in a court of competent jurisdiction. If the minor remains in the custody of any peace officer or probation officer, within twenty-four hours, excluding Sundays and nonjudicial days, after the filing of the petition, the judge of the juvenile court shall conduct a hearing for the purpose of determining the reasons for

[2-4] Section 726 of the code requires that upon the filing of such a petition, a citation shall issue directing the parents etc. to appear at a time and place for which a hearing has been set and that such citation be served at least 24 hours before the time set for the hearing. Section 729 specifies the conditions in which a probation officer or peace officer may take temporary custody of a minor to be detained at Juvenile Hall or other suitable place designated by the Juvenile Court "when such custody or detention is a matter of immediate and urgent necessity for the protection of the welfare of the child". Throughout the proceedings above related no claim has been advanced or pretention made that the custody or detention of the minor was a matter of immediate or urgent necessity or for the protection of her welfare. Sections 729.5 and 730 read as set out in the margin.¹ Authority of law is not vested in any court, official, officer or authority to seize the person of a minor and to incarcerate and detain said minor for the sole purpose of keeping said minor available for use as a witness in a criminal proceeding or any other proceeding. No court, official, officer or authority responsible for the detention of the minor, Sharon Singer, has had any right or authority over the person of said minor other than is conferred by the provisions of the Welfare and Institutions Code which we have cited. The taking of said minor into custody and her detention was illegal unless the same was a matter the necessity of the detention of the minor. If within said period such a hearing has not been held then the minor shall be released from custody."

"§ 730. Whenever a petition has been filed in the juvenile court alleging that a person comes within the provisions of Section 700 or 701 of this code and praying for a hearing thereon or whenever any subsequent petition has been filed praying for a further hearing in the matter of said person, said person, pending the hearing of any of said petitions, or during the continuance thereof, may be retained by the person having charge of said person or the court may order that said person be detained in the detention home or in some other suitable place."

of immediate and urgent necessity for the protection of the welfare of the child. The facts as known to us refute the existence of any such condition. The detention of said minor for more than 48 hours without the filing of a petition in accordance with subdivision (a) of section 720, or the filing of a criminal complaint, was illegal. The district attorney has no shadow of authority to cause a minor to be wrested from his or her home or the custody of parents or legal custodian and incarcerated or detained for the sole purpose of using such minor as a witness. It manifestly appears from the facts which are known to the court that the actions and proceedings that have been had for the incarceration of said minor were illegal and void ab initio and that the further incarceration of said minor has been and is for an illegal purpose and in violation of the rights of said minor and her parents, the petitioners herein.

It is ordered that said minor be discharged from the custody of the Juvenile Court and the probation officer of the County of Los Angeles and that her custody remain with her parents, the petitioners herein.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 2, 1955.

Hearing Denied Aug. 17, 1955.

Defendant was convicted of attempted extortion. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Burdette J. Daniels, J., entered judgment of conviction and order denying defendant's motion for new trial, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that, even if certain evidence should have been admitted, exclusion would not constitute prejudicial error, in view of fact that such evidence was merely cumulative to evidence already introduced by defendant on the subject.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Where, in prosecution for attempted extortion, defendant produced exhibit which admittedly contained a signature which was not genuine, and person whose name had been on exhibit in form of purported signature testified as to false statements in exhibit, district attorney's statements to jury pertaining to "that false statement" and "that false signature" were not either unfair or improper and did not constitute misconduct.

2. Criminal Law §1037(1, 2)

Defendant, who did not object to remarks made by district attorney to jury or request that trial judge advise jury to disregard such remarks, was not in position to object to such remarks upon appeal.

3. Criminal Law §1030(1)

Only when misconduct is of a flagrant character may it be reviewed on appeal without previous objection or request for admonition.

4. Criminal Law §726

Where, in prosecution for attempted extortion of money from state's witness, defense counsel referred to certain witness' conduct and pleaded that it constituted two criminal offenses, deputy district attorney's response to jury that defendant had forced witness to engage in part of such conduct and, therefore, that defendant would be guilty of a felony, if there were such a felony, did not transcend legitimate bounds of argument invited by opposing counsel.

5. Criminal Law §1163(1)

It is incumbent upon an appellant to show prejudice as result of court's ruling, and prejudice will not be presumed.

6. Criminal Law ⇨1120(3)

In prosecution for extortion, exclusion, as hearsay, of particular telephone conversation between state's witness and defendant was not prejudicial to defendant, in absence of showing of nature of the conversation. Pen.Code, § 524.

7. Criminal Law ⇨1186(4)

Even if rejection of evidence in criminal proceeding was error, reversal would be unwarranted in absence of showing of prejudice from such rejection. Cal.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

8. Criminal Law ⇨1170(2)

Even if certain evidence should have been admitted in criminal prosecution, exclusion would not constitute prejudicial error in view of fact that such evidence was merely cumulative to evidence already introduced by defendant on the subject. Pen. Code § 524.

A. Brian Weinberg, Santa Monica, Harold J. Ackerman, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., James C. Maupin, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FOX, Justice.

Defendant was convicted of attempted extortion in violation of Penal Code, section 524. He appeals from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Defendant was manager of the Termite Company, which employed William Gerber. The latter's employment, however, was terminated around the middle of October, 1953. On May 29th of that year the Termite Company made a contract with Mr. and Mrs. Locke to do some termite work on their property. This work was commenced on the following June 3d or 4th. About the middle of October the Lockes wanted some additional work done. The Termite Company was aware of this. The work was performed by Gerber, who collected for it. He claimed he did it on his own after his employment with the Termite Company was terminated. Defendant, however, insisted that the Termite Company was entitled to the money for this job. In his effort to collect it from Gerber, he telephoned Mrs. Gerber on Saturday evening, October 24th. He asked her to relay a message to her husband, that he didn't want to talk to him. He said "he wanted the money that my husband collected for this Locke job, and if my husband didn't bring it in by Monday he would go down to the District Attorney's office and press charges for fraud and embezzlement." Mrs. Gerber asked defendant what he meant by that and further stated that she didn't feel that Mr. Gerber owed defendant any money. Defendant responded that she knew "perfectly well" what he meant—for her husband to bring him the money.

Mrs. Gerber next talked to defendant on the following Tuesday. On that occasion she called a Madison number that she got by telephone from the secretary at the office of the Termite Company. When she dialed the number a voice answered, "District Attorney's Office." This telephone was located at the May Company, in Los Angeles. It was Mrs. Thompson who answered the 'phone in this fashion. Mrs. Gerber asked to speak to Mr. Thompson. He then came on the line and said to her, " * * * I am down here at the District Attorney's office on other matters, and if you or your husband bring in the money to the office by fifteen of five, I will call into my office to make sure you have brought it and the secretary will give you a receipt for it and if you have brought it in I won't press charges; otherwise I will go ahead."

Mrs. Gerber told defendant she didn't think she had that much money around. He replied, "Well, I imagine you know where you can get it." She said she would try.

After this telephone conversation Mrs. Gerber called Captain McClure at the District Attorney's office. As a result, Lieutenant Sharp and Mr. McNair came to her house. They gave her $150 in marked money to turn over to defendant. Later the two men from the District Attorney's office went into a bedroom, and checked to see if they could hear with the door open.

In the meantime, Mrs. Gerber received a call from defendant, who was at his office.

Mrs. Gerber told him she was still willing to give him the money but she had no one to care for her baby so she couldn't leave her house. Defendant advised that he would come right out.

When defendant arrived at the Gerber residence Lieutenant Sharp and Mr. McNair were in the front bedroom. Defendant came into the living room. Mrs. Gerber asked him who he had seen at the District Attorney's office. He said he had talked to a deputy district attorney. She then asked whether he was going to sign a complaint. He replied: "Not if I get the $150.00." Mrs. Gerber thereupon inquired, "Will the District Attorney's office prosecute even if I pay you the money?" Defendant responded, "They do not even know your name." Defendant further stated he was not going to have Mr. Gerber arrested and that "This means nothing to me. I am only trying to get money for the company." He then said, "It would be a shame to call Bill [her husband] in front of a judge. He might * * * have to go to jail, or he might get probation. It would be hard on the family."

Mrs. Gerber gave defendant the $150 she had received from the men from the District Attorney's office. Defendant gave her a receipt.

Defendant put the money in his pocket and left the house. The men from the District Attorney's office followed him to his car, identified themselves and instructed him to return to the house.

Under questioning by Lieutenant Sharp, defendant admitted making the foregoing statements to Mrs. Gerber in her living room. He also admitted that Mrs. Thompson answered the telephone at the May Company on October 27, 1953, and said "District Attorney's office" and that he had stated he would do anything to collect this bill. Defendant then produced the money Mrs. Gerber had given him.

Defendant urges two grounds for reversal: (1) Misconduct of the district attorney in his argument to the jury, and (2) erroneous exclusion of evidence. We find no merit in either.

The first incident of asserted misconduct on the part of the district attorney relates to his reference in his closing argument to a typewritten document (Defendant's Exhibit B) that bore the name "Tom Jensen" in ink at the end thereof. This document was produced by defendant. Admittedly, the signature was not Tom Jensen's. On the witness stand Jensen told the jury many of the statements were incorrect and pointed out those that were false. In discussing this phase of the evidence the deputy district attorney told the jury: "Now, we don't know where that document came from. We don't know who put the signature of Tom Jensen on that paper, but it was produced by the defendant, Paul Thompson, and I think we can infer from that who prepared that false statement and who put that false signature on that paper. Mr. Thompson is the kind of a man who will accuse a stenographer of not telling the truth, inferentially, and yet offer as evidence a document which was false and which bears a false signature * * *."

[1-3] In view of the source of the document, the lack of genuineness of what, on its face, would have appeared to be an authentic signature, and the testimony of Jensen as to the falsity of statements therein, it cannot be said that the comments of the district attorney were either unfair or improper. Clearly, they did not constitute misconduct. And, apparently, defendant's trial attorney¹ did not so regard them for he made no objection or request that the trial judge advise the jury to disregard them. Defendant is therefore in no position to raise this point on appeal. People v. Temple, 102 Cal.App.2d 270, 284, 227 P.2d 500; People v. Codina, 30 Cal.2d 356, 362, 181 P.2d 881. As pointed out by this court in People v. Lamendola, 119 Cal.App.2d 570, 573, 259 P.2d 982, 984, "It is only when such misconduct is of a flagrant character that it may be reviewed on appeal without previous objection or request for admonition." Obviously, the comment here does not fall into this category.

Defendant's second specification of misconduct on the part of the district attorney

1. Defendant has new counsel on appeal.

has to do with his comment to the jury in his closing argument relative to Thompson's part in causing Gerber to sign a completion notice before the work was done on a home improvement job on his home which was financed by an F.H.A. loan. The Termite Company had the contract to do this work. In a Borrower's Report of Irregularities to the F.H.A. Gerber had stated: "After the work was just barely begun, Thompson told me that I must sign the completion certificate so that they could get their money from the bank because they didn't want to tie up company money. Thompson said that he was not making any money on this job; he was just doing me a favor. He also implied that if I did not sign I would not be working there long. I could not afford to be out of work so I had no choice but to sign." In referring to this matter, counsel for defendant told the jury: "Here is a man, Gerber, that has committed two offenses in this deal. He signed a completion report, just a short time after the work started upon their own home. That is a criminal offense. He did termite work when he had no license. That is another criminal offense." (Italics added.)

In response to this argument the deputy district attorney said to the jury: "He [Mr. Babcock, the defendant's counsel] says, 'Look, Mr. Gerber committed a felony by signing a completion report on this work that was being done at his house.' But who forced him to sign that completion report? At whose insistence and urging did Mr. Gerber sign that completion report? Paul Thompson (indicating). So Paul Thompson is guilty of a felony—if there is such a felony; and Mr. Babcock, I assume, knows."

[4] It is thus apparent that the deputy district attorney was merely trying to bring into proper focus the relation of each of the parties to this transaction which had been introduced into the case by defendant, and whose counsel had denominated Gerber's conduct in signing the completion notice before the job was completed as criminal. He was simply saying that Thompson's requirement that Gerber sign the completion notice when "the work was just barely begun" placed him in the same position as Gerber. The deputy district attorney did not actually charge Thompson with having committed a felony; rather, he disclaimed personal knowledge of the criminal character attributed to the conduct in question by defense counsel. When considered in the light of the evidence and the nature of defense counsel's charges it cannot be said that the remarks of the deputy district attorney transcended the legitimate bounds of argument invited by opposing counsel. It is therefore clear that the charge of prejudicial misconduct on the part of the deputy district attorney is without substance. People v. Jackson, 106 Cal.App.2d 114, 123, 234 P.2d 766; People v. Rinesmith, 40 Cal.App. 2d 786, 792, 105 P.2d 1021.

People v. Wilkes, 44 Cal.2d 679, 284 P.2d 481, 486, cited by defendant, is without relevance. In the Wilkes case, the prosecuting attorney, in his oral argument, commented on the failure of defendant Wilkes' wife to testify with respect to a certain telephone call allegedly made to her by defendant at a certain time. The making of the telephone call was a part of an alibi defense. Upon counsel's objection to the comment and his request for an instruction to the jury on the right of a wife not to testify, the court stated: "The question is not her right not to testify, but whether or not the best evidence has been brought out by the party to whom it is available. * * * I suppose you can discuss the phone call." The Supreme Court, in finding prejudicial error, observed that it was error for the prosecution to comment on the failure of a wife to testify; that under section 1322 of the Penal Code Wilkes had no power to produce his wife as a witness without her consent; that the prosecutor's comment "erroneously and deliberately struck at the heart of defendants' only defense, their sharply controverted alibi"; and that the court aggravated the situation by "indicating that there was anything 'better' as a matter of law about the testimony of Mrs. Wilkes than the testimony of defendants themselves." It is at once apparent that the factors found to constitute prejudicial error in the Wilkes case are not only wholly absent from the case at bar, but there is not even the remotest analogy between the two cases.

[5-7] Defendant briefly argues that the court erred in excluding as hearsay a particular conversation he had with Gerber on the telephone. It is of course elementary that it is incumbent upon an appellant to show prejudice as a result of the court's ruling. Prejudice will not be presumed. Here defendant has failed to show prejudice because there is no suggestion as to the nature of the telephonic conversation. The trial court, as well as this court, are left entirely unenlightened as to what benefit defendant expected to derive from such testimony and how he was prejudiced by its exclusion. For even assuming error in the rejection of evidence, in the absence of a showing of prejudice therefrom, a reversal is unwarranted. Calif.Const. Art. VI, sec. 4½.

Defendant also complains that during the testimony of witness Martinez, an employee of the Termite Company, the court rejected testimony of a conversation between defendant and the witness, allegedly in Gerber's presence, purporting to show that the latter was fired on October 16th. Defendant insists that because of the conflict between his testimony and that of Mrs. Gerber as to when Mr. Gerber's employment with the company was terminated, he was entitled to have the testimony of Martinez to establish such date. However, it appears that Martinez was unable to establish this date with any certainty. At the court's suggestion, counsel for defendant had asked Martinez: "Do you know when he was discharged? A. Well, I don't know definitely. I only know what Mr. Thompson said after the meeting broke up." (Italics added.)

[8] Assuming such evidence relative to Gerber's discharge was admissible its exclusion was not prejudicial since it was merely cumulative to evidence already introduced by defendant on this subject. Addressing itself to the same point, this court, speaking through Mr. Justice McComb, stated in People v. Valencia, 30 Cal. App.2d 126, 129, 86 P.2d 122, 123, that:

"The law is established that the erroneous exclusion of evidence is not prejudicial error where the excluded evidence is cumulative to other evidence which is introduced at the trial. [Citations.] In the instant case the trial court permitted other testimony that deceased had made threats against the defendant's life. Therefore, the excluded evidence was merely cumulative to evidence which was received during the course of the trial, and hence the error was not prejudicial to defendant." To the same effect, see People v. Goldberg, 110 Cal.App.2d 17, 27, 242 P.2d 116, and 4 Cal.Jur. Ten Year Supp. (1943), sec. 600, pp. 1002-3.

The purported appeal from the sentence is dismissed. The judgment and order denying motion for new trial are affirmed.

and Appellant,
v.

STATE of California, California Highway Commission, Oscar Oberg, Seth A. Oberg, Oscar Oberg, Seth A. Oberg, doing business as Oberg Bros. Construction Company, S. L. Chowning, Defendants.

Civ. 20784.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

July 6, 1955.

Rehearing Denied July 26, 1955.

Hearing Denied Sept. 1, 1955.

Action against property owner and against construction company which owner had directed to place fill on property adjoining his own and owned by plaintiff, who had agreed to permit such filling of her property to certain level, brought to obtain injunctive relief and damages when defendants had allegedly filled in plaintiff's land in excess of agreement. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Allen W. Ashburn, J., sitting without jury, rendered judgment from which plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held, inter alia, that evidence supported finding that plaintiff's conduct had conferred implied license on defendants.

Judgment affirmed.

See also 281 P.2d 296.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨989, 1010(1)

Court on appeal will not attempt to determine weight of evidence but will decide only whether upon face of evidence it can be held that sufficient facts could not have been found to warrant finding of lower court, and before judgment arrived at by duly constituted arbiter of facts can be set aside on appeal on ground of insufficiency of evidence, it must be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support conclusion reached in court below.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨989, 996

Appellate court is not authorized to retry cause, reweigh evidence, and draw inferences contrary to those drawn by trial court.

3. Appeal and Error ⇨989, 996

When verdict is attacked as being unsupported, power of appellate court begins and ends with determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support conclusion reached by jury, and when two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from facts, reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of trial court.

4. Trial ⇨375

When view of premises involved in litigation is had by trier of facts, conditions observed and properly bearing on case are independent evidence which may be considered by trier of facts in arriving at decisions.

5. Appeal and Error ⇨931(1)

In determining whether there was sufficient evidence to support judgment of court in case tried before court without jury, every intendment tending to support judgment had to be indulged in and every reasonable inference that could be drawn from facts which tended to support findings had to be accepted.

6. Licenses ⇨64

In action against property owner and against construction company which owner had directed to place fill on property adjoining his own and owned by plaintiff, who had agreed to permit such filling of her property to certain level, brought to obtain injunctive relief and damages when defendants had allegedly filled in plaintiff's land in excess of agreement, evidence supported finding that plaintiff's conduct had conferred implied license on defendants. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 19.

7. Negligence ⇨6

Ordinance which set up certain standards with respect to fills on hillside property, and which was passed two years after property owner and construction company acting at his direction had placed fill upon adjoining land belonging to another party but had exceeded amount of fill called for by written agreement, could not make negligent that which was not negligent at time it was done.

8. Appeal and Error ⇨1058(1)

Rejection of cumulative evidence is not prejudicial.

9. Appeal and Error ⇨1056(4)

Where liability for damages is determined adversely to party seeking damages, rejection of evidence on question of damages is not prejudicial.

10. Trial ⇨47(2)

When there is rejection of evidence temporarily, or decision as to its admissibility is withheld, party offering evidence should call court's attention to fact that, in light of subsequent evidence or for other reasons, judgment and final decision is desired.

11. Appeal and Error C-1058(1)

In action against property owner and against construction company which owner had directed to place fill on property adjoining his own and owned by plaintiff, who had agreed to permit such filling of her property to certain level, brought to obtain injunctive relief and damages when defendants had allegedly filled in plaintiff's land in excess of agreement, even if ruling excluding ordinance which was adopted some two years after acts complained of, and which set up certain standards with respect to fills on hillside property, was error, subsequent admission of ordinance rendered error harmless.

J. P. Bradley, Glen A. Duke, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Moss, Lyon & Dunn, Arvin H. Brown, Jr., Henry F. Walker, Los Angeles, for respondents.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff instituted this action against the above named defendants for injunctive relief and/or damages. On motion of defendants State of California and California Highway Commission the action was dismissed as to them and they are not involved in this appeal.

The complaint is based on the alleged tort of defendants Chowning and Oscar Oberg, Seth A. Oberg; Oscar Oberg and Seth A. Oberg, doing business as Oberg Bros. Construction Company (hereinafter referred to as defendants Oberg) in the placing of earth on plaintiff's property outside of the area authorized in a written agreement between her and defendant Chowning. The complaint contained two counts and prayed for a mandatory injunction to compel defendants to remove all materials placed upon plaintiff's land and restore the same to its original condition; for damages in the sum of $10,000 for loss of use of the land; for $10,000 punitive damages, or in the alternative, for general damages in the sum of $35,000, and for punitive damages in the sum of $10,000. No briefs have been filed on behalf of defendant Chowning.

So far as necessary for a determination of the issues raised on this appeal, the following will serve as an epitome of the factual background surrounding this litigation. Plaintiff and defendant Chowning were the owners of adjacent tracts of land in the Hollywood Hills section of the City of Los Angeles. Mrs. Zellers' property lies to the north of that of Mr. Chowning, and except for a portion along the common boundary line, was and is generally higher than that of Mr. Chowning. During the first part of the year 1950, defendant Chowning commenced to develop his lot, and attempted to purchase a portion of appellant's land in connection with this development. No satisfactory agreement with respect to a sale was ever arrived at and defendant Chowning suggested to plaintiff that he fill portions of her land in connection with the contemplated development of his tract, which development called for considerable filling to bring his lot up to a level established by a hand ball court on the southeast part of Mrs. Zellers' lot. An agreement was prepared by Mrs. Zellers' attorney, authorizing Mr. Chowning to extend his fill over onto Mrs. Zellers' lot and "to grade said fill to the level of the fill on the adjoining land of Second Party (Chowning)." This agreement was signed by both parties on June 12, 1950. Mr. Chowning proceeded with the development and the first portion of the fill was made by a contractor by the name of Hickey. Hickey was unsuccessful on a bid on an earth removing job, and after placing some earth on the property, was unable to proceed further. Thereafter, defendant Chowning called in defendants Oberg, who took over the job and continued the filling. They, at defendant Chowning's direction, filled above the level set forth in the written agreement until stopped by Mrs. Zellers.

Some 20,000 cubic yards of earth was placed on plaintiff's property outside the portion thereof provided for in the contract and was not placed on plaintiff's property pursuant to her "explicit directions or at her specific request."

Following trial before the court sitting without a jury judgment was rendered against defendant Chowning directing that he construct a retaining wall and a drainage collection and discharge system in connection with the fill and in accordance with specifications set forth in said judgment. The judgment further provided that plaintiff recover nothing from defendants Oberg.

Plaintiff appeals from the judgment in favor of defendants Oberg and from that portion of the judgment in favor of plaintiff and against defendant Chowning which denied plaintiff a mandatory injunction, damages, "or any relief for earth placed upon her real property above the level established on the defendant S. L. Chowning's property".

The court made findings that, while the fill (above the level established on the property of defendant Chowning, and being the only fill involved in this appeal) was not within that provided for in the contract and was not placed on plaintiff's property pursuant to her "explicit direction or instruction or under plaintiff's supervision or at her specific request," nevertheless it is true "that plaintiff knew that this fill was being made and that she did not object to the same until September 13, 1951, at which time this fill was approximately three-fourths complete, and at which time she stopped the work", and it was concluded that, although Chowning's acts in this regard were wilful and the Obergs were negligent trespassers, "plaintiff impliedly consented to their acts upon said portion of her land and therefore said acts were done under an implied license."

On appeal, appellant contends that the foregoing findings by the court that there was an implied license from appellant to respondents to make the fill on her land above the level established on the land of respondent Chowning is not supported by the evidence and is against law.

There seems to be little if any difference between the parties as to the definition of an implied license and the words, acts, conduct or passive acquiescence necessary to create the same. In the early case of Weldon v. Philadelphia W. & B. R. Co., 1899, 2 Pennewill, Del., 1, 43 A. 156, 159, it is said:

"An implied license is one which is presumed to have been given from the words, acts, or passive acquiescence of the party authorized to give it." 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 222. Such a license must be established by proof, and it is not to be inferred from equivocal declaration or acts of the owner of the land. [Pennsylvania, P. & B.] Railroad Co. v. Trimmer, N.J.Ch., 31 A. 310."

And in Restatement of Law of Property, comment "c", p. 3129, section 516, we find the following:

"c. Manifestation of consent. The consent from which a license arises may be manifested by conduct of any kind. The manifestation may consist in the use of language, or in conduct other than the use of language. Such conduct may consist of acts indicative of a consent by the actor to the use of his land by another, or it may consist in failure to take reasonable action when inaction may reasonably lead to an inference of consent."

[1-3] Appellant's argument seemingly overlooks the firmly established and recognized rule that the court on appeal will not attempt to determine the weight of the evidence but will decide only whether upon the face of the evidence it can be held that sufficient facts could not have been found to warrant in this case, the inference of an implied license from appellant. Before the judgment arrived at by the duly constituted arbiter of the facts can be set aside on appeal upon the ground of "insufficiency of the evidence" it must be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached in the court below. We are not authorized to retry the cause, reweigh the evidence, and draw inferences contrary to those drawn by the trial court, Dawson v. Williams, 127 Cal.App.2d 38, 43, 273 P.2d 75; Sukiasian v. Shakarian, 115 Cal.App.2d 798, 801, 252 P.2d 956. As was so cogently stated by our Supreme Court in Crawford v. Southern Pacific Co., 3 Cal.2d 427, 429, 45 P.2d 183, 184: "It is an elementary, but often overlooked, principle of law, that when a verdict is attacked as being unsupported, the power of the appellate court begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support the conclusion reached by the jury. When two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts, the reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court. (Citing cases.)"

Keeping these well-settled rules in mind we turn to a review of the evidence, which on examination of the record shows was fairly epitomized by the learned trial judge in his "Memorandum Re Ruling", which was brought up on this appeal, and which reads in part as follows:

"She (appellant) testified that she did not know of the excessive fill until the morning of the day on which it was finished. But it is impossible to accept this assertion. She lived on Lot 1 and testified that the highest part of her property could be seen from the area back of her handball court; if so, the fill in the ravine would be equally visible. She went to work every day, going and returning in the daylight, and she traveled along Canyon Drive past Mr. French's house. The lots north and south of the French home were vacant, and the fill was plainly visible from the street as she passed by. 'The law presumes that a person possessing normal faculties of sight and hearing must have seen and heard that which was within the range of his sight and hearing', Young v. Southern Pacific Company, 189 Cal. [746] at [page] 754 [210 P. 259, at page 262]. Normal curiosity would have led her to actual knowledge of what was happening upon her property during the period of six weeks when it was being filled (see Civil Code, sec. 19). It is true that she was greatly perturbed at the time. Her father was dying of cancer, her husband suffering from severe heart trouble and expected, from time to time, to die at once. She was running his business, with which she had little familiarity, and was undoubtedly in a chaotic state of mind. So worried was she that her mind naturally would have extended to the further worry as to what was happening to her property under the direction of a man of Mr. Chowning's known pertinacity. The only fair inference seems to be that she was so upset that she has now forgotten numerous things that she knew in 1950. Moreover, self-interest subconsciously led her, as it did Mr. Chowning, to testify to some things which the court cannot wholly accept. Upon cross-examination during the presentation of her main case, Mrs. Zellers told the court of a conversation with defendant Chowning, had within thirty days after the contract was made, in which she asked him how much higher the fill would go; she said she was then standing behind her handball court. Upon rebuttal she denied having any conversation with Chowning at any time between the signing of the contract and the day the fill was completed, thus denying her own previous testimony. But that is not all.

"Mr. Persh and Mr. Belden, both of whom seem to be disinterested and credible witnesses, testified that they saw her upon the property while the filling was going on. Mr. Persh, who lived at upper Graciosa, said that while the trucks were dumping material from the top of the ravine near that point, he saw Mrs. Zellers upon the property watching the process, and that this occurred two or three times, that she was on the lower part looking around, and also on the upper part while the dumping was going on at the Graciosa level. Mr. Belden, who was field superintendent for Hickey Bros., testified that on one occasion in June, 1950, he and Mr. Chowning had been at the top of the hill, walked down and met Mrs. Zellers about two-thirds of the way down; that Mr. Chowning told her Belden was the man that would make the fill; that Zellers and Chowning walked away together; and at that time dumping from the top of the canyon had been in progress and there were some seven or eight thousand yards of fill in the ravine, the greatest depth thereof being approximately 15 feet.

"The preponderance of the evidence is to the effect that Mrs. Zellers knew what was going on, and made no objection although she could have forbidden and stopped it at any time. A license to use real property may be made by parol or proved by circumstances such as tacit permission or acquiescence in acts already done. 63 C.J. sec. 113, p. 956; 37 C.J. sec. 177, p.

[4] In addition to the foregoing, the trial judge at the inception of the trial, pursuant to stipulation of the parties, personally viewed the properties. The conditions observed and properly bearing on the case, are independent evidence which may be considered by the trier of facts in arriving at his decision, Gates v. McKinnon, 18 Cal.2d 179, 182, 183, 114 P.2d 576.

[5, 6] Indulging in every intendment which tends to support the judgment, and accepting as we are required to do, every reasonable inference that may be drawn from the facts which tend to support the findings, we cannot say that as a matter of law the evidence was insufficient to support the finding that appellant's conduct conferred an implied license with regard to the fill here in question.

Finally, appellant contends that the court erred in sustaining an objection to the admission into evidence of Los Angeles City Ordinance No. 100347. The record reflects that the proffered ordinance was not adopted until some two years after the acts of respondents complained of in this action were committed. The ordinance sets up certain standards with respect to fills on hillside property, including compactions and slope of the fill. It is appellant's contention that the ordinance should not have been excluded from the evidence in that, (1) it sets up a standard for assisting in determining whether or not the filling was negligently done, and if so, assists in determining the measure of damages; and (2) if the acts were a trespass, it is pertinent in determining, likewise, the measure of damages. That, in either case, it represents an expense the appellant must bear in order to utilize her property an expense that she would not have incurred but for the acts of respondents. As to appellant's first contention, we are satisfied that the ruling of the trial judge was correct insofar as the ordinance might have a bearing on negligence or damages when he said:

"Now it is true with respect to torts that the liability is for the damages proximately caused, whether foreseeable or not, but it must be damages which are proximately caused by the wrongdoer. Now, when a third party, like the city, two years later, intervenes and by virtue of its sharing in the sovereign power creates a new condition, I don't believe there is any proximate cause here * * *".

[7] In other words, the ordinance, passed two years after completion of the acts complained of, could not make negligent that which was not negligent at the time it was done, James v. Oakland Tractor Co., 10 Cal.App. 785, 793, 103 P. 1082; Morris v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 2 Cal.2d 764, 768, 769, 43 P.2d 276.

[8, 9] When the ordinance was offered in evidence, appellant's counsel stated it was "for the purpose of adding additional evidence to that presented by Mrs. Zellers (appellant)", and that, "it would be cumulative evidence on the damage factor". Rejection of cumulative evidence is not prejudicial, Ash v. Soo Sing Lung, 177 Cal. 356, 360, 170 P. 843; Nulty v. Price, 202 Cal. 279, 283, 260 P. 291. And where, as here, liability for damages was determined adversely to appellant who sought damages, the rejection of evidence on the question of damages is not prejudicial, Bashford v. A. Levy & J. Zentner Co., 123 Cal. App. 204, 214, 11 P.2d 51.

[10] The record further reveals that when appellant offered the ordinance in evidence the court sustained the objection with the statement, "Well, I think I will have to sustain the objection. You may renew it later if you can give me any further light on it". Thereupon, the ordinance was marked for identification. When there is a rejection of evidence temporarily, or a decision as to its admissibility is withheld, the party offering the evidence should call the court's attention to the fact, that in the light of subsequent evidence or for other reasons, a definite and final decision is desired, Spanfeller v. Meyer, 51 Cal.App.2d 390, 392, 124 P.2d 862. In the instant case no offer of the whole ordinance in evidence was thereafter made.

[11] Later in the trial, however, on cross-examination of the witness Shields, appellant's counsel read into the record portions of the ordinance, to wit, Sections 91.2815 et seq., including Section 91.2817. When counsel for respondents Oberg interposed an objection and moved to strike the answers on the ground no showing had been made that the sections read were in existence at the time the acts charged against respondents were committed, the court refused to strike the answers for the reason that the objection was too late, commenting, "you waived your objection". As a result of this ruling there is to be found in the record portions of the aforesaid ordinance. Even though we assume the ruling of which appellant complains was erroneous, the subsequent admission of the evidence contained in the ordinance, would render the previous adverse and challenged ruling harmless. Battle v. Niece, 43 Cal.App.2d 655, 659, 111 P.2d 455; Ward v. Sherman, 155 Cal. 287, 294, 100 P. 864.

The judgment and the portions thereof from which this appeal was taken are and each is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

July 13, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 5, 1955.

Hearing Denied Sept. 8, 1955.

Quiet title action by grantee of execution deed against purchaser at a subsequent tax sale. The Superior Court, San Diego County, C. M. Monroe, J., entered judgment for grantee and subsequent purchaser appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that evidence supported findings that subsequent purchaser had conspired with former record owner of property to prevent grantee from acquiring notice of tax delinquencies and purchased property at tax sale for former record owner, and judgment quieting title in grantee was not contrary to law.

Affirmed.

1. Trusts ☞89(1)

In action by grantee of execution deed against subsequent tax sale purchaser where testimony showed that life long friend of former record owner of property paid money to former record owner's attorney to purchase property at a tax sale, court could infer that friend had no real interest in property and was merely holding it for the former record owner.

2. Taxation ☞811

In action by grantee of execution deed against subsequent tax sale purchaser where testimony showed that grantee sold one of two tracts of land formerly owned by same predecessor in title and found parcel sold was subject to delinquent irrigation district assessments whether such fact was also notice that other parcel was subject to such delinquencies was a question of fact.

3. Evidence ☞317(7)

In quiet title action by grantee of execution deed against purchaser at a subsequent tax sale, testimony of conversation between grantee and former record owner as to fact that former owner was to pay taxes during extended period of redemption granted by grantee, was admissible over objection of hearsay notwithstanding fact that purchaser was not present at conversation, where grantee charged that purchaser had conspired with former record owner to prevent notice of tax delinquencies from reaching grantee and to purchase property at tax sale for former record owner.

4. Conspiracy ☞19

Taxation ☞810(3)

In quiet title action by grantee of execution deed against subsequent purchaser at tax sale findings by court that purchaser had conspired with former record owner to prevent grantee from acquiring notice of tax delinquencies and to purchase land at subsequent tax sale for former record owner, was supported by evidence and judgment quieting title in grantee was not contrary to law. Water Code, § 26307.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Plaintiff originally brought this action in the usual conventional form against defendant to quiet her title to a certain parcel of property in the La Mesa, Lemon Grove and Spring Valley Irrigation District. In an amended complaint plaintiff realleges this claim and specifically alleges that by deed of August 11, 1952, the collector of the irrigation district deeded the property to the district, and that by deed of August 26, 1952, the district deeded it to defendant and that such deeds were invalid for certain assigned reasons. Plaintiff then claimed in paragraph VI that defendant conspired with one John A. C. Austin, and they fraudulently prevented plaintiff, the owner of the property since April 19, 1951, from receiving notice of tax assessments and tax delinquencies, and accordingly defendant acquired no title to the property by reason thereof.

Defendant denied generally these allegations and set up several claimed defenses. The trial court found that these deeds were not invalid for the reasons claimed, but found that the allegations of paragraph VI were true, and that John A. C. Austin and Alta M. Austin induced the defendant to permit a tax deed to the property to be taken in his name in order to terminate the interest of the plaintiff in the property without redeeming it, and accordingly concluded that the purchase of the tax deed by defendant, acting in behalf of the Austins, was nothing more than the payment of the delinquent irrigation district taxes, and quieted plaintiff's title thereto. Judgment was entered accordingly and defendant appealed.

The evidence shows that prior to June 26, 1948, Mrs. Austin owned a piece of land which was divided into two parcels, which we will refer to as A and B. A is the property here involved. On June 26, 1948, parcel A was sold under writ of execution on a judgment against Mrs. Austin. The day before the period of redemption was to expire Mrs. Austin, who had been having "money difficulties", prevailed on plaintiff to pay about $557.21 to the creditor and plaintiff took an assignment of the creditor's right in and to the property and plaintiff extended Mrs. Austin's right of redemption for another six months under some oral agreement between them that she would be repaid that amount during that period. The sheriff's deed to plaintiff was dated April 9, 1951, and recorded April 19, 1951. Plaintiff testified that she paid the state and county taxes in the fall of 1952, and assumed that Mrs. Austin had paid all other taxes since the property was assessed in her name up to 1953; that she never received any notice of, nor did she have any knowledge that any irrigation district taxes were due on the property until September 1, 1952, when she endeavored to sell that property; that she learned defendant Spears had purchased it through a delinquent irrigation district tax sale for $22.29; and that she later contacted him and that he agreed with her, being the record owner, that she should have received some notice in reference to the taxes due; that she asked him about making some sort of a settlement and that she agreed to repay the taxes paid by him; that he stated he would think it over and call her; that he failed to call and she later reached him; and that he then stated he had decided to keep the property.

The irrigation district records show that in 1953, it was assessed to plaintiff; that prior to that time it was assessed to Mrs. Austin, and that statements of delinquent taxes were mailed to Mrs. Austin at her address.

Some person who identified himself as Mr. Spears inquired about the delinquency in August, 1952, and he was informed that it had been deeded to the district and was subject to sale for such tax. Apparently this person was not Mr. Spears.

It appears from the record that Mr. and Mrs. Austin separated in November, 1950, and on September 17, 1951, he alleged in a divorce action against her that parcels A and B were community property of the Austins and that plaintiff here and one Mason, joined as defendants in the divorce action, conspired with Mrs. Austin to deprive Mr. Austin of his community interest in that property, and claimed that Mrs. Gipson held the property as trustee for the Austins. In January, 1952, a written property settlement agreement was entered into between the Austins and Mrs. Austin quitclaimed to Mr. Austin all her interest in the above-mentioned property in consideration of a specific sum of money. The divorce feature was heard as a default. However, after trial on the other issues the trial court held that the property was not Mr. Austin's community property, and Mrs. Gipson was declared to be the owner of parcel A. (Parcel B had previously been sold by her.)

[1] In the instant action defendant testified he had known Mr. Austin all his life, had roomed with him for several years, and they were very close friends; that he knew Austin had previously tried to obtain this property in the divorce action; that sometime after the issuance of the tax deed to the district Austin informed him that the district had a deed to the property here in question. He denied he bought the tax deed for Austin. He said he did not inquire about it at the tax office but dealt through his attorney, who was also attorney for Austin in the divorce action. His attorney, called as a witness for the plaintiff, testified that the money for the purchase of the property was paid into his office but he would not say whether Austin or Spears paid it to his secretary. When asked whether he had any dealings with Austin to purchase this property from the district for Austin he claimed attorney and client privilege, and refused to answer unless Austin released him from the privilege. An attempt was made to serve Mr. Austin with a subpoena on several occasions, but he could not, for some rather suspicious reasons, he found. Defendant's attorney admitted, however, that he paid the tax for the deed by his own office check and refused to produce his receipt book indicating who paid the money to him for the purchase of the property. Spears testified he paid the money to the attorney. From the evidence produced and from these circumstances the court might well infer that Spears was acting for his life-long friend Austin in the transaction, and that defendant had no real interest in the property but was holding it for the Austins. Garvey v. Byram, 18 Cal.2d 279, 115 P.2d 501, 136 A.L.R. 1137.

The court also found that the allegations of plaintiff's complaint were true and found generally in favor of the plaintiff; that it was not established that the tax deeds were void, and found as true that the Austins "induced the defendant Robert L. Spears to permit a tax deed to" the property involved to be taken in his name in order to terminate the interest of the plaintiff in the property without redeeming it, and concluded that the purchase of the tax deed by defendant Spears, acting in behalf of the Austins, was, in equity, nothing more than the payment of the delinquent irrigation district taxes.

On December 9, 1953, the trial judge signed a memorandum opinion in which he recites that the evidence convinced him that in March, 1952, the Austins agreed that Mrs. Austin would quitclaim to Mr. Austin her alleged interest in the property; that contrary to their claim that it was community property, the trial court found in the divorce action that Mrs. Gipson was the owner of it; that thereafter, a person representing himself as Spears, made arrangements through Austin's attorney to obtain a deed to the property; that notices of the delinquent tax assessments were sent out by the district and received by the Austins, but they were not forwarded to plaintiff nor was she told of them; that when the Austins arrived at their settlement in the divorce action they must have been completely aware of the manner in which the property was held; that they made no attempt to redeem the property and accordingly the Austins induced Spears to permit a tax deed to be taken in his name in order to terminate the interest of plaintiff in the property without redeeming it; and that the Austins joined forces in seeking to destroy plaintiff's interest. The court concluded that these facts bring the case within the holding of Garvey v. Byram, supra, and accordingly the procuring of the tax deed by the Austins through defendant Spears was, in equity, but the payment of the taxes, and title should be quieted in favor of plaintiff upon depositing in court for defendant the sum of $22.29, the amount paid for the tax deed.

Further consideration was given to this point on a motion for new trial and the judge again reviewed the evidence. Defendant there contended that there was no contractual relationship between plaintiff and the Austins and accordingly the Austins were at liberty to obtain a tax title to the property themselves. In disposing of this contention the court said the evidence shows that plaintiff purchased the certificate of sale at the request of Mrs. Austin and had orally extended to her the privilege of redeeming the property, and that Mrs. Austin, as part of the consideration, had agreed to keep up the taxes; that these taxes were not paid by her and the Austins knew of the delinquencies but failed to notify plaintiff of this fact; that accordingly, there was a duty imposed upon the Austins to pay the tax or notify plaintiff of the delinquency; that they failed to do this and accordingly the Austins, in equity, could not take advantage of their own default occasioned by their neglect or failure.

It is defendant's claim that the findings go outside the issues raised by the pleadings; that certain rulings were erroneously made as to the admissibility of certain evidence; that the evidence does not support the findings; and that the judgment is contrary to law, citing such authorities as Willard v. Glenn-Colusa Irrigation District, 201 Cal. 726, 735, 258 P. 959; Freeman v. Superior Court, 44 Cal.2d 533, 282 P.2d 857; Rotea v. Rotea, 93 Cal.App.2d 827, 832, 209 P.2d 963; and Section 26307, Water Code, and related sections.

[2-4] In this connection it is argued that there is no mention in the complaint that plaintiff did not know the property was subject to irrigation district taxes; that no such finding should have been made because defendant offered in evidence certain documents in the escrow agreement in reference to the sale of parcel B by plaintiff on April 19, 1951, in which it is indicated that there were delinquent assessments on that property for the years 1948, 1949, 1950 and 1951, and that plaintiff must be considered to have had notice of that fact because these assessments were paid through the escrow by the title company. A casual observation of the pleadings warrant the findings made upon the issues therein presented, 22 Cal.Jur. p. 152, sec. 32, and the question of notice was a factual question. The court allowed in evidence a conversation between plaintiff and Mrs. Austin as to who was to pay the taxes on the property during the redemption period. Defendant objected to this conversation as hearsay because it was not made in his presence. The charge was that defendant conspired with Austin to obtain title to the property. The findings rather indicate that Mrs. Austin was a co-conspirator in this respect. Accordingly, the conversation was admissible. 5 Cal.Jur. p. 525, sec. 27. Our conclusion is that the evidence supports the findings and the judgment and that the judgment is not contrary to law. It is a general provision of law in equity that no one can take advantage of his own wrong. Civ. Code, § 3517. Under this rule it has been held that where a mortgagor is under obligation to pay the taxes, the act of such party acquiring title through his own default is held to be fraudulent, and the mere failure of the mortgagee to pay the taxes is not laches which the mortgagor can take advantage of. Jones on Mortgages, 8th Ed. sec. 841; and McKinnon v. Bradley, 178 Or. 45, 165 P.2d 286.

[5] In Garvey v. Byram, supra, 18 Cal. 2d at page 281, 115 P.2d at page 502, it is said, quoting from Christy v. Fisher, 58 Cal. 256, 258:

"It is well settled that one who is under a moral or legal obligation to pay the taxes is not in a position to become a purchaser at a sale made for such taxes. If such person permits the property to be sold for taxes, and buys it in, either in person or indirectly through the agency of another, he does not thereby acquire any right or title to the property, but his purchase is deemed one mode of paying the taxes."

See also 85 C.J.S., Taxation, § 809, par. h., p. 140. A disqualified person is not allowed to acquire a valid title to land sold at a tax sale by procuring another to purchase the tax title for him. 85 C.J.S., Taxation, § 809, par. j, pp. 142-143. Under these authorities and the general finding of conspiracy to defraud plaintiff of her title to the property, it must be held that there is support for the judgment. No prejudicial error appears as a result of the order denying a new trial.

person under the age of twenty-one years.

Civ. 20925.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

July 15, 1955.

Proceeding for adjudication declaring a minor to be a ward of the juvenile court. From order of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, William B. Neely, J., declaring minor to be a ward of juvenile court and placing him in custody of probation officer, the minor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J. pro tem., held that it was not necessary that juvenile court make written findings of fact.

Order affirmed.

1. Infants ⇨16.10

In proceeding for adjudication declaring minor to be ward of juvenile court, instituted by petition charging that minor used force or violence upon person of another in violation of Penal Code, report of probation officer was properly considered by the court. Welfare and Institutions Code, §§ 700(m), 735.

2. Infants ⇨16.8

In proceeding for adjudication declaring a minor to be a ward of the juvenile court, evidence was sufficient to support implied finding that minor was frequently in trouble at school because of fighting and truancy and that minor attacked a motorist, who had stopped to talk to minor after minor had called motorist a name. Welfare and Institutions Code, §§ 700(m), 735; Pen.Code, § 242; Welfare and Institutions Code, § 700.

3. Infants ⇨16.9

In proceeding for adjudication declaring a minor to be a ward of the juvenile court, wherein there was a conflict in testimony concerning a fight which gave rise to institution of the proceeding, court had prerogative and duty of accepting that testimony which appeared to him to be credible. Welfare and Institutions Code, §§ 700(m), 735.

4. Continuance ⇨22

In proceeding for adjudication declaring minor to be a ward of the juvenile court, denial of motion for a continuance in order to present witnesses to impeach testimony of person, whom minor had attacked, was not an abuse of discretion when no surprise was asserted, no witnesses were named, and no assurance was given, either by affidavit or oral assurance of counsel, as to what testimony of any of witnesses would be. Welfare and Institutions Code, §§ 700(m), 735.

5. Appeal and Error ⇨966(1)

Continuance ⇨44

Mere statement by counsel, in support of motion for continuance, that additional time is needed and that some unnamed witness might give material testimony, without supporting affidavit, presents no issue either before trial court or before reviewing court.

6. Continuance ⇨24

A continuance to enable a party to present an absent witness is properly refused if testimony of absent witness would only tend to impeach a witness of the adverse party.

7. Infants ⇨16.5

Proceeding for adjudication declaring a minor to be a ward of juvenile court is not a trial in ordinary sense of word but rather is more in character of a guardianship whereby minor is relieved of stigma of a criminal conviction by placing him upon probation with individuals or in institutions having facilities to give him corrective care, supervision and training. Welfare and Institutions Code, §§ 700(m), 735.

8. Judges ⇨49(1)

Marked disapproval by judge of unlawful misconduct disclosed by evidence does not amount to a manifest prejudice of the trial judge denying defendant a fair trial.

9. Infants ⇨16.10

In proceedings for adjudication declaring a minor to be a ward of the juvenile court, it was not necessary that the judge make written findings of fact. Welfare and Institutions Code, §§ 735, 739, 785.

10. Judgment ⇨215, 282

Law pertaining to judgments generally recognizes the propriety of an oral pronouncement which is carried into the court minutes, and the judge's signature to a written judgment is not essential.

11. Judgment ⇨215

Except where findings are specifically required, a judgment is rendered when decision is announced and carried into the minutes.

12. Judgment ⇨214

It is a matter of trial court procedure whether the court chooses to make its final decision by entry in the minutes of an order without a direction that a written order be prepared, signed and filed, or elects to enter a direction that a formal order be prepared.

13. Infants ⇨16.12

In proceeding for adjudication declaring a minor to be a ward of the juvenile court, if it was necessary that findings and judgment be in writing, minute order declaring the minor a ward of the juvenile court and taking his custody from the parents and releasing minor to custody of probation officer was sufficient. Welfare and Institutions Code, § 735.

14. Appeal and Error ⇨761

A point which is merely suggested by counsel for appellant, without supporting argument or authority, is deemed to be without foundation and will not be considered.

Nathan Newby, Jr., Los Angeles, for appellant.

ASHBURN, Justice pro tem.

[1] This is an appeal from an order declaring Earl Leroy Steiner, a minor, to be a ward of the juvenile court under subdivision (m) of section 700, Welfare and Institutions Code and placing him in the custody of the probation officer for integration in the forestry camp program. Said section 700(m) provides that jurisdiction of the juvenile court extends to any person under the age of 21 years who "violates any law of this State or any ordinance of any town, city, or county, of this State defining crime." Section 735 provides for an adjudication declaring a minor person to be a ward of the juvenile court upon finding that he comes within the provisions of said section 700. This proceeding was instituted by a petition charging that the minor Steiner "wilfully and unlawfully used force or violence upon the person of Paul Emil Laurin by striking the said person * * * about the face with his fist and kicking him in the shins; thereby violating Penal Code Section 242, Battery." After a hearing the court caused a minute order to be made, as follows: "* * * The court finds the allegations of the petition filed December 14, 1954, true; and the petition is sustained. Minor is declared a ward of the Juvenile Court under Subdivision M, Section 700, Welfare and Institutions Code. The court finds it is to the best interests of the minor that his custody be taken from the parents, and his custody is taken from the parents.

Minor is ordered released to the custody of the probation officer for integration in the forestry camp program. The probation officer is authorized to transport the minor to and from Juvenile Hall for medical care when necessary. The minor's camp earnings are ordered impounded and released to him upon his discharge from camp. This matter is continued to the non-appearance calendar of January 20, 1956, for further report. Minor is ordered detained by Sheriff (Biscailuz Center recommended) pending camp replacement." From this order the appeal is taken.

[2, 3] The evidence consisted mainly of the testimony of said Paul Laurin, said Earl Steiner, one Richard Prell, and a probation officer's report. Such report was, for course, properly considered by the court. In re Halamuda, 85 Cal.App.2d 219, 223, 192 P.2d 781; In re Jones, 34 Cal.App.2d 77, 82, 93 P.2d 185. The evidence is sufficient to sustain the following implied findings, which were presumptively made. Steiner, aged 17 years, was in frequent trouble at school because of fighting and truancy, being suspended twice; had been the subject of numerous complaints about the fast and noisy driving of his car. He was living with his father who defended his conduct and rationalized it on all occasions. On December 5, 1954, at about 7:00 p. m., young Steiner, Richard Prell and another boy were in the street, Borson near Ardis, in Bellflower. Mr. Laurin drove his automobile from Ardis into Borson at a moderate speed and saw the boys some 50 or 100 feet ahead of him. As he noticed them Steiner fell down onto the street and Laurin brought his car almost to a stop. Steiner got up at once, had no fear of being run over, but as Laurin passed slowly by, began to curse him, calling him a son of a bitch. Laurin by that time was a few feet past the boy, but this nettled him and he backed his car to talk to Steiner. Thereupon Steiner yelled "You want to fight?", grabbed the door handle on the driver's side, opened the door and started to hit Laurin, who tried to push and kick him away. At this juncture Prell, from the right side of the car hit Laurin, who was pulled down to the seat, pummeled by both of them; he was blowing his horn and neighbors began to arrive; the boys ran away from the scene. Steiner gave a version which was contrary to that of Laurin in most respects. For instance he said that Steiner called him to the car and started arguing about his driving, then kicked him in the head and knocked him out, knocked him clear across the street. Of course, the court had the prerogative and the duty of accepting that testimony which appeared to him to be credible, and the record as a whole indicates he made no mistake in accepting the story of Laurin rather than that of Steiner.

Counsel for appellant attacks the testimony of Laurin as contradictory and inherently improbable, but the argument rises no higher than a showing of a conflict calling upon the judge to accept the true and reject the false. See Murphy v. Ablow, 123 Cal.App.2d 853, 858, 268 P.2d 80, as to the applicable rule on review.

[4-6] Counsel also complains that prejudicial error occurred through denial of his motion for a continuance in order to present witnesses to impeach the testimony of Laurin. Steiner had testified that Laurin and others had previously threatened him several times about driving his car too fast, saying "they were going to pull me out of my car and slap something out of me." This was flatly denied by Laurin. After the court had announced its ruling, the following occurred: "Mr. Newby: Your Honor, one question I would like to ask. We have time to produce the witnesses who were present at the time that this man threatened Earl, because if we prove that, then he has committed perjury, and I know that we are going to press it. The Court: All right. You press your perjury charges, because as far as I am concerned, I am only concerned with this thing here that I have before me, the boys who were in this court. We are working in the interests of the minor." No surprise was asserted, no witnesses were named, and no assurance given as to what testimony any of them would give,—either by affidavit or oral assurance of counsel. Indeed, counsel's own confidence in his move was not very apparent,—“* * * if we prove that, then he has committed perjury, and I know that we are going to press it.” (Emphasis supplied.) “The mere statement by counsel that additional time was needed, and that some witness (unnamed and unidentified) might give material testimony, without a supporting affidavit in either case, presents no issue either before the trial court or before this court on an appeal from the judgment.” People v. Schenk, 19 Cal.App.2d 503, 505, 65 P.2d 895, 896. See also 12 Cal.Jur.2d § 38, p. 149; 12 Cal.Jur.2d § 39, p. 150. Moreover, “[i]t is the rule that a continuance is properly refused if the testimony of the absent witness would only tend to impeach a witness of the adverse party.”—Rose v. Tandowsky, 80 Cal.App.2d 927, 933, 183 P.2d 347, 351. See also 12 Cal.Jur.2d § 37, p. 149. There was no abuse of discretion in this matter and hence no valid ground for complaint.

[7] Appellant asserts denial of a fair trial because of manifest prejudice of the trial judge. To get true perspective one must recognize that the instant proceeding was not a trial in the ordinary sense of the word. It is designed to be informal to a marked degree. It “is more in the character of a guardianship whereby the minor is relieved off the stigma of a criminal conviction by placing him upon probation with individuals or in institutions having the facilities to give him corrective care, supervision and training.” People v. Renteria, 60 Cal.App.2d 463, 470, 141 P.2d 37.” In re Dargo, 81 Cal.App.2d 205, 207, 183 P.2d 282, 283. See also In re Jones, supra, 34 Cal.App.2d 77, 82, 93 P.2d 185; In re Halamuda, supra, 85 Cal.App.2d 219, 222–223, 192 P.2d 781.

[8] And there is nothing in the law to the effect that a judge cannot be prejudiced against unlawful conduct, or that marked disapproval of conduct disclosed by the evidence is prejudice within the recognized connotation of that term. “From these authorities the rule appears to be that when the state of mind of the trial judge appears to be adverse to one of the parties but is based upon actual observance of the witnesses and the evidence given during the trial of an action, it does not amount to that prejudice against a litigant which disqualifies him in the trial of the action. It is his duty to consider and pass upon the evidence produced before him, and when the evidence is in conflict, to resolve that conflict in favor of the party whose evidence outweighs that of the opposing party. The opinion thus formed, being the result of a judicial hearing, does not amount to that bias and prejudice contemplated by section 170, subdivision 5, of the Code of Civil Procedure as a basis for a change of venue or a change of judges.” Kreling v. Superior Court, 25 Cal.2d 305, 312, 153 P.2d 734, 738. To the same effect are In re Guardianship of Jacobson, 30 Cal.2d 312, 317–318, 182 P.2d 537; McEwen v. Occidental Life Ins. Co., 172 Cal. 6, 11, 155 P. 86; People ex rel. Department of Public Works v. McCullough, 100 Cal.App.2d 101, 111, 223 P.2d 37; People v. Sweet, 19 Cal.App.2d 392, 396, 65 P.2d 899. The remarks of the judge of which complaint is made are clearly within this category. There is no substance to the charge that the judge was prejudiced against Steiner individually or that he did not give him a fair hearing.

[9] It is also argued that the judge failed to make written findings of fact, that this constituted error and “deprives this court of jurisdiction,” meaning the juvenile court. Reliance is placed on section 785, Welfare and Institutions Code and the cases of In re Matter of Hill, 78 Cal.App. 23, 247 P. 591, In re Brodie, 33 Cal.App. 751, 166 P. 605 and In re Spiers, 15 Cal. App.2d 487, 59 P.2d 838. Examination of each of those cases reveals that there was no finding of facts in a proceeding wherein the juvenile court statute specifically required such finding (in the Spiers case the so called findings were held to be mere conclusions). But none of them holds that a statute requiring findings in a proceeding such as this makes written findings necessary.

Section 785, Welfare and Institutions Code (misabeled 784 in appellant's brief), reads as follows: “Whenever the procedure prescribed in the foregoing sections of this article has been followed, the juvenile court may make a final written order signed by the judge presiding in such court, judicially depriving the parents of the custody and control of a person who should be declared free from the custody and control of his parents; but nothing in this section shall be construed to impair the right of the court to make orders or commitments under any other section of this chapter." It does call for a written order signed by the judge; but, as respondent points out, it applies only to a proceeding under "this article" which is Article 8 of Chapter 2, dealing with proceedings to declare a minor free from custody and control of his parents. And the section expressly disclaims any application to any proceeding "under any other section of this chapter." The instant proceeding falls within Article 7, "Proceeding to Declare a Person a Ward of the Juvenile Court * * *." That article contains two sections which are pertinent. Section 735: "When any person under the age of twenty-one years, alleged to come within the provisions of section 700, is found by the court or judge to come within the said provisions, the court shall adjudge the person to be a ward of the juvenile court and shall in its judgment make a finding of the facts upon which the court exercises its jurisdiction over such person as a ward of the juvenile court. The court shall thereupon make such order or orders, in accordance with such findings, as may be necessary for the care of such ward of the juvenile court. All commitment and recommitment orders shall be in writing, and shall be signed by the judge of the juvenile court." And section 739:

"In all cases the court may determine whether or not the parents or guardian shall exercise any control of a ward of the juvenile court or of any other minor person concerning whom a petition has been filed in accordance with the provisions of sections 721 and 722, and may define the extent of control permitted; but no ward of the juvenile court shall be taken from the custody of his parent or legal guardian without the consent of the parent or guardian, unless the court finds one of the following facts: * * *

"(d) That the welfare of the person requires that his custody be taken from his parent or guardian."

The necessity of written findings of fact under these sections has been considered in In re Hartman, 93 Cal.App.2d 801, 807, 210 P.2d 53 (§ 735); In re Ortiz, 74 Cal. App.2d 810, 813-817, 169 P.2d 664 (§ 739); In re Etherington, 35 Cal.2d 863, 868-869, 221 P.2d 942 (§ 739). In each instance oral findings were held to be sufficient. This was likewise the holding in Knight v. Superior Court, 102 Cal.App.2d 211, 215, 227 P.2d 62, a matter arising under sections 734 and 834, Welfare and Institutions Code, having to do with minors found unfit for consideration under the Juvenile Court Law.

[10-13] The exact language of section 735 deserves attention. It says "* * * the court shall adjudge the person to be a ward of the juvenile court and shall in its judgment make a finding of the facts upon which the court exercises its jurisdiction * * *." Considered independently of the ruling in Hartman, supra, this implies a necessity for written findings if the judgment is required to be in writing. But it is not so specified with respect to the judgment. And the law pertaining to judgments generally recognizes the propriety of an oral pronouncement which is carried into the court minutes. The judge's signature to a written judgment is not essential. Brown v. Superior Court, 70 Cal.App. 732, 735, 234 P. 409; In re Cook, 77 Cal. 220, 227, 17 P. 923, 19 P. 431, 1 L.R.A. 567; Crim v. Kessing, 89 Cal. 478, 488, 26 P. 1074. Except where findings are specifically required (as in section 632, Code of Civil Procedure) a judgment is rendered when decision is announced and carried into the minutes. Brown v. Superior Court, supra, 70 Cal.App. 732, 734, 234 P. 409; Davis v. Rudolph, 80 Cal.App.2d 397, 407-408, 181 P.2d 765; Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 10 Cal.2d 307, 327, 74 P.2d 761. Malpractice action. The Superior Court, San Diego County, John A. Hewicker, J., rendered judgment on verdict for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. Judgment affirmed.

Pessararra*, 80 Cal.App.2d 965, 183 P.2d 279; 3 Cal.Jur.2d § 53, p. 484. Section 735 concludes with a requirement that all commitment orders "shall be in writing, and shall be signed by the judge of the juvenile court." No such provision being made as to findings and judgment the contrasting treatment in the same section requires a holding that the findings and judgment do not have to be in writing. But if a writing were thereby required the minute order would be sufficient compliance. This follows from the ruling in Cox v. Tyrone Power Enterprises, 49 Cal.App.2d 383, 391 et seq., 121 P.2d 829, wherein a minute order was held to be a compliance with the requirement of section 657, Code of Civil Procedure, that, in granting a motion for new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, "the order shall so specify this in writing". To same effect is Broderick v. Sutherland, 94 Cal.App.2d 694, 695, 211 P.2d 364. There was no failure to comply with the statute in the case at bar with reference to the manner or form of findings.

[14] Counsel for appellant assigns as one of the alleged errors that: "The Court erred when it failed to sign written findings of fact and the judgment of commitment." But nothing further is said in the brief about the commitment. The argument is that there was a failure to make written findings, which matter we have decided. A point which is merely suggested by appellant's counsel, with no supporting argument or authority, is deemed to be without foundation and requires no discussion. 4 Cal.Jur.2d § 484, p. 318. No other matters merit comment.

The order is affirmed.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is a malpractice action. On May 15, 1942, the plaintiff suffered a severe comminuted fracture of his right heel bone. He was hospitalized and treated by three doctors, including Dr. West who took charge of the case on August 28, 1942. On April 9, 1943, Dr. West performed a second operation known as a triple arthrodesis.

On June 10, 1943, Dr. West entered the military service and the defendant took over the case. Because the patient was unable to use his foot, and because the bones had not healed in proper alignment, the defendant performed another operation on May 12, 1944. It is this operation and the following postoperative treatment of which the plaintiff complains. After this operation on May 12, 1944, a cast was put on the foot, and the plaintiff complained of terrific pain and that the cast felt tight. Within a day or two, a small window was cut in the cast over the wound caused by the operation, and some medication was applied. There was some relief at first, but the plaintiff continued to feel pain and to complain that the cast was tight. On June 2, he was discharged from the hospital but was using crutches. On June 21, 1944, the defendant removed the cast, and then observed a necrosis and a slough which later developed into a sinus at or near the site of the operation. The defendant treated this condition by various means, conservative in nature, until the middle of October, 1944. The condition failed to clear up and increased in size, and in late October the defendant notified the insurance company that the foot had not improved, and informed it of the slough area. The plaintiff was taken to Los Angeles and on November 14, 1944, another doctor performed an operation and removed certain dead or necrotic bones. On November 29, 1944, still another doctor performed another operation and removed more bone. Finally, in January or February, 1945, the foot was amputated above the ankle.

This action was filed in October, 1945, but was not tried until several years later. A jury returned a verdict for $25,000 in favor of the plaintiff, and the court granted the defendant's motion for a new trial. On appeal, that order was affirmed, Norden v. Hartman, 111 Cal.App.2d 751, 245 P.2d 3. Some of the facts are there more fully stated. The case was retried in March, 1954, with special emphasis on the tightness of the cast as a basis for the charge of negligence. The jury again returned a verdict for $25,000 in favor of the plaintiff. A motion for a new trial was denied, and the defendant has appealed from the judgment.

It is first contended that the verdict is erroneous because it is unsupported by any competent medical evidence that defendant was negligent or caused plaintiff any injury. It is argued that whether a doctor has used ordinary care in a particular case, in applying the learning and skill required of him to the treatment of his patient, is a question for experts and can be established only by such testimony; that the rule is that laymen on a jury cannot be permitted to speculate on matters that are exclusively within the knowledge of experts; that there was no testimony here by any doctor indicating any impropriety in the defendant's treatment of the plaintiff; that no expert testified that any act or omission of the defendant caused any of the injuries complained of; and that the expert testimony here was flatly to the effect that no negligence appeared, and that the plaintiff's troubles were the result of things beyond the control of the defendant.

The plaintiff testified that the cast put on by the defendant felt much worse than the cast previously put on by another doctor; that the cast was tight and there was a constant pain in there which was terrific at times; that he told the nurse to tell the doctor that he had to do something because of the pain; that the second day he told the defendant "that the cast hurt me, that it was tight and I was in awful agony, that he would have to do something"; that the defendant told the nurse to have a window cut in the cast; that the cast always felt tight in spite of the cutting of the window; that the cast "still seemed kind of tight" when he left the hospital; and that the cast was left on until June 21. Mrs. Norden testified that the day after the operation the plaintiff complained of extreme pain and throbbing in his foot and that the cast was so tight he said he could hardly bear it, and that she visited him in the hospital about twice a week and he continued to complain of the tightness of the cast.

The defendant testified that before he operated on May 12, 1944, there was no evidence of anything on the foot except a healed incision with a normal scar. In response to a hypothetical question as to whether a cast that was too tight at a particular pressure point at or near the surgical site, as the surgical site was in this case, could not have caused the same type of infection that was caused in this case, he replied that it could. When asked what else could have caused this infection he stated that it could also have been caused if the vascular system at or about the operation site was severed, or could have been caused by a blood clot landing somewhere. He further testified that in this case the cast was not too tight; that there is a universal precaution to be taken in casting; that the cast should not be too tight because of the danger of necrosis or sloughing off of skin; that when the patient tells you it is too tight it is something you would necessarily heed, in good medical practice; that when he took off the cast on June 21, it did not have a window in it; that when he took off the cast on that day he found that there was a "slough on the lateral side of the ankle down to the bone"; that this was the result of an infection; and that the amputation which later occurred was made necessary by an infection.

Dr. McPherson testified that this infection was caused by "some circulatory disturbance that produced a slough of an area of the skin which became infected, and there was some extension into the bone." Dr. West testified that it is well recognized medical practice to loosen a cast where it is too tight; that he would like to have some facts to go on as to whether it is too tight, as in every case patients complain that it is too tight; that where a cast has pressure at one particular point there will be a resultant necrosis or death of that tissue if it remains for too long a time; that the cause of the amputation in this case was traceable back to an original infection whatever the cause of that infection was; that the original infection here was caused by circulatory impairment at a specific location in that foot and not by a general circulatory impairment through the entire system; that in his opinion the original infection here was not caused by any major interruption of the blood supply and not by any blood clot; and that from a statement of what occurred between the date of the operation and June 21, when the cast was removed, "it would lead me to believe the cast was not necessarily—was not on too tightly."

[1-3] The general rules applicable to malpractice cases are well settled. A physician or surgeon is not liable for every untoward result which may occur. It is only required that he have the degree of learning and skill which is common in the medical profession in that locality, and that he exercise ordinary care in applying such learning and skill to the treatment of his patient. Whether or not he possesses or exercises the required learning or skill in a particular case is generally a question for experts and can be established only by their testimony, and such expert evidence is conclusive where the matter in issue is one within the knowledge of such experts only and not within the common knowledge of laymen. Huffman v. Lindquist, 37 Cal. 2d 465, 234 P.2d 34, 29 A.L.R.2d 485; Engelking v. Carlson, 13 Cal.2d 216, 88 P.2d 695. In some cases, however, even when the testimony of experts is uncontradicted, a question of fact may remain for the jury. The negligence of such a defendant may be established by the evidence produced by him. McCurdy v. Hatfield, 30 Cal.2d 492, 183 P.2d 269. The ultimate question which a jury must answer, and the question which an expert may answer for the purpose of furnishing evidence upon which the jury is to make up its mind, are not identical. Professional witnesses may testify concerning the teachings of their science and the customs of their craft, but whether these things disclose due care presents a question for the court or jury. Thomason v. Hethcock, 7 Cal.App.2d 634, 46 P.2d 832. In Sim v. Weeks, 7 Cal.App.2d 28, 45 P.2d 350, 354, it is said:

"A charge of negligence in a choice of treatment is refuted, as a matter of law, by showing that a respectable minority of expert physicians approved the method selected. But where a physician is charged with negligence in the actual performance of a treatment, after its method was chosen over others, evidence tending to show such negligence presents a case for the jury.

* * * When a result may or may not be occasioned by malpractice, an expert medical witness invades the province of the jury when permitted to go beyond stating that it could and in saying that it did occasion the result. * * * But, when a result could have been occasioned by one of two or more causes, the ultimate fact of which cause occasioned the result is for determination by the jury, * * *."

In Dickow v. Cookinham, 123 Cal.App. 2d 81, 266 P.2d 63, a judgment based on a directed verdict for the defendant was reversed. It was held that the jury could have found that the defendants were negligent in disregarding the plaintiff's complaint and making no examination to ascertain the cause thereof, or in failing to treat an ulcer which was developing under a cast and which could have been discovered.

[4] On principle and authority, it must be held that there was a question here for the jury and that the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict. While the defendant testified that this cast was not too tight, there was other evidence justifying a contrary inference. While such questions as whether a cast should have been used, and as to the effect of a too-tight cast, were exclusively within the knowledge of experts, the question as to whether this particular cast was too tight was not and could not be exclusively within their knowledge, as experts. While the testimony of the experts here supports the method of treatment used by the defendant it does not necessarily disclose the absence of negligence in carrying out that treatment. Some of that testimony supports a contrary conclusion. All of the doctors testified that it is common medical practice to loosen a cast where it is too tight, and the defendant testified that, in good medical practice, the patient's complaint of tightness should be heeded. Dr. West testified that pressure from a cast at a particular point will cause a death of the tissue at that point if it remains too long; that the original infection here was caused by a circulatory impairment at a specific location; and that in his opinion this impairment was not caused by any major interruption of the blood supply or by a blood clot. While he later expressed an opinion that certain things would lead him to believe that this cast was not too tight, this was somewhat qualified by his use of the words "not necessarily."

There was expert evidence that this necrosis could have been caused by this cast being too tight, and some expert evidence tending to exclude other possible causes. There were also other circumstances which have an important bearing on the ultimate question of fact. It appears that the plaintiff's foot was well healed from the prior operation at the time the defendant operated on May 12, 1944; that the plaintiff suffered great pain shortly after the cast was put on and for a considerable period, and made vigorous complaint; that nothing was done except to open a small window over the operation wound itself and apply some medication there; that that window was subsequently closed; and that when the cast was removed on June 21, an area of necrosis was found which was so serious that it would not respond to treatment over a period of several months. While there was evidence that the original injury was of a type which presents great difficulties in the matter of treatment, that the results of the prior operations and treatment were not entirely satisfactory, and that the form of treatment adopted by the defendant was proper, there was also evidence tending to show negligence in the actual performance of that treatment. The evidence, as a whole, was sufficient to support the verdict.

[5] It is next contended that the court refused to instruct the jury on the necessity of medical testimony to establish malpractice and, to the contrary, instructed the jury, in effect, that such testimony was not necessary and could be disregarded. Complaint is made of the refusal of two instructions which read as follows:

"Negligence upon the part of a physician is never to be presumed, and in the absence of expert testimony to the contrary, it is to be presumed that a physician possesses and has exercised the requisite degree of skill and care in examining a patient. In determining the question of whether the defendant was guilty of negligence as alleged in the complaint you cannot and must not set up a standard of your own but must be governed in that regard solely by the testimony of expert witnesses who have appeared and testified in this case.

"In this case it is necessary to have expert testimony to establish the nature of the alleged injury and that it was proximately caused by the treatment that is claimed to have been improper. You cannot consider whether, as a matter of common knowledge, the treatment rendered in this case was or was not proper but you may determine only from the testimony of the experts who have testified in the case whether or not the plaintiff in fact suffered the injury he claims as the result of the treatment alleged to be improper."

It is argued that the first of these instructions was inferentially approved in Moore v. Belt, 34 Cal.2d 525, 212 P.2d 509, and that the subject-matter of these instructions was not otherwise covered. While the wording of these instructions is subject to some criticism the subject-matter thereof, insofar as proper, was sufficiently covered in other instructions which were given.

The court gave the following instructions:

"In this case there has been testimony of expert witnesses on the medical procedure in use in this community, on methods of medical and surgical treatment, on the causes and courses of disease, and on other medical matters. In respect of any such testimony which has not been contradicted by any similar testimony, you are instructed as follows: Inasmuch as the subject matter of such evidence is not within the common knowledge of laymen, but is within the exclusive province of specialized study and experience, it may not be contradicted by the opinion of a non-expert, and you are not permitted to reject it, but shall find in accordance with it unless, under the rules of law stated to you in these instructions you find the testimony unreliable and unworthy of belief. (Italics ours.)

"The mere fact that the plaintiff has suffered a disability to his foot, considered alone, does not support an inference that some party, or any party, to this action was negligent.

"The law does not permit you to guess or speculate as to the cause of the accident in question. If the evidence is equally balanced on the issue of negligence or proximate cause, so that it does not preponderate in favor of the party making the charge, then he has failed to fulfill his burden of proof.

"To aid you in finding on the issue whether the defendant was guilty of malpractice, there are a few discriminations that you should have in mind. The law does not require of a physician and surgeon perfection, nor prophetic insight, nor infallible judgment; nor does it condemn him simply because his efforts prove unsuccessful. The difficulties and uncertainties in the practice of medicine and surgery, the unpredictable variations in response to treatment are such that no practitioner can guarantee results.

"Where there is more than one recognized method of diagnosis or treatment, and no one of them is used exclusively and uniformly by all practitioners in good standing, it is not negligence for a physician and surgeon if, in exercising his best judgment, he selects one of the approved methods, which later turns out to be a wrong selection, or one not favored by certain other practitioners.

"In short, it is quite possible for a physician and surgeon to err in judgment, or to be unsuccessful in his treatment, or to disagree with others of his profession, without being negligent.

"In malpractice suits against physicians and surgeons, as in all civil actions, negligence on the part of the physicians and surgeons may be proved by circumstantial evidence, and such circumstantial evidence, if any, need not rise to that degree of certainty which would exclude every reasonable conclusion other than that drawn by you, the jury. The facts relied upon to establish the plaintiff's case need not be of such a nature and so related to each other that negligence is the only conclusion that can be fairly or reasonably drawn therefrom. But they must prove the allegations of the complaint by a preponderance of the evidence."

[6] It is further argued that two of the instructions thus given had the effect of instructing the jury that medical testimony to establish malpractice was not necessary and could be disregarded. The italicised portion of the first of these instructions was added by the court, the rest of the instruction having been requested by the defendant. It is argued that the portion thus added by the court permitted the jury to disregard or reject the uncontradicted testimony of medical experts within the field of their exclusive knowledge. The portion added by the court related only to the matter of credibility, covered by the general instructions, and did not change the effect of the instruction as a whole. The jury was thus told that such expert testimony was conclusive as to matters within the medical field which are not within the common knowledge of laymen, that it must be accepted as such, that it could not be contradicted by the opinion of a non-expert, and that it must not be rejected unless it could be found unworthy of belief under some other rule of law. The court also instructed the jury that it was not to single out any certain sentence or portion of an instruction and ignore the others, but that it was to consider all of the instructions as a whole. Assuming that the portion added by the court was unnecessary, no reversible error appears.

[7] It is also argued that the last of these instructions erroneously told the jury that it could base a holding of malpractice on circumstantial evidence, rather than on the medical testimony, and invited the jurors to disregard the testimony of the experts and decide the case upon their own ideas of proper methods of treatment and other medical matters, and to infer malpractice from the ultimate outcome of the treatment. While it would have been better to have omitted a part, at least, of this instruction in a case of this nature, we are unable to agree that it had the effect of inviting the jury to disregard the testimony of the experts and to substitute their own ideas of proper methods of medical treatment. While there was much expert testimony there was also evidence of a number of circumstances, outside the field of that testimony, which could properly be taken into consideration. The instructions as a whole covered all of the material issues, and it does not appear that any portions thereof were sufficiently prejudicial to justify a reversal. None of the instructions can be interpreted as permitting the jury to disregard the expert testimony with respect to the medical questions which were exclusively within the knowledge of the experts.

[8] It is unnecessary to consider in detail the further contentions that the court erred in two other minor matters in the instructions and that the plaintiff's counsel was guilty of misconduct in one respect in arguing to the jury, and in several respects in his cross-examination of Dr. West. It is conceded that the latter matters were not repeated after they were objected to, and none of the matters referred to could reasonably be thought to have affected the verdict.

The judgment is affirmed.

Action by surviving husband to assert claim that certain property in wife's estate was community property. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Jesse J. Framp-ton, J., rendered judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that evidence as to whether parties had in any manner dealt with property as community property supported finding that, despite alleged oral agreement that wife's property should become community property, the proposed transmutation had never been consummated or executed.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Husband and Wife $\S$ 266

2. Husband and Wife $\S$ 266

Separate property may be transmuted into community property, and an oral agreement may evidence parties' intention to do so.

DORAN, Justice.

Plaintiff, the surviving husband of Eugenie A. Norton Woods, deceased, appeals from that portion of a judgment which declared that said husband has no interest in certain real and personal property standing in the decedent's name, claimed by the husband to have been transmuted into community property by oral agreement.

The complaint "to quiet title, for declaratory relief, for recovery of possession of personal property and for money had and received", alleges that the Security Bank, as executor of the wife's estate, had possession of certain cash and other items of property claimed as community property; and that the other defendants, named as beneficiaries under the wife's will claim an interest in the real property adverse to plaintiff's alleged superior right.

It appears that the wife died on May 28, 1949; that a short time previous thereto, namely, on January 14, 1949, the plaintiff married said wife, then about the age of 91 years. It is alleged "That on a number of occasions subsequent to the marriage * * * plaintiff and decedent orally agreed that all property of the decedent was the community property of decedent and the plaintiff herein". In a second count the complaint alleges "That on or about the 14th day of January, 1949, the said decedent orally conveyed to the plaintiff herein all her right, title and interest in and to all her property, both real and personal, to take effect upon her death", and, "That plaintiff contends that upon the death of the said decedent the plaintiff became the owner of all the property of said decedent".

The trial court found that "Prior to her marriage with plaintiff said decedent orally agreed with him that if they were married all of her property would become community property and would become his property at her death"; also that after the marriage, "she orally declared to plaintiff and to others that by reason of said marriage the property had become the community property of herself and plaintiff and would become his after her death, to which statement plaintiff assented; and said decedent intended by such declarations to transmute her separate property to community property."

It was further found that at the time of the marriage, "and thereafter, plaintiff was possessed of no property, except items of personal use and adornment. He had no real estate, he had no bank account, no stocks, bonds or securities; he had no cash except approximately $10. After the said marriage plaintiff earned no money and contributed nothing in the way of property, money, or otherwise, to the community. After the marriage, said deceased did nothing in the way of transmutation of her separate property, except to make the oral declarations hereinbefore stated; she did not part with the control of any of said property or put the possession of any of it in plaintiff". The decedent's oral declarations that the property was community property were "never followed by any action on the part of her or the plaintiff to transfer title, control, or possession". The trial court therefore concluded that the surviving husband had no interest in any of the real or personal property with the exception of the household furnishings and a Buick automobile.

It is appellant's contention that the trial court's "basic error" was "his conclusion that the oral agreement of the transmutation was not executed or consummated". In addition, appellant presents a "Moral Argument" that, since plaintiff "has proved both a pre-nuptial and post-nuptial agreement wherein he was to receive the property of the decedent", it "seems ridiculous * * * that purported legal technicalities should operate to frustrate the intent of a property owner, especially as between husband and wife".

To this latter argument respondents answer that "there is nothing moral about the situation that this case presents. The idea that an old lady of 91 years should purchase a marriage with her young chauffeur by a promise to give him all her property goes counter to our idea as to the sanctity of marriage and its purpose. That upon her death four and a half months after the marriage he should claim the property standing in her name without contributing one cent to the value or assuming any of the duties of its management and control, is repugnant to our sense of justice and fair dealing". Appellant, however, views the matter in a different light, and calls attention to testimony that before the marriage decedent stated: "This is no romance, this is a business proposition. I am marrying Allan so that he can have my property. He is the only one I can rely on".

[1] The trial court's decision that the proposed transmutation of decedent's property from separate to community property was never consummated or executed, and that therefore the surviving husband had no interest therein, must be sustained. The cases cited by appellant, holding that in certain peculiar circumstances, a transmutation into community property had taken place pursuant to an oral agreement between husband and wife, are, as respondents point out, predicated upon factual situations not present in the instant litigation.

In Estate of Raphael, 91 Cal.App.2d 931, 938, 206 P.2d 391, 395, the trial court found that the transmutation had been effected. "by an oral agreement which was fully executed and corroborated by documentary evidence", namely income tax returns filed in the names of both spouses. This opinion states that "All that is required to show an executed oral agreement of transmutation is proof of the parties' acts and conduct in dealing with their property. * * * The income tax returns * * * constitute evidence of the fact that the parties regarded their property as community property".

In the present case there is no evidence showing that the parties in any manner dealt with the property as community property. The trial court found that decedent "did not part with the control of any of said property or put the possession of any of it in the plaintiff; she retained her bank account in her own name subject only to her right of withdrawal; she retained her safe deposit box in her own name", etc.

[2] As appellant avers, it is well settled that separate property may be transmuted into community property and that an oral agreement may evidence the parties' intention so to do, but the cases cited do not support the contention that this was the situation in the present case. Tomaier v. Tomaier, 23 Cal.2d 754, 146 P.2d 905, merely holds that property deeded to husband and wife in joint tenancy may be deemed community property where it was purchased with community funds. And in Kenney v. Kenney, 220 Cal. 134, 136, 30 P.2d 398, 399, the very point of the decision was that the oral agreement had been consummated by the subsequent actions of the parties, "concerning the selling, purchasing, mortgaging, and improving of said property". The present case lacks the particular elements upon which these cases turned.

Appellant also argues that the decision of the probate court on plaintiff's petition to determine interest in the wife's estate and for a probate homestead, to the effect that the property was community and not separate in nature, "is res judicata on the matter of community property". The respondents' brief, however, points out that in the present action to quiet title, the trial court made no specific finding as to res judicata, "doubtless, because such adjudication was not pleaded".

[3] The trial court, after hearing the proof and observing the demeanor of parties and other witnesses, did find that the property in question was the wife's separate property in which the surviving husband had no interest for the reason that the proposed transmutation had never taken place, and that the husband had "contributed nothing in the way of property, money or otherwise, to the community". On this present appeal, which contains no transcript of the evidence, such finding and judgment must be viewed with "every reasonable and deducible inference and presumption favorable to the judgment". Tyra v. Board of Police & Fire Commissioners, 101 Cal.App.2d 248, 250, 225 P.2d 617, 619.

[4] In the state of the present record, it cannot be determined what, if any, evidence may have been introduced at the trial in respect to the alleged prior adjudication, or even whether such matter was made a proper issue for the trial court to determine. Such being the situation, on the instant appeal it would obviously be improper to indulge in any speculation on this subject, for which reason further discussion is uncalled for.

Appellant's claim that the property was community in nature is predicated upon the assertion that there were both pre-nuptial and post-nuptial agreements of transmutation. Such matters as consideration, the Statute of Frauds, etc. are apparently bypassed, and the contentions made seem to seek to modify or destroy long established and salutary principles concerning real property tenure.

The findings of fact support the judgment rendered in favor of the respondents, no reversible error has been pointed out, and it cannot be said that the decision of the trial court violates any fundamental rights, legal or moral, possessed by the appellant.

The judgment is affirmed.

Action by optionee to compel specific performance of contract resulting from exercise of option to buy realty, against optionor and subsequent purchasers from optionor. The Superior Court, Sacramento County, J. O. Moncur, J., entered judgment for optionee, and purchasers appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. Vendor and Purchaser

Where vendor executed written document entitled "agreement of sale" which acknowledged that he had received $200 as deposit on realty from purchasers, which stated that purchase price of $3,500 was payable in cash on delivery of title, and which was signed by purchasers, document constituted agreement of purchase and sale, which, except as against interests prior in right, worked an equitable conversion of the title.

Lewis, Lewis & Lewis, Sacramento, for appellants.

Noel C. Stevenson, Sacramento, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment decreeing specific performance of a contract resulting from the exercise of an option to buy real estate.

[1] On September 30, 1952 Jewell H. Smith was the owner of a certain parcel of real property in Sacramento County. On that day he executed a written document entitled "Agreement of Sale", which acknowledged that he had received from Lewis and Desch, defendants and appellants here, the sum of $200 as the deposit upon the purchase price of his property. It was stated that the purchase price was $3,500 and that it was payable in cash upon the delivery of title. This document he signed and over the signatures of Lewis and Desch there was written the word "Accepted". No question is raised, and we think none could be raised, but that this document constituted an agreement of purchase and sale which, except as against interests prior in right, at once worked an equitable conversion of the title so that thereafter Lewis and Desch were the equitable owners and Smith retained the legal title pending the consummation of the agreement. In re Estate of Reid, 26 Cal.App.2d 362, 367, 79 P.2d 451; In re Estate of Dwyer, 159 Cal. 664, 675, 115 P. 235. Upon the same day Smith executed a document entitled "Option for Sale of Real Estate", which recited that in consideration of $10 Smith had received he was giving to Utley, plaintiff and respondent herein, the right and option to purchase from Smith on or before the 20th day of October, 1952 the same property aboved referred to. The purchase price was fixed at $3,500. The document provided that if respondent elected to purchase he would pay Smith $3,490 or might deposit that sum for Smith at the office of a named title company. On October 7, 1952 respondent recorded the option contract. Within the time given, that is, on October 10, 1952, respondent notified Smith in writing of his election to buy the property and deposited the full balance of the purchase price with the title company. He demanded that the property be conveyed to him. Appellants Lewis and Desch proceeded under their contract of sale of September 30th and received a deed from Smith on October 14th. Smith refused to convey to respondent Utley and respondent began an action to compel specific performance, asking this relief against Smith and also against appellants Lewis and Desch. The trial court granted respondent's prayer for relief and ordered Lewis and Desch to convey the property to him. From that decision this appeal was taken.

[2] As between optionor and optionee the exercise by the latter of an option to purchase property gives rise to a contract of purchase and sale binding upon the parties to the option and good as against intermediate purchasers of the property who were not bona fide purchasers without notice. Said the court in Smith v. Bangham, 156 Cal. 359, 363, 104 P. 689, 691, 28 L.R.A., N.S., 522:

"The option had at least the force of an offer to sell, and the acceptance of this offer before it had expired or had been revoked constituted a valid and binding contract from which neither party could recede."

In the cited case the optionor gave an option to the optionee to purchase separate property of the optionor. Before the option was exercised the optionor's wife declared a homestead and on exercise of the option the optionor refused to convey. The court said, 156 Cal. at page 365, 104 P. at page 692:

"* * * the option vests in the grantee the right or privilege of acquiring an interest in the land, and, when accepted, entitles him to call for specific performance. * * * Such right, when exercised, must necessarily relate back to the time of giving the option [citing case], so as to cut off intervening rights acquired with knowledge of the existence of the option."

[3, 4] It was material to determine whether or not the option preceded the agreement of sale between Utley and appellants for if appellants were first in time they were first in right. Respondent in his complaint pleaded the execution of the option contract, his election to purchase and the refusal of Smith to convey. Concerning appellants, he alleged that they "knew that the defendant Jewell H. Smith had given the aforesaid option * * * to the plaintiff, and after the making of said Option and after said defendants acquired knowledge of said Option * * * induced the defendant Jewell H. Smith to sell and convey" the property to them. These allegations were found by the trial court to be true and no more specific findings were made or asked for by the parties. Under the rule that findings must be construed in support of the judgment where such a construction is reasonable we must consider that the trial court found that the option preceded the purchase and sale agreement in point of time, although both were executed on the same day and that, therefore, appellants' rights arose during the existence of the option and that they purchased with knowledge thereof. We so construe the findings, as the existence of the option would not prevent the vesting in appellants of rights under their purchase and sale agreement with Smith unless they had actual or constructive notice of the option. It is undisputed, and the court found, that the option agreement was recorded on October 7th, about a week after appellants contracted to buy from Smith. They could not, therefore, have had constructive notice of record. If we turn to actual notice we find a complete lack of any affirmative evidence, either testimonial or documentary, showing that appellants possessed such actual notice. On the contrary, we find much evidence by the testimony of witnesses to the effect that they did not have such notice and were, therefore, purchasing in good faith notwithstanding the option. Smith testified that he told appellants nothing about the option. Respondent did not testify that he gave any such notice until after appellants had executed with Smith their purchase and sale agreement. Appellants testified they had no notice or knowledge that the option was outstanding. It results, therefore, that the findings to the effect that appellants were not bona fide purchasers without notice are without support in the evidence and are in the face of positive evidence to the contrary. There is no reason appearing in the record why the trial court should refuse credence to the witnesses whose testimony we have summarized and the result is that the record shows appellants to have had, from the date of their purchase and sale agreement, the equitable title to the property notwithstanding the option; and that they were entitled, upon performance of their agreement, to receive the legal title from Smith. 55 Am.Jur. p. 505.

The judgment is reversed.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

July 7, 1955.

Action for breach of a subcontract for steel work on junior high school auditoriums and connecting shelter, for construction of which plaintiff corporation was general contractor. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Robert H. Scott, J., for defendant corporation, plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that evidence justified trial court's finding that defendant made a mistake, of which plaintiff knew, in a letter confirming the subcontract by failing to exclude therefrom steel decking excluded in defendant's oral bids for subcontract, that plaintiff took unfair advantage of such mistake by incorporating such decking in subcontract, and that defendant assented to subcontract under honest misapprehension, so that defendant was entitled to rescind subcontract and plaintiff could not enforce it as made.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Contracts — 93(5)

Knowledge of party to contract that other party is acting under mistake as to provision thereof is treated as equivalent to mutual mistake for purposes of rescission of contract.

2. Contracts — 93(1)

Relief from mistaken bid for contract by party thereto is allowed, where other party knows or has reason to know of bidder's error and requirements for rescission of contract are fulfilled.

3. Contracts — 259

Rescission of contract may be had for a party's mistake of fact, if mistake is material to contract and not result of neglect of legal duty, enforcement of contract as made would be unconscionable, and other party thereto can be placed in statu quo.

4. Contracts — 266(1), 271

A party seeking rescission of contract for his mistake of fact must give prompt notice of election to rescind and restore or offer to restore everything of value received by him under contract to other party.

5. Contracts — 99(3)

In action for breach of subcontract for steel work on junior high school auditoriums and connecting shelter, for construction of which plaintiff had general contract with school district, evidence justified trial court's findings that defendant corporation made a mistake in its sales manager's letter confirming subcontract by failing to exclude therefrom steel decking specifically excluded in its bid therefor, that plaintiff knew of such mistake and took unfair advantage of it by incorporating such decking in subcontract, and that defendant assented to such contract under honest misapprehension, so as to entitle defendant to rescind it and preclude plaintiff from enforcing it as made. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 4100-4106.

6. Contracts — 266(1)

Where corporation entering into subcontract for steel work on junior high school auditoriums and connecting shelter gave general contractor for construction thereof prompt notice of rescission of subcontract on discovering, a few days after contract was signed and while it was still executory, mistake in failure of subcontract to exclude steel decking specifically excluded in subcontractor's oral bids, no offer of restoration by subcontractor to general contractor was necessary as subcontractor had received nothing of value to be restored. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 4100-4106.

7. Contracts — 93(1)

The fact that some element of carelessness not amounting to neglect of legal duty, permeated mistake of party to contract as to provision therein, will not of itself bar his right to relief by rescission of contract, where mistake does not stem from original error in judgment.

8. Contracts ⚡93(1)

When a contract is still executory and parties thereto can be put in statu quo, party knowing of other party's mistake as to provision of contract will not be permitted to obtain unconscionable advantage through enforcement of contract, where such mistake is material and not result of neglect of legal duty or error in judgment, and requirements for rescission of contract are fulfilled.

9. Contracts ⚡93(1)

A mistake, through which corporation subcontracting to do steel work on junior high school auditoriums and connecting shelter, for construction of which another corporation, aware of such mistake, had general contract with school district, seemingly agreed to perform for $37,700 for work reasonably worth at least $47,000 because of failure to exclude from subcontract steel decking specifically excluded in subcontractor's oral bids, was so essential and fundamental that parties' minds never met on subcontract as executed and subcontractor was entitled to rescission thereof. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 4100-4106.

10. Contracts ⚡93(1)

Where one of parties to contract, through excusable mistake or neglect, and not because of error in judgment, names a consideration out of all proportion to value of subject of negotiations, and other party, cognizant of such mistake, takes inequitable advantage thereof, he cannot claim an enforceable contract.

11. Contracts ⚡99(3)

In action for breach of subcontract to do steel work on junior high school auditoriums and connecting shelter, for construction of which plaintiff corporation had general contract with school district, trial court's findings that plaintiff was fully aware of defendant's mistake in failing to exclude from written subcontract steel decking, excluded in defendant's oral bids, when plaintiff received defendant's letter confirming contract as written and secured defendant's signature to subcontract with knowledge that defendant never bid on such decking, was not without evidentiary support as grounded on mere speculation and inference based on inference. West's Ann. Gov.Code, §§ 4100-4106.

12. Evidence ⚡54

In civil case, a reasonably probable inference may be used as basis for a succeeding inference.

13. Evidence ⚡54

An inference may be based on a fact based on circumstantial evidence, true rule being that inference cannot be based on inference that is too remote or conjectural.

14. Contracts ⚡99(2)

In action for breach of subcontract to do steel work on junior high school auditoriums and connecting shelter, for construction of which plaintiff corporation had general contract with school district, defendant corporation's sales manager's testimony as to why his letter confirming subcontract mistakenly failed to exclude steel decking, specifically excluded in defendant's oral bids, was properly admitted to clarify character of such mistake by showing that it did not arise out of neglect of legal duty or error of judgment which might defeat defendant's claimed right to rescind subcontract. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 4100-4106.

Preston D. Orem, Los Angeles, for appellant.

FOX, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from the judgment in an action to recover damages for an alleged breach of contract.

Plaintiff and defendant are domestic corporations, the former licensed to engage in building construction and the latter licensed as specialty contractors in the business of steel construction. The individuals primarily concerned as protagonists in the matter before us are Everett S. M. Brunzell, secretary of plaintiff corporation, John C. Ringer, an employee of plaintiff, Gilbert J. Weisbrod, president and general manager of defendant corporation, and Leonard W. Klamm, its sales manager.

Plaintiff sued defendant and its president¹ for damages resulting from an asserted breach of a subcontract to do the steel construction on a contract with a school district. Defendant answered with a general denial and with allegations that a mistake was made in executing the agreement as prepared by plaintiff, in that steel decking had not been excluded therefrom; that such mistake was known by plaintiff; that notwithstanding such knowledge on the part of plaintiff, it attempted to take advantage thereof by compelling defendant to carry out the terms of the subcontract, knowing that by mistake, the steel decking had not been excluded from such writing; and that upon discovery of the mistake, plaintiff was notified of defendant's election to rescind.

The Burbank Unified School District had announced it would accept bids, beginning at 2:00 p.m., July 2, 1953, for the construction of "Auditoriums and Connecting Shelter" at the John Muir Junior High School. In anticipation of bidding for the job, plaintiff solicited bids from subcontractors for various phases of the work several days before bidding commenced. Included among the bidding items was the steel work, which consisted primarily of a basis bid and a bid known as Alternate No. 1. This latter item, in general, comprised the connecting covered arcade, for the construction of which the specifications required, among other items, steel decking made by the Detroit Steel Products Company. Mr. Brunzell knew that the Walter Steyer Company was the sole local distributor for Detroit Steel Products. The bid specifications relative to steel were divided into three sections—Section E, Structural Steel, Section EE, Reinforcing Steel, and Section EEE, Miscellaneous Iron and Steel.

Mr. Brunzell testified that plaintiff received four bids for the above steel work—all of them over the telephone—from the Apex Steel Co., the Kyle Company, Walter Steyer Co., and from defendant prior to submitting its own bid. Mr. Klammer, representing defendant, testified he made his bid over the 'phone in the following language: "We have a figure for the structural steel and miscellaneous iron, omitting decking, on the auditorium building, John Muir Junior High School, Burbank. The sections covered are Section E, Structural Steel, and Section EEE, Miscellaneous Iron and Steel omitting decking. Our base price is $30,000.00, Alternate No. 1 $7,700.00." (Emphasis added.) Defendant's total bid, therefore, excluding decking, was $37,700. The record shows that Apex Steel bid $39,800.00, excluding decking, for the same work, while the Kyle bid for both the base proposal and Alternate No. 1, including decking, was $51,778. Meanwhile, plaintiff had obtained a bid from the Steyer Company for steel decking alone in the amount of $9,300.

Plaintiff was the successful bidder for the general contract. In compliance with the provisions of sections 4100 to 4106 of the Government Code,² plaintiff, in sub-

1. The case against Weisbrod as an individual defendant was dismissed.

2. The following sections are of interest here:

Section 4102: "Any officer, department, board or commission taking bids for the construction of any public work or improvement shall provide in the specifications prepared for the work or improvement or in the general conditions under which bids will be received for the doing of the work incident to the public work or improvement that any person making a bid or offer to perform the work, shall, in his bid or offer, set forth:

"(a) The name and the location of the place of business of each subcontractor who will perform work or labor or render service to the general con- tractor in or about the construction of the work or improvement in an amount in excess of one-half (½) of one per cent (1%) of the general contractor's total bid.

"(b) The portion of the work which will be done by each such subcontractor under this act."

Section 4103: "If a general contractor fails to specify a subcontractor for any portion of the work to be performed under the contract in excess of one-half (½) of one per cent (1%) of the general contractor's total bid, he agrees to perform that portion himself."

Section 4104: "No general contractor whose bid is accepted shall, without the consent of the awarding authority, either:

mitting its bid, set forth the names of the subcontractors who were to render service for it in performance of the proposed contract. In addition to defendant's name, there was listed the following: "Steel Deck: Walter Steyer." Mr. Brunzell stated this was written in the school bid under his direction. Mr. Gerd H. Schulte, a registered structural engineer employed by the Burbank United School District, testified that when the Steyer Company was listed as the subcontractor for the steel decking on the plaintiff's bid, it was understood that the Steyer Company, and not the defendant, would do the decking. If the installation of the decking by defendant were contemplated, he asserted there would be no need to set out the Steyer Company by name, since the subcontractor of a subcontractor need not be listed to comply with the law.

On July 7, 1953, Mr. Klamm signed and sent to plaintiff a letter entitled "Confirmation," expressive of defendant's willingness to furnish for the total sum of $37,700 the following: "1. Structural steel as defined in Section E, of specifications. 2. Miscellaneous iron as defined in Section EEE of specifications. 3. Labor for the erection of structural steel, decking, railing, ladders and wire work. Balance of miscellaneous iron items are to be furnished only F.O.B. job." Section EEE of the specifications included, as item 21, "Metal Decking and Siding." On July 9, 1953, the Steyer Company wrote plaintiff confirming its bid for the steel decking.

"(a) Substitute any person as subcontractor in place of the subcontractor designated in the original bid.

"(b) Permit any such subcontract to be assigned or transferred or allow it to be performed by anyone other than the original subcontractor listed in the bid.

"(c) Sublet or subcontract any portion of the work in excess of one-half ($\frac{1}{2}$) of one per cent (1%) of the general contractor's total bid as to which his original bid did not designate a subcontractor.

"(d) The awarding authority may consent to the substitution of another person as a subcontractor, when the subcontractor named in the bid after having had a reasonable opportunity to do so, fails or refuses to execute a written

After receiving defendant's letter of "Confirmation" Mr. Brunzell prepared a printed form of "Subcontract Agreement." In an available space, in paragraph one, there was typewritten the provision that defendant would perform the work previously quoted in its "Confirmation." Klamm thereupon called at Brunzell's office on July 9 to pick up the agreement. While there Klamm, Brunzell and Ringer discussed all phases of the work to be done by defendant. Brunzell stated to Klamm that the school board wanted the portion of the job involving the connecting arcades, which included the decking, done immediately. Klamm replied: "Furnishing the structural steel for this portion of the work is relatively simple. Completion will be dependent upon the delivery of the metal deck by Mr. Steyer. As soon as I return to my office I'll try to contact Mr. Steyer to learn what deliveries may be expected on the metal deck, since there's no reason to rush my work if we have to wait for the deck."

After taking the contract back to defendant's office, Klamm checked it and asked that paragraph 13, relating to a surety bond, be deleted. This was done and the contract was signed by the parties. Klamm testified that on July 13, 1953, following a conversation with Mr. Steyer, he realized for the first time that plaintiff purportedly understood that defendant was to furnish the steel decking. He thereupon telephoned plaintiff and spoke to Ringer, telling him: "I just discovered that neither my confirming proposal nor your subcontract agree-contract, when said written contract, based upon the general terms, conditions, plans and specifications for the project involved, or the terms of such subcontractor's written bid, is presented to him by the contractor."

Section 4106: "A general contractor violating any of the provisions of this chapter violates his contract and the awarding authority may cancel the contract. After any such violation, the general contractor shall be penalized to the extent of twenty per cent (20%) of the amount of the subcontract involved. Funds recovered through the application of this penalty shall be paid to the State Treasurer who will deposit them in the General Fund."

ment excluded metal decking. I felt certain that you intended metal decking to be excluded. Had you not intended metal decking to be excluded my bid would have been ridiculously low. And, furthermore, I would not have bid on the item of metal decking since it was a proprietary item or material to be furnished by Steyer Company." Ringer replied that Brunzell was out of town for a few days and the matter would be taken up upon his return. On the same day, Klamm sent plaintiff the following letter: "We spoke with the Walter E. Steyer Co., today, to learn of the date delivery might be expected of the metal decking for the covered walks only to learn that a contract had not been awarded to them, as yet. It was then recalled that our confirming proposal on this project did not exclude the metal decking, as it should to conform with verbal bid given prior to bid opening. Obviously this was an error by our office and apparently escaped the attention of your office. We would greatly appreciate your cooperation in correcting your contract to us to provide for the deletion of all metal decking."

On July 15, defendant received its copy of the signed Subcontract Agreement. Klamm amended it by striking out therefrom the word "decking," and by typing in the words "omitting steel decking." He returned it to plaintiff with a request that plaintiff's copy be amended to conform therewith and that both be initialled by the parties. Brunzell declined to accede. Defendant then made known its refusal to perform under the contract as executed. Brunzell subsequently obtained other bids for the work in question, including the decking. The work was awarded to Apex as lowest bidder at $49,000.00, and Apex's substitution in place of defendant was approved by the school district.

In this action, plaintiff sought damages in the sum of $11,300.00, the difference between the $37,700 bid by defendant and the contract for $49,000 entered into with Apex for allegedly the same work. In entering judgment for defendant, the court made findings conforming to the allegations in the answer. So far as is here germane, the court found that in making its oral bid, defendant had excluded the decking and that the parties understood that if defendant was awarded the contract it would not be required to furnish or install decking but that this would be done by the Steyer company; that in confirming its oral bid defendant mistakenly and inadvertently failed to exclude the decking; that when plaintiff received the letter of confirmation, it was fully aware of defendant's mistake in not excluding decking and knowingly sought to take advantage of that mistake by preparing a "Subcontract Agreement," later executed by the parties, which did not exclude decking, and was contrary to the oral bid; "that there was never any meeting of the minds of the parties agreeing to the provisions of the purported subcontract agreement;" that there was never any agreement requiring defendant to furnish and install the decking, plaintiff having secured defendant's signature to the subcontract knowing it had never bid on the decking; that defendant made numerous requests of plaintiff to correct the mistake in accordance with its oral bid, which were refused; and that upon discovering its mistake, with due diligence, defendant notified plaintiff of its election to rescind.

Plaintiff's fundamental contention is that "the court erred in ruling that [defendant] was entitled to rescind the subcontract agreement by reason of the discovery of certain alleged mistakes." Such contention is thoroughly refuted by the case of M. F. Kemper Const. Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 37 Cal.2d 696, 235 P.2d 7, 10. There, plaintiff Kemper sued to cancel a bid it had submitted on a public construction project and to obtain a discharge of its bid bond. In submitting its bid, plaintiff inadvertently omitted an item amounting to $301,769 which had figured in its computations. The company discovered its error several hours after the bids were opened and sought to withdraw its bid. The Board of Public Works refused to permit this and passed a resolution accepting the erroneous bid. Section 386(d) of the City Charter of Los Angeles provides: "After bids have been opened and declared, except with the consent of the officer, board or City Council having jurisdiction over the bidding, no bid shall be withdrawn, but the same shall be subject to acceptance by the city for a period of three months * * * The trial court found, in part, that the bid had been submitted as the result of an honest mistake of a material character, that plaintiff was not negligent, that it had acted promptly to rescind, and that the board had accepted with knowledge of the error. It concluded that it would be unconscionable to require plaintiff to perform for the amount of the bid and that the city suffered no prejudice though it had to award the contract to the next lowest bidder.

[1,2] In affirming the judgment, the Supreme Court expounded the law directly apposite to the case before us: "The city contends that a party is entitled to relief on that ground [rescission] only where the mistake is mutual, and it points to the fact that the mistake in the bid submitted was wholly unilateral. * * * However, the city had actual notice of the error in the estimates before it attempted to accept the bid, and knowledge by one party that the other is acting under mistake is treated as equivalent to mutual mistake for purposes of rescission. * * * Relief from mistaken bids is consistently allowed where one party knows or has reason to know of the other's error and the requirements for rescission are fulfilled. * * *

[3,4] "Rescission may be had for mistake of fact if the mistake is material to the contract and was not the result of neglect of a legal duty, if enforcement of the contract as made would be unconscionable, and if the other party can be placed in statu quo. * * * In addition, the party seeking relief must give prompt notice of his election to rescind and must restore or offer to restore to the other party everything of value which he has received under the contract. * * *

"Omission of the $301,769 item from the company's bid was, of course, a material mistake. The city claims that the company is barred from relief because it was negligent in preparing the estimates, but even if we assume that the error was due to some carelessness, it does not follow that the company is without remedy. Civil Code section 1577, which defines mistake of fact for which relief may be allowed, describes it as one not caused by 'the neglect of a legal duty' on the part of the person making the mistake. It has been recognized numerous times that not all carelessness constitutes a 'neglect of a legal duty' within the meaning of the section. * * * On facts very similar to those in the present case, courts of other jurisdictions have stated that there was no culpable negligence and have granted relief from erroneous bids. * * * The type of error here involved is one which will sometimes occur in the conduct of reasonable and cautious businessmen, and, under all the circumstances, we cannot say as a matter of law that it constituted a neglect of legal duty such as would bar the right to equitable relief.

"The evidence clearly supports the conclusion that it would be unconscionable to hold the company to its bid at the mistaken figure. The city had knowledge before the bid was accepted that the company had made a clerical error which resulted in the omission of an item amounting to nearly one-third of the amount intended to be bid, and, under all the circumstances, it appears that it would be unjust and unfair to permit the city to take advantage of the company's mistake."

[5-7] The instant case falls squarely within the equitable principles announced in the Kemper case. The evidence shows that when defendant made its oral bid through Klamm, it specifically excluded the decking in its bid of $37,700. That plaintiff fully knew and comprehended this is reasonably to be inferred from a miscellany of evidentiary matters appearing in the record. First and foremost is the fact that in submitting its own bid, and in conformity with the requirement of section 4102 of the Government Code, plaintiff listed Walter Steyer, who had bid $9,300 for the decking job as the subcontractor for the steel decking. Secondly, as an experienced bidder on public projects, Brunzell must have clearly known that defendant's bid would be "in line" with other bids only if it excluded decking. This appears from the other bids—Apex Steel Company having bid $39,800 for the job without decking ($2,100 more than defendant's bid), and the Kyle Construction Company having bid $51,778 including decking (or $4,778 more than the combined bid of plaintiff and Steyer). Thirdly, after Brunzell received the confirming letter and before the contract was signed, Klamm and Brunzell discussed the arcade work, the only place in which the specifications called for decking. Brunzell emphasized the need for speed in constructing the arcade. Klamm replied that "furnishing the structural steel for this portion of the work is relatively simple. Completion will be dependent upon delivery of the metal deck by Mr. Steyer"—an indication that the parties recognized the decking would be Steyer's responsibility.

From all the foregoing evidence, the court was justified in finding that defendant had made a mistake in its letter of confirmation, that plaintiff knew that such a mistake had been made, that it took unfair advantage of this mistake to incorporate decking into the contract though the bid price was made exclusive of decking, and that defendant assented to the contract under an honest misapprehension which plaintiff was trying to exploit. Upon discovering the true facts a few days after the contract was signed and while it was still executory, defendant gave prompt notice of rescission "and no offer of restoration was necessary because it had received nothing of value which it could restore." M. F. Kemper Const. Co. v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 37 Cal.2d at page 703, 235 P.2d at page 11. That some element of carelessness not amounting to "the neglect of a legal duty" permeated defendant's mistake, will not of itself bar its right to relief where the mistake in question does not stem from an original error in judgment. M. F. Kemper, etc. Co. v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 37 Cal.2d at page 703-704, 235 P.2d at page 10; Klose v. Sequoia Union High School Dist., 118 Cal.App.2d 636, 641-642, 258 P.2d 515.

[8-10] It follows that the court was therefore clearly correct in its implied conclusion that plaintiff could not enforce the contract as made. When a contract is still executory, and the parties can be put in statu quo, one party to the contract will not be permitted to obtain an unconscionable advantage through enforcement of the contract where he knows of the other's mistake, where such mistake is material and not the result of neglect of a legal duty or an error in judgment, and the requirements for rescission are fulfilled. M. F. Kemper etc. Co. v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 37 Cal.2d at page 701, 235 P.2d 7. That a mistake of which plaintiff was aware, and through which defendant seemingly agreed to perform a contract for a price of $37,700 calling for work reasonably worth at least $47,000, was of so essential and fundamental a character that the minds of the parties never met on the contract as executed, would scarcely seem to require discussion. And where, as here, one of the parties, through excusable mistake or neglect and not because of an error of judgment, has named a consideration that is out of all proportion to the value of the subject of negotiations, and the other party, cognizant of such mistake, takes inequitable advantage of it, the latter cannot under such conditions claim an enforceable contract.

[11-13] Plaintiff also attacks as lacking evidentiary support the findings that when it received the letter of confirmation it was fully aware of defendant's mistake in not excluding decking and that it secured defendant's signature to the subcontract knowing defendant had never bid on the decking. Virtually its entire reply brief is devoted to arguing that this finding was grounded on mere speculation and by improperly basing inference on inference. Plaintiff's claim is refuted both by the state of the record and the controlling principles of law. We need advert to no more of the record than the fact that defendant's oral bid to plaintiff specifically excluded decking and the further fact that plaintiff's contract bid listed Steyer as the decking contractor, giving rise to the reasonable inference that it knew defendant had not included decking in its bid. So far as concerns the law on the "inference" problem plaintiff advances, it is accurately stated in Vaccarezza v. Sanguinetti, 71 Cal.App. 2d 687, 698, 163 P.2d 470 (hearing denied) and Ybarra v. Spangard, 93 Cal.App.2d 43, 47, 208 P.2d 445, 447 (hearing denied). "In a civil case, if the first inference is a reasonably probable one it may be used as a basis for a succeeding inference." In People v. Chessman, 38 Cal.2d 166, 187, 238 P.2d 1001, 1014, the rationale of the Vaccarezza case is followed and the following language quoted with approval: "The statement appearing in some cases that an inference cannot be based upon an inference, usually without citation and certainly without adequate discussion does not and cannot mean that an inference cannot be based upon a fact which is itself based upon circumstantial evidence. * * * The true rule is and should be that an inference cannot be based on an inference that is too remote or conjectural." The findings here complained of were based not only on direct evidence of the original oral bid, but on circumstantial evidence of a highly persuasive character and logical inferences derived therefrom.

[14] Finally, plaintiff assigns as error the admission over its objection of testimony by Klamm purporting to explain why his confirming letter mistakenly failed to exclude the decking work. Such testimony was properly admitted to clarify the character of the mistake by showing that it did not arise out of neglect of legal duty or from an error of judgment that might disentitle defendant to the right to rescind.

The judgment is affirmed.

THE PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

Jack Bailey KUYKENDALL, John B. Norred, alias, and Manuel Castillo Luna, Defendants and Appellants.
Cr. 5364.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

July 29, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 11, 1955.

Hearing Denied Aug. 25, 1955.

Defendants were convicted in the Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County, Rav B. Lyon, J., for robbery in first degree, assault with intent to commit robbery, and assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily harm, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McComb, J., held, inter alia, that evidence sustained the convictions.

Judgments affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ☞1144(13)

On a defendant's appeal from conviction, evidence will be viewed most favorably to the people.

2. Assault and Battery ☞92

Robbery ☞24(1, 6)

Evidence sustained convictions for robbery in first degree, assault with intent to commit robbery, and assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily harm. Pen.Code, §§ 220, 245.

3. Criminal Law ☞568

The element of intent is rarely susceptible of direct proof and must usually be inferred from all facts and circumstances disclosed by evidence. Pen.Code, § 21.

4. Criminal Law ☞1150(5)

Where, on appeal from conviction for crime, the evidence is sufficient to justify a reasonable inference that requisite intent existed, the verdict may not be disturbed.

5. Criminal Law ☞21, 32

"Criminal intent" is intention to do act which constitutes violation of law, and does not necessarily involve an intent to violate law, and hence ignorance of illegal nature of act is not a bar to conviction.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Criminal Intent".

6. Criminal Law ☞808½

On a trial for robbery, it is sufficient for court, in defining robbery, to give statutory definition of the crime. Pen.Code, § 211.

7. Criminal Law ☞824(1)

In criminal case, trial court, on its own motion, must fully and fairly instruct jury concerning law relating to facts of case, and it is not relieved of duty to give such instructions merely because they are not requested.

8. Criminal Law ⇨808½

Court may couch its instructions defining elements of offense in language of code, where no instructions in elaboration of principles of statutory definitions are requested by defendant.

9. Criminal Law ⇨825(1)

Where an instruction on a particular point or points as given by court is correct as far as it goes, and only valid objection, if any, to it is that it is deficient or inadequate by reason of its generality, indefiniteness or incompleteness, if defendant desires additional, amplified, explanatory, fuller, or more complete, elaborate, comprehensive, definite, specific or explicit instructions on such point or points, he must properly request same, otherwise error cannot be predicated upon failure to give such additional instructions.

10. Criminal Law ⇨1038(3)

Where in robbery prosecution defendants failed to request additional instructions, defendant could not on appeal urge error in the failure of court to amplify its instructions on question of intent.

11. Criminal Law ⇨1173(2)

In prosecution for robbery, assault with intent to commit robbery, and assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily harm, where doctor's testimony relating to extent of injuries inflicted upon prosecuting witnesses was matter of common knowledge to both court and jury, and, in absence of showing of prejudice, failure to instruct jury regarding such expert testimony was not prejudicial error. Pen. Code, §§ 220, 245.

12. Criminal Law ⇨1171(3)

In prosecution for robbery, assault with intent to commit robbery, and assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily harm, statement by prosecutor in argument that "there was a police report that three men were trying to steal a car" was supported by evidence, and, hence, was not prejudicial error.

13. Criminal Law ⇨655(4)

In prosecution for robbery, assault with intent to commit robbery, and assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily harm, under evidence, trial court's statement during voir dire examination of prospective jurors that defendants "wouldn't be here unless there is some reasonable cause to believe that they had committed a crime" was not error.

14. Criminal Law ⇨655(1)

In a criminal case, trial judge may properly inform jury of nature of proceedings preliminary to an actual trial, where question arises, rather than leave them to speculate as to nature of such proceedings.

15. Criminal Law ⇨1166½(12)

In prosecution for robbery, assault with intent to commit robbery, and assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily harm, trial court's direction to defense counsel to coordinate their efforts in advance so as to avoid unnecessary delay was not prejudicial error.

16. Criminal Law ⇨655(1)

In prosecution for robbery, assault with intent to commit robbery, and assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily harm, under evidence, trial court did not demonstrate prejudice against defendants during course of trial.

17. Criminal Law ⇨1035(3)

On appeal from conviction for robbery, defendants could not urge alleged prejudicial remark of court as ground of reversal since they had made no objections at time of alleged error nor did they request court to admonish jury to disregard remark.

18. Criminal Law ⇨1166½(12)

In prosecution for robbery, assault with intent to commit robbery, and assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily harm, under evidence, reprimand by court of one of defense attorneys for being late for one session of court was not prejudicial error.

19. Criminal Law ⇨1144(15)

On appeal from conviction for robbery, District Court of Appeal must assume that jury performed their duty and based their verdict upon evidence and instructions and disregarded extraneous matters.

20. Criminal Law *↔*656(1)

On appeal from conviction for robbery, assault with intent to commit robbery, and assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily harm, record failed to disclose that remarks of court, including questions directed to witnesses, interfered with relevant questioning by counsel for defendants.

John L. Seitz, San Luis Obispo, Charles E. Ogle, Morro Bay, and Martin Polin, San Luis Obispo, for appellants.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Jay L. Shavelson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

From judgments of guilty of (1) robbery in the first degree, (2) assault with intent to commit robbery, in violation of section 220 of the Penal Code, and (3) two counts of assaulting Messrs. Lopez and DeCorona by means of force likely to produce great bodily harm in violation of section 245 of the Penal Code, defendants appeal. There is also an appeal from the order denying their motions for a new trial.

[1,2] Questions: First: Was there substantial evidence to sustain the verdicts of guilty?

*Yes. The record discloses that on the morning of July 12, 1954, four Mexican citizens working as farm laborers went from their camp in Grover City, California, to nearby Pismo Beach. After a day spent in drinking beer, playing billiards and buying clothing, they were under the influence of alcohol to varying degrees and sought a taxi to take them back to camp.

While looking for a taxi, they were approached by defendant Luna who spoke to them in Spanish and offered them a ride to their camp. He then hailed a passing light panel truck in which were sitting his friends, defendants Kuykendall and Norred. The truck stopped and the four laborers climbed onto the rear while defendant Luna entered the cab.

As the truck left Pismo Beach, it was traveling very fast and went past the camp where the laborers lived. When the truck passed the camp, the laborers shouted and told defendants to stop but they did not. The truck later slowed down to make a turn, and two of the laborers jumped off. The truck then stopped near a liquor store belonging to Peter Santos.

Otilio Lopez, one of the victims, testified that when the truck stopped, his companion DeCorona, stepped off the truck, and was struck a blow by defendant Kuykendall while defendant Norred held a knife. Defendant Kuykendall held one of the victims and defendant Luna held the other while defendant Norred stepped onto the running board of the truck and struck the victims with a metallic object. Defendant Kuykendall rolled one of the victims over and went through his pockets; another defendant took a wrist watch from the wrist of one of the victims.

Clearly the foregoing evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdicts of guilty. Further discussion of the evidence would serve no useful purpose.

[3,4] There is no merit in defendants' contention that the evidence fails to disclose the intent with which defendants acted. Section 21 of the Penal Code reads in part thus: "The intent or intention [with which a crime is committed] is manifested by the circumstances connected with the offense, and the sound mind and discretion of the accused. * * *" The element of intent is rarely susceptible of direct proof and must usually be inferred from all the facts and circumstances disclosed by the evidence. Where the evidence is sufficient to justify a reasonable inference that such intent existed, as in the present case, the verdict may not be disturbed. (People v. Smith, 84 Cal.App.2d 509, 512, 190 P.2d 941.)

[5] Second: Was the jury properly and adequately instructed on the question of intent?

* The evidence is viewed in the light most favorable to the People (respondent). See People v. Pianezzi, 42 Cal.App.2d 270, 277 [2], 108 P.2d 685 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court).

Yes. The trial court instructed the jury that criminal intent is the intention to do the act which constitutes a violation of the law, and does not necessarily involve an intent to violate the law, and hence that ignorance of the illegal nature of the act is not a bar to conviction. (See People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 208, 48 P. 75.)

[6] In addition, the trial court read to the jury as part of its instructions section 211 of the Penal Code, defining the crime of robbery. It is settled that reading to the jury the statutory definition of a crime is sufficient. (People v. White, 5 Cal.App. 329, 335, 90 P. 471.)

[7,8] It is true the general rule in a criminal case is that it is the duty of a trial judge to instruct the jury on its own motion, charging them fully and fairly on the law relating to the facts of the case, and it is not relieved of the duty to give such instructions merely because they are not requested. (People v. Baker, 42 Cal.2d 550, 576 [20], 268 P.2d 705.) However, there is an exception to this general rule that instructions defining the elements of an offense may be couched in the language of the code where no instructions in elaboration of the principles of statutory definitions are requested by defendant. (People v. Reed, 38 Cal.2d 423, 430 [1], 240 P.2d 590.)

[9] In People v. Reed, supra, at page 430 of 38 Cal.2d, at page 594 of 240 P.2d our Supreme Court quotes with approval from People v. Carothers, thus: "Where an instruction on a particular point or points as given by the court is correct as far as it goes, and the only valid objection, if any, to it is that it is deficient or inadequate by reason of its generality, indefiniteness, or incompleteness, if defendant desires additional, amplified, explanatory, fuller, or more complete, elaborate, comprehensive, definite, specific or explicit instructions on such point or points, he must properly request the same, otherwise error cannot be predicated upon the failure to give such additional instruction." People v. Carothers, 77 Cal.App.2d 252, 255, 175 P.2d 30, 32."

[10] In the case at bar defendants failed to request any proper additional instructions. Therefore the exception to the general rule is here applicable and they may not on appeal urge error in the failure of the court to amplify its instructions.

Third: Did the trial court commit prejudicial error in not instructing the jury regarding expert testimony?

[11] No. A doctor was called by the prosecution who gave testimony relative to the injuries received by the complaining witnesses. The expert witness was a qualified physician, licensed to practice in California. Therefore there was no question as to the correctness of the trial court's ruling in permitting him to testify as an expert.

It was not prejudicial error to fail to read to the jury an instruction regarding expert testimony for two reasons:

(1) The testimony which the doctor gave regarding the extent of the injuries inflicted upon the prosecuting witnesses was a matter of common knowledge to both the court and jury;

(2) It was not prejudicial error to fail to give such instructions for the reason that defendants have wholly failed to call this court's attention to any prejudice resulting to them because the jury was not instructed on this subject. An examination of the record discloses that it is highly improbable that a different verdict would have been returned had the omission not occurred. Therefore since the alleged error was not prejudicial, we must disregard it. (See People v. Riley, 35 Cal.2d 279, 286 [4], 217 P.2d 625; People v. Letourneau, 34 Cal.2d 478, 492 [9], 211 P.2d 865.)

[12] Fourth: Did the district attorney commit prejudicial error in making reference in his argument to the fact that defendants had attempted to break into parked automobiles?

No. During the examination of Mr. James Frye by the attorney for defendant Kuykendall, the following occurred:

"* * * A. One of the officers got a call on his radio that there were three suspects, or some suspects—

"Q. Did you hear this? A. Yes, I heard it.

"Q. All right. O.K. A. Trying to break into some cars up somewhere near the Pismo Theatre, up near that auto court, and the police went up there, and then a bunch of the crowd went up there to see what was going on. That's when they started chasing around through the back alleys there.

"Q. Who were they chasing then?

A. Well, they'd seen these three fellows trying to get into a car.

"Q. What three fellows? A. I don't know. They said they saw three fellows. They called the police and said there were three fellows trying to get into some cars there, and evidently they were all locked, or something; I don't know. They saw them go this way. Some of them saw them go down behind Ford's Market, and the police went that way. And somebody else saw them go down toward the beach, and some officers went down that way, and they started chasing them. And there was different people chasing them, and telling them which way they saw them go, until they run into the cafe there.

"Q. And then what happened? A. Well, I was around in front of the cafe there, and somebody said there was three men just went in that restaurant there, so the officers went in and looked, and there was five men in there at the time, and so they just went in and brought them all out.

"Q. All five? A. Yes—yes, sir.

"Q. What happened then? A. Well, they questioned the two of them and—they started to question all of them, I guess, and two of them evidently were known, or somebody knew them, or something, and knew where they had been, so they let them go, and the other three they held there for a little bit, and one of them—or they started talking to the officer and telling him that they had an excuse, that they were in a bar or something and was drinking, and the bartender would swear that they were in there for the last hour, or something to that effect. So one of the officers took one of them back down there, and the other officer held the two there in front of the cafe."

The three men who were held were defendants. Thus it appears that the police had a report that three men were trying to break into parked cars. These three men were seen to enter a cafe. The police entered the cafe and arrested the three defendants. This would have supported an inference that defendants were the ones who had attempted to break into the cars. However, the district attorney did not state this. He merely stated, "there was a police report that three men were trying to steal a car." This was the testimony elicited from one of the witnesses by defendants' attorney. Clearly the statement was supported by the evidence.

[13] Fifth: Did the trial court err in stating during the voir dire examination of prospective jurors that the defendants "wouldn't be here unless there is some reasonable cause to believe that they had committed a crime?"

No. During the voir dire examination of a prospective juror the following occurred:

"[Mr. Polin] Q. Would you apply the yardstick that the Court gives you, that a man is innocent until proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt?

"[Mr. Warner] A. Yes.

"Q. The mere fact that a defendant is brought here and accused of something, would that indicate to you that he has done something wrong? A. No.

"Q. There seems to be doubt in your voice. A. Well, the way you state the question—you say, 'the fact that a defendant is brought here,' and 'he has done something.'

"Q. And accused of something. A. Well, state it again.

"Q. The fact that a defendant has been brought here and accused of something, would that indicate to you that he has done something wrong? A. Well, he might have done something wrong, but it wouldn't be what he is accused of. He must have done something to be brought here. What he has done remains to be seen, or if he hasn't done anything, but the fact that the defendants are here, there must have been something that happened previously.

"Q. You think he has done something wrong? A. Well, I don't know. I haven't the slightest idea.

"The Court: No, he doesn't know; the man is very right. They wouldn't be here unless there is some reasonable cause to believe that they had committed a crime.

"Mr. Polin: Yes—Well, reasonable doubt—cause to believe that they had committed a crime—

"The Court: That is what the preliminary examination finds.

"Mr. Polin: I have no further questions.

"The Court: The Juror says that they are in here, and he feels that there must have [been] something happened to bring them in here, but whether they are guilty or not, it is for them to determine from the evidence. In other words, the bringing them in here is no evidence of crime.

"Mr Warner: But they must have done something to be here.

"The Court: But it is a means of getting them in here.

"Mr. Polin: Well, of course, there could be a case of mistaken identity entirely.

"The Court: What they did may not be a crime, it might not be a crime, but they are here for some reason, that is for sure.

"Mr. Polin: That is for sure.

"Mr. Ogle: Your Honor, I am going to also pass for cause Mr. Warner. If I may be heard very briefly on the statement by the Court, that there must be reasonable cause that they had committed a crime, although, I don't have the absolute definition of the effect of being bound over after a preliminary examination at my finger tips, I believe that we have gone a little further than the effect.

"The Court: I will read it to you. 'It appearing to me that the offense in the within Complaint mentioned, to-wit: Felony: Violation of Sections 211-220-245-182, subd. 1, 1 of the Penal Code of the State of California has been committed, and that there is sufficient cause to believe the within named Jack Bailey Kuykendall, John B. Norred, aka Larry William Alburn, and Manuel Castillo Luna guilty thereof, I order that they be held to answer the same. Webb Moore, Judge of said Court.'"

[14] The court in its statement to the jurors made a correct statement of the events preceding the trial of defendants and informed them of the proper attitude they should have toward defendants. It is perfectly proper for the trial judge to inform the jury of the nature of proceedings preliminary to an actual trial where a question arises, as in the instant case, rather than to leave them to speculate as to the nature of such proceedings. The jurors were clearly informed in the course of this discussion that the fact that defendants were brought before the trial court was no evidence of crime, and that defendants were presumed innocent until proven guilty. For example the trial judge stated:

"This being a criminal trial, we must keep in mind several basic rules: First, that a defendant is presumed innocent until his guilt is established beyond a reasonable doubt; second, that an information which is always filed in the case—not always because sometimes we have indictments by the Grand Jury, but unless there is an indictment by the Grand Jury, an information is filed by the District Attorney. Now, an information is not to be taken as any evidence of the guilt of the defendants. It is a means by which defendants, who the District Attorney has reasonable cause to believe have committed a crime in the County are brought before the Court and a Jury for a trial, so we often refer to an information. Now, that is just simply the instrument

—the paper—the document by which defendants are brought before the Court for trial by jury, and it is not to be taken as any evidence of their guilt.

“The Court: And, in fact that they are brought here, you say you feel that they must have done something or they wouldn’t be brought here. Well, maybe they didn’t; maybe what they did wasn’t a crime. They have that right to have a trial and because they are brought here is no evidence, and you are not to take it as any evidence that they have committed a crime.
* * *

“The Court: Q. You understand that the burden of proof is upon the People to establish the guilt of the Defendants beyond a reasonable doubt?
A. Yes.

“Q. And, I am going to instruct you later on what constitutes a reasonable doubt, and you further understand that the information which has been filed here is no evidence of their guilt, but they are brought in here for trial by this information, and you are to determine whether they are guilty or not guilty from the evidence presented from the witness chair and my instructions?
A. Yes, sir.”

[15] Sixth: Were the defense attorneys prevented from consulting with each other during the course of the trial?

No. As part of their cross-examination of prosecution witness, Santos, defense counsel wished to arrange a demonstration to test the credibility of the witness’s story. The two prosecuting witnesses were needed for this purpose. However, defense attorneys had not arranged for their presence in the courtroom, and this caused certain delay and necessitated conferences among defense attorneys which the trial judge felt could have been avoided by proper outside preparation. He therefore made the following statement:

“The Court: All right, let’s go on. If we are going to do it, let’s do it, otherwise, we’ll proceed. You see where we have three attorneys—and you people haven’t got together and the trial has been delayed often by consultation back and forth and around. I want this trial to proceed regularly and expeditiously. If you have any counseling to do, you do it before you get in here.”

It appears that defendants’ attorneys were not forbidden to consult one another concerning unexpected developments which arose during the course of the trial, but they were told to coordinate their efforts in advance so as to avoid unnecessary delays. This did not constitute prejudicial error.

[16] Seventh: Did the trial judge commit prejudicial error by demonstrating prejudice against defendants during the course of the trial?

No. On cross-examination, witness Frye testified that one of the defendants “was right there at the truck, he just jumped in.” One of counsel for defendants called the witness’s attention to his earlier testimony to the effect that this defendant “did not have to run * * * and he just got in ‘the truck’.” The court then said: “Well, why are we concerned how he got in? Do you want to know which foot he put up first?”

[17] There was nothing prejudicial in the court’s remark. In any event, such alleged error may not be urged as grounds for reversal by defendants for the first time on appeal since they made no objection at the time of the alleged error nor did they request the court to admonish the jury to disregard his comment. Therefore any error has been waived. (People v. Roebbling, 14 Cal.App.2d 586, 588 [2], 58 P.2d 929.)

[18, 19] Eighth: Did the trial court commit prejudicial error in reprimanding one of the attorneys for being late for one session of court?

No. The record fails to disclose that defendants were prejudiced by the trial judge’s remarks and we must assume that the jury performed their duty and based their verdict upon the evidence and instructions of the trial court and disregarded extraneous matters. (People v. Eggers, 30 Cal.2d 676, 691 [22], 185 P.2d 1; People v.

Root, 112 Cal.App.2d 122, 126 [5], 245 P.2d 679.)

[20] Ninth: Did the trial court interfere with relevant questioning by counsel for defendants?

No. During the course of the examination of a witness the following occurred:

"Q. Oh, you turned back your head to look at Pete? A. Yes, I was seeing where he was. You know he was back phoning and I was looking back there.

"Q. How long did you look back at Pete? A. Well, I don't know.

"The Court: Well, she said that was when he was phoning. That was after it was all over.

"Mr. Polin: Q. Was that while the boys were still out there? A. Yes, he phoned just as soon as they, and know—they all got out, he phoned.

"Q. But when you looked back to look at Pete, was that while the fellows were still out there in front? A. Yes, they were still out there, yes."

In the instance of the examination of another witness the following occurred:

"Q. Had you been to any other place? A. Oh, yes.

"The Court: Well, what is the purpose of this, to test his memory, or what?

"Mr. Polin: No; I understand it is customary, in the liquor business, to drink with your customers when you come in to make sales.

"The Court: How do you understand that?

"Mr. Polin: Well, I have learned it from acquaintances of mine.

"A. That is against the law.

"Mr. Polin: Well, I have been so told.

"The Court: Well, maybe the fellow who told you wasn't a good salesman,

"Mr. Polin: Possibly not.

"The Court: Anyway, you couldn't apply that to this man.

"Mr. Polin: I was going to ask him if he had drunk with his customers. I think that is in order; it goes to the competency of the witness.

"The Court: Well, you know what he is going to tell you. He said it was against the law. Go ahead and ask him. He wants to know if you had been drinking with your customers that morning.

"A. Well, this was around 7 in the evening. I would say that probably I had 2 or 3 drinks during the day, yes.

"The Court: Q. But not with your customers, is that it? A. Well, certainly not in any package store. They don't open bottles.

"Mr. Polin: Q. But you had drinks with your customers, is that correct? A. In bars.

"Q. 2 or 3 did you say? A. Possibly.

"Q. May I ask what kind they were? A. Well, they were probably Early Times because that is what I sell. That is 86 proof, straight whiskey.

"Q. I see. And you drink it straight, do you, sir? A. No, with water—I mean, in a highball.

"Q. And how big a highball, about —would you estimate? (etc.)"

The trial court's remarks were not improper or prejudicial. Clearly they did not in any way impede relevant questioning by defendants' counsel.

An examination of the record discloses that defendants had a full, fair and impartial trial.

The judgments and orders are, and each is, affirmed.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 10, 1955.

Hearing Denied Sept. 8, 1955.

Proceeding to review final administrative decision of Unemployment Insurance Appeals Board denying petitioner's claim for compensation. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Albert C. Wallenberg, upheld the board's decision and petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that under statute which requires that the party seeking unemployment compensation must earn at least $300 during base period and not more than 75 percent of total wages during base period shall be earned in one quarter unless total wages are not less than 30 times weekly benefit amount, and woman earned approximately $415 in first quarter and approximately $46 in second quarter and earned no more during remainder of base period, her wages met first requirement for eligibility but failed to meet second one.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Social Security and Public Welfare ☞298

Woman who filed first claim for unemployment compensation in January, 1951, and second claim in January, 1952, and who worked only two quarters during that period and earned approximately $415 in first quarter and $46 in second quarter of base period did not earn sufficient wages within 12 month period following date of filing first claim to be eligible for unemployment benefits. Unemployment Insurance Code, §§ 1275 to 1277, 1281(a).

2. Social Security and Public Welfare ☞298

Statute which requires that party seeking unemployment compensation must have earned at least $300 during base period and that if 75 percent of wages were received in one quarter the total of such wages must not be less than 30 times weekly benefit amount contains two separate requirements, and $300 provision was not quantitative requirement and later proviso of 75 percent in one quarter was not qualitative. Social Security and Public Welfare ☞261

Where new statute changed requirements for right to unemployment compensation, and those quarters of base period woman earned money in came before new statute took effect, when woman became unemployed was essential date, and as it was after new statute's effective date, woman, who was not entitled to benefits because of new statute, did not suffer loss of any vested rights. DOOLING, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco denying petitioner-appellant Dora C. Richmond's petition for writ of mandate. By the petition appellant was afforded review of a final administrative decision of the Unemployment Insurance Appeals Board that she did not have a valid claim for benefits under the California Unemployment Insurance Act.

Appellant was employed in San Francisco for a ten-year period until January 19, 1951, when her employment was terminated. On January 22, 1951, appellant registered for work and filed a claim for benefits with the Department of Employment. Before any benefits were paid under this claim she again became employed. April 10, 1951, she left this employment because of ill health. On April 11, 1951, appellant filed a claim for unemployment insurance disability benefits and received such benefits through October 16, 1951. On October 30, 1951, she reopened her claim for unemployment insurance benefits (filed January 22, 1951) and received these benefits through January 21, 1952. Appellant filed a new claim for unemployment insurance benefits on January 22, 1952. It is the denial of the January 22, 1952, claim that is here in dispute.

The trial court concluded that appellant had not been paid sufficient wages within the twelve month period following the filing of her first claim on January 22, 1951, to entitle her to receive further benefits. This conclusion was based upon sections 52.6 and 53(a) of the Unemployment Insurance Act (now substantially reenacted as sections 1277 and 1281(a), Unemployment Insurance Code).

[1] Certain other provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act as they affected appellant's claims must be discussed in order to understand the precise problem involved. Section 6(r) of the act (now section 1275, Unempl. Ins. C.) provided that unemployment benefits shall be based on wages paid in the "base period." It defined "base period" for benefit years beginning in November, December, and January as "the four calendar quarters ended in the next preceding month of June." Section 6(q) (now section 1276, Unempl. Ins. C.) defined "benefit year" as "the one-year period beginning with the first day of the week with respect to which the individual first files a valid claim for benefits."

Since appellant filed her first claim on January 22, 1951, her "benefit year" on that claim began in January, 1951, and under the terms of section 6(r) the "base period" for the calculation of her benefits was the four calendar quarters ending June 30, 1950. So when she filed her second claim on January 22, 1952, the "base period" for that claim would be the four calendar quarters running from July 1, 1950, to June 30, 1951. Appellant's wages in that period totaled $2,145.50 and were distributed as follows:

$780.10	July—Sept., 1950
711.90	Oct.—Dec., 1950
192.00	To Jan. 22, 1951
415.35	Jan. 22—March, 1951
46.15	April—June, 1951

It is the proper application of sections 53(a) and 52.6 to these wages which is crucial in this case. Section 53(a) provided:

"An individual cannot establish a valid claim or a benefit year during which any benefits are payable unless he has during his base year been paid wages for employment by employers of not less than three hundred dollars ($300); provided, however, that if more than 75 percent of his base-period wages were paid during a single calendar quarter, he shall not be eligible for benefits unless his total wages during the base period are not less than thirty times his weekly benefit amount." St.1949, p. 2509.

Appellant's record of earnings above set out meets the requirements of this section. During the "base period" July 1, 1950, to June 30, 1951, she was paid wages of not less than $300 and not more than 75 percent of such wages were paid during any calendar quarter.

However in 1951 the legislature added section 52.6 to the act, stats.1951, pp. 4189-4190. This section became effective on September 22, 1951, and the portion of it pertinent to this case reads: "On and after January 1, 1952, any wages paid prior to the filing of a valid claim and not used in the computation of the award may be used for the purpose of computing the amount of any other award only if within the 12-month period following the date of the filing of said valid claim the individual was paid sufficient wages to meet the eligibility requirements of Section 53 of this act." St.1951, pp. 4189, 4190.

Since appellant was unemployed after April, 1951, her wages "within the 12-month period following the date" of filing her valid claim of January 22, 1951, encompassed the following items:

$415.35	Jan. 22—March, 1951
46.15	April—June, 1951.

It is obvious that more than 75 percent of her earnings within the 12-month period following the date of filing her first claim fell in one quarter: January—March, 1951. It is also true that her total wages during this period were less than thirty times what her weekly benefit amount would be. From this the appeals board and the trial court concluded that she did not receive "sufficient wages" within the 12-month period following the date of the filing of her January 22, 1951, claim "to meet the eligibility requirements of section 53(a)" of the act.

We have concluded that section 52.6 compels this finding. The plain meaning of its language is that to be entitled to use the wages paid to her before January 22, 1951, and not used in computing her previous benefits her wages in the year following the filing of her first claim must measure up to the requirements of section 53(a). This they did not do since, as we have noted, over 75 percent of such wages fell in one quarter of that year and the aggregate of all such wages did not equal thirty times her weekly benefit amount.

[2] Appellant attempts an argument that the $300 provision of section 53(a) is a quantitative requirement and the later proviso of 75 percent in one quarter, etc., is a qualitative one, or in the alternative that the 75 percent in one quarter, etc., is a condition subsequent to the $300 requirement. The fact is, however, that section 53(a) has two separate requirements, one that the applicant's total wages must amount to at least $300 and the second that if 75 percent of the wages were received in one quarter the total of such wages must be not less than thirty times the weekly benefit amount. Applying these requirements to her wages received after January 22, 1951, as provided by section 52.6, such wages meet the first requirement for eligibility but they fail to meet the second one.

[3, 4] Appellant also argues, citing Kavanagh v. Board of Police P. F. Com'rs, 134 Cal. 50, 66 P. 36 (a pension case), that appellant had a vested right in her retirement benefits which could not be changed to her detriment by the enactment of section 52.6. Section 52.6 was not made retroactive. It became effective in September, 1951, but by its own terms it only applied "on and after January 1, 1952." Whether the doctrine of vested rights applies to unemployment benefits in the same sense in which it applies to pension rights has not been decided in any case called to our attention, cf. cases in the note in 20 A.L.R. 2d 963, 964. In any event it is recognized in the pension cases that before the contingency happens upon which the right to receive the pension depends "the terms * * * may be altered within reason without an impairment of the contract." Terry v. City of Berkeley, 41 Cal.2d 698, 702, 263 P.2d 833, 836, and cases cited. Here the contingency of appellant's being unemployed on January 22, 1952, was the essential one and it occurred several months after the effective date of section 52.6.

Whatever hardship may exist in the particular case the problem is a legislative and not a judicial one.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,

July 15, 1955.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 2, 1955.

Hearing Granted Sept. 8, 1955.*

Action brought by city to determine validity of proceedings theretofore taken under Improvement Act of 1911. The Superior Court, Lassen County, Bertram D. Janes, J., entered judgment declaring all proceedings taken to be valid, and contractor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held, inter alia, that where city council passed resolution declaring contractor to be lowest bidder and awarding to contractor contract for work under Improvement Act of 1911, contract was thereby complete, and, in absence of fraud, mutual mistake or some other ground of rescission, city was without power to rescind its action and award contract to second lowest bidder.

Judgment reversed.

Where city council passed resolution awarding to contractor contract for work under Improvement Act of 1911, and, four days later, city council in special meeting passed resolution rescinding first award and awarded contract to second lowest bidder, contractor did not lose its right to object to rescinding action taken by council or to litigate issue of validity of city's proceedings on ground that it had not appealed to city council by exercising its administrative remedies. Streets and Highways Code, § 5100 et seq.

2. Administrative Law and Procedure ⇨229

Where an administrative remedy is provided by statute, relief must be sought from administrative body and remedy exhausted before courts will act, and a court violating this rule acts in excess of jurisdiction.

3. Administrative Law and Procedure ⇨229

Where a statute provides an administrative remedy and also provides an alternative judicial remedy the rule requiring exhaustion of the administrative remedy has no application if the person aggrieved, and having both remedies afforded him by the same statute, elects to use the judicial one.

4. Municipal Corporations ⇨330(1)

Improvement Act of 1911 was originally enacted and has maintained its place in statute books because of fixed legislative policy that fairness, efficiency and security in construction of public works can best be attained by statutory scheme which would require that such contracts for such work must be let at competitive bidding. Streets and Highways Code, § 5100 et seq.

5. Contracts ⇨22(1)

In the letting of contracts for the doing of public works where the legislative body or the administrative officer is required by statute to call for bids and must under competitive bidding condition let the contract to the lowest responsible bidder, the making of the award gives rise to a contract between public body or agent and successful bidder. Streets and Highways Code, § 5100 et seq.

6. Municipal Corporations ⇨354

Where city council passed resolution declaring contractor to be lowest bidder and awarding to contractor contract for work under Improvement Act of 1911, contract was thereby complete, and, in absence of fraud, mutual mistake or some other ground of rescission, city was without power to rescind its action and award contract to second lowest bidder. Streets and Highways Code, § 5100 et seq.

7. Municipal Corporations Ⓒ336(1)

Statute requiring that notice of award of a contract for doing of public works shall be published by clerk was not intended as a method whereby communication of the acceptance by city should be given to bidder, but is limited in its effect to the notification which is required to be given to property owners interested who for ten days after the giving of such notice are by statute given right of taking over work themselves by entering into a written contract to do so at the price at which award had been made to bidder. Streets and Highways Code, § 5248.

Insofar as interested parties, such as bidders, are concerned, notice may be presumed as to resolution of city council making award of contract for the doing of public works. Streets and Highways Code, § 5100 et seq.

9. Declaratory Judgment Ⓒ395

On appeal from action brought by city to determine validity of proceedings theretofore taken under Improvement Act of 1911, District Court of Appeal could not assume that, if the proceedings were declared valid, there would be on the part of city any refusal to perform ministerial acts, and, therefore court would not mandate that city affirmatively perform any acts. Clewe, Blade & McDonald, Robert W. Anderson, Oroville, for appellant.

Sturgis, Den-Dulk, Douglass & Henes, Oakland, and Donald P. Cady, City Atty., Susanville, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

The City of Susanville adopted a resolution of intention to do certain public work within its boundaries, proceeding under the Improvement Act of 1911, now contained in Division 7, Part 3, of the Streets and Highways Code, § 5100 et seq. All prescribed action was duly taken, up to and including a call for bids, and Lee C. Hess Company, a corporation, submitted the lowest bid. The city council passed a resolution declaring Hess Company to be the lowest responsible bidder and awarding to it the contract for doing the work. Four days later, and acting upon mistaken advice by the Assistant Director of the Department of Professional and Vocational Standards that Hess Company was not a properly licensed contractor, the city council held a special meeting attended by all its members, but without any notice to Hess Company, and thereat passed a resolution declaring that Hess Company had not been qualified to bid the work and purporting to award the contract to one Katsaros, a bidder whose bid had been next lowest to that of Hess Company.

In this case the trial court found that the Hess Company had been properly licensed at all material times. The first resolution awarding the contract of Hess Company directed, as required by the statute, that the city clerk publish notice of that award, but no notice was published. The second resolution directed the publication of notice of award to Katsaros, and that publication was made, and a proposed formal written contract was delivered to Katsaros. At this point, and before the formal contract was executed by Katsaros, the city began this action under the provisions of chapter 10 of said division 7 of said Streets and Highways Code, to determine the validity of proceedings theretofore taken. The code provides that at any time after bids have been received, and prior to the date fixed for the beginning of the work, the legislative body conducting the proceedings may bring an action in the superior court to determine the validity of the proceedings and the validity of any contract entered, or to be entered into pursuant thereto. Any contractor to whom a contract has been awarded may also bring the action. The action is declared to be in the nature of a proceeding in rem and anyone interested is given the right to appear and "contest the validity of such proceedings and contract or uphold the same." Section 5268. Hess Company answered the city's petition, asserting that the contract had been awarded to it and declaring its willingness to enter into the formal written contract in accordance with the award. It asked that the legislative body and other city officials be mandated to recognize it as the contractor for the work and to proceed to deal with it in that capacity. The trial court found in favor of the city, declaring all proceedings taken to be valid, including the second resolution which, in effect, rescinded the prior resolution awarding the contract to Hess Company and adjudging that a contract executed by the city and Katsaros would be a valid contract. All relief asked by Hess Company was denied. From that judgment Hess Company has appealed.

[1] In support of its appeal Hess Company contends that when the city council made the award to it a binding contract between the city and the Hess Company arose; that the city's power to act further in the matter of making an award had been exhausted and that its action rescinding the award was a nullity. It contends further that the meeting at which the second and rescinding resolution was passed was an illegal meeting in that it was not held at the city hall as prescribed by law. Before examining these contentions we will consider the claim of the city that Hess Company lost all right it might have had to object to the rescinding action taken by the counsel or to litigate the issue of the validity of the city's proceedings because it had never appealed to the city council, that is to say, had not exercised its right to administrative remedies which the city contends was afforded it by the relevant statutes. The contention cannot be sustained.

[2,3] It is, of course, well settled that where an administrative remedy is provided by statute relief must be sought from the administrative body and the remedy exhausted before the courts will act; and that a court violating the rule acts in excess of jurisdiction. Abelleira v. District Ct. of Appeal, 17 Cal.2d 280, 292, 109 P.2d 942, 132 A.L.R. 715. It is equally well settled that where a statute provides an administrative remedy and also provides an alternative judicial remedy the rule requiring exhaustion of the administrative remedy has no application if the person aggrieved, and having both remedies afforded him by the same statute, elects to use the judicial one. Scripps Memorial Hospital, Inc., v. California Emp. Comm., 24 Cal.2d 669, 673, 151 P.2d 109, 112, 155 A.L.R. 360. Said the Supreme Court there:

"If it may be said that there was here an administrative remedy provided by this statute and by the rules of the commission which was available to the respondent it cannot be said that that remedy was exclusive or that its exercise was a necessary precedent to the use of the other remedy expressly given by the statute. None of the cases cited in support of the usual rule go to the extent of holding that that rule applies as against another remedy expressly provided in the same statute, which creates the administrative remedy."

[4] Before considering the contentions of Hess Company upon the merits, it should be said that the Improvement Act of 1911 was originally enacted and has maintained its place in the statute books because of a fixed legislative policy that fairness, efficiency and security in the construction of public works can best be attained by a statutory scheme which would require that such contracts for such work must be let at competitive bidding. From the beginning to the end the provisions of the Improvement Act of 1911 are mainly aimed at securing such competitive bidding; and the courts have consistently construed the act with that legislative purpose in mind. Legislative bodies must follow the act and no attempt upon their part to claim authority to act except strictly in accord therewith can be successful. The act contemplates that before bids are invited the public improvement shall be thoroughly planned; that detailed and exhaustive plans and specifications of the work shall have been adopted; and that every material term and condition of the proposed contract shall have been stated, all to the end that where contractors are invited to bid they will know exactly what they are proposing to do under the contract they offer to enter into. The statute does require that after an award has been made a formal written contract shall be executed and appropriate bonds furnished for faithful performance of the work and for the payment of sub-contractors, laborers and materialmen. But so well have all things been stated in the plans and specifications, in the proposal for bids, in the information and instructions to bidders, in the notice inviting bids and in the required bid forms that the formal contract is a brief document referring to these preceding writings for a statement of the obligation of the parties; these writings being expressly made a part of the formal contract.

[5] It has long been decided in this and other states and in the courts of the United States that in the letting of contracts for the doing of public works where the legislative body or the administrative officer is required by statute to call for bids and must under competitive bidding conditions let the contract to the lowest responsible bidder, the making of the award gives rise to a contract between the public body or agent and the successful bidder. In Garfield v. United States, 3 Otto 242, 93 U.S. 242, 23 L.Ed. 779, a case involving an award of a contract for carrying mail, it was said:

"The Court of Claims holds that the proposal on the part of Garfield, and the acceptance of the proposal by the Department, created a contract of the same force and effect as if a formal contract had been written out and signed by the parties. Many authorities are cited to sustain the proposition. We believe it to be sound, and that it should be so held in the present case."

In United States v. Purcell Envelope Co., 249 U.S. 313, 39 S.Ct. 300, 301, 63 L.Ed. 620, a case involving an award to the company on its bid for furnishing stamped envelopes to the Postoffice Department, the court said in discussing the Garfield case:

"* * * It passed upon a transaction of the Post Office Department and decided that a proposal in accordance with an advertisement by that department and the acceptance by it of the proposal 'created a contract of the same force and effect as if a formal contract had been written out and signed by the parties.' And for this, it was said, many authorities were cited but it was considered so sound as to make unnecessary review of or comment upon them.

"* * * In the present case it insisted his [Attorney General's] action is not so subordinate, that he has discretion, and when exercised it is paramount, his action being 'quasi judicial,' the contract not having been consummated, and that, therefore, it was within his power to review and set aside the decision of his predecessor. We are unable to concede the fact or the power asserted to be dependent upon it. There must be a point of time at which discretion is exhausted. The procedure for the advertising for bids for supplies or services to the government would else be a mockery—a procedure, we may say, that is not permissive but required (section 3709, R.S. [Comp.Stat.1916, sec. 6832]). By it the government is given the benefit of the competition of the market and each bidder is given the chance for a bargain. It is a provision, therefore, in the interest of both government and bidder, necessarily giving rights to both and placing obligations on both. And it is not out of place to say that the government should be animated by a justice as anxious to consider the rights of the bidder as to insist upon its own. And, we repeat, there must be some point at which discretion ceases and obligation takes its place. That point is defined in the Garfield Case, and that the definition is applicable to the case at bar is illustrated by the findings of the Court of Claims."

In State v. Toole, 1901, 26 Mont. 22, 66 P. 496, 499, it was said:

"* * * The duty imposed is to award the contract to the lowest responsible bidder, unless the bids be rejected. This the statute commands it to do; and whenever, after a compliance with the statutory prerequisites essential to the valid acceptance of a bid, it has regularly awarded the contract, there spring into existence vested rights, which the board cannot destroy or impair."

In Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch 137, 2 L.Ed. 60, 67, it was said:

"The last act to be done by the president is the signature of the commission. He has then acted on the advice and consent of the senate to his own nomination. The time for deliberation has then passed. He has decided. His judgment, on the advice and consent of the senate concurring with his nomination, has been made, and the officer is appointed."

On the nature of a bid under the Improvement Act the Supreme Court of California said in M. F. Kemper Construction Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 37 Cal. 2d 696, 700, 235 P.2d 7, 10:

"Once opened and declared, the company's bid was in the nature of an irrevocable option, a contract right of which the city could not be deprived without its consent unless the requirements for rescission were satisfied."

In Williams v. City of Stockton, 195 Cal. 743, 748-749, 235 P. 986, 988, where Williams had submitted a bid for construction of a city hall, the council had accepted the bid and had awarded the contract to him, it was said concerning the situation thus arising:

"* * * The discretion of the city's governmental body, which alone could determine whether or not the contract should be awarded, had been exercised.
* * * The contract was awarded in all respects as required by law.
* * * Under such circumstances the appellant [Williams] became vested with a right to have the contract signed as directed by the council."

The court said further, at page 751, quoting from Donnelly on the Law of Public Contracts, section 143:

"* * * 'When an award has once been made the public body has no discretion but to execute the contract. The rights of the parties then become fixed, and the power to cancel the award or reject the bids does not exist. The obligation of the contract made cannot thus be impaired at the option of one of the contracting parties.'"

Cal.Rep. 285-286 P.2d-31

The following is from 3 McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, 2nd ed., p. 1229. sec. 1328:

"While it is true that a municipal corporation has discretion as to the time and manner of making corporate improvements and the purchase of supplies, still when this discretion has been exercised and a contract made relative thereto, the legislative function has been exhausted, and the duty has become purely ministerial, and a contract so made cannot be impaired at the option of the municipality. Hence, when a bid has been accepted by the proper authorities, such acceptance cannot be revoked."

[6] Applying the foregoing, we hold that the Hess Company's bid had been accepted and the contract awarded to it by regular action of the city council in strict pursuance of the statutory scheme. All the essentials of contract were present and Hess Company was entitled as of right to have the further proceedings take their statutory way. The city was without power, in the absence of fraud, mutual mistake or some other ground of rescission, none of which is claimed to have existed, to rescind its action and to take the contract from Hess Company and award it to Katsaros.

Respondent argues that since the statutes require that "Notice of the award of the contract shall be published by the clerk", Sts. & H. Code, § 5248, this fixes the way, and the exclusive way, in which the acceptance of the bidder's proposal can be communicated to the successful bidder and that until this has been done no contract has arisen. Says respondent:

"The provisions of the Civil Code of the State of California provide the essentials of a contract. These essentials are:

"(a) Offer;

"(b) Acceptance;

"(c) Communication by each to the other." (Citing sections 1550, 1565 and 1581 of the Civil Code.)

[7, 8] We think the Streets and Highways Code section referred to was not intended by the legislature as a method whereby communication of the acceptance by the city should be given to the bidder, but on the contrary that it is limited in its effect to the notification which is required to be given to the property owners interested who for ten days after the giving of such notice are by the statute given the right of taking over the work themselves by entering into a written contract to do so at the price at which the award had been made to the bidder. The language of the statute bears this out. The section does not say that the notice by the clerk is a notice to the bidder of the city's acceptance of his offer, but on the contrary is a notice of the award itself. The award is treated as having been made and so far as the bidder be concerned any of the usual methods of conveying that information to him could be followed. Indeed, since the resolution making the award is the public act of a public body, it is a matter of which notice may be presumed so far as interested parties are concerned. It appears in the case at bar that the president of Hess Company was present when the bids were opened and the award was made.

[9] Appellant asks that this Court not only reverse the judgment of the trial court but go further and mandate the city council, its members, its clerk and the city's superintendent of streets to proceed to notice the award to appellant, and if within the ten days allowed the property owners themselves do not take over the work, then to go further and enter into the formal contract with appellant and permit it to proceed to perform the work. We think it would not be proper for this Court to so order. This is a special statutory proceeding whereunder a legislative body or one who has been awarded a contract by such body for the doing of public work may, without refusing to go forward, set at rest all questions concerning the legality of what has been done by bringing this action. The matter of whether or not the legislative body or any member of that body or employee of the city has refused to perform ministerial duties is not before the Court. The sole issue is the legality of what has been done. We cannot assume that if by the court these proceedings are declared to be valid and the contract declared to have been awarded to Hess Company, there will be any refusal to perform ministerial acts arising because of that situation. We, therefore, decline to go further than to decide the issues of legality of proceedings tendered by the petition filed by the city. The proceedings were valid to the point to which they had been taken when the award was made to the Hess Company and were invalid beyond that point.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

BEVERLY HILLS HOTEL CORPORATION,

Appellant,

v.

HILTON HOTELS CORPORATION, a corporation, and The Beverly Hilton Corporation, a corporation, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 20957.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

July 13, 1955.

Hearing Denied Sept. 8, 1955.

Action by hotel against another hotel, under construction, to restrain its use of a name. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Allen T. Lynch, J., entered judgment denying an injunction, and plaintiff hotel appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that the names "The Beverly Hills Hotel," and "The Beverly Hilton," were not so confusing so as to render it probable that they would mislead persons possessing ordinary powers of perception.

Judgment affirmed.

Doran, J., dissented.

1. Trade-Marks and Trade-Names and Un-fair Competition ⇨3(1)

Words in common use are common property, and may be used by others in combination with other descriptive words, provided combination does not render it probable that persons possessing ordinary powers of perception will be misled.

2. Trade-Marks and Trade-Names and Un-fair Competition ⇨70(3)

The names "The Beverly Hills Hotel," and "The Beverly Hilton", were not so confusing so as to render it probable that they would mislead persons possessing ordinary powers of perception.

3. Trade-Marks and Trade-Names and Un-fair Competition ⇨71

Where words have acquired a fanciful meaning, a meaning that has no connection with their common meaning, it may be more properly said that such meaning is their primary meaning in so far as their use in business is concerned and that their common meaning has dropped into the background.

4. Trade-Marks and Trade-Names and Un-fair Competition ⇨9

When a geographical name is not used in a geographical sense, but is used in a fictitious sense merely to indicate ownership, independent of location, it may be a good trade-mark or trade-name.

5. Trade-Marks and Trade-Names and Un-fair Competition ⇨71

Under circumstances, the name "Beverly Hills Hotel" never acquired any special significance or secondary meaning in mind of public apart from its original meaning as a geographical and descriptive term.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

By this action, the Beverly Hills Hotel Corporation seeks to enjoin defendants from using the name "The Beverly Hilton" for a new hotel nearing completion and located in the City of Beverly Hills.

Plaintiff owns and operates the Beverly Hills Hotel which was built and commenced operations in 1912. It is situate on an eleven acre tract in a residential district of the City of Beverly Hills. When it was opened the city had not been incorporated, and the area involved was located in a subdivision of the County of Los Angeles known as Beverly Hills. The city was incorporated in 1914.

The business of plaintiff is confined to this hotel which is a large one of the luxury type, including exclusive shops and bungalows located on the grounds. It has been operated for over forty years as "The Beverly Hills Hotel" and also as "Beverly Hills Hotel and Bungalows."

In 1950, defendant Hilton Hotels Corporation purchased an eight and a half acre tract of land about one mile distant from plaintiff's hotel: at the intersection of Wilshire and Santa Monica Boulevards in the City of Beverly Hills. This location is zoned for business.

About two years later, defendants announced that an ultra-modern, luxury hotel would be constructed at this location and that it would be called "The Beverly Hilton Hotel". Defendants inaugurated a general publicity and advertising campaign for the hotel under that name.

In November, 1952, Mr. Hernando Courtright, plaintiff's president, wrote to Mr. Conrad Hilton, president of defendant Hilton Hotels Corporation, stating: "In view of the similarity of sound and appearance with 'Beverly Hills' we earnestly request that you do not use this name." And it was suggested that the name be modified to "Hilton-Beverly", in order to obviate confusion.

During the ensuing correspondence, Mr. Hilton indicated some of the reasons for naming the new hotel "The Beverly Hilton Hotel", such as the policy of the corporation to name new hotels with a geographical designation preceding the name of Hilton. In August, 1953, Mr. Hilton advised plaintiff that it had been decided to drop the word "Hotel" and use the name "The Beverly Hilton", which "should eliminate any confusion."

At the time of trial, the Hilton Hotels Corporation operated eighteen hotels throughout the United States and foreign countries. It also had six hotels under construction, including The Beverly Hilton.

The evidence presented consisted largely of affidavits filed by both parties. By stipulation these were considered by the trial court in addition to oral testimony of two witnesses, one of whom was Mr. Hilton.

It was disclosed thereby that plaintiff had spent very large sums of money for local and national advertising and publicity. Also that construction material intended for defendants' hotel was mistakenly delivered to the Beverly Hills Hotel; and that newspapers had confused the names by referring to plaintiff's hotel, when intending to refer to defendants' hotel.

Defendant Hilton Hotels Corporation produced evidence to the effect that from 1947 through 1953, its total cost of advertising and related expenses was over five millions of dollars. Also, that it was its practice to name or change the names of hotels as they were acquired or constructed to include the name Hilton, for instance the Caribe Hilton in Puerto Rico and the Castellana Hilton in Madrid.

Pages of telephone directories were introduced showing many names of business enterprises which used the word "Beverly" or "Beverly Hills" as a part of their names. Among them were listed the names of two hotels located in Beverly Hills: Beverly Wilshire Hotel and Beverly Carleton Hotel.

At the conclusion of the trial, the court found, among other things, that the words "Beverly Hills" have been "since 1907, and still are, geographical; that the word

'Hotel' has been since long prior to the year 1912, and still is, descriptive of a certain type of business; that the words 'Beverly Hills Hotel' have been since the year 1912, and still are, geographical and descriptive of the place and nature of the business conducted by the plaintiff and its predecessors."

That the use of the name "Beverly Hills Hotel" by plaintiff had not resulted in said name acquiring any secondary meaning, or any special significance in the mind of the public generally or of the hotel going public in particular. And that the words "Beverly Hills Hotel" have "not acquired any meaning different from their original lexicographical meaning as a geographical and descriptive term * * *

"That for twenty-seven (27) years there has existed in the City of Beverly Hills * * * two major hotels, one of which is that now owned by the plaintiff, and that there has existed substantial confusion in the public mind between said two hotels for said period of time; that in consequence neither plaintiff's hotel, nor the other major hotel, have achieved special significance in the public mind, and the name of neither hotel has become invested with, or achieved secondary meaning."

The court further found that there is no confusing similarity either in visual appearance or in sound between the name "Beverly Hills Hotel" and the name "The Beverly Hilton"; and the use of the name "The Beverly Hilton" by defendants has not and will not tend to mislead and deceive, or result in a likelihood of confusion between the two hotels, in the mind of the public in general or the hotel going public in particular.

From the facts found the court concluded that the use of the name "The Beverly Hilton" does not infringe upon plaintiff's use of its name, or violate any of plaintiff's rights. That it does not constitute any unfair, fraudulent or improper use of said name, or violate any legally protectible interest of plaintiff in its name.

From the ensuing judgment denying the injunction, plaintiff appeals.

In seeking a reversal of the judgment, appellant relies upon the following propositions:

1. The holding that the names herein involved are not confusing cannot be supported.

2. The holding that appellant's name had no secondary meaning and could not have protection is clearly erroneous.

In connection with its first point, appellant urges that the finding of no confusion is directly in conflict with the evidence that instances of confusion had already occurred and would probably occur in the future.

In Schwartz v. Slenderella Systems of California, 43 Cal.2d 107, 271 P.2d 857, 860, appellant Schwartz was engaged in selling women's apparel in Los Angeles. He started to use the name "Slenderella" in Hollywood in 1939. When respondent, who operated a chain of weight-reducing salons throughout the United States, commenced using the name "Slenderella" in Los Angeles, appellant sought to enjoin such use.

By reason of the similarity in names, Schwartz had received some misdirected mail and telephone calls intended for Slenderella Systems. Some of his customers had gone to respondent's salons in the belief that Schwartz operated women's clothing stores at those locations.

Appellant contended that "To hold that confusion of source as to his products and the respondent's services will be unlikely * * * is to ignore the factual instances of confusion shown by the evidence. He asserts that the trial court has negated the serious aspects of such confusion. Here the parties cater to the same class of the public, the argument continues, 'and it is not difficult to perceive that both appellant and respondent are competing for the same purchasing dollar.'"

In its opinion affirming the denial of an injunction, the Supreme Court stated, 43 Cal.2d at pages 112, 113 and 114, 271 P.2d at page 860, as follows:

"The senior appropriator may protect, by injunction, his trade name 'within the limits fixed by the likelihood of confusion of prospective purchasers.' Rest., Torts, § 730, comment b; MacSweeney Enterprises, Inc., v. Tarantino, supra, at 106 Cal.App.2d (504) 512-513, 235 P.2d 266; Winfield v. Charles, supra, at 77 Cal.App.2d (64) 70-71, 175 P.2d 69. Although many factors may enter into a determination of whether the use of a specific trade name is likely to result in a confusion of source, the question is primarily one of fact to be determined from all of the circumstances of a particular case. MacSweeney Enterprises, Inc., v. Tarantino, supra, 106 Cal.App.2d at page 513, 235 P.2d 266; Winfield v. Charles, supra, 77 Cal.App.2d at page 71, 175 P.2d 69; Pohl v. Anderson, 13 Cal.App.2d 241, 242, 56 P.2d 992; see 63 C. J. Trade-Marks, Trade-Names, and Unfair Competition, 414-418, § 112.

* * * * *

"Although factual instances of confusion may support a determination that confusion of the public is likely from the use of identical or similar trade names, they do not compel that conclusion as a matter of law.
* * *

"The situation of the parties is one from which differing conclusions reasonably may be drawn. Although a contrary determination might be supported by the evidence, the trial court has decided against the likelihood of confusion of source. When the entire record is considered, it fully supports that determination."

[1] Also, as stated in Fidelity Appraisal Co. v. Federal Appraisal Co., 217 Cal. 307, 317, 18 P.2d 950, 954: "The doctrine is so well settled by a multitude of cases that it is not necessary to cite specific cases, that words in common use are regarded as common property, and may be used by others in combination with other descriptive words, provided they are not so used in combination with other descriptive words, symbols, or designs as to render it probable that they would mislead persons possessing ordinary powers of perception."

[2] The trial judge correctly applied this standard in coming to his ultimate conclusion that "persons possessing ordinary powers of perception" would not be confused between appellant's name: The Beverly Hills Hotel, and respondent's name: The Beverly Hilton.

As its second point on this appeal, appellant asserts as error the trial court's finding that its name has not acquired a secondary meaning and therefore is not entitled to protection.

In this connection, appellant argues that "Proof of secondary meaning consists in precisely the things which the Court has here found and which are facts concerning the long operation, the advertising and the building up of a reputation under the name and the fact that the hotel has been and is popularly and generally known and referred to and identified by such name. Under such facts, appellant becomes entitled to the protection of its name as a matter of law."

The special significance of a designation or trade name customarily referred to as the "secondary meaning" is discussed in 3 Rest., Torts, sec. 716 (b), as follows:

"Whether or not a designation has acquired this special significance is a question of fact in each case. No particular period of use is required. In some cases the special significance is not acquired even after an extended period of use; in others it is acquired after a brief period. The issue in each case is whether or not in fact a substantial number of present or prospective purchasers understand the designation, when used in connection with goods, services or a business, not in its primary lexicographical sense, but as referring to a particular person or association. Long continued use of the designation is evidence from which this 'secondary meaning' may properly be inferred, but the inference is rebuttable."

[3] As said in Eastern Columbia, Inc., v. Waldman, 30 Cal.2d 268, 271, 181 P.2d 865, 867: "Where words have acquired * * * a fanciful meaning—a meaning that has no connection with their common meaning, it may be more properly said that such meaning is their primary meaning in so far as their use in business is concerned. Their common meaning has dropped into the background."

[4] Also in Katschinski v. Keller, 49 Cal.App. 406, 408, 193 P. 587, 589: "When a geographical name is not used in a geographical sense, but is used in a fictitious sense merely to indicate ownership, independent of location, it may be a good trademark or trade-name."

The outstanding examples of geographical names which have acquired a secondary meaning are those of "Waltham" and "Elgin", both names of watches.

In American Waltham Watch Co. v. United States Watch Co., 173 Mass. 85, 53 N.E. 141, 43 L.R.A. 826, defendant was enjoined from use of the name Waltham. Plaintiff, a manufacturer of watches, had acquired a great reputation and had used the word originally in a geographical sense in connection with his watches. However, the word by long use has come to have a secondary meaning as a designation for watches which the public has become accustomed to associate with the name.

Likewise in Elgin Nat. Watch Co. v. Loveland, C.C.Iowa, 132 F. 41 where the geographical name "Elgin" acquired a secondary meaning in the watch and jewelry trade, its original meaning dropping into the background.

[5] In the circumstances presented by the instant cause, it is clear that the name Beverly Hills Hotel never acquired any specific significance in the mind of the public apart from its original meaning as a geographical and descriptive term.

The judgment is affirmed.

I dissent.

I am in entire accord with appellant's contentions as to the facts as well as the law. Business ethics are precious. The violation of these ethics by such unprincipled and unwarranted conduct should not only be prevented but denounced. To hold otherwise only tends to encourage them. In my opinion the appellant's position should be upheld.

Civ. 20762, 20763.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

July 13, 1955.

Quiet title actions involving railroad right-of-way strip in center of city street. The county's motions for leave to intervene were denied and the county appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that the county had no such direct, immediate or proximate interest in the actions, or such interest in the success of the city which was a party to the actions, as would give the county right to intervene, though the county had, pursuant to statute, declared that acquisition of such strips for public street purposes was of general county interest and had allocated to several cities funds for such purposes.

Orders affirmed.

1. Parties ⇨43

Right of third person to intervene in a pending action is purely statutory and is not matter of absolute right, but may be permitted by leave of court when petitioner shows facts which satisfy requirements of code provision authorizing intervention. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 387.

2. Parties ⇨40(2)

Under statute providing that any person having "interest" in matter in litigation or in success of either party may intervene in action, the "interest" must be in the matter in litigation and of such direct or immediate character that intervenor will either gain or lose by direct legal operation and effect of judgment and it must be an interest which is proper to be determined in the action. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 387.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Interest".

3. Quietling Title ⇨30(1)

Fact that county, which sought to intervene in quiet-title actions, probably had such "interest" as would have permitted joinder as party plaintiff did not per se entitle county to enter cases as intervenor. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 387.

4. Quietling Title ⇨30(1)

County had no such direct, immediate or proximate interest in actions to quiet title to railroad right of way strip in center of city street or such interest in success of city which was party to the actions as would give county right to intervene in the actions, though county had, pursuant to statute, declared that acquisition of such strip for public street purposes was of general county interest and had allocated funds to several cities for such purpose. FOX, Justice.

From judgments denying its motions for leave to file complaints in intervention in the above entitled actions, the County of Los Angeles appeals. The parties are agreed that the essential issues are identical with respect to both matters and that the cases be considered together on appeal.

The salient facts are these: Beginning in the year 1903 and continuing until September, 1951, the defendant Pacific Electric Railway Company (hereinafter called the Company), and its predecessors in interest, had used the property here in controversy, a long, narrow strip of land located in the middle of Huntington Drive, in the City of San Marino, as part of its right of way for the operation of inter-urban street cars and trains. Huntington Drive is an east-west public highway within Los Angeles County and carries a substantial amount of traffic as it traverses parts of Los Angeles, South Pasadena, Alhambra, San Marino, Arcadia, and unincorporated County territory. After the Company had abandoned certain rights of way in Los Angeles County on November 6, 1951, the Board of Supervisors of Los Angeles County passed a resolution asserting that the acquisition and preservation for public street purposes of such rights of way was of general county interest, section 1680, Streets & Highways Code.¹ Thereafter, during the fiscal years 1952 to 1954, inclusive, the Board made budgetary allocations of $900,000 as financial aid for such purposes to several cities.

Plaintiffs in both of the matters before us filed their respective complaints on July 21, 1953, seeking to quiet title in themselves to the separate abandoned right of way strips on Huntington Drive in the City of San Marino. The defendant City of San Marino and the Company filed answers denying the plaintiffs' claims and the City of San Marino asserted present ownership and right to possession and use of the disputed strips. Both cases were first set down for trial on May 12, 1954, but were continued until July 26, 1954, because of a death in the family of one of the Company's counsel immediately prior to the time originally scheduled for trial. About the middle of July the Company moved for a further continuance to effect a substitution of counsel while the City of San Marino moved to substitute City Attorney Martin in the place of the private firm representing it. Both of the new counsel for the defendants Company and City requested additional time to prepare for the trial. A continuance of the cases was granted to October 27, 1954.

On September 13, 1954, the City of San Marino adopted a resolution requesting the County of Los Angeles to extend legal, engineering and other services necessary to the defense of the instant actions. On October 6, 1954, the Board of Supervisors adopted a resolution to the effect that the acquisition of the abandoned rights of way involved in these appeals for public street purposes was of general county interest, directed that legal and engineering services be furnished the City of San Marino, and authorized the County Counsel to intervene in both actions on behalf of the County. On the following day, the County Counsel and one of his deputies, Milnor E. Gleaves, were substituted as attorneys of record for the City of San Marino in place of City Attorney Martin. On October 8, 1954, Mr. Gleaves filed notice that he would move for a 30-day continuance on October 13, 1954, to prepare himself for these matters. On the same day, Mr. Gleaves petitioned for leave to intervene in both actions. On October 13, 1954, a continuance was granted to January 25, 1955.

On October 14, 1955, the County's motion to intervene in these actions came on for hearing. The County filed therewith a proposed "Complaint in Intervention," re-

1. Section 1680 provides in part: "The board of supervisors of any county may, by a resolution adopted by a four-fifths vote of its members, determine that any of the following activities are of general county interest and that county aid shall be extended therefor:

"(a) The laying out, opening, construction, improvement, maintenance, repair, or altering of all or any part of any street within a city * * *

"(f) The acquisition of any real property or interest therein, rights of way or other property necessary for any of the purposes mentioned in this section."

County funds may be disbursed for public street improvements when a determination has been made by its Board of Supervisors that the project is one of general county interest. City of Oakland v. Garrison, 194 Cal. 298, 304, 228 P. 433.

citing the details of the actions taken by the Board of Supervisors as previously set forth, alleging the County's general interest in the matter and in the success of the City of San Marino in this litigation. No property interest in the disputed land is claimed by the County and the prayer asks for no relief in favor of the County against any of the parties to the action.² After taking the matter under submission, the trial court made its orders on November 22, 1954, denying the County the right to intervene. Following the County's appeal, this court issued a writ of superseas on December 16, 1954, suspending proceedings below until further order.

The sole question presented is whether the trial court properly refused leave to the County to become a party to the proceedings below. The County contends it "has an interest both in the matter in litigation and in the success of the City of San Marino sufficient to entitle it to intervene." This contention is refuted, however, by a long line of decisions, to which we will subsequently refer, defining the nature of the "interest" a stranger to the record of a pending cause must have before leave to intervene may be granted.

[1,2] The right of a third person to intervene in a pending action is purely statutory. Chase v. Evoy, 58 Cal. 348, 355; Horn v. Volcano Water Co., 13 Cal. 62, 70. Intervention is not a matter of absolute right, but may be permitted by leave of court when the petitioner shows facts which satisfy the requirements of section 387 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the statute authorizing intervention by one not originally a party to an action. In re Yokohama Specie Bank, Ltd., 86 Cal.App.2d 545, 555, 195 P.2d 555. Section 387 provides in part that at any time before trial, any person who has an interest in the matter in litigation or in the success of either of the parties, or an interest against both, may intervene in the action or proceeding. The word "interest" is of crucial significance and has a definite legal meaning in intervention proceedings. It is well settled that the interest referred to must be "'in the matter in litigation and of such a direct or immediate character that the intervenor will either gain or lose by the direct legal operation and effect of the judgment.'" (Emphasis added.) Allen v. California Water & Tel. Co., 31 Cal.2d 104, 109, 187 P.2d 393, 395; Bechtel v. Axelrod, 20 Cal.2d 390, 392, 125 P.2d 836; Jersey Maid Milk Products Co. v. Brock, 13 Cal.2d 661, 665, 91 P.2d 599; Elliott v. Superior Court, 168 Cal. 727, 734, 145 P. 101. Not only must the interest be direct rather than consequential, but "it must be an interest which is proper to be determined in the action in which the intervention is sought." Isaacs v. Jones, 121 Cal. 257, 261, 53 P. 793, 794, 1101; Bechtel v. Axelrod, supra; Jersey Maid Milk Products Co. v. Brock, supra; Schwartz v. Schwartz, 119 Cal. App.2d 102, 104, 259 P.2d 33.

An analysis of a few representative cases furnishes graphic illustration of the rule that the "interest" of which the statute speaks must involve such an immediate and direct claim upon the very subject matter of the litigation that the intervenor will either gain or lose by the direct operation of the judgment that may be rendered therein. In Allen v. California Water & Tel. Co., supra, the City of Coronado sought to intervene in an action involving rights to underground waters of a river basin. The City was obtaining water from the defendant water company pursuant to contract, and asserted its right to intervene on the ground that an adverse decision would affect its water supply. The Su-

2. The prayer of the proposed complaint reads: "Wherefore Interventioner, County of Los Angeles, Prays that plaintiff take nothing by this action, and that the Court adjudge and decree that Defendant, City of San Marino is the owner in fee simple of the real property described in 'Plaintiffs' complaint as amended' herein or, in the alternative, that said city is the owner of an easement for public street purposes thereover; that the Court adjudge and decree that said plaintiffs be forever barred from asserting any right, title or interest of any nature adverse to the rights of said city therein; and that said interventioner be awarded its costs of suit herein, and any other relief as may seem just and proper under the law."

preme Court affirmed the trial court's denial of leave to intervene, resting its decision on the grounds, among others, that the City's interest was indirect. The court stated, 31 Cal.2d at page 109, 187 P.2d at page 395: "Here the city of Coronado has not such an 'interest' * * * as would give it a right to intervene. It has no direct interest or claim to any of the waters involved in the litigation. * * * Defendant is in no position to claim and never has asserted the attachment of a public use. The city of Coronado, one of its customers, cannot claim and in fact has no greater right in the waters than has defendant itself. * * * The city stands in the same position as that of other water users whose needs are served by defendant either partially or wholly from Tia Juana Basin sources. Its interest is indirect and consequential. Such an interest may not properly be asserted in the supplemental proceedings. It may not therefore serve as a proper subject for intervention."

In Bechtel v. Axelrod, 20 Cal.2d 390, 125 P.2d 836, Axelrod was sued as guarantor on a note whose maker had defaulted. Mrs. Axelrod petitioned to intervene, contending that plaintiff, in the event of a favorable judgment, intended to satisfy it out of the community property. In sustaining the disallowance of the petition, the court stated, 20 Cal.2d at pages 392-393, 125 P.2d at page 837: "The interest mentioned in the Code which entitles a person to intervene in a suit between other persons must be in the matter in litigation and of such a direct and immediate character that the intervener will either gain or lose by the direct legal operation and effect of the judgment." * * * Application of these principles to the present case compels the conclusion that the intervener did not possess an interest legally sufficient to sustain her intervention in the suit which was instituted against her husband for the purpose of adjudicating his liability as the accommodation maker upon the promissory note. The wife would neither gain nor lose by the direct legal operation and effect of a money judgment rendered against her husband, the defendant Axelrod. * * * Granting that it was the plaintiff's intention, in the event of his recovery, to attempt to satisfy his judgment from the community property, it is entirely conceivable that the defendant Axelrod might decide to discharge the indebtedness by payment from his separate funds or that the plaintiff might not in fact initiate proceedings to enforce collection. From these observations it is manifest that the intervener's interest in the instant action was remote and contingent and was not of the direct and immediate character required by law to support her intervention."

[3] In Jersey Maid Milk Products Co. v. Brock, 13 Cal.2d 661, 91 P.2d 599, plaintiff brought an action to enjoin the Director of Agriculture enforcing certain regulations applying to the dairy industry. Other producers and distributors of dairy products sought to intervene on behalf of the plaintiff, contending they would be affected by the outcome of the case. In declaring their interest to be too indirect to justify intervention, the court pointed out, 13 Cal.2d at pages 664-665, 91 P.2d at page 601: "Any judgment rendered in said action will have no direct effect whatever upon any person other than the parties to said action. * * * This judgment would in no way be binding upon the interveners as long as they are not parties to said action, and they will be as free to pursue their business after the rendition of said judgment, as they were before. They, therefore, would not gain or lose by the direct operation of the judgment. The legal operation of said judgment will have no direct effect upon interveners. It is true there may be an adjudication that said act is a valid legislative enactment which might serve as a precedent upon any action instituted against interveners for the violation of the terms of said act and to that extent it might be said that the interveners have an interest in the matter in litigation, but as the judgment so rendered would have no binding effect upon the interveners, as it would upon the parties to this proceeding, and would in no way directly affect them, their interest is not a direct but a mere consequential interest in the matter in litigation.”³

In City of Alhambra v. Jacob Bean Realty Co., 138 Cal.App. 251, 31 P.2d 1052, the city sought to condemn defendant's land for a proposed reservoir. The owner of adjoining land was not permitted to intervene, though her land was threatened with depreciation if the reservoir was built. The court stated, 138 Cal.App. at page 252, 31 P.2d at page 1052: “The complaint here showing no direct interest in the litigation, but only a consequential interest in the probable use of the property if plaintiff is successful, and no possibility of gain or loss from the direct legal effect of any judgment that might be rendered, we fail to see that any right to intervene is shown * * *.” In La Mesa Lemon Grove & Spring Valley Irr. Dist. v. Halley, 195 Cal. 739, 235 P. 999, certain residents of an irrigation district sought to intervene in a mandamus proceeding brought by the irrigation district to compel the officers thereof to sign and attest certain bonds. The grounds of intervention were that the bonds were invalid. Although the bonds, if issued, would constitute a lien on their property, the court held that their interest in the mandamus proceeding was too remote and contingent, since only after a sale of the bonds would the lien arise. The court stated, 195 Cal. at pages 741-742, 235 P. at page 1000: “It is difficult to see how the petitioning interveners can gain or lose by any judgment which may be entered in that proceeding. If the writ be granted, the enforcement of the judgment would not directly affect their property interests. The bonds, when signed and attested, would not be a lien on their property, although, if thereafter sold, they may lead to the creation of a lien [citation]. Nor would compliance with the writ, if issued, create a cloud upon their title. If the respondents sign and attest the bonds they must be sold before the lands of the proposed interveners may be taxed to pay the principal and interest thereof. * * * The bonds may never be sold. The present plans for the acquisition of an additional water supply and a distributing system may be abandoned. It is clear that the interest of the petitioning interveners is remote and contingent and not of the direct and immediate character required by law.”

[4] Measuring the County's right to intervene by the well-settled propositions set forth above, it is clear that its interest in the pending cases is not direct, immediate or proximate but is simply consequential and indirect. The actions at bar are suits to quiet title to real property. The County's proposed complaint in intervention asserts no right, title or interest in that property in itself, neither does it ask for any specific relief in favor of the County. Its prayer requests that the court find that title is in the City of San Marino. It is thus obvious that the County does not stand in the position of one interested in the outcome or result of an action because it has any legal right in the subject matter of the litigation which will be directly and immediately affected by the operation of the judgment or because of any interest which is proper to be determined in the action in which intervention is sought. It is true that under 1680 of the Street and Highway Code the Board of Supervisors is empowered to determine the existence of a general county interest in a street within a city as a legal condition precedent to the appropriation of county funds for the improvement of such street. But the mere passing of a resolution by the Board of Supervisors evincing such general interest on a particular property is not the equivalent of an interest answering the description required by section 387 as a sine qua

3. It may be observed in passing that under section 387 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the petitioners probably had such an “interest” as would have permitted their joinder as parties plaintiffs although such “interest” did not entitle them to enter the case as interveners. The court recommended that the proposed interveners might desire to file briefs as amici curiae, which would give them ample opportunity to be heard on all of the legal issues in the original action. It is noteworthy that in the cases at bar, the County Counsel is actively in charge of the litigation in behalf of the City of San Marino and may be expected to zealously safeguard County interests against plaintiffs' claims.

non for the exercise of the right of intervention in litigation between others regarding the ownership of said property. The County is a stranger to the property here in question. It has no "interest" of such a direct and immediate character that it will either gain or lose by the direct legal operation and effect of any judgment that may be rendered in the within actions. Jersey Maid Milk Products Co. v. Brock, supra; Allen v. California Water & Tel. Co., supra. It has no "interest" therein that may be determined by those actions nor any rights which can be directly enlarged, diminished or foreclosed by any judgment rendered. Isaacs v. Jones, supra; City of Alhambra v. Jacob Bean Realty Co., supra; Lindsay-Strathmore Irr. Dist. v. Wutchumna Water Co., 111 Cal.App. 707, 710, 296 P. 942; In re Estate of Olcese, 1 Cal.App.2d 72, 78, 36 P.2d 215.

The County's argument that if the City prevails County funds will not have to be expended for the acquisition of the strips for street purposes, does not transform the County's interest into one that is of a direct or immediate character such as required by the law to support intervention. Bechtel v. Axelrod, supra; La Mesa Lemon Grove & Spring Valley Irr. Dist. v. Halley, supra; People v. Brophy, 49 Cal.App.2d 15, 34, 120 P.2d 946. This possibility, that additional county funds might ultimately have to be expended in the event of a judgment adverse to the City, may be an indirect or consequential result of such judgment, but it certainly would not flow directly therefrom. Allen v. California Water & Tel. Co., supra. Furthermore, in the event title were found to be in the plaintiffs, the City might well elect to acquire title itself to the strips from the owners by condemnation proceedings, section 1241, Code Civ.Proc., or the owners might be willing to dedicate the strip for public purposes. But however that might be, in all events the County's petition for intervention must fail for lack of the requisite interest under the authorities cited.

The County also maintains that it comes within the purview of section 387 because of its interest in the success of the City in the quiet title actions. But as pointed out in Bernheimer v. Bernheimer, 87 Cal. App.2d 242, 247, 196 P.2d 813, 816, the interest in the success of a party must likewise be of "such a present, direct and immediate character that the intervener will either gain or lose by the direct effect of the judgment." (Emphasis added.) That such interest is here absent appears from the foregoing discussion.

The orders are affirmed.

Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

CARUSO ENTERPRISES, Inc., a corporation,
Commercial Credit Corporation,
et al., Defendants,

Caruso Enterprises, Inc., Appellant.

Civ. 20800.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

July 18, 1955.

Buyers' action for rescission of automobile conditional sales contract. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Clyde C. Triplett, J., entered judgment for buyers, and dealer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that statute requiring time price differential and unpaid balance be set out was not satisfied in contract where such figures could only be determined by mathematical computations but that damages had been incorrectly computed.

Judgment affirmed as modified.

1. Sales 52(5)

In buyers' action to rescind automobile conditional sale contract, on ground that completed documents did not conform to agreement between parties, evidence supported trial court's findings that there had been no meeting of minds between the parties. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2982.

2. Sales ⇨461

Statute requiring that in automobile conditional sales contracts, time price differential and unpaid balance be set out was not satisfied where such figures could be determined only by mathematical computations. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2982.

3. Sales ⇨130(4)

Court, in granting buyers' rescission of automobile conditional sales contract, wherein it ordered that rental value of new automobile be charged against buyers, properly deducted from such sum rental value of automobile which they had traded in, even though automobile dealer was not in business of buying vehicles for its own use, in view of fact that rescission was ordered because of dealer's own wrongful conduct.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

By their first amended complaint plaintiffs alleged that on November 8, 1953, in Los Angeles County, they entered into a conditional sales contract with defendant Caruso Enterprises Inc., under the terms of which they agreed to buy a certain 1953 Dodge Coronet automobile from said defendant, that the latter agreed to sell the vehicle to plaintiffs for a total cash price of $3460.77, less $1,075 net allowance for plaintiffs' 1949 Plymouth automobile, leaving an unpaid balance due of $2,385.77. That said balance was to be paid off at the rate of $49.43 monthly and plaintiffs expressly informed said defendant that they could not afford a contract that called for payment of more than $50 per month. It was then alleged, "That the terms and conditions of said sale were written down on a white memo by Defendant Caruso Enterprises' agent and then said agent had these Plaintiffs sign blank yellow contract forms which said Defendant Company agreed to fill out in accordance with the white memo terms and conditions." That at the time of the transaction here in question, plaintiffs delivered to defendant seller their Plymouth automobile and took delivery of the Dodge car upon the representations, understanding and agreement with defendant seller that the balance due on the contract would amount to no more than $2,385 and that the installment payments would not exceed $50 per month. That subsequently, "Plaintiffs received through the mail copies of filled in conditional sales contracts with coupon book calling for said $2,385.00 plus $100.00 for insurance (which Plaintiffs understood they were to pay) and $500.00 finance charges totaling $2,985.00 instead of $2,485.00 as agreed, and calling for payments of $99.43 instead of $49.43 as agreed, per month." Assignment of the contract to defendant Commercial Credit Corporation is then alleged. The complaint further charged that on December 24, 1953, plaintiffs served defendants with written notice of rescission of the contract and offered return to defendants of the Dodge automobile upon delivery to plaintiffs of their Plymouth car, but the defendants refused to rescind the contract.

The second cause of action adopted the averments of the first and then alleged that upon receipt of the "completed contract", which provided for $500 in excess of the orally agreed price, and with payments of $99.43 per month instead of the $49.43 per month as agreed at the time of sale, the plaintiff, Elmer Adams, went personally to Mr. H. J. Caruso, president of the Caruso Enterprises Inc., and protested that the written contract was not in accordance with the oral agreement and the written memo made by the Company's agent at the time of sale, and said plaintiff reiterated the fact that he had informed said Caruso Company at the start that he could not possibly buy any car for more than $50 per month.

Whereupon the said H. J. Caruso personally agreed that if plaintiffs would pay $49.43 per month for three months, he would rewrite said agreement in accordance with plaintiffs' demands. That at that time the said Elmer Adams offered to pay said Caruso the first four monthly payments at $49.43 in advance but the said Caruso then refused to perform this new agreement. It is then alleged that plaintiffs paid to defendant Commercial Credit Corporation, as agent of the co-defendant, two monthly payments of $49.43, each "on the new oral agreement made by Mr. Caruso, but with the understanding that said payments were on account of a total balance due of $2,485.00". The third cause of action asked for a declaratory judgment setting forth the rights and duties of the respective parties.

By their answer defendants denied that the monthly installments under the contract were to be in the sum of $49.43, and alleged said payments were to be at the rate of $99.43, per month; denied any oral agreement or contract, and denied generally other allegations of misrepresentation or fraud.

Plaintiffs filed their first amendment to the aforesaid first amended complaint, alleging failure to comply with certain provisions of Civil Code, section 2982, and specifically that no executed copy of said contract was ever delivered.

Defendant then filed its answer and counterclaim, containing general denials, and counterclaiming for plaintiffs' use of said car for 182 days, or $1,820.

During the trial, by leave of court, plaintiffs filed their second amendment to the first amended complaint to conform to proof made at the trial. In this amendment plaintiffs indicated that they elected to stand on their demand for rescission and abandoned their former allegations for reformation of the contract or declaratory relief.

Following trial before the court sitting without a jury judgment was rendered against defendant Caruso Enterprises Inc., for $812.50 and against defendant Commercial Credit Corporation for $247.15. Judgment against the last named defendant was satisfied and is therefore not involved in this appeal. From the judgment rendered against it, defendant Caruso Enterprises Inc. prosecutes this appeal.

Concerning the factual situation surrounding this litigation, plaintiffs testified that on November 8, 1953, they went to the place of business of defendant Caruso Enterprises Inc., where they orally agreed with said defendant to buy a 1953 Dodge automobile for a cash price of $3,460.77, plaintiffs to be given a net allowance of $1,075 for their 1949 Plymouth, leaving an unpaid cash balance of $2,385.77 plus $100 for insurance, with no finance charges, and payments to be $49.43 a month; that payments of $99.43 were never mentioned; that it was agreed that payments would never exceed $50 a month; that $150 was deducted from the original allowance of $1,225 for their Plymouth for rewriting the contract after three payments of $49.43.

Defendant's witnesses DeWitt Leftwich and Henry Joseph Caruso denied any oral agreement contrary to the terms of the written documents.

Following the foregoing conversation, and on the same day thereof, a document consisting of an original white copy and a yellow carbon copy was prepared and signed by plaintiff Elmer Adams and an agent of defendant Caruso Enterprises Inc. The yellow copy was delivered to plaintiff Elmer Adams and the original white copy was retained by defendant Caruso Enterprises Inc. This litigation is predicated upon and the present appeal must be decided on the basis of this document. Plaintiffs testified they signed the document entitled "Conditional Sales Contract" in blank and at no time received a copy thereof. However, as to that document, defendant Caruso Enterprises Inc., in its brief states, "This defendant never introduced such a document into evidence and at no time in these proceedings has this defendant claimed the same to be the contract between the parties, but merely that it was signed by plaintiffs in blank with the understanding it would be filled in later according to their agreement." With reference to a later oral agreement testified to by plaintiff Elmer Adams as having been made with Mr. Caruso, the latter denied it.

That the aforesaid white original and yellow copy, concededly the contract between the parties, do not contain the same factual data is manifest from an inspection of them. As pointed out by plaintiffs, "* * *" it will be noted that the date on the white original is 11/15/53 whereas it is 11/8/53 on the carbon copy. As for the yellow carbon copy given to Plaintiff Elmer Adams, many figures were left out as compared with the original, especially the date for beginning of the monthly payments to wit: This is said to be Jan. 3, 1954 in the original but is entirely omitted from the yellow copy. The figures concerning the allowance to the buyer for his Plymouth car are badly mixed up and do not correspond, and the company's witness at the trial admitted that many of those figures were inserted in the white original after it had been signed by the Plaintiff Mr. Adams and the copy delivered to him. For example on the yellow copy there is an allowance of $400.00 and then to right of this figure the figures $250.00 and $150.00 are inserted without explanation; and in the original white copy the figure $400.00 that was originally in the contract is crossed out and the words 'Less payoff $240.72' inserted. Then in the white copy the net allowance is set forth as being $975.00 whereas it is $875.00 in the yellow copy."

Another confusing aspect of the contract is that in the body of the instrument the monthly payment is set forth as $99.43, while at the bottom appears the following, $150 pre-pay 1st 3 payments to $49.43—Rewrite". At the trial the last mentioned item was explained by defendant Caruso Enterprises Inc., to mean that it would pre-pay $150 from the trade-in allowance on behalf of plaintiffs, thus reducing the latter's first three payments from $99.43 to $49.43 each and then the contract could be rewritten.

Upon the foregoing rather complicated factual situation, the court, on conflicting evidence, made findings as follows: "* * * that on November 8th, 1953, Plaintiffs entered into an agreement with Defendant Caruso Enterprises Inc., for the purchase of a 1953 Dodge Coronet four-door automobile for a total cash price of $3,460.77 and Plaintiffs traded in their 1949 Plymouth automobile as a down payment for a net allowance of $1,075.00, leaving an unpaid balance of $2,385.77 plus $100.00 for insurance which Plaintiffs agreed to pay.

"That no completed Conditional Sales agreement was ever executed by the parties
